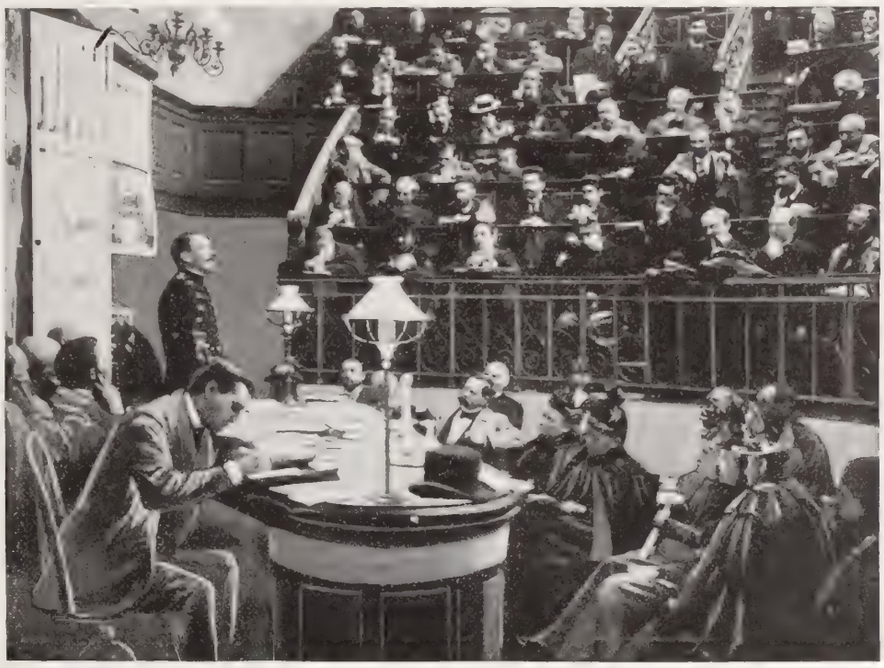
On May 10th, the American Female Guardian Society and Home for the Friendless, New York City, celebrates its sixty-fifth anniversary. The twelve Industrial Schools of the Society have taught during the year 7,556 tenement children, instruction being given in seven industries by special teachers. The larger boys have learned cobbling, chair-caning, carpentry, and Venetian ironwork, and the classes for the girls have been in cooking, housekeeping and sewing. Kindergarten work has been done by eleven hundred little people. In the Home, 261 children have been cared for, and fifteen sent out to adopted homes.

French Alcoholism

ONE of the most remarkable conferences of modern times, was the International Anti-Alcoholic Congress which has just closed its sessions in the French capital. Temperance advocates from the United States, England, Germany, Belgium, and other lands took part with Frenchmen in the proceedings. They elicited facts which are truly appalling, and discussed measures for remedying the evil. It appears from the testimony given by public men and other witnesses that at the present time France is suffering more than any other civilized land from the liquor evil. One prominent statistician declared his conviction that alcohol caused the death of fully fifty thousand persons in France last year. In the accompanying picture, the witness is a captain of the French army, who gives a terrible account of the ravages of absinthe, which he said was the favorite drink of officers and men. General Gallieni declared that it had been proved during the campaign in Madagascar that even bad water was better for the soldier than the alcoholic drink he resorted to. In one campaign total abstinence was enforced and the efficiency of the men was increased forty per cent. Lieut. Guieysse said that in all those regiments in which the canteen had been replaced by restaurants in which tea, coffee, lemonade and other temperance drinks were sold instead of intoxicants, the reports of the health and morals of the troops showed a marked improvement. Excessive drinking is not confined to the army. Statistics for the entire country show that France is a larger consumer of alcoholic beverages than any other nation. Dividing the total amount annually consumed by the population, including women and children, it was found that the average quantity per head was twenty-five pints: in Belgium seventeen; in Great Britain sixteen; and in the United States between ten and eleven, while in Canada it is only three and a half. The Congress believed that the drinking habit in France had increased largely because of the facilities for opening saloons. In Paris alone, besides the hotels, there are 33,000 of these drinking places and in all France the number has increased from 356,863 in 1880 to 454,500 this year. These figures have caused general alarm for the safety of the country. At the Congress the speakers included Catholics, Protestants, Jews and Atheists, who sat side by side and consulted on the best means for checking the evil. There, as here, the chief difficulty in devising repressive laws consists in the fact that the dealers exert enormous political influence and scarcely any legislator could be elected without the good will of the dealers in his district. The Congress separated without devising any effectual remedy, which indeed no congress could do. So as in olden times, the curse goes on ruining and despoiling the nations, and men groan under it as did God's ancient prophets:

Woe to the crown of pride of the drunkards of Ephraim and to the fading flower of his glorious beauty which is on the head of the fat valley of them that are overcome with wine (Isa. 28: 1, R.V.).



A FRENCH OFFICER DESCRIBING THE ABSINTHE HABIT TO THE ANTI-ALCOHOLIC CONGRESS

A Surgeon's Blunder

A terrible mistake which, it is feared, will involve a young man in total blindness has been made by a Canadian doctor of high standing. In operating on the patient who was suffering from an injury to one of his eyes, the doctor removed the uninjured eye. It appears that the young man consulted the doctor for an injury to his right eye. A knife had slipped and entered the sclerotic coat of the eye, and passing forward had cut its way through the iris and cornea. The doctor tried to save the sight of that eye, but later it was found that the retina was injured and it was impossible to cure it. The doctor was convinced that the patient would always be blind on that side. He did not see him again for some time, but as he was suffering a good deal of pain, and there was inflammation in the useless eyeball which was affecting the other eye, the patient came again, and the doctor advised that the blind eye should be removed, lest it cause the other eye to become useless through disease. The patient consented and the operation was performed. Not until it was successfully done and the patient was recovering from the anæsthetic which had been administered, did the doctor discover that he had made a grievous mistake. It was the left eye which was sound that he had taken out. The patient is therefore rendered totally blind, unless the injured eye can be cured, which previous to the operation was deemed to be incurable. The doctor is grieved beyond expression over the mistake. "I would willingly give my own eye," he said, "could it restore sight to the unfortunate youth." But the surgeon's lament is in vain, the injury is irreparable. So many a parent has felt who has made an analogous mistake. It is a common thing for the parents or friends of some young person, who has become anxious about his soul's salvation, to try to divert his mind by pleasure and frivolity, and so the sight that was opening to spiritual things has been taken away in mistaken kindness.

It were well for him if a millstone were hanged about his neck and he were thrown into the sea rather than that he should cause one of these little ones to stumble (Luke 17: 2).

Two Ancient Statues

An important discovery is reported from Egypt. The excavators who have been working for many years in the temple at Karnak have found two statues, one of which was carved, as is proved by an inscription upon it, in the time of Abraham, and the other in the reign of Rameses II., the Pharaoh who oppressed the Israelites. The former is a well-sculptured representation of a man in a sitting posture, with clearly cut features, and evidently a likeness. A block on the knees of the figure is covered with hieroglyphs, which state that it was set up by King Usertesen I. in memory of his father, and recount the offerings of cattle, bread, garments and incense which the king made to God on his father's account. This king reigned in the year 2100 B. C., the period generally believed to be that in which Abraham lived. The other statue is that of Ammon, the God worshipped in the time of Moses. It is a standing figure of alabaster, eighteen feet high, and the figure is beautifully proportioned. Both statues have been buried in the earth probably over two thousand years, but they have suffered little injury, and show how high a degree of art had been attained in the early period in which they were graven. But grand as was its civilization and mighty as was the power of Egypt, it has happened to it as God's prophet predicted:

I will destroy their idols and I will cause their images to cease, and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt, and I will put a fear in the land of Egypt (Ezek. 30: 13).

The Samoan Imbroglio

A sensible letter from the commander of the German warship at Samoa has been published by the Nord Deutsche Zeitung. It explains much that was previously mysterious, and shows how exaggerated some of the rumors have been. He says: "The wildest rumors are current concerning the relations between the officers and crew of the Falke and the Americans and English. The reports are due to some of our countrymen who do not tire of creating ill-feeling between the officers and men of the three countries by promoting such rumors. As a matter of fact, the relations between the different commanders and officers are thoroughly courteous and of an accommodating character." He quotes several acts on the part of the American and English commanders as illustrations of his contention. Herr Rose, the German consul, whose portrait appears on this page, has evidently yielded to the wishes of the Germans referred to by Capt. Schoenfelder, who for some reason still unexplained, desire the accession of Mataafa. He has enthusiastically supported his claims, and has given him advice and all the assistance that his official position would allow. On the other hand, the American Chief Justice admits that at first he was in favor of Mataafa becoming king, as he was duly elected; but on careful consideration of the treaty, he became convinced that Mataafa was not eligible, and therefore gave judgment in favor of his rival, Tanu. It will be remembered that the reason for excluding Mataafa was the objection to him of Bismarck, who was angered by Mataafa's barbarity to German sailors. It is a strange coincidence that in giving effect to German antipathy the Chief Justice should have incurred the opposition of the German consul. From recently published statistics it appears that the bulk of the export and import trade with Samoa is in English hands. The imports from Germany are $53,000; from the United States, $84,000, and from Great Britain, $173,500. They also outnumber the other two nationalities in population. The Americans on the islands number 26; German subjects, 20; British subjects, 439. It may be hoped that the Commission now on its way to Samoa will be able to arrange the difficulty in such a way as to insure the welfare of the people, which, after all, is of more moment than considerations of trade and international jealousy. The three Christian nations concerned ought to realize that they have a higher responsibility than their own interests because they represent Him whose rule is for righteousness.

HERR FRITZ ROSE, GERMAN CONSUL IN SAMOA

He shall speak peace unto the heathen and his dominion shall be from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth (Zech. 9: 10).

A Mountain on Fire

An extraordinary phenomenon in Arizona is described by Dr. Louis Albert Banks, the eminent Methodist clergyman of Cleveland, O. He says that when the Santa Fe railroad contractors reached Williams, Ariz., they attempted to tunnel through the mountain. A fire broke out in the workings, which was not extinguished until large quantities of water had been thrown upon it. Scarcely had new woodwork been put in, when the fire broke out again, and this time it could not be put out. It appeared that the geological formation of the mountain is chiefly limestone in a high degree of purity. The water used in extinguishing the first fire had set the lime to slacking. The lime as it slacked dissolved into gas, liquid and ashes, which, falling out of place, released the adjoining strata and exposed a fresh surface to the chemical action of the air and vapor. How far the strata extends is not known, but it looks as if the whole inside of the mountain would be eaten away. There are men sometimes to be met with in society who resemble this mountain. One sin in their nature leads to another, until their whole being seems to be given up to the curse. This is no new phenomenon, but was witnessed in Apostolic times.

It defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell (James 3: 6).

. . . Our Nation's Greatest Naval Station . . .

The New York Navy Yard, its Powerful Warships, its Guns and its Torpedo Boats Illustrated by Photographs Taken Specially for "The Christian Herald" by Joseph Adams

THE CRUISER "NEWARK," AND THE ICE-BOAT "GACELA"

THE OLD TRAINING SHIP "VERMONT," AT HER PERMANENT MOORINGS

DURING the late war with Spain, the New York Navy Yard played a most important part in the great drama of conquest. In the earlier stages of the conflict, its docks were crowded with cruisers, battleships, gunboats and torpedo boats which were undergoing hasty equipment for the serious work that followed. Its magazines were crowded with shells and the machine shops, foundries, ordnance shops, and other quarters were filled with an army of skilled workmen, who labored day and night to send forth our fleets to victory. As many as 8,000 men were engaged there at one time, although the regular force at the Yard is only 2,000. The government property devoted to the purposes of the Navy Yard is situated on Wallabout Bay and covers 145 acres and has a mile of magnificent water-front. As a whole, it ranks as our finest naval station. One of the two great dry docks alone cost over $2,000,000. Besides roomy shops and officers' barracks, there are extensive marine barracks, and a naval hospital. There are also an excellent library and museum in which are stored many articles of historical interest. The chief of the Navy Yard is Rear-Admiral Philip, formerly Commander of the battleship, Texas. The storehouses are the largest on this continent and its general equipment is on an ampler scale than that of the other yards which are situated at Portsmouth, N. H., League Island, Pa., Norfolk, Va., Mare Island, Calif., Kittery, Me., Pensacola, Fla., Charlestown, Mass., and Washington, D. C. It occupies a position unequalled in advantages for initiating naval movements in Atlantic waters, as was satisfactorily demonstrated in the late war. It is a centre of enlistment, and here the active force of the Navy was largely augmented during the spring and summer months of 1898. Some fine naval vessels have been built here, and here also are abundant facilities for the repair of ships, hulks and machinery. Here were fitted out many of the vessels of the auxiliary navy, which did splendid service, co-operating effectively with the fleets of Sampson and Schley in the operations off Havana, Matanzas, Santiago and elsewhere during the critical junctures of the war.

GUNBOAT "ATLANTA" (OUT OF COMMISSION)

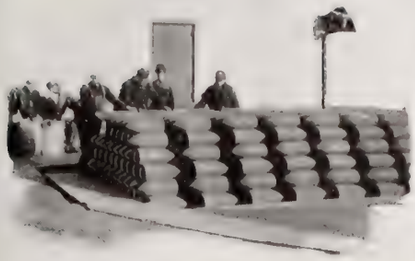
THE MAIN ENTRANCE OF THE NAVY YARD

THE CRUISER "NEW ORLEANS" COMING INTO DOCK

Our photographs of the Navy Yard, which were taken by special permission, will be found most interesting. During the Spanish War, when almost every available sea-going craft belonging to the Government was placed in commission, the Yard at times was deserted. At the close of hostilities, and as our fleets returned from their different stations in the West Indies, the great cruisers and battleships, the trim gunboats, and the low-hulled, swift, torpedo-boats came back to the old quarters for overhauling and repairs. Vessels and crews were accorded the warmest welcome, civic, military and naval officialdom, and even the shipping in the harbor, all uniting to show their high appreciation of the valor of the American sailor. Latest to return was the Kearsarge,

FERRY-BOAT FROM THE NAVY YARD TO COB DOCK

THE BATTLESHIP "MASSACHUSETTS" IN DRY DOCK



EMPTY SHELLS

THE U. S. SUBMARINE BOAT "PLUNGER"

THE PEARY METEORITE

the trim warship which was the first to "cut loose" with her guns in the battle of Manila Bay, and the heartiness of her reception must have surprised and delighted the "jackies," who had been absent from their native land for considerably over a year.

Among the warships shown in the photographs are the Newark, which took part in the naval operations in the West Indies; the New Orleans (purchased from Brazil), whose Naval Reserves distinguished themselves repeatedly in engagements with Spanish batteries in Cuba, and the Massachusetts, also noted for its share in the West Indian naval campaign, and looking like an armed leviathan of the deep. The Atlanta has now been out of commission for the last five years. A grim and ungainly craft is the submarine boat Plunger, which has a record of disaster, forty-seven men having lost their lives in her at different times. Four of the torpedo-boats—Winslow, Porter, Rodgers and Foote,—were active participants in the Cuban blockade, and their crews did brave work on several occasions. The photograph of the Arrow recalls the melancholy story of the loss of the Maine in Havana harbor. Side by side on the page with a field of our own old and condemned cannon, lie some of the guns recovered from the Spanish warship Maria Teresa, their shields pierced by the shells of the American fleet. Some of the larger calibre shells are shown in a photograph on the same page. These are, of course, empty, the custom being to load them on board ship. An object of curious interest is the giant meteorite, which was brought from the Arctic by Peary's expedition, and is supposed to consist principally of iron, which fell to earth in a superheated, molten condition. The Navy Yard is surrounded by a thick wall about 15 feet high, which cuts it off from the Borough of Brooklyn. It is, in some respects, a miniature city in itself, being laid out in streets, and having its own river police and fire departments. The residence of the Commandant is situated on a high knoll at the western end of the Yard, from which spot there is a commanding view of the many ships and buildings. A brass band takes its station here on Saturday afternoons during the summer. The music, the brightly uniformed officers and men, the many fair visitors, and the men-of-war glistening with the "white paint of peace" make the scene a very enlivening one. On the parade ground, in front of the marine barracks, there is also much life and movement on bright days. The marines, who are our "sea soldiers," are being constantly put through military evolutions and in times of recreation are indulging in their favorite game, baseball. One of the objects in the Navy Yard which the visitor never fails to notice, is a great ship of wood whose entire hull is out of the water and filled with windows. It is very evident that this vessel is not intended to go to sea. It is, instead, the training ship Vermont which was a frigate in the early days of the Navy, but is now the residing place of the naval apprentices. A young man who applies for a sailor's berth in the Navy and passes the physical and mental examinations, is put on the Vermont for a period of training and probation until fully qualified.

8-IN. GUNS FROM "MARIA TERESA"

IN THE ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT—CLEANING THE QUICK-FIRE GUNS

FIELD OF CONDEMNED CANNON

A GROUP OF NEW TORPEDO BOATS

FOUR FAMOUS TORPEDO BOATS

TORPEDO BOAT "ARROW," SAVED FROM THE "MAINE"

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

IMMIGRATION . . . AND HOME-MAKING

Our Incoming Hosts Home-makers from Afar
Nomads Christianity's Opportunity

SOME TIMES [illegible] times an old song, strikes a responsive chord in our hearts by awakening sad or happy memories. Our illustration may remind some of our readers of similar scenes in their fatherlands. Immigrants, of the class that America is glad to welcome—good, honest, true folks—are bidding adieu to the homes of their childhood, to dear kindred and to old friends, ere beginning their journey to the ship that shall bring them to the New World where doubtless other dear kindred and old friends wait with greeting as happy as this parting is sorrowful.

If "it is home where the heart is," inhabitants of every clime must feel personal interest in the welfare of the United States because of beloved ones here. Our last census shows that from 1881 to 1890, 5,238,728 foreigners sought our shores, 1,466,426 were from Great Britain; 1,452,952 from Germany. During the fiscal year ending June 20, 1896, we had 229,299 immigrants; of these 3,229 were shoemakers, 1,743 miners, 1,137 blacksmiths, 4,492 merchants, 3,826 tailors, 22,560 farmers, 52,231 laborers, 23,656 servants. An industrial army surely! Considering that "laborers" and "servants" [illegible] largely to the agricultural class we can form an idea of how many tillers of the soil Europe gives us annually. Of these honest sons of toil we can truly say: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose," for they come as home-makers from crowded countries, to take advantage of the wider room and opportunities afforded by our rolling prairies, expansive hillsides, rich mines and fertile valleys. On farms in New England and other settled sections, their children grow up with our own naturally as American citizens; on frontier ranches, removed from church and Sunday School privileges, our missionaries and preachers seek them out, build up Sunday Schools and churches among them, and assist in the good work of their naturalization while they are reviving or keeping alive Christian sentiments and habits brought from their homes in the Old World.

In cities where Italians, Russians, Greeks, Syrians, Poles, Arabians and other nationalities cluster, Christianity meets a different problem. Many incomers are wandering nomads, ignorant of the meaning of the word "home," for which their language has often no equivalent. Our mission halls, social and Gospel settlements, and our fresh air workers help these most effectually through the little children who take kindly to object lessons in home-life. Our readers who have followed accounts in this paper of Sunday School work on the frontier, and home-making work in city slums, will read with interest the figures given here as showing the magnitude of American responsibility and opportunity in making foreign-born citizens "at home" among us in the true, Christian sense of the word.

EMIGRANTS TAKING LEAVE OF HOME AND KINDRED

Children and Birds

Cornell University has sent out a letter asking children to help entertain our bird visitors this summer. The University, likewise, publishes a leaflet, The Birds and I, which will be sent free to all teachers asking for it. The letter says:

Ask your teacher if she has one. In the leaflet are pictures of various styles of bird houses. Some of them are good subjects for drawing lessons. Perhaps your teacher will [illegible] these to a scale, just as an architect would do for the guidance of a carpenter, and later you can build a bird house after your drawings. All may not have the tools or the material, or the skill to build elaborate and aristocratic bird houses, but that need be no barrier of hospitality to those who love birds. In our leaflet are designs as simple as an empty fruit can. We wish you would talk over this plan with your teacher, parents and your chums. The kind of birds that will set up housekeeping in the homes that you provide will harm no one. They are never cross, or throw stones, or rob us, but are always happy and have cheerful songs. We are always kind to people having such dispositions, and why should we not be to birds as well?

Children and Encouragement

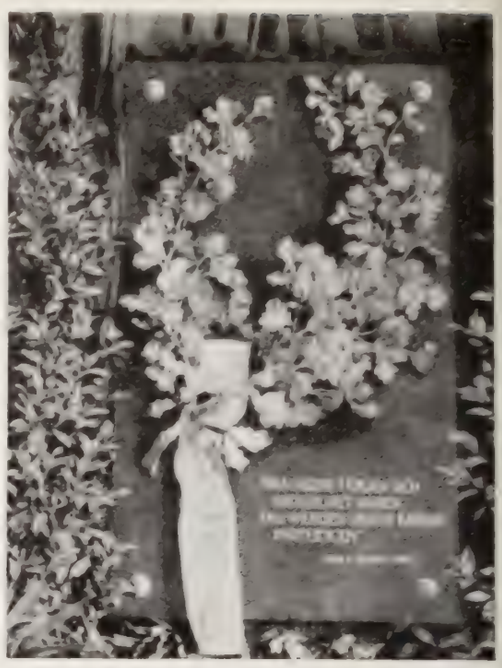
You teach baby to walk by encouragement as much as by anything else. If you continually said to the timid, wavering little creature moving toward you with faltering steps, "Look out! you'll fall!" baby might never learn to walk. When he stumbles, you set him on his feet and encourage him to try again. The same plan applies to the training and education of older children—especially timid, nervous ones. Recognition of any effort at self-improvement, of any act of unselfish service is also a valuable stimulant in the cases of children of sluggish temperaments: used in connection with some judicious system of industrial training, it may be exceedingly effective in overcoming that apathy which is too often taken for wilful laziness. "Try again! You are sure to do it better next time," is easy to say when a child fails in any task he has made a conscientious effort to perform. Sometimes it is wise to change the task to something he likes, and educate him up to the one he dislikes.

A Child's Knock

A busy man sat in his private office; in a room adjoining a group of his assistants were busily employed. Between was a door which no one but the great man ever used. If an employee wished to address him there was the hall-way outside, and another door guarded by an office-boy. One day, a little fellow of six years, rambled into the assistant's room, asked a question or two, and then walked deliberately up to the private door and pounded on it with a good, round, authoritative knock. The great man's chief-assistant looked up with an astounded expression as the unwonted sound fell upon his ear; other employees regarded the child with startled curiosity. Rap! rap! went the little fellow. "Go around by the hall," some one suggested. "I'll not;" said the child, "my papa 'll open this door for me!" It was opened, a smiling face looked forth, a tender voice said, "Welcome, my dear!" and drew the child within. "Ah!" thought the chief-assistant, remembering the text, "Knock, and it shall be opened to you," "if we only had such faith in our Heavenly Father as this child has in his earthly parent, and if we only had such desire to enter into his presence!"

Birthday Presents

"I train the children to give each other and their father and me some trifle on birthdays," said a careful mother. "It makes them thoughtful and unselfish." "Is the giving of trifles truly educational in that way?" asked a friend. "Trifle-giving is overdone. Giving of valuable things is often impossible, but really I think the bestowal of that which costs us little or nothing, and which is not of positive benefit to another, is doubtful exhibition of friendship. My house is littered up with trash I don't want, but that I fear to throw away because I may hurt a donor's feelings." "Ah," said the first speaker, "you have sounded my difficulty. This present-giving costs me much trouble. I spend great thought upon it. I have the children study wants and tastes of each other, so that the gift, small though it be, shall supply an actual need or gratify some particular desire. They clubbed together and gave Rose a piece of music she wanted: Dick got a book he had set his heart on: they worked for the small sum that was put into each of those gifts. The most precious birthday gift I have ever received was from little Joe, who gave me on his birthday the promise to overcome a very ugly fault—a promise which he has faithfully kept."



A TRIBUTE TO BISMARCK

German Women and Bismarck

OUR illustration shows the tribute—a mounted wreath of gold and silver—sent by the women of Hamburg to the tomb of their old friend and neighbor, Prince Bismarck. "Prince Bismarck," says The London Illustrated News, "was not what is commonly called a lady's man: and no one could describe as romantic his reasons given in a letter to his father for embracing matrimony: 'I feel lonely and forsaken, and this mild, damp weather makes me melancholy.' Perhaps that was one his way of expressing himself. Lord Beaconsfield had his own way also. But the two men were alike in this—that they made the best of husbands. 'I owe everything to that lady,' said the English statesman, in a memorable speech delivered after nearly half a century of married life. 'You little know what this woman has done for me,' was Prince Bismarck's commentary to Signor Crispi, after an equally long experience of domesticity. The Princess Bismarck was a pious woman, the daughter of pious parents: and it is to the credit of the Iron Chancellor that he was as much led and influenced by her in moral and spiritual affairs as history shows him to have been." It is the domestic virtues of the Prince which the ladies of Hamburg have doubtless desired to associate with the larger national issues connected with Bismarck's name in the tribute they placed upon his tomb.

A Blessing

The Lord bless thee!
How shall he bless thee?
With the gladness that knoweth no decay.
With the riches that cannot pass away.
With the sunshine that makes an endless day—
Thus may he bless thee.

And keep thee!
How shall he keep thee?
With the all-covering shadow of his wings.
With the strong love that guards from evil things.
With the sure power that safe to glory brings.
Thus may he keep thee.

The Drink Evil in High Places

Mr. C. N. Howard's Eloquent Arraignment of the Liquor Traffic at the Recent Great Mass Meeting in New York

ONE of the most remarkable addresses on the liquor question which has been delivered before a metropolitan assemblage in recent years, was that of Mr. C. N. Howard, of Rochester, N. Y., who was one of the principal speakers at the great meeting at Cooper Union, New York, on April 24. His speech, which deserves to be read by all who believe in the suppression of the vile drink traffic, is given below, He said, in substance:

"If God ever gave a people a country that was worth fighting for, worth living for, worth dying for, he has given it to the people of the United States. It holds the key to the future destiny of the race. In the sense that Paris is France, America is to be the world. King of commerce, king of science, king of civilization.

C. N. HOWARD

"I have faith in my country. I have faith in the people. But I stand here to say, that if America is to be king of anything, we must down the whiskey king. If we are to fill our divinely-appointed mission as the civilizer of mankind, if we are to carry the blessings of liberty and self-government around the world, we have got to raise the standard of public life at home. We have got to reform our civil service from the bottom up and from the top down.

"To fathom the depths of political incapacity and debauchery in the great cities of this country, would require a sounding line that would reach from Hoboken to Helena, Montana. Public scandal is the order of the day. Pick up your New York papers; what say those big types at the head of the column on the front page? 'Public Scandal!' It used to be said that a man was rich in this town if he owned his own home. To-day a man in New York who owns only his own home, must sell it to some rich man who can afford to pay the taxes on it, and must move his family into a rear tenement or garret, where lack of sunlight, foul air and filth are making a pig-sty out of the American home. Public scandal and political corruption are making it too expensive for the common people to live, and the coffin trust is making it a luxury to die. The water-works scandal in Philadelphia has smitten that city with the plague of typhoid, that has slain more people in ten weeks than died of the result of wounds in the war with Spain. The City Hall in Chicago was recently the scene of a mob that threatened to lynch the aldermen who had been bought up like cattle by the street railroad lines of that city. At St. Louis, where I organized a Prohibition Union of Christian men last February, an excise commissioner locating saloons within the proscribed limits of places of worship and public schools, and accepting the petitions of boys who owned bicycles as taxpayers against the remonstrances of their parents, who owned the house. A police commissioner, who instructed bummers to ignore the State law, requiring a license to sell rum, so long as they patronized his brewery. Saloons operating the nickel-in-the-slot living picture machines, that would outrage the moral sense of perdition.

"The devil has fused the saloon and the brothel into one colossal machine to attack the great centres of modern civilization, and unless we can fuse the patriotic, law-abiding, God-serving citizens of the country and meet organized iniquity with organized righteousness, the situation is without hope. To-day, the rum power owns this imperial city in the sense that a hen owns an egg—before it gets into the nest.

The situation in this city, its depth of depravity, its open disregard for law, and the indifference of its citizens, are positively alarming. It does not concern New York only, it concerns the whole nation. Not only do bad men administer its affairs, but it would seem that the more incompetent and unscrupulous a man is, the larger support he commands.

"Our Civil Service is becoming the favored roost for incapables, thieves and plunderers. It has become almost impossible to carry on any public work that does not result in a raid on the treasury. Once confined to our cities, to-day it lays its leprous hand on the State and the Nation. 'Canal scandal' in New York; 'Capitol scandal' in Pennsylvania; 'Allen law scandal' in Illinois; 'City Hall scandal'; 'Gas plant scandal'; 'Sewer scandal'; 'Street paving scandal'; 'Public franchise scandal'; 'Grand Jury scandal'; 'Senatorial scandal'; 'War scandal.'

"There is danger ahead, if we do not stop this wholesale public debauchery. It is high time for decent citizens to wake up and organize with no less an aim than to clean up house and to retire to private life some of the bottle-scarred veterans who misrule our great municipalities, to demand for public office a brand of men who would rather fill a hole in the Potter's Field than fill a public office by truckling to the rum-power.

"We have fought one holy war, to throw off the yoke of Spanish misrule in Cuba. I go in for another holy war to throw off the yoke of bar-room misrule in America. For there is absolutely no hope of regenerating the politics of this country and rescuing our great cities from the political leprosy known a boss-rule, while the saloon lives. You cannot sweep gin-mill politics into perdition and leave the gin-mill in New York at the same time. The saloon is the fortification of Satan in American politics, and we have won our last victory for permanent good government, until we turn our guns on those fortifications. Any plan for civic righteousness that does not provide for a closed rum-shop, is monumental civic nonsense. We will win no victories for permanent civic righteousness in the State of New York, with our left hands, while we vote with our right to legalize 28,000 rum-shops to propagate civic rottenness.

"Do you say it is impracticable and impossible to clean out the whole iniquitous system? Nothing is impossible that is right; nothing that is right is impracticable. Oh, you say, I do not know New York, that a fight like that would result in wholesale butchery; that assassination would lurk in every dark hallway and alley. Well, the meanest coward who walks the earth can die a natural death; it takes a man to face death for a noble cause. I believe that New York would be better off if some of you gentlemen were in heaven to-night. It might be pretty hard on heaven, but if you died in the fight, it would wake the rest of the country up to the fact that the question now facing it is whether we shall suppress this iniquity or be suppressed by it. The potato crop may survive the dry-rot. This republic cannot live on and endure the wet-rot.

"In a speech before the '80 Club of London, Lord Rosebery called attention to the effect of the liquor traffic on the institutions of England, and said it was a political ring that threatened to throttle and control the commonwealth itself. If that be true of England it is doubly true of the United States, where every man, without regard to what he has, what he is, or what he knows, has an equal voice in deciding how and by whom we shall be governed. And if America's experiment of popular government ever fails, in the words of Wendell Philips, 'It will not be incapable of Civil Service, nor an ambitious soldier, nor venal legislations, nor the greed of wealth that will put universal suffrage into eclipse; it will be rum, intrenched in our great cities, making popular suffrage a failure and a curse.' Whatsoever a man soweth, and whatsoever a nation soweth that shall it also reap.

"In 1873, the Virginius, an American ship, manned by American sailors, sailed for the coast of Cuba, with Joseph Fry of Tampa, Florida, as captain. She was captured by the Spanish warship, Tornado, towed into the harbor of Santiago and Capt. Fry of Tampa, and fifty-three of his men were led outside the walls and shot down like dogs. The Spanish soldiers thrust their bayonets into the mouths of the dying Americans; then came a division of Spanish cavalry and rode their horses over the dead bodies, mangling them beyond recognition. Thus died the brave Capt. Fry of Tampa and his men, at Santiago in 1873. Twenty-five years have gone, and a few months ago there sailed from the home of Capt. Fry, a fleet of warships and transports, carrying the American army, which in less than 100 days, swept the Spanish navy from the seas, captured the Spanish army, and the flag that the Spaniards tore down from the mast-head of the Virginius was raised over the Governor's palace at Santiago. Whatsoever a nation soweth, that shall it also reap.

"This nation cannot sow the seeds of anarchy and reap loyalty to law. It cannot license law-breakers and reap honest law-makers. And if this government, founded upon the virtue, morality and intelligence of its citizens, is to endure, we must sweep from the land this hot-bed of ignorance, immorality and anarchy—the American saloon! I appeal to you all

"By all for which the martyrs bore, their agony and shame;
By all the warning words of truth with which the prophets came;
By a future that awaits us; by all the hopes that cast
Their faint and trembling beams across the blackness of the past,
And by the blessed thought of him who for earth's freedom died
Strike quick, strike hard, strike now, on God Almighty's side!

"Line up for the battle; hand to hand, shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart. Storm-clouds are gathering for a break; the hour of God's wrath is come! In the name of Jesus Christ as King, the Liquor Traffic Must Die!

"I close with the memorable words of Abraham Lincoln, uttered in this very place on February 27, 1860: 'Let us be diverted by none of those sophistical contrivances wherewith we are so industriously plied and belabored—contrivances such as groping about for some middle ground between the right and the wrong, vain as would be the search for a man who is neither living nor dead; neither let us be slandered by false accusations against us, but let us have faith. Right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end endeavor to do our duty as God gives us to understand it.'"

ROYAL
Baking Powder
is renowned for making finest cake, hot biscuit and rolls. Made from pure grape cream of tartar.

"A Word to the Wise is Sufficient."

But some stubborn people wait until "down sick" before trying to ward off illness or cure it. The wise recognize in the word "Hood's" assurance of health.

For all blood troubles, scrofula, pimples, as well as diseases of the kidneys, liver and bowels, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the effective and faultless cure.

Poor Blood—"The doctor said there were not seven drops of good blood in my body. Hood's Sarsaparilla built me up and made me strong and well." SUSIE E. BROWN, 16 Astor Hill, Lynn, Mass.

Dyspepsia—"We all use Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cured my brother-in-law and myself of dyspepsia. I owe my life to it." M. H. KIRK, 607 Franklin St., Philadelphia.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla

Tailor Made Suit $4.98

ALL WOOL MATERIAL

Silk Lined Jacket.

Jacket elegantly silk lined, skirt superbly finished; made from Dahl's Celebrated Fast Color All-wool Fine Twilled Ladies' Cloth; equal every way to others $10 Suits. Choice of electric blue, navy blue or black color.

SEND NO MONEY but send this adv. with color desired, give bust and waist measure, length of skirt (from front from skirt band to bottom) and we'll send the suit by express C.O.D. and allow you to try it on before you pay a cent. If found just as represented, a perfect fit and worth every penny of $10.00, then pay the express agent $4.98 and express charges. Pay nothing if unsatisfactory.

THE SUIT is made by expert men tailors over designs drawn by that king of ladies tailors, M. LaMadelle, from Dahl's Best All Wool Fast Color Ladies' Cloth, famous everywhere for its rich soft bloom and beautiful appearance.

The Jacket is made in latest single-breasted style, with tight-fitting back and new fashionable sleeves, it is superbly trimmed with fine satin bands artistically double silk-stitched and elaborately lined with real French Silk of beautiful colorings and exquisite designs. The Skirt is splendidly lined, has new fan back, neatly welted seams, is four yards wide and hangs graceful and stylish, from start to finish the suit is tailor-made and worth fully $10.00

SILLY FOOLISH FIRMS advertise Repellant cloth suits as "wool," they don't say All Wool as we do, but "Wool" in order to mislead you. All Repellant cloth is shoddy and half cotton, is worthless. Order their suits and ours, then choose between them. Write for our Big Free Bargain Catalogue of other Suits, Skirts, Capes, Jackets, etc.

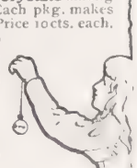
THE G. LOUIS VEHON CO., 155-157 W. Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

I will take a Picture of my little Sister and her

New Watch with my New Camera!

We both got them free.
This is the way we did it.

Handsome Camera for selling 30 packages, Fountain Pen for selling 20 packages, Rugby Foot Ball for selling 20 packages, Boys Watch, Chain and Charm for selling 20 packages and Girls Watch and Chatelaine Pin for selling 40 packages Sawyer's Best Blue Crystals among your friends and neighbors. Each pkg. makes a quart of best Liquid Blue. Price 10cts. each. Send your name and address to us and we will send the Blue, express paid. When sold send us the money and we will send the Watch free by mail.



Sawyer Crystal Blue Co.,
Dept. Z, 27 Broad Street,
BOSTON, MASS.
Established 40 years.

AGENTS WANTED!
Richardson Mfg. Co., 6th St., Bath, N.Y.

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

CHAPTER XXXI

Clear Shining after Rain

MORE cordial welcome could not have been given to three visitors than that accorded to Evadne, Mrs. Everidge and Dr. Randolph at the Willows. They found Miss Diana Chillingworth sitting in the old fashioned porch of her old fashioned house which opened into the old fashioned garden. Everything about Miss Diana was old fashioned and sweet. Her hair was dressed as she had been accustomed to wear it in her girlhood, and even the head mantua maker of Marlborough — ardent worshipper though she was at Fashion's shrine—was forced to bow before her gentle individuality and confess that Miss Diana's taste was perfect. She wore a morning dress of a soft pearl gray over which she had tied an apron of white lawn with a dainty ruffle of embroidery below its hem. Around her were sweet lilies of the valley and violets and pansies, and the roses wafted long breaths of fragrance to her through the trellis work of the porch, while the morning glories hung their heads and blushed under the ardent kisses of the sun.

From her seat she could see the wide-stretching field, where her dainty Jersey was feeding, with its cluster of trees in one corner under which a brook babbled joyously, as it danced on its way to the river: the pretty barn with its pigeon-house, where her snow-white Fantails craned their imperious heads. Her favorite seat was this wide porch, with its flower drapery, where she sat and read, or worked, with her pet spaniel at her feet, and where her friends loved to gather through the summer afternoons and chat over the early supper before they went back to the city's grime and stir.

Within was the room which had been her father's, and the library which still held his books. There were the engravings which she loved and the pictures her father had brought with him from Europe, and the rare old china and her mother's silver service, and her store of delicate napery and household linen, while every table and chair had a story, and the very carpets of each room were dear.

How precious it all was to her no tongue could tell. In those sad days, years ago, when it had seemed impossible to save the treasures from the auctioneer's hammer, after the failure of the institution in which all her money was invested, she had asked herself: Had she been making idols of these things in her heart?

Then Miss Diana had knelt beside the couch, comfortable as only old-fashioned couches know how to be. "Dear Christ," she cried, "I am thy follower, and I have gone shod with velvet while thy feet were travel-stained, and I have slept upon eider-down while thou hadst not where to lay thine head!"

She had knelt on motionless, until the twilight fell and the stars began to peep out in the sky. Then she went downstairs, and there was a strange exalted look upon her sweet face.

"Unavella," she cried softly, "I have found the sunlight, for I can say, 'The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord.'"

"Oh Miss Di-an," wailed Unavella, "I b'lieve you're goin' to die an' be an angel afore the moon changes!"

That day was long past, but it had left a chastened spirit which would remain with her to the end of her life.

As she rose to welcome her friend, whose coming brought cheer to her, as it did to every one, a bright smile illumined her features. Evadne, she had often heard of from John, and was prepared to give her a loving welcome as one whose heart like her own was full of love for the burdened ones, and who, like herself, delighted in nothing so much as to render service to them in Christ's name. Mrs. Everidge she had never heard of, but no one could look on that sweet, peaceful face without being instinctively drawn to her, and Lady Di, as John insisted on calling her, was very susceptible to such influences. They were soon at home together, and while Unavella was busy in the kitchen preparing a feast to do honor to the friends of the man she revered more than any living person, the little party of four sat on the porch, drinking in the sweet country air and talking in cheerful tones.

Lady Di knew all about Reginald's trust fund from Dr. Randolph, and was as deeply interested as Evadne herself in the plans for putting it in operation.

"Why should you not come to the Willows?" John Randolph put the question. Evadne had just finished a merry recital of their woes.

"We have looked at houses until we are fairly distracted, Aunt Marthe and I. One had a cellar kitchen, and I am not going to have my good Dyce, who has promised to be with us, buried in a cellar kitchen; and one had no bath-room, and another was all stairs; and they are all nothing but brick and mortar with a scrap of sky between. I want trees and water and fields. The poor souls who will come to us have enough of masonry in their daily lives."

"I believe it is decreed you should come here," John continued, after the first exclamations of surprise at his suggestion were over. "It is just the work our lady delights in and she cannot be left alone. Dick goes to college next month and I must live in town. The house is beautiful for situation, and you and Mrs. Everidge and Lady Di will form a threefold cord of love and faith which cannot easily be broken."

He looked round upon them, this man who found his joy in helping others, and waited for their answer.

"It would be beautiful, beautiful!" cried Evadne, "if Miss Chillingworth were willing. But the house is not large enough, Doctor Randolph, we will need many more guest chambers you know."

"Nothing easier than to build an addition," said John, with the quiet reserve of power which always made his patients believe in the impossible.

Evadne laid her hand upon Miss Diana's. "Dear Miss Chillingworth," she said gently, "you do not say no to us, do you think you could ever find it in your heart to say yes? I know it must seem a terrible innovation, but we could never have imagined anything so delightful, Aunt Marthe and I. The atmosphere—outdoors and in—is perfection."

Miss Diana looked at the sparkling face and then at Mrs. Everidge with her gentle smile. "I find myself very glad," she said, "since I have to lose my two boys, John, and Dick True, but do you think we had better make any definite plans dear until we have asked the Lord to give us the right idea of it? I always make it a rule to submit everything to him and ask to be led. Our way is not always his way!"

And John Randolph said to Evadne with eyes that were suspiciously bright, "It is impossible for any one to get very far from the Kingdom when they live with our Lady Di."

The talk had wandered then to different subjects and John Randolph listened to the soft play of Evadne's fancy and watched the light in her wonderful eyes. Her nature, so long repressed in an uncongenial environment, in this new soil of love and sympathy was blossoming richly, and he found her very fair. He had rarely seen her resting before; but now the shapely hands were folded together in a beautiful stillness, and then the soft breeze had waved aside a flower, and a sunbeam darting through the trellis, fell upon the stone in her ring and made it sparkle with a baleful fire!

"Poor Louis!" Isabelle had said the last time he had been called to prescribe for her frequently recurring attacks of indisposition, "he will have to wait for promotion now before he can think of marriage. It is very hard for him." So again the truth and lie had mingled.

Before the end of the week it was all settled. Miss Diana had thought over the project and prayed over it and it grew more delightful to her loving heart every hour. Evadne found her on her next visit enthusiastic over the idea and eager to have the preparations begin at once. So an architect was called in and the plans for the additions were drawn, under strict injunctions to retain the home-like character of the old house. Very soon masons and carpenters were hard at work, and in an incredibly short time two beautiful wings were built overlooking a beautiful lawn thus enclosed on three sides. It was an ideal retreat, just suitable for its purpose, where poor weary mothers and their children and convalescent men might come and rest for a few days or weeks while they regained strength.

Mrs. Everidge and Lady Di soon had their hands full, while Unavella with aids selected by herself, ministered to the physical needs of their guests. Evadne herself went to and fro between the Willows and the city, staying in one or the other for a day or two, as circumstances might require, and Dr. Randolph came as often as he could snatch a respite from his work.

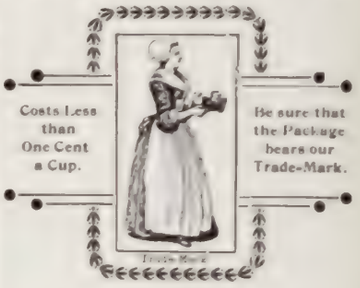
One day, talking with Evadne, he said: "With your permission, I am going to send you a new patient, who seems to need treatment for the mind as well as the body."

(Continued on next page).

Walter Baker & Co.'s

BREAKFAST

COCOA.



A Perfect Food.
Pure, Nutritious, Delicious.

WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd.
Established 1780.
DORCHESTER, MASS.

O'Neill's

Sixth Ave., 20th to 21st St., New York

IMPORTERS and RETAILERS

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Cloaks, Costumes, House Furnishing Goods, etc.

Send for Our . . .
Illustrated . . . . .
Fashion Catalogue!

IT ILLUSTRATES AND TELLS YOU ALL ABOUT THE TREMENDOUS VARIETY OF GOODS WE SELL. A POSTAL CARD WILL BRING IT TO YOU.

Sixth Ave., 20th to 21st St., New York

$3.00 $1
Bagster Bible for

To Christian Herald readers. Carefully packed in a box to any address

This is not a cash premium. We send the books of them just what and how I am offering for introduction to a book in every home. Handsome Bagster complete Teachers' Bible, Persian morocco, limp bound, red under gold edges, elastic band, formerly sold for $3.00. Don't hesitate or you may miss getting one of the wonderful Store Bibles. We guarantee satisfaction, and will cheerfully refund your money if you are not satisfied. Send your $1.00 now. Add 20 cents if to be sent by post. Address

JAMES POTT & CO., 283 and 285 Fourth Ave. New York

THE HAIR 27th Ed. [illegible] and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER. D. G. LONG & CO., 1013 Arch St., Phila., Pa. "Every one should read this little book."

Children's Day Services for the Sunday School.

Blossom Time contains a pastoral song of peace, [illegible]. Per copy, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60.

Sunshine and Song contains a charming [illegible] song, a [illegible], and an end-remedy. Per copy, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.60. Enclose 10 cents for samples of our three latest services.

Columbia, a patriotic service, contains very best [illegible]. The Musical Leader and The Church Choir [illegible]. Sent on approval. Address, sample copy free to [illegible].

GEO. F. ROSCHE & CO.
Chicago, 28 Randolph St. New York, 3 N. Williams st.

615,000
Sacred Songs No. 1
ALREADY SOLD.

Music Edition. Send for [illegible] pieces by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. New York. Chicago.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs, [illegible], and every good purpose. Books, Sheet Music, Octavos, Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments. New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free. FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

NEW SERVICE FOR CHILDREN'S DAY.... JEWELS.
Sample 5 copies. Three different services 5 cents. CHAS. H. GABRIEL, 57 Washington St., Chicago.

A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY

(Continued from preceding page).

Evadne laughed. "Still they come! Is it man, woman or child, Doctor Randolph?"

"Your cousin Louis." His voice was very still.

"Poor Louis! Is it something serious then? He has been looking wretchedly for months."

John Randolph examined her face critically. Could she call him "poor Louis" if she loved?

"His present trouble is nervous strain, aggravated by the unaccustomed confinement and some mental excitement under which he is laboring. He must have a long rest with a complete change of environment. If anyone can lift the cloud which seems to be hanging over him, I think it is you."

Evadne shook her head sadly. "The only one who can help Louis is Jesus Christ," she said.

"I may send him then?"

"Certainly. It would make me very glad to help Louis. I have often tried, but it is difficult."

So Louis Hildreth came. Evadne found him lying upon a couch in the cool library the morning after his arrival at the Willows. She was shocked at the change in him since she had seen him last. His eyes were sunken, while underneath purple shadows fell upon his pallid cheeks.

"What a splendid fellow Randolph is!" he exclaimed suddenly. "He is making himself felt in Marlborough, I tell you. Strange, how some men forge their way to the front, while the rest of us just float down the stream of mediocrity. No wonder we are not missed when we drop out of the babbling conglomerate of humanity into silence," he added bitterly. "Who would miss a single pair of fins from amidst a shoal of herring!"

"I think it is because Dr. Randolph is not content to float, Louis," Evadne answered gently; "he must always be climbing higher. Like Paul, he is pressing towards the mark."

"He is a grand fellow! And the beauty of it is he never seems to think of himself at all. Most men would get to be top lofty if they accomplished as much as he does every day."

Evadne's lips parted in a happy smile.

"I think Doctor Randolph is too much occupied with Jesus to have time to waste upon himself," she said.

"Upon my word, Coz, you're a puzzle! You talk in an unknown tongue. Don't you know self is the god we worship, and the aim of our existence is to have it wear purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day?"

"It should not be!" cried Evadne. "Oh, Louis, dear Louis, life never can be grand until we are able to say, Self has been crucified with Christ!"

During Louis's stay at the Willows John Randolph's visits were frequent, and they held long conversations together, these two men—the one who had seized every opportunity and made the most of it, the other who had let his golden chances slip through his fingers one by one—then John Randolph would go bravely back to his life of toil, while Louis listened to Evadne's sweet voice as she sang in the gloaming, or watched his ring glisten as her deft fingers were busy with their deeds of love.

"How do you do it!" he exclaimed one evening when they were alone together. "You never rest! Your whole life seems to be centered in the lives of others—and there is nothing attractive about them—if there were I could understand. It looks like such drudgery to me. Tell me, little Coz, what makes you give up all your ease to make these people happy?"

"When we love our Father, it is our joy to do his will," she answered softly.

"That is what Randolph says. He is a one-idea man, if there ever was one, and yet he is so many sided. He is the most uncompromising fellow I ever knew. I should as soon expect to see the stars fall from the sky as to see him do a shady thing. You would be amused, Coz, to see the lady mother and Isabelle joining their forces to lay siege to his affections."

What meant that sudden start, and then the blush which flamed up over cheek and brow? Louis Hildreth closed his thin fingers over Evadne's ring with a long-drawn sigh. He was beginning to realize that a hand without a heart is an empty thing.

Long after she had left him he lay motionless. This knowledge, which had come to him so suddenly, had a bitter taste.

"You ought to get well, Hildreth," John Randolph said at his next visit, "and you ought to be a very happy man."

"I never expect to be either. When a man has all he has prided himself upon swept away from him, and all that he longs for denied him, how can it be possible?"

"'Count it your highest good when God denies you.' Is that too hard a Gospel? We shall not read it so in the light of eternity."

"Did you ever love—a woman?"

Louis put the question suddenly, watching his friend's face with a jealous scrutiny.

"Yes." The answer was as simple and straight-forward as the man. He knew of nothing to be ashamed of in this beautiful love of his life.

"And her name was——"

"Evadne."

John Randolph spoke the name for the first time to another, looking up at the sky. When he turned to leave the room he saw that Louis's face was buried among his cushions, and he strolled away in great wonderment. What could it all mean?

Later in the day John Randolph and Evadne sat beside his couch talking in the twilight about the help they would give him when he grew strong.

"There is only one thing wanting between you two," Louis said sadly.

"And what is that?" Dr. Randolph asked the question with a smile.

Louis drew his ring from Evadne's finger and laid her hand in that of his friend. "Take her Randolph. She is worthy of you. I would not say that of any other woman."

With a great joy surging in his heart, John Randolph held out his other hand. She must give herself. He could not take her from another's giving. A lovely shyness flushed into the pure face, their eyes met, and Evadne laid her hand in his without a word.

"Evadne!" The rich, tender tones fell throbbing through the silence, enwrapping the name in a sweet protectiveness. "Life is—for us—to do the will of God!"

[THE END.]

Jesus Wept

(Written for "The Christian Herald")

THE tender human heart
Felt keenest woe,
When friend gone far apart
Left Thee with foe;
And they reviled and mocked—
That heartless mob!
With spears around Thee flocked
Thy life to rob!

Yet, Thou would'st gather them
As hen her young,
Even those who did condemn
And, cruel, hung;
Thy hand stretched out to save
They pierce with nail;
And on Thy cross engrave,
"The King! All hail!"

O, drops of bloody sweat!
O, piteous cry!
We see; we hear it yet,
That—"Crucify."
And the last fainting word,
"Father, forgive!"
By rending rocks was heard,
And we, who live.

To read the story sad,
Give tears afresh,
Sorrowing still—yet glad;
Suffering in flesh,
We know He feels for us,
We one with Him;
He wipes our tears, and thus
Makes glad our hymn.

For us, Thy dear heart bled;
Our sorrow, thine;
For us, Thy tears were shed,
O! Friend Divine;
How sacred has God's Word
This treasure kept.
And Christ-born souls have heard
That "Jesus wept."

—CARRIE L. POST.

FISH OF ALL KINDS, NO MATTER HOW PREPARED IS MADE PERFECTLY DELICIOUS BY THE USE OF

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE.

BEWARE OF MANUFACTURERS WHO ATTEMPT TO SELL A WORTHLESS IMITATION. ~~ SEE SIGNATURE.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, AGTS., NEW YORK.

ONE YEAR'S FREE TRIAL

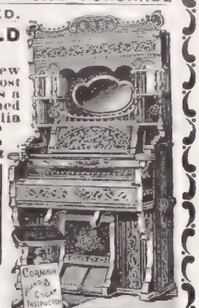
WE WILL SHIP A CORNISH PIANO OR A CORNISH ORGAN ANYWHERE UPON THE DISTINCT UNDERSTANDING THAT IF IT IS NOT SATISFACTORY TO PURCHASER AFTER 12 MONTHS' USE WE WILL TAKE IT BACK AND REFUND PURCHASE MONEY AND FREIGHT CHARGES WITH 6% INTEREST ADDED.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS OF THE WORLD FAMOUS CORNISH PLAN

and for a complete description of the instruments made by us, see our new Souvenir Catalogue for 1899, handsomely illustrated in colors. The most comprehensive musical catalogue in the trade. The frontispiece is a masterly reproduction in fac-simile of an interesting oil painting, designed and executed for us by an eminent artist, representing "Saint Cecelia and the Angelic Choir." This beautiful catalogue is sent FREE charges prepaid, and we also include our novel reference book "The Heart of the People." Catalogue, Book and our latest Special Offers FREE.

PIANOS —FROM— $155 All Pianos are fitted with our Patent Musical Attachment imitating Harp, Banjo, Zither, etc.

ORGANS —FROM— $25 All Organs are fitted with Multitone Orchestral Action.



SPECIAL a prompt response to this advertisement will secure a discount of $10.00 on the list prices as quoted in our 1899 Catalogue on any Cornish Organ or $20.00 on the list prices if you buy a Cornish Piano.

REFERENCES—Our bank your bank, any bank, or any of the multitude of patrons who have purchased millions of dollars' worth of instruments from us during the past fifty years.

Mention paper and write to-day CORNISH & CO., (Established nearly 50 yrs) WASHINGTON, NEW JERSEY.

...DIASTASE...

and Starchy Indigestion:

Everybody knows Pepsin and Pancreatin. They are marvelous imitations of the body's digestive secretions. But who knows what diastase means? Yet, of all the digestive principles, diastase is by far the most important. The duty of diastase in digestion is to care for the starch foods—breadstuffs, vegetables, fruit, and cereals. Three quarters of all indigestion arises from the weakness or lack of diastase in the body; yet it is an astonishing fact that heretofore no effective diastase has been known. In fact, The Medical Times refers thus to the discovery of the best diastase: "It remained for Mr. Jokichi Takamine, a Japanese chemist, to discover one of remarkable power. In his product, Taka Diastase, we have what the profession has so long desired . . . a reliable treatment." These are extraordinary words for a scientific publication to use; but few medical discoveries have excited so much interest among physicians or so quickly won an established place among recognized treatments. It is, in short, the only efficient treatment of the most common and obstinate form of dyspepsia—indigestion of starch foods.

Taka-Diastase is offered to the general public only in the form of Kaskola Tablets. In them it is combined with the best-known stomach, bowel and liver tonics, and forms a treatment whose great value any physician will vouch for. The makers of Kaskola Tablets offer to send any reader of this paper, free, a fifty-cent box, on condition that if benefit is derived from using them according to directions, the price shall be sent to the P. L. Abbey Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., within ten days. If no benefit is found, no charge will be made.

Wool Soap Free for a Postal

Write on a postal your name, and the name of a dealer who doesn't sell Wool Soap, and we will send you a cake free. Wool Soap is the best and purest soap for TOILET AND BATH—white, pleasing, softening, good for the skin.

Swift and Company, Makers, Chicago

For the home, library, sick room, studio, office, school room

THE STANDORETTE TRADE MARK

An Invalid's Stand, Easel, Reading Stand, Book Rest, Music Stand, Card Stand, Sewing Stand, Drawing Board, all in one handsome piece of furniture. Compactly folded; shipped in box 24x21x2¾.

Thousands in use giving the best of satisfaction. Shipped on approval freight paid. If not as represented, money refunded. Light, durable, ornamental. Made of steel tubing, enameled in black. Trimmings nickel plated. All adjustments are automatic. Our booklet mailed free.

D. H. ALLEN & CO., Miamisburg, O.

The IDEAL Steam Cooker

Cooks a whole meal over 1 burner, on gasoline, oil, gas or common cook stove.

Reduces Fuel Bills One-Half.

Makes tough meats tender. Prevents steam and odors. Whistle blows when cooker needs more water. Burning or scorching impossible. It is also a perfect milk sterilizer. Agents wanted.

TOLEDO COOKER CO., Box 16, Toledo, O.

"Mizpah" Valve Nipples

WILL NOT COLLAPSE

and therefore prevent much colic. The valve prevents a vacuum being formed to collapse them. The ribs inside prevent collapsing when the child bites them. The rim is such that they cannot be pulled off the bottle. Sample free by mail.

WALTER F. WARE, 512 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

NO DIRT LEFT

in clothes washed with the "BUSY BEE WASHER" 100 pieces in one hour and no hard work done. That is the record. AGENTS WANTED. Exclusive sale. Write for terms.

Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 119 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.

$2.45 buys a MAPLE AND REED BODY Baby Carriage

32 page Catalogue Free. We Pay Freight and ship on 15 days trial. No money required in advance. Address VICTOR MANUFACTURING CO., Dept. H 21, 295 and 297 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

$20.00 A Week Salary. Agents wanted. We give credit, allow 50 per cent and 20 per cent. discount, prepay expressage. High grade and guaranteed jewelry, watches, topaz diamonds; plated and solid Colorado Silver tableware. Mutual Manufacturing Co., 126 Chambers St., Dept. 1, N. Y. City

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES; no experience needed; position permanent; self seller. PEASE MFG. CO., P.O. Box A, Cincinnati, O

STARK BRO'S PAY CASH every WEEK if you sell STARK TREES. Outfit free. STARK NURSERY, LOUISIANA, MO., Rockport, Ill., Dansville, N.Y.

DO YOU WANT More than Savings Bank Interest? To Sell Land or Mortgages? If so, write FIDELITY INVESTMENT CO., TACOMA, WASH.

All Help Our Children's Home

THE time is approaching when our Children's Home will be ready for its happy little guests. The flowers will soon burst into full blossom; the birds are singing; the greening fields seem waiting for the children. Letters from many readers prove how tenderly kind hearts remember the little tenement waifs who without Christian help could have no happy time in summer. The following extracts show how general and profound is the interest in this beautiful work for Him who said, "Suffer the little ones to come unto me."

Eleanor. I enclose $15 for the fresh-air fund, and my earnest prayers, that it may do a little good in this great world, go with it.

It will do more than a little good. It will give five tenement waifs a ten days' outing. Two other good friends of children, J. M. C., Santa Ana, Cal., and J. E. H., Moretown, Vt., send each $15 to give five little waifs an outing.

M. I. F., $3. May our dear Lord bless this work of love for little ones.—A. S., $2. Please use in your good work for the "little fathers and mothers."—M. J. H., $3 to be used to give some little one a good time at the Children's Home this summer, and I hope that the blessing of our Father in heaven may go with it.—I. H. N., $3 for the outing of some poor child. K. M. C., $5. My [illegible] four, is much interested in the poor little children that have no papa or mamma, and wants to help give one an outing.—Sarah Ely. Ten cents from my little girl, given her by her father, a penny at a time, for work done.—Wilhelmina A., $6 to send two children to your fresh-air home.—I wish I had the means to send one hundred.—New York City Mothers' Club $3. Please accept this small contribution to the vacation fund for poor children. W. C., $6. To make two children happy "In His Name."—Mrs. R. P. S., $5. In memory of Howard and Emma.—"One that loves little children," $2.15.—Mrs. A. F. H., $1. May God's rich blessing rest upon this good work done "In His Name."—Mrs. M. A. S., $2, hoping this may help some needy little one.—Mrs. A. W., $1. I have great pity for the tenement waifs.—E. R. L. M., $12, to give four little ones an outing. Wish we could send more.—C. A. L., $10, my annual help for the Children's Home.—Dr. F. M. L., $10. "In His Name."—The "Rosebud Club" (composed of twelve little boys and girls), $3 to send some worthy child to the country.

Is not this a nice letter?

We, in our little country school at Edinboro, Pa., have read with great interest about the waifs made happy at your fresh-air Home, and knowing with how much pleasure we anticipate our vacation here on the farms, we are glad to sacrifice the little festivities which we usually have at the close of each school term, in order to give some dear little city child a holiday at the Home. That God may abundantly bless our offering we humbly pray. Our teacher and a kind invalid lady have helped us. Signed: E. V. K., teacher. Pupils: Rea, Gaylord, Wilbur, Nellie, Albert, Neal, Mary, Perry, Georgia, Glenn, Ray, Anita, Lorence, Bertha ($7.62 enclosed).

The following contributions have been received in aid of the Children's Home:

Previously acknowledged	$144 32
Mrs. Chatterton	3 00
Mrs. Henry C. Clark	1 50
A Friend, Fair Haven	3 00
The Rosebud Club, Batavia	3 00
Justin M. Copeland	15 00
Unknown	3 00
John F. Olin	1 00
E. A. Cummins	6 00
W. C. T. U., Woodlawn, N. Y. City	2 00
Ben [illegible]	1 00
Miss Lizzie Dwelley	50
Mrs. Billings	5 00
Job Smith	1 50
Total	$388 82

BOOKS RECEIVED

Poems by Richard Realf. A loving compilation of literary memoirs of one of the brightest of American poets, by Richard J. Hinton, himself a well-known author. Finely illustrated and neatly bound in cloth, 232 pages, price $2.50. Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York and London, publishers.

Ciderville Folks as Seen by Silas Ganderfoot, by Elijah P. Brown, with introduction by Robert J. Burdette and illustrations by Frank Beard. A book that will while away many a tedious hour and bring up smiles and laughter wherever it is read besides inculcating a good, breezy, wholesome moral. It will be thoroughly enjoyed by all classes of readers. Pp. 500; illuminated cloth covers, $1.75. The Date Publishing Co., Chicago, publishers.

St. Nicholas. Vol. XXV (parts I and II, Nov. 1897 to April 1898, and May 1898 to Oct. 1898), pp. 1,056. The latest volumes of this juvenile magazine is fully up to the high standard of previous years. It is a rich treasury of stories, sketches, poems and general literature, brilliant, entertaining and helpful and its pages abound in beautiful illustrations. Its literary contributors include a host of celebrities, among them being Rudyard Kipling, Mary E. Bradley, Frank R. Stockton, Ruth McEnery Stuart, James Whitcomb Riley, Mary L. B. Branch, Albert Bigelow Paine, Edith M. Thomas, Charles L. Benjamin, Ernest Ingersoll and George Kennan, while the artists staff includes George Varian, C. M. Relyea, Harry Fenn, Irving R. Wiles, R. G. Vosburgh and Katherine Pyle. The Century Co., New York, publishers.

The CHOICE of a BUSINESS
BANKING
By GEORGE G. WILLIAMS
President of The Chemical National Bank of New York

The Advantages of the Country College

By NATHANIEL BUTLER, President of Colby College

A popular article pointing out to young men and their parents the advantages of the country college as compared with the university. Doctor Butler tells what sort of men should select the country college, and why; and, in a word, sums up its special advantages for the benefit of the young man who is about to choose his Alma Mater.

In this week's number of

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST
Founded Aº Dⁱ 1728 by Benj. Franklin
(OF PHILADELPHIA)

Dated Saturday, May 13.

Travels and Troubles in the Orient

By ROBERT BARR

Real life there as he found it; his little difficulties with Turkish officials were actual experiences, and are decidedly dramatic.

To be had of All Newsmen at 5 Cents the Copy

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

Dr. H. SANCHE'S OXYDONOR...

Cures Nervous Prostration, Insomnia, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Debility, La Grippe, Pneumonia, Billiousness, Asthma, Bright's Disease, Locomotor Ataxia, Fevers, and all forms of disease without medicine or electricity.

One OXYDONOR will keep an entire family in good health, and will last a lifetime if taken care of. A 170-page book of directions with each OXYDONOR.

Nervous Prostration—La Grippe.

SANTA CRUZ, Cal., Feb. 2, 1899.

DEAR DR. SANCHE:—My [illegible] months ago I could not walk two blocks without faintness overtaking me; but now I can walk two miles without any real hurt. I have had La Grippe this winter, but thanks to Oxydonor I have weathered the attack successfully, and am eating, sleeping and feeling better than for years past. You certainly have discovered a road to health that deserves to be heralded abroad with the same enthusiasm as is the Gospel of God for the redemption of mankind. Sincerely yours in gratitude. (REV.) GEO. R. BIRD.

REFUSE IMITATIONS. [illegible]

DR. H. SANCHE & COMPANY.

261 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
61 Fifth Street, Detroit, Mich.
57 State Street, Masonic Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Canadian Office: 2268 St. Catherine Street, Montreal, Canada.

The Latest Improved McCREERY FOLDING VAPOR BATH CABINET. Has a Door [illegible] A home treatment that will [illegible] $2.50 extra. Folds neatly in small space. From descriptive book and testimonials. Special inducements to canvassers. McCLENAHAN & McCREERY CO., Summit St., Toledo, O.

WANTED—A [illegible] RIPANS will [illegible] RIPANS [illegible] RIPANS [illegible] had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for [illegible] The Ripans Chemical Co., No. [illegible] Spruce St., New York.

Chambard's Tea, [illegible] medicine in France for biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, swelling of [illegible] and best purgative. Box 35 cents by mail. Legoll's Pharmacy, 296 7th Ave., N. Y., and leading druggists.

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit [illegible] 10 to 20 days. No pay [illegible] Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

Our Folding Boats are puncture proof. Galvanized steel ribbing. For hunting, fishing, exploring and [illegible] Walter Wellman took them on his voyage [illegible] Schwatka explored the Yukon with them. Awarded first premium at World's Fair. Send 6c. for catalogue. 4 engravings. KING FOLDING CANVAS BOAT CO., Kalamazoo, Mich.

. . . After-Supper Chats . . .

About Weddings—The Bride's Dress—Her Wedding Outfit—Her Presents—Mothers

I AM always glad when I hear wedding bells chime. Some people are sorry. I know one woman who makes a point of always crying at a wedding. She says she foresees so much trouble ahead for the bride and groom, so many hard places they will have to cross, so many tears to shed, that she cannot be cheerful. It never occurs to her that she might stay at home and not strike a jarring note where everything should be festive and cheerful. For my part I believe in looking on the bright side, even when there is trouble, and taking a hopeful view of affairs even though the case may at present seem sorrowful. But a wedding is to my mind an occasion for great rejoicing. Here are two congenial persons who have taken each other for better or for worse, for richer, for poorer, for sickness, for health, and they start out with a large capital of love and faith, and with God's blessing and the congratulations of their friends and kindred and why should they not be contented and happy? Why should anybody predict for them aught except happiness and contentment?

The question has been asked THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, when and for how long is a woman a bride? She becomes a bride on her wedding-day; as she dresses for the ceremony and walks up the aisle of the church to the altar, she is a bride, and she remains a bride until her honeymoon is over; in other words while she is a newly married wife she is entitled to the pretty distinction of bridehood.

What shall the bride wear on her great day? Nothing is prettier for her than a white gown and a veil. The gown may be of ivory or cream white satin, with quantities of costly lace, or it may be an inexpensive tulle or mousseline de soie or just a plain muslin or organdie, and the vail may be of priceless point, handed down in the family for generations, or of simple blonde, or illusion; in either instance it is the whiteness, and daintiness which makes the dress appropriate for the occasion. A bride carries in her hand a bouquet or a prayer-book, as she prefers; if the former it may be composed of white roses, lilies of the valley, or orange blossoms; if the latter it should be bound in white, and have inside pages where the names of the married pair, the officiating clergyman, and the witnesses to the ceremony may be inscribed. A widow, on her second marriage, does not wear a veil, and her dress, while rich, is not necessarily made in the traditional bride-fashion. She omits orange blossoms, and also has, as a rule, fewer attendants and less pomp than a maiden at the altar.

All expenses connected with a wedding, except the payment for the carriage in which the bride is taken away, are borne by the parents of the bride.

A traveling gown, or a handsome dress intended for receptions and dinners, may with perfect propriety be worn by a bride who does not wish to wear white.

. . .

FORMERLY, in days when all garments were made at home, the bride's trousseau was the main consideration in the family for months beforehand. It was thought needful to fit out a young wife with a great many beautiful costumes, and with many sets of rich underclothing. One might easily have fancied that a bride was going beyond the reach of shops, and that she must have an outfit which could meet every contingency. A father's pride naturally sent his young daughter thoroughly provided for to the home of her husband, and a mother, anxious that no pains should be spared, looked out for everything elegant, costly, and harmonious, which was within her means to obtain for her girl. The young lady herself often sewed and stitched so steadily that she began her married life on the edge of nervous prostration. A pale, wan creature, worn out and weary, she entered on her new life so manifestly unprepared for it that the first baby paid the price in weakness and fretfulness. In these days, an expectant bride does not lose so much tissue in sewing as her mother did. Many of her things can be bought ready made, and she is satisfied with fewer things than girls once were. As of old, however, she likes to be provided with a good supply of household linen, sheets, pillow-slips, tablecloths and napkins. No finer gift is ever bestowed on a bride than a welcome addition to her linen closet. The lovely doilies and center-pieces which all women admire and prize, are without a peer among bridal presents, and hold their own bravely beside silver, glass and china, lamps, pictures, rugs and chairs, all of which are among the articles selected by friends for wedding-gifts. Sofa cushions, too, now that we have grown luxurious with our lounges and divans, are acceptable wedding presents.

. . .

IF possible, a bride must send a personal note of thanks to all who send her gifts. She will do this if she can before her marriage, signing her maiden name. If presents arrive too late for acknowledgment previous to the wedding, the bride will send her note of thanks in her married name, as soon as she returns from her wedding journey. In no circumstances does a lady sign herself Mrs.—— or Miss——, however. She is simply Jane, or Mary, or Augusta, with her surname, to the end of life's chapter.

Heaven bless every happy bride, and every proud bridegroom.

. . .

I heard a dear young mother say the other day as her darlings, four of them, the oldest six years of age, played about her: "I am doing my best work now for God and my country!" My heart went out to the beautiful woman with the sweet motherly heart. Alas! for the reluctant maternity which has nothing but protest and indignation ready when God sends his best earthly gift, a dear little child.

Margaret E. Sangster

The Great Huxley

What Huxley, the Great English Scientist, Considered the Best Start in Life.

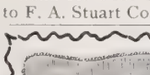
The great English scientist, Huxley, said the best start in life is a sound stomach. Weak stomachs fail to digest food properly because they lack the proper quantity of digestive acids (lactic and hydrochloric) and peptogenic products; the most sensible remedy in all cases of indigestion, is to take after each meal one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets because they supply in a pleasant, harmless form all the elements that weak stomachs lack.

The regular use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will cure every form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

They increase flesh, insure pure blood, strong nerves, a bright eye and clear complexion, because all these result only from wholesome food well digested.

Nearly all druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents full-sized package.

Send for Free book on Stomach Troubles to F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.



THE Washable Hair Sole . . . .

Remedy for Sweaty Feet, Ease for Tender Feet, Cures Callouses.

15c. by mail Postpaid.

Drains the perspiration from the feet to bottom of sole and shoe. Stops irritation.

H. A. ROBERTS, Shoe Dealer, 16 Bible House, New York City.

COPY OF A $2,000 Oil Painting FREE

Copyright 1898, GEORGE S. GRAVES. Actual size, 19x25.

"UNEXPECTED TROUBLE."

"Unexpected Trouble,"

The wonderful $2,000.00 painting by the noted Englishman

FRED MORGAN,

Last spring we purchased for $2,000.00 the noted oil painting, entitled "Unexpected Trouble," or "The First Swim," by Fred Morgan, Esq., of the British Royal Academy. The size of the original canvass is 31 1-2 by 42 1-2 inches. We have prepared a reproduction of this noted work, every color and shade of color being faithfully reproduced in size 19 by 25, printed on heavy coated paper. Many cheap reproductions of works of art have been scattered over the country; this, however, is not of such character.

FROM MR. MORGAN.—Following is an extract from a letter from Mr. Morgan, the artist, to whom one of the reproductions was submitted:

MONTROSE VILLA, St. Boniface Road VENTOR. It is a most admirable copy of my original quite one of the most satisfactory reproductions I have ever had giving the exact drawing and color and the touches of the brush. In some senses too faithful, as it brings to my memory the difficulties of getting the baby boy to pose, and the worry of the ducklings.

GIVEN AWAY. To introduce Farm and Home our national semi-monthly which already has a circulation of 250,000 into thousands of homes where it is not now taken, we will send "UNEXPECTED TROUBLE," as above described, on the following terms: The regular price of Farm and Home is 50 cents a year, but for a limited time we will accept subscriptions from the time they are received until January 1st, 1900, for only 20 cents in silver, stamps, or otherwise, and without further charge send the picture, as above described, by mail postpaid.

Agents and Club Raisers Wanted. Liberal commissions for good work. Illustrated Premium List descriptive of over 200 useful articles. Free on application. Address all orders to

SPRINGFIELD, MASS. FARM AND HOME, CHICAGO, ILL.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN — Cincinnati
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION — New York
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN — Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN — St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

WHY is it that the brands of White Lead made by quick or patent process are almost invariably sold below the price of standard brands?

Because practical painters and consumers generally know that they are inferior to the brands made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion. The brands named in margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

$175.00 Monthly and EXPENSES GUARANTEED

GOOD MEN AND WOMEN

To appoint agents and sell our celebrated $5.00 Quaker Folding Thermal Vapor Bath Cabinet. Many earn more

...No Capital or Experience Required...

Greatest Monopoly and Money Maker Ever Offered Agents

No competition. A necessity in every home. Demand is enormous. Everybody buys. Over 400,000 in use — 82,386 sold by agents since January 1st. Ten Millions to be sold.

We Are an Old Established Firm

Perfectly reliable. Capital $100,000.00. Largest manufacturers of Bath Cabinets in the world.

WRITE US TO-DAY stating age, references, territory wanted, etc., and we will forward full information, terms, etc. Don't delay. Send your address anyway. THE WORLD MFG. CO., 613 World Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

...CANCER...

The following and many other reliable persons testify that I thoroughly cure Cancer without the knife: Rev. W. H. Sands, Southport, Indiana, whose father was cured eight years ago of long standing face Cancer. Prof. H. McDiarmid, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, cured seven years ago. Had undergone several operations before with knife. Address Dr. C. Weber, 121 W. 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, for further particulars and free book.

RUPTURE

is easily curable by the use of the EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS. Causes no inconvenience, yields to every motion, can be worn day and night. The spiral spring and graduated pressure does it. Hernia always retained; brings comfort and cure. Used by U. S. Surgeon General. If unsatisfactory return in good condition and money will be refunded. Circular for stamp. Ask your druggist or send direct to EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS CO., 104 N. Fourth St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

WALL PAPER

Send for free sample book of beautiful designs direct from manufacturers and save 25 per cent. Agents Wanted. KAYSER & ALLMAN, 1214-1216 Market St., Phila., Pa.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists

The Gift of Power

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for May 21. Acts 1: 1-8

NOTICES are often seen on large buildings, that floors or lofts are to be rented "with power." Everyone understands what is meant. Prospective tenants may be engaged in occupations differing widely, but the power that is offered them may be applied to the specific purpose of each. One may be a manufacturer and another may be a printer, but the power that wields the hammer, or turns the lathe will operate the printing press. In the spiritual world there is the same need. Of himself man has not the power to do what he wishes. The pitiful confession contained in the seventh chapter of Romans is that which might be made by everyone who has attempted with his own strength to make his own life something better than one of idleness or self-indulgence. The same confession of inability must be made by every Christian worker. He is not able to do the things that he would. There is so much that needs to be done, so many giant evils which ought to be overcome, so many obstacles to be surmounted that the worker cries, "Who is sufficient for these things?" To the man who needs power in his own life or for his work in the church Christ makes the promise that power shall be given.

None have ever needed such a promise more than those to whom it was originally made. They were about to be left to undertake the evangelization of the world. They were plain, ordinary men without the education or influence they would need for so vast an undertaking. We can imagine how their hearts must have sunk as they contemplated it. To them, in their weakness comes the promise, "Ye shall receive power." We know how that power really did come, how they began to preach with boldness and effect and how, seeing a man lame and helpless, they spoke words that sent him running and leaping on his way. They were new men, capable of doing great things and accomplishing great purposes. The mighty fabric of Christianity and the vast extent of its influence to-day come from the impetus given when that promise was fulfilled and the little group of Christ's followers received power. It is always a wonder how so much could have come from so little; but the wonder ceases when we realize that this power came from the Omnipotent. With aid from such a Source, men might do anything. That is the secret of Christianity. It is the connection between God and man. The power that was in Christ in all its fulness is imparted to those who are joined to him by faith, in living union. Emerson's idea of attaching a man's life to a star is surpassed in this opportunity of connecting it with the power of Him who made the stars.

This power is the perpetual heritage of Christ's people. In the early days it was employed in miracles. Christ's promise to his followers of power to heal diseases and do mighty works was kept, but gradually men learned that these were not the best ways in which it could be employed. The curse of the world was the bondage of sin. There was no power that could break the soul's fetters, or heal the sin-stained heart. That was the remedy that was most urgently needed. A miracle might excite their wonder, but the deliverance from the power of evil would save a soul. This was a great triumph and the power that Christ imparted would do it. And it does it to this day. So the poor struggler, worsted in life's conflict, handicapped with inherited tendencies to evil, weakened by years of evil habit, beaten again and again in resistance, hopeless of ever reforming—the message of Christ comes like new life: "Ye shall receive power." And he does receive it. Thousands testify from their experience to its reality. How it comes we know not; but when the poor, weak man goes to Christ in prayer and pleads the promise and asks for strength, believing that he will receive it, the conflict takes a new turn. His arm is nerved with a strength, not his own, and as he wrestles with his old enemy, he has the confidence of the victor. Christ's strength is made perfect in his weakness. The story of persecution and the records of martyrdom tell how men and women have gone bravely to their death in this power, and in Christian lands there have been found many who have found in it the moral courage to confront evil and defy contamination in seeking and saving the lost.

Hood's Sarsaparilla cures blood troubles of all sorts. It brings rest and comfort to the weary body. It cures scorfula, kidney disease, liver troubles and kindred ailments.

Last Personally-Conducted Tour to Washington via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The last of the present series of Pennsylvania Railroad three-day personally-conducted tours to Washington, D. C., will be run on May 11. The rate, $14.50 from New York, $11.50 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points, includes transportation, hotel accommodations, and Capital guide fees. An experienced Chaperon will also accompany the party.

For itineraries, tickets, and full information apply to ticket agents; Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York; 789 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; or address Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Work at the "Good Samaritan" Home

It is with pleasure, says Mrs. Falke in her [illegible] have so many friends, that our work is progressing. Though we are enlarging our accommodations as rapidly as we can, it is an exceptional thing to have an empty bed. In fact we need more room to meet the demands upon us. Never was there greater need for rescue work among that class of erring women to whom the Master said: "Go and sin no more." Newspapers are filled with accounts of suicides; often there are paragraphs which tell that the body of an unknown woman was found floating down the river, taken to the morgue, held for identification, and failing that was buried in the Potter's Field in a nameless grave. Earning an honest living in a Christian home is one of our recent inmates, whom we rescued from just such a fate. She was almost a child when decoyed into an evil place, ruined and made traffic of. Her health destroyed, she was cast into the street, where we found her, carried her to the hospital, and from the hospital brought her here. One of our present inmates is a cripple. A friendless orphan, she fell into the hands of a set of Italian counterfeiters, who used her as their agent to pass bad money, thus making her deformity a stock in trade; for even if detected in crime, her helplessness so appealed to sympathy that people would not prosecute her. When first we told her of Christ's love and power to save, she could hardly comprehend it.

We could tell of many girls who come to us from prisons, and who are now working daily in Christian homes. Such results encourage us to help other penitent erring ones to help themselves. All communications in regard to the work can be sent to the Home of the Good Samaritan, 244 East Sixty-fifth Street, New York, or to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Tied down to housework, to the scrubbing brush and bucket, to the dish pan and housecloth, is the condition of the woman who still uses soap in her cleaning. On the other hand the woman who uses Gold Dust has her work all done by noon, [illegible] noon. With Gold Dust she does her cleaning with half the effort, in half the time and at half the cost as with soap or any other cleanser. For greatest economy buy our large package.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY Chicago St. Louis New York Boston

Send no Money.

$17.95 BUYS THE BICYCLE & GAS LAMP

A Wonder Offer. Just Think—A Beautiful High Grade '99 Model $40 Bicycle and a Fine Highly Nickeled $3.50 Gas Lamp for $17.95.

SEND NO MONEY [illegible]

OUR HURON Bicycle at $17.95 is [illegible] is insured for one year by our written Binding Guarantee.

NINE '99 BICYCLES $9.00 up. Write for Big Free Catalog

MORGAN & WRIGHT TIRES

A $3.50 GAS LAMP FREE

Take your choice [illegible] Complete Set of Tools Free. [illegible] No extra charge. The Lamp is Free. [illegible] free with every order. Don't delay; order today.

THE G. LOUIS VEHON CO., 155-157 W. Jackson St., CHICAGO, ILL.

An 1899 Bicycle . . .
. . . Absolutely Free

If you are interested in securing a first-class 1899 Bicycle without the expenditure of more than a single cent, invest that cent in a postal card and address it for full particulars to

THE SUCCESS COMPANY,
Cooper Union, New York City.

Trial Package Free!

If any reader suffering [illegible] to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This you can test before you part with your money. Address: JOHN A. SMITH [illegible] Milwaukee, Wis.

Cooler
More Comfortable

More Elastic than Lawn or Cambric

ARNOLD'S KNIT GAUZE DRAWER, with deep umbrella ruffle or cambric, lawn or embroidery, is a dainty and attractive summer garment, as good as it is new.

We have such confidence in the great merit of these goods that we offer to cheerfully refund money in all cases where they fail to give satisfaction.

Prices begin at fifty cents and run up to as high as you want to pay for the embroidery. The fabric is the same in each.

Send for illustrated catalogue of these and other knit goods of our manufacture.

NOVELTY KNITTING CO.
320 BROADWAY. - ALBANY, N. Y.

LARKIN SOAPS AND PREMIUMS.—FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.

There are none so deaf as those who won't buy

Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums

The only scientific sound conductors. Invisible, comfortable, efficient. They fit in the ear. Doctors recommend them. Thousands testify to their perfection and to benefit derived.

Information and book of letters from many users, free.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
223 Trust Bldg. Louisville, Ky.

...THE...
TREATMENT OF RHEUMATISM.

The editor of the New Albany (Ind.) Medical Herald recently published an article on Rheumatism in which he said:

"But not until lately, when Tartarlithine has been employed by us, have we attained results that were even fairly satisfactory in the treatment of gout and rheumatism. By the employment of this drug I have been able to relieve some of the most distressing afflictions of this class, and now regard Tartarlithine as the most valuable remedy at our disposal in the treatment of this class of affections. In rheumatism and in gout Tartarlithine can be administered with confidence."

Regular package $1.00, 50 doses.
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
79 Ann Street, - - - New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

A Bible Colporter's Faithful Horse

THOUSANDS of residents on Long Island know "Pat," the Bible colportage horse belonging to Rev. L. A. Mirick. Mr. Mirick has just completed a twelve years' colportage tour of the island, going from house to house, selling the Scriptures to all who were able and willing to buy, and freely giving the Gospel to the destitute who would accept though unable to purchase. Mr. Mirick is a graduate of Amherst, and spent the early days of his ministry in Kansas. The last eleven years and ten months he has spent in thirteen counties of New York State as an agent of the American Bible Society. In that time he has delivered over 1,000 sermons and addresses to audiences representing many different denominations, and has distributed great numbers of Bibles and Testaments, besides some 51,000 tracts and other literature. During nearly all his Bible trips he was accompanied by "Pat," his famous Bible horse, who knew the business nearly as well as his master, and did his work with an extraordinary degree of intelligence. "Pat" hauled the wagon loads of Bibles through the State, and in the performance of this duty traveled over 30,000 miles. He lately grew quite feeble, being thirty years old, and after hauling his last load of Bibles to Corona, L. I., a few days ago, the faithful brute expired in his stable, to the great grief of his master.

"PAT," THE BIBLE COLPORTAGE HORSE, AND HIS MASTER

"Pat" literally died in the harness. He was a good worker and ever willing to set out on his rounds at a moment's notice. During his canvassing tours with "Pat," Mr. Mirick sold 14,179 Bibles and gave away 7,942. He found about every thirteenth house without the Word, and he regularly left a copy at every fifth house. Of 119,755 families visited, he found 8,815 destitute of Bibles. Though usually received with kindness, he sometimes met persecution. On one occasion his horse was taken away from him but was afterwards returned. "Pat," in his lifetime, pulled twenty-seven tons of the Old and New Testaments, eighteen tons of which were sold, the rest being donations.

Our Armenian Orphans

Writing from Mardin, Turkey, Rev. Willis C. Dewey, one of the American missionaries in charge of the work at that station, says:

Your kind letter of Feb. 9th, enclosing check for $200, came to hand by last week's post. The whole number of orphans received since our work was begun is 139—91 boys and 48 girls. There were under care Dec. 31, 1898, 95—62 boys and 33 girls. Not a death has occurred during the year, nor any case of severe illness. Seven of the boys are now in the high school and seven in the preparatory department, while the remaining forty-four attend a special school organized for them. No attempt has yet been made to introduce industrial training, as they are too young to take it up.

Throughout the year religious services have been held for boys and girls together Sunday mornings, and a second service for boys only in the evening. All have also attended Sabbath School. No pressure of any kind is brought to bear to incline the children to Protestantism, but we try to have them learn to read and know and love the Bible.

In a letter from Van, Avatolia, Turkey, Dr. G. C. Raynolds writes of the orphan work there:

Your welcome letter of Feb. 9th reached me by the last post, and I hasten to acknowledge your great kindness. The problem of how to get our orphan boys started in life is one that troubles me not a little. I wish you could have heard my talk, last Sunday evening, with one whom I hope to send out next week. He came to us about three years since, a boy of fifteen years, with absolutely no knowledge of the Bible, having hardly ever heard the name of Jesus save in profanity. He gives good evidence of trying to live a Christian life.

An Opportunity in Porto Rico

A planter from the interior of Porto Rico calls upon the Director of Public Instruction. He says, "I am from the States. I have bought a plantation, five hours' horseback ride from any municipality. The country is rich and well populated. I have just come in from my second visit. My wife has a lady companion. There are no roads, but bridle paths. I have laid out $500 on roads already. I want a school." He adds anxiously, "Can you send me a teacher?" The Director asks to what church shall the teacher belong. The planter replies, "I have no religion, but I want a teacher. There are twenty-six boys and girls, children of my own laborers, ready for school. I want the place to have an elevating influence on the children. I will do what I can for the teacher." The Director informs him of the law, and shows him that it is not flexible enough to supply a teacher. The planter says that a large number of children of families around would attend, making a large-sized school. He would build a school-house, and board the teacher.

Is there a teacher in the States ready to take this place, or is any society or person ready to send one? If these opportunities, as they offer, could be improved, the island could be dotted with modern schools, and the teachers' character and instruction, outside of the school, could be helpful to the community in a great variety of ways, morally and religiously.

JOHN EATON,
Director of Public Instruction.

San Juan, Porto Rico.

Any letter on this subject should be addressed to General Eaton, who will answer all inquiries.

A GREAT REMEDY.

Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure has Cured More Cases of Catarrh Than Any Other Remedy.

This is the only remedy that goes directly to the diseased parts and is at the same time "constitutional." It reduces the inflammation, heals the ulcerated surfaces, stops the discharge, restores the hearing, when impaired by catarrh, prevents the disease from going to the lungs, or removes it if already there. It gives speedy relief and effects a permanent cure.

This is the best season of the year to begin the treatment of Catarrh. Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure is put up in boxes containing enough medicine for one month's treatment, which is sent postage paid for $1.00. If you have not had a sample, we will send one free by mail, postpaid. Address: Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

In the Dark Stewart's Duplex Safety Pins

Work as easily as in the light. They fasten from either side, but cannot slip through.

Patented March 7, '82 June 18, '89

IN ALL SIZES

NOTICE THE GUARD on the inside of spring positively prevents tearing the fabric. If your dealer will not supply you, send 3 two-cent stamps for samples of 12 assorted sizes.

Made in Nickel and Jet Black.

Consolidated Safety Pin Co., Box 129, Bloomfield, N. J.

Also Makers of "Holdfast" Hairpins.

$3.00 to $10.00 a day can be easily made working for me. People preferred who can furnish their own team. Applicants must furnish satisfactory reference as to character and standing. B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

$18.00 a Week and expenses to good parties to travel. No canvassing. Permanent position. Also local workers and managers can find profitable employment for part time. Give references. R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

WEAK-LUNGED PEOPLE

wear away their lives by not building up a part of their body that drags them back when they want to go forward.

The hand of disease on your lungs will soon extend its grasp and, perhaps, squeeze out your very existence.

Chronic cough, or any other lung sickness, easily caught, and hard to cure, is a proof of lung weakness.

Loss of flesh, caused by blood that needs oxygen, is another.

Cold extremities and general sensitiveness to cold is another.

The system has cured thousands of help less invalids, whose cases had been given up as hopeless, because of its greater grasp upon scientific truths than any methods heretofore used in modern therapeutics. Their letters to-day on Dr. Slocum's files prove conclusively the efficacy of the treatment.

FREE TREATMENT TO ALL

As proof of the wonderful power of the system over all diseases due to lung weakness, the Doctor fraternally and liberally

These signs point to weakness, which is a great source of danger.

Weak lungs and weak system need building up, and the only scientific and certain way to do it is by the Slocum Treatment.

The Slocum Treatment consists of four preparations (Formulæ Dr. Slocum), forming a complete course of treatment, to be taken in accordance with the rules laid down in Dr. Slocum's well-known book on Consumption, Lung Troubles and Diseases of Loss of Flesh, entitled "My Doctor."

offers to send to all who write, a Complete Free Course of Treatment, consisting of the Four Preparations, with full instructions for use in any case.

WRITE THE DOCTOR TO-DAY

Simply write, giving your name, express and post-office address, and stating that you read about the treatment in The Christian Herald to Dr. T. A. Slocum, Laboratories, 96 and 98 Pine Street, New York City, when the complete course of Four Free Preparations will be sent you.

40 ... DREAMS OF LOVELINESS ... $1.00

Bouquet Collection Everblooming Tea Roses

They will bloom constantly this summer either in pots or planted out in the garden.

WE make the above Marvelous offer of 40 Roses for $1.00 postpaid anywhere in the U. S., not as a cheap catch-penny offer, but as an inducement for new patrons to try our fine Roses. They are strong healthy plants, well established, not little rooted cuttings from sand bed as many firms send out. We have several hundred of the choicest new and standard varieties to select from. We grow no common worthless Roses, nothing but the best.

We offer the following bargains for May Planting: Order at Once. AD. will not appear again.

40 Beautiful Sunset Colored Coleus	$1.00	15 Flowering Gladioli, 15 Dwf. Pearl Tuberoses,	$1.00
40 Magnificent Flowering Chrysanthemums,	$1.00	15 Gorgeous Flowering Cannas, Tropical foliage,	$1.00
40 Lovely Fragrant Carnation Pinks,	$1.00	25 Fine Bedding Geraniums, lovely flowers,	$1.00

SPECIAL OFFER We will send above 7 collections for $6.00 by express at your expense.

Address INNISFALLEN GREENHOUSES, URBANA, OHIO.

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only Truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and it retains the rupture under the severest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Comfortable Belts made to reduce corpulency. The use of these belts reduces your size and leaves no room for surplus fat to accumulate. They can be used after any operations. Our goods are not sold by agents or druggists. Send for free pamphlets to the Improved Elastic Truss Co., 768 Broadway, N. Y.

Pears'

Pears' soap is nothing but soap.

Pure soap is as gentle as oil to the living skin.

Pears' is the purest and best toilet soap in all the world.

All sorts of people use it, all sorts of stores sell it especially druggists.

FREE SAMPLE "OUR FAVORITE" GOLD ENAMEL consisting of two bottles enough of Washable

As brilliant and smooth as gold-leaf. Ready for use. A child can apply it. Shows no brushmarks. Can be washed without tarnishing. Gilds everything.

Also made in ALUMINUM SILVER.

50 cent full-size box, or large size (three times the

Cerstendorfer Bros,
NEW YORK, 11 & Park Place. CHICAGO, 175 & Randolph St.

Do You Know Uneeda Biscuit ?

It's time you got acquainted

It'll be a tie of friendship tha dyspepsia will never sever.

Uneeda Biscuit

will agree with you and you'll agree with them.

You will find them as good to-morrow as they are to-day, and as good next week as they are to-morrow.

Royal purple and white That's the package.

Five cents. That's the price.

You should know

Uneeda Biscuit

YOUR WAGON WHEELS

may need new rings, new spokes or new tires. These repairs have to be made every little while with wood, everywhere. Stop all this expense for all time by buying a set of our

ELECTRIC Steel Wheels

They are made with direct or staggered oval spokes, broad tires, any height, and to fit any wagon. They can't rot, get to spokes and need no tire setting—last indefinitely. There is only one thing better, and that is an

ELECTRIC HANDY WAGON.

Our free illustrated catalogue tells all about both and gives prices. Send for it.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO. Box 136, Quincy, Ill.

WHY

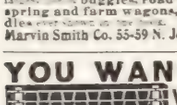
Can we Save You Money on a saddle, harness or vehicle?

Because we have no agents.

Can we really do it? We say yes. Can we prove it without cost to you? We can. How? We will ship you a harness, saddle or vehicle, without your sending a single cent, and let you look it over in your home and your friends see it. Then if we have given you the biggest bargain you ever saw or heard of return the goods to us at our expense. We give with each vehicle a 2-years iron-clad guarantee protecting you against poor material and workmanship. Our vehicle catalogue describes the largest line of buggies, road wagons, phaetons, surries, spring and farm wagons, carts, harnesses and saddles ever shown in one book. It's free. Send for it.

Marvin Smith Co. 55-59 N. Jefferson St. L. 41 Chicago, Ill.

YOU WANT FENCE— WE WANT MONEY.



We will exchange our fence for your money.

We Make an Honest Fence at a reasonable price.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FARMERS AT WHOLESALE PRICE. That saves you the dealer's profit which amounts to a nice thing on a ton of fencing. Our fence cannot slip, untwist or unravel. All wires are tightly woven. Prices cut to rock bottom. Get our special discount catalogue before you buy. They are Free.

ADVANCE FENCE CO., 1905 Old St., Peoria, Ill.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate WHITE BRONZE

Prices greatly improved. Write for designs and information. Costs

NO MOSS GROWING. CLEANING. NO CRUMBLING. CRACKING.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

CRAZY WORK

Embroidery Outfit, 42 pieces of beautiful Heavy Brocade Silk, Satin and Plush for a large quilt, 25 cents. Embroidery Outfit, 42 pieces of beautiful Heavy Brocade Silk, Satin and Plush for a large quilt, 25 cents. Lemare's Silk Mill, Little Ferry, N. J.

Mention this magazine when you write.

FREE PIANOS OR ORGANS One Year's Trial

All freight paid by us if not satisfactory

OVER 50 STYLES TO SELECT FROM

No money in advance. Satisfaction guaranteed. Installments. Easy payments. Our new 1900 catalogue shows it all. Send for it today. Our Catalogue shows you how to get a Handsome Premium Free. Don't buy elsewhere until you have seen our Premium Book. Organs from $25.00 up. Pianos from $150 up. Our new 1900 Catalogue enables you to select from the largest stock and lowest price of any Organ or Piano made. We give more for the money than any Company in the World. You can prove it by sending a postal card for the largest and best catalogue in the world. Our Motto:

LARGE SALES, SMALL PROFITS.

You may not buy from us, but get our Catalogue. It will at least make other companies come down to our prices. We can save you money and we are prepared to prove it. Our factory, with its enormous capacity, enables us to sell you a high-grade instrument for a figure much below that of any other company in the world.

Incorporated for Fifty Years. We Lead, Others Follow.

BEETHOVEN PIANO AND ORGAN COMPANY
BOX 741 WASHINGTON, N. J.

$16.50 NO MONEY IN ADVANCE!!

Bettter Wheels at Lower Prices than Ever Before Offered.

Arlington No. 69.

1900 styles shipped C. O. D., subject to examination to anyone, anywhere, in lots of one or more. Our Arlington No. 69 is a high grade, honest made wheel as near perfection as it can be made and equal to others sold at $25 to $35. Equipped with a first class tire, two piece hanger, choice of handle bars, padded saddle, ball bearing throughout, first class in every respect, a wheel fit for a King at the exceedingly low price of $16.50.

A one year written guarantee goes with it.

If You Want a Good Low Priced Wheel Buy the "Brunswick" at $14.50. Others at $12.50, $11, $10 all good wheels and everyone a bargain and stripped as low as $7.50

As to our reliability we refer to the First National Bank of Chicago or any Chicago Bank, Express Company and Dun's or Bradstreet's Commercial Reports. Large Illustrated Catalogue FREE, explaining all about our "No Money in Advance Plan." Write today for Special Offer and testimonials.

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. Van Buren St., Dept. 18 Chicago, Ills.

$4.95 buys a Man's All Wool Suit

of Rich Blue Serge, warranted Best Fast Color, Guaranteed equal in quality, style and looks to others' best $10 Suits.

THE MATERIAL is Mail's Best All-wool Serge, famous everywhere for its perfect weave, soft feel and rich deep blue color. The cloth was woven by America's best woolen mill from fine picked wool yarn, dyed by a new process and cannot fade. It is medium weight and suitable for your all-around wear in Spring, Summer, Fall and Winter. Will positively not fade or wear shiny and will wear like leather. It is exactly the same cloth sold by Chicago retail tailors for $10.00. For [illegible] merchant we are selling [illegible] at $4.95—after they re-gone the price will be [illegible]. Don't delay, but send your order before they are all gone.

EXPERT SUIT TAILORS will make the suit in the latest sack style to fit perfect; line it with Hercules celebrated farmer satin, piped with Skinner's AAA satin, [illegible] extra well, use best grade of canvas and hair cloth, every seam, with [illegible] and linen thread.

WE MAKE other suits from $5.95 to $13.95. Write for free samples of cloth.

SEND NO MONEY but send this ad., with your height, weight, chest measure and inside measure. We'll send the suit by express C. O. D. and allow you to examine and try it on before you pay one cent. If found exactly as represented, the greatest bargain on earth and a most wonderful [illegible] pay express agent $4.95 and expressage and take the suit. Pay nothing if unsatisfactory for advertising purposes. After they are gone the price goes back to $9.00—no more at $4.95 after 1800 are sold. Order quick or they'll be gone. Don't miss this wonder chance.

WE SELL 1800 SUITS AT $4.95

G. LOUIS VERNOS CO. 155 W. Jackson St. Chicago, Ill.

Imperial Wheels

—the One Lightly Used.

Made complete in our great factory, cover ing five and a half acres of floor space. The Imperial responds to every requirement and is superior in [illegible] and workmanship, strength, beauty and finish.

Special [illegible] to riders. Agents wanted in [illegible] territory. Write us.

Ames & Frost Company, Chicago.

8000 BICYCLES

Our [illegible] must be closed out. '98 MODELS $9 to $10. Shopworn and second hand wheels good as new $3 to $10. '99 MODELS $11 to $30. Great factory clearing sale. We ship to anyone on approval and trust without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE

by helping us advertise our superb [illegible] of bicycles. We give one [illegible] in each town FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.

E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO. CHICAGO, ILLS.

SEWING MACHINE $8.50

Guaranteed 5 years

NO DEPOSIT REQUIRED. 3 Months' Free Trial.

BIG FREE SEWING MACHINE CATALOGUE.

Write for it today. AGENTS WANTED. We [illegible] every [illegible] every [illegible] every name of machine that does make, and sell at lowest factory prices. Other machines for $9.90, $11.80, $14.51, $16.44 and $18.95, described and illustrated in our Big Free Catalogue.

THE G. LOUIS VERNOS CO., 155 W. Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL. THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, in oval shape, with self-adjusting Ball in center and so constructed that by the pressure of the body alone the ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

C. H. ECCLESTON & Co., 1201 MASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO

$14.50 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL

Buy direct from factory. Save agents' large profits. No money in advance. WARRANTED 10 YEARS.

$45 Arlington Machine for $14.50
$35 Arlington Machine for $12.50
Other Machines $8.00, $8.25 and $11.50

No attachments free. Over 100 [illegible] in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write today for special freight offer.

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 W. Van Buren St., B-18 Chicago, Ill.

$60 Sewing Machines for $18.

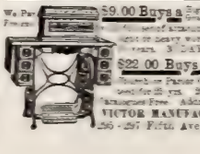
We sell every [illegible] Sewing Machine made. We [illegible] no agents, pay no commissions, which enables us to save you from $25 to $40 on any sewing Machine you may select. All [illegible] brand new, guaranteed, latest improved, with all attachments and warranted for 10 years. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Our illustrated catalogue gives full particulars and will be mailed free. Address

We pay the freight.

A 1351 Central Ave. J. N. HOOK & CO., CINCINNATI, O

INGERSOLL PRINTERS, 10c.

Complete 3 A Font of Brevier Type, with Holder, Inspector, Ink, Pad, Tweezers, Etc. Postpaid 10c. 5 A Font with Figures, 15c.; 2 Sets Figures and 2 Line Border, 25c. Send for Big Catalogue FREE. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BROTHER, Dept. 61 67 Cortlandt St., N. Y. C.



We Pay Freight. $9.00 Buys a [illegible] Victor [illegible] Manufacturers' wholesale [illegible] Agents' profits to heavy users. Guaranteed for [illegible] years. 3 DAYS FREE TRIAL.

$22.00 Buys a [illegible] Victor [illegible] Guaranteed for 20 yrs. 20 Days Free Trial. [illegible] Free. Address Dept. M 4, VICTOR MANUFACTURING CO., 256-257 Fifth Ave. Chicago, Ill.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

VOLUME 22—NUMBER 20

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, MAY 17, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

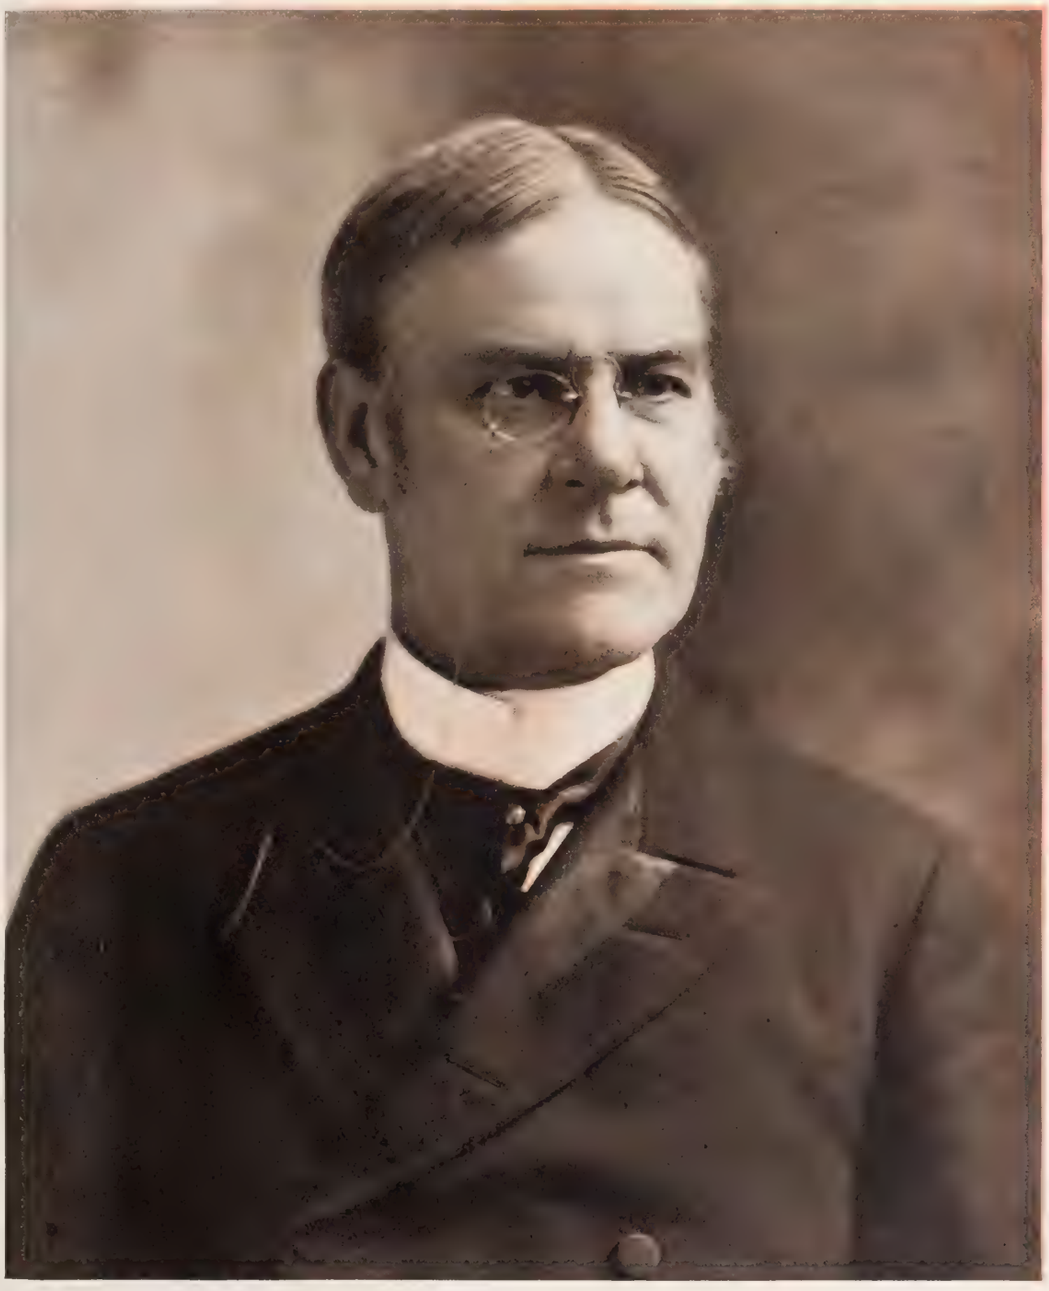
Presbyterians in Council

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church to be Held this Week at Minneapolis, Minn.—The Retiring Moderator

AMONG the great conventions of the year, a prominent place must always be accorded to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, which will this week be held in Minneapolis, Minn. A gathering representing 7,635 churches, with 7,190 ministers and 4,177 missionaries and missionary teachers, is one commanding respect by reason of its immense and far-reaching influence. The sessions of the Assembly will be held in the beautiful new Westminster Church, of which Rev. Pleasant Hunter is pastor. They commence with a sermon by Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D.D., the retiring Moderator, whose portrait appears on this page; after which the Assembly will elect its new Moderator, an honor which is always highly esteemed by the ministers as the highest it is in the power of the church to bestow. The Assembly will then be prepared to hear reports from its officers of the progress of the past year, and to take up the various suggestions which reach it from the presbyteries.

This year the Assembly will have the gratification of learning that nearly all the eight boards which have charge of Home and Foreign Missions, Education, Church Erection, etc., are out of debt. The only exception to this cheering situation is the Board for the Aid to Freedmen, which will probably have to confess a burden of forty thousand dollars. But this is so much better than in previous years that the prevailing sentiment will be one of general congratulation, especially with reference to the Home and Foreign Mission Boards, the former of which, only four years ago, had to report a debt of $364,850. The Foreign Missionary Board has not only cleared off its debt, but has a surplus of about $15,000 toward the equipment of new missionaries. Seldom has that Board had so gratifying a report to present to the General Assembly, and we can but hope that there is no need to discount it by a confession of curtailment of work. The missionaries out in the field are devoted, consecrated men and women who certainly deserve the most liberal and hearty support. Whosoever has to suffer by economy, they ought to have all the funds that they need, and now that there is a surplus in the treasury, we may hope that their hands will be strengthened for their arduous work. The total receipts for the year were $854,143, which, though some twenty-seven thousand dollars less than the receipts for the previous year, when a special effort was made, is a magnificent amount to have raised for this one branch of the work.

It is a happy augury of peace and harmony that the proceedings of the Assembly will be opened by a sermon from one so remarkable for tact and discretion as Dr. Radcliffe. He has been styled the "Ideal Moderator." One secret of his power lies in his fairness, in the combination of "tact with tenderness," as expressed in the speech of nomination last year at Winona. A fine parliamentarian, he does not fear to use the gavel. Not for a moment was the Assembly beyond his control, and his rulings were accepted as invariably just. "It is only the man who controls himself who can control others. The personality behind the gavel—"the man behind the gun"—is what an assembly must reckon with. A fine Moderator can, in a certain sense, make a fine Assembly. An Assembly has never yet made a good Moderator out of poor material. Moderators are born, not made.



REV. WALLACE RADCLIFFE, D.D., MODERATOR OF THE PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Of Scotch-Irish origin, his mother a Wallace, brought up in the United Presbyterian Church, Dr. Radcliffe is, theologically, a conservative. Being judicial, he can, however, appreciate the honesty and ability of men differing from him. As Chairman of Bills and Overtures in the Portland Assembly, he reported the celebrated inerrancy deliverance which at first threatened still further debate and division, but which, under his broad and liberal interpretation, became acceptable to all parties.

One of his most significant acts as Moderator was the appointment of Dr. Francis Brown, of Union Seminary, upon the Committee of Bills and Overtures, before which would come all questions of the McGiffert controversy. This was contrary to all recent precedents, and was at first severely criticized. It proved to be the wisest as well as most heroic act of his administration, and was in the end justified on every side. As an after-dinner speaker Dr. Radcliffe is in demand, and his keen wit and power of resource always stand the strain. The powerful impression

(Continued on page 377)

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

E. E. W., Acton, Mass. Is it right to flag a milk train on Sunday while crossing the highway?

If flagged for the purpose of sending milk to market, it must be a matter for the individual conscience to decide whether the necessities of the case really demand that it should be sent in on that day or on Monday. Your own loss should not enter into the question; you can only justify the act by the knowledge that others would suffer, not loss of trade, but actual discomfort, were the milk not sent. You cannot control the trains, but you can be master of your own actions. We know nothing of the concern mentioned in the other part of your letter.

W. O. B., Springfield, O. Is it right for a pastor, on the Lord's Day, to call the attention of his people to such subjects as witchcraft, hypnotism, Christian Science, etc.?

As these subjects are very widely discussed at the present time, and are doing much harm by unsettling the minds of credulous people, it may be necessary for the pastor to devote a part of his time in the pulpit to exposing their fallacies, unless he can do so with equal effectiveness on some week-day. Except for the purpose indicated, no Christian pastor would deliberately select them as substitutes for the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which it is his duty to preach to his people.

W. E., Columbia, Ia. 1. What is the meaning of the word "Selah," found so much in Psalms? 2. Do you believe it right to sing hymns by uninspired men in public worship? 3. What did David mean in Psalms 37-25? Are we to suppose that every one who comes to our door and begs for bread is neither righteous nor the seed of the righteous?

1. It means simply a pause in music. 2. Hymns are sung not for the sake of the writer or to do him honor, but for the religious sentiment they express. Besides, it would be difficult to determine whether they are or are not inspired in the sense you probably mean, although it might be generally asserted that all the hymns now sung in religious gatherings were written under the inspiration of a high and holy purpose. 3. By no means. David, speaking from his own experience only, declared he had "never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread;" yet there are doubtless many instances of God's children suffering keen privation. It would obviously be unjust to assume that the measure of a man's poverty was in proportion to his wickedness. Lazarus was a beggar. David elsewhere speaks of seeing the wicked flourish. He intended, by the sentence you quote, to convey the lesson that one who fully trusted in God and obeyed his law, though he might endure trials, would also receive blessing, and that the blessing would descend to his children.

G. C., Mecklenburg, N. C. A. is employed by B. B. allows A. to get anything he wants while he (B.) is away and charge to himself. A. gets something and fails to debit himself with it at that time, and after that A. wants to do better and then debit himself with what he has received? Should he then go and tell B. of it?

The Christian, manly, and proper course is for A. to tell B. frankly that he neglected to debit himself with the goods taken, as agreed, and that he regrets it and will make what amends he can by paying for the articles now and promising more correct conduct hereafter.

R. E. L. Corsap, Pensacola, Fla., writes:

In THE MAIL-BAG of your issue of April 26, I find a query from Jessie A., Chillicothe, O., as to the oldest town on American soil. The answer given was St. Augustine, this State. Although general history still upholds the St. Augustine claim, it has been before the public for some little time that this city (Pensacola) is four years St. Augustine's senior. The late Judge Campbell, one of Florida's most eminent and learned sons, spent many years searching Spanish archives for data and notes to be used in his History of Pensacola and Western Florida and its Colonial Wars. As the result of his researches, we learn that a Spaniard named De Nervaez landed here some time in 1528; also De Soto made this harbor his headquarters twelve years later (1540); "then came another Spaniard named De Luna, with 2,000 followers, and made a settlement here in the latter part of 1559," making this or establishing this settlement four years prior to the settlement of St. Augustine. Another history of Florida has lately been published which gives preference to the Pensacola claim. During the course of human events Pensacola found it hard to hold her place on the map: once washed away by a tidal wave, several times destroyed by fire, by Indians and warring countries; once by its own inhabitants. Spain had ceded all this territory to England, and an English colony was sent out to t[illegible] fish laws, destro[illegible] The English pr[illegible] never rebuilt on [illegible] birth of 342 year[illegible] sacola, but some[illegible] place.

Reader, Peoria, Ill. Why is it that so little re[illegible] to certain important days such as [illegible]od Friday, Easter and Ascension Day in the Presbyterian Church? These are [illegible]re directly connected with our [illegible] passion and victory over death [illegible]e, and should concern every one [illegible] regenerated and washed in the [illegible] Lamb. The Lutheran Church [illegible] imagery. Why not [illegible]ropriate preac[illegible]se days?

It is a growing custom among the Presbyterian and among all Protestant churches to have special services at Christmas and Easter. Formerly the Presbyterian Church gave little attention to these days, and no special services were held; but now there is hardly a Presbyterian pulpit in any town or considerable-sized village which is not decorated for Easter, and whose services on both occasions are not specially chosen for the day. There is no good reason why the Catholic and Anglican churches should have a monopoly on such occasions of the attractions that render the services more beautiful, significant and impressive.

C. N. B., Springfield, Ill. Is it not a sin for a man having a good, respectable family, and who pretends to be a Christian, and professes friendship for another man and his family, to force upon that man's wife a declaration of love, and beg her to keep up a secret correspondence, and seek to meet her?

One who would be guilty of such conduct is criminal, both morally and legally. His offense is inexcusable, and if persisted in, is sure to involve himself and his family in moral and social ruin, besides bringing two households to sorrow and disgrace.

In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, mention was made of a law passed by the Arkansas Legislature for the protection of birds. A reader in Bradford, Mass., (B. P. Chadwick, Deputy Fish and Game Commissioner of Massachusetts and New Hampshire), sends us a copy of that law which provides that

Whoever has in his possession the body or feathers of any bird whose taking or killing is prohibited by section four of chapter two hundred and seventy-six of the acts of the year eighteen hundred and eighty-six, whether taken in this Commonwealth or elsewhere, or wears such feathers for the purpose of [illegible]

Mr. Chadwick adds: "The State of Illinois [illegible] tecting birds of all kinds from being killed and [illegible]

[illegible] N. Y. Can THE CHRISTIAN [illegible] me where to find the hymn in which the[illegible]

Help of the helpless
Help thou me."

We think the quotation is an incorrect ver[illegible] with me," by Henry [illegible] Lyte, and found in most hymn books and hymnals:

"When other helpers fail and comforts flee, Help of the helpless, O abide with me!"

L. B., Tulee, Tenn. There are certain passages which seem to take away all hope for forgiveness to a backslider, even though he may bitterly regret his fall and desire to return. Is there no hope of his restoration if he has sinned after being once forgiven?

There is every hope, and he is explicitly promised forgiveness, if he will repent and seek pardon. Read the Parable of the Prodigal Son. The prodigal was a son who had lived in his father's house and had voluntarily quitted it. Is not that the condition of the Christian who has fallen? Let him arise and go to his Father and he will be welcomed and forgiven.

J. A. J., Johnstown, N. Y. 1. How far is Porto Rico from New York, and what is the fare? 2. How do you get there? 3. What is the expense of living there? 4. Do the natives speak Spanish? 5. Will THE CHRISTIAN HERALD send a missionary there?

1. About eight days' journey. One way $50; round trip, $80. 2. By train to New York, thence by steamer to the island. 3. The natives, who exist on fruits and cereals, probably find living very inexpensive. As in other places, you can live at greater or less cost, according to your tastes and means. 4. Yes; there are also many English and some German-speaking people in Porto Rico. 5. We are working through the various missionary boards.

UNVEILING THE GRANT STATUE IN FAIRMOUNT PARK, PHILADELPHIA

The beautiful equestrian statue of General Grant, by Daniel C. French and Edward C. Potter, sculptors, was presented to the city of Philadelphia, by the Fairmount Park Association.

Each passing week brings us more letters containing news of rare old Bibles. Mr. Robert J. Goodloe, of Livingston, Miss., writes:

I have an old Bible in good condition, King James Version, published by Thomas Basket, in London, in 1751, and containing the Apocrypha and special prayers, &c.

Bessie V. Fitzhugh, Sulphur Springs, Ky., writes:

A friend has a Bible that was printed in April, 1581, in Hebrew, Greek and Latin. It is in a perfect state of preservation except the binding, which is slightly injured.

W. D. Lang, Indian Head, Can., writes:

[illegible] although not so old as some is unique from the fact that it belonged to the last of Wolfe's soldiers, who fought [illegible]

A. J. Bond, Marquez, Tex., has a Bible dated 1795 (King James Version) in a fine state of preservation.

F. R. W., Minneapolis, Minn., writes:

We have in our family a Bible printed in Edin[illegible]

[illegible] H. E. Church subscribed [illegible]

[illegible] rtesy of Major J. B. Ket[illegible] not ordered into the field Spanish-Amer[illegible] of our [illegible] vice. 2. Post Chaplain D. R. Lowell has been retired on account of disability. 3. Troop K, Seventh U. S. Cavalry, is stationed at Vedado, Havana, Cuba.

[illegible] the African child, who, having been taken into a mission school as a "raw heathen," has grown up to be a Christian girl, who will some day be a mis[illegible]

Highland, Kan., writes:

"Enclosed please find order for $5, for which please send me THE CHRISTIAN [illegible]

[illegible] s of this lady, [illegible] weekly. She is now at Kambini Mission, Southeast Africa, under Miss Bookwalter, where she is doing very good service and making herself valuable in the work. Next year she will probably be sent to Natal, to finish her education for practical work as a missionary teacher.

T. M. P., Lakeport, Colo. It is out of print.

A. G. M., Erie, Pa. The names of those who built or made the statue are nowhere stated.

A. L. S., Temple, Bell, Tex. You can unite with your husband's church on profession of faith, even if you do not get a letter.

Regular Reader, Fairbury, and E. M., Mariner's [illegible] States Civil Service Board, Washington, D. C.

A. E. D., Darien, Ga. The following is the quotation you refer to: "Certainly this is a duty, not a sin—'Cleanliness is indeed next to godliness.'" (John Wesley's Sermons, XCII., on dress).

W. C., Kearney, Neb. The McAuley Mission is a rescue work among the drunken, degraded and criminal classes of New York. Address Mr. S. H. Hadley, Superintendent, Water street, New York.

L. H., Sunnyside, Miss. 1. We do not know. 2. Nathaniel Greene was born May 27, 1742. 3. Lord Beaconsfield died April 19, 1881. 4. Augusta, Em[illegible] [illegible] 5. Read Roman history.

Mrs. H. M. M., Bingen, Pa. 1. The octopus is sometimes called devil-fish. Victor Hugo, in his writings, describes some of such size that they could drag down a small vessel. 2. Place no faith in people who make such pretences: they are usual[illegible]

Mrs. George A. Hickok, Bethel, Conn., can use good literature, especially back numbers of this [illegible] Sunday School at Chimney Rock, Bound Brook, N. J. So also can Anna M. Harris, 115 East St., Baton Rouge, La.

Subscriber, Cleveland, O. That great climatic changes have already taken place on the earth at remote periods is a well-established fact. There is evidence of vast inland seas having occupied the depressions both east and west of the Rocky Mountains, and also that the great Siberian icefields were in prehistoric times the haunt of animals [illegible] Stream were to change its course materially, it would affect the climate of those countries along whose coasts it now flows.

· Breaker · Boys · of · the · Mines ·

Winning them to Noble Lives is the Consecrated Work of a Woman Philanthropist in the Pennsylvania Coal Fields

MRS. ELLEN W. PALMER

LETTING a little sunshine into the lives of poor boys who toil in one of the great Pennsylvania coal districts is the grand work of the Boys' Industrial Association of Wilkesbarre. There are hundreds of boys of tender years in these mines, some not more than eight or nine years old, who are obliged to work and help support their families. They are ill-paid, the work is hard and exceedingly unhealthy, as the coal-dust leads to lung troubles.

The Association was started in 1891 by Mrs. Ellen W. Palmer, the wife of a former Attorney-General of Pennsylvania, who has since devoted her whole time to its welfare. A number of breaker boys, together with newsboys, messengers, and others, had gathered one evening at a stereopticon entertainment. Mrs. Palmer saw them seated before her with their stolid, careworn faces, and she determined to do all in her power to improve their condition. An invitation was sent out, and a large and flourishing association was soon established. The work was begun with an evening school, for Wilkesbarre was then without any such institution. The boys were taught all the intermediate studies of the public schools, and for the whole of one winter they attended most faithfully. The next winter an evening school was established by the city, and Mrs. Palmer persuaded the boys to attend that, so that she could devote more time to other branches of the work.

When the evening studies were given up, a manual training school was started, and the boys entered into this work with spirit. They were taught shoemaking, carpentry and cane-seating, and they can make many useful things for their homes as well. In the beginning of the work drills were organized, but as the boys protested that they were too tired at night to drill, Mrs. Palmer decided to omit them. She now devotes much time to the entertainment feature, and each Saturday night sees several hundred little fellows gathered in a hall to listen to recitations, songs, or some other form of entertainment. Between the songs and recitations there are little talks on manners, morals and good citizenship. The temperance talks are quite a feature, and nearly every boy has signed a pledge against swearing, drinking and chewing tobacco. The boys have organized debating clubs of their own, a glee club, a dramatic club, and a history club. Two drum corps make the inhabitants of different sections of the city aware of their existence. The members used the fourth floor of the City Hall for their meetings for a time, but now they are raising money for a building of their own.

Every boy in the mining district is supposed to work. He may be so small that his dinner-pail drags in the snow as he trudges to work, but into the breaker he must go. In the condition of things it is necessary, for the miners' wages are seldom more than sufficient to provide the barest necessities.

The boys are not obliged to sign a pledge to become members, though the following compact is signed by all who are willing to do so:

"Realizing that the object of this society is for my benefit physically, mentally and morally, I, on my part, promise to refrain from all that will hinder and to do all that will help toward the attainment of that perfect manhood, the true type of which was given to the world in the character of Jesus Christ."

The work is non-sectarian. There are Catholics, Protestants and Jews enrolled in the Association, and no attempt is made to change the child's religion. Many workers are found who are willing to help in the task of reforming the boys, who are usually ignorant of the proprieties when they first join. The following is a true record of one of the conversations which frequently takes place. It was an occasion on which a number of new boys had come forward to sign a pledge to temperance. "Joblots" was among them. Another boy, named Mike Mulherrin, stood by while "Joblots" signed his name, and teased him unmercifully. In order to shield him, Mrs. Palmer asked Mike why he had come forward.

"Oh, I'm steerin' de new ones," he replied.

"But you haven't signed the pledge yet yourself, have you, Mike?"

"Aw, why should I sign de pledge? Don't I work in de cure?"

"Why, Mike, I thought you picked slate in the Kenyon Colliery."

"So he does," two or three voices cried out. "He picks slate beside me in the breaker."

"Then what does this mean about the cure, Mike?"

"It's what de men calls de mine. When you gets your envelope on pay-day, after de company store keeps out de store bill, dere aint enough left to get drunk on."

Such conversations are frequent among the new boys, but a great change is noticeable after they have been members for a time. They come to the rooms with bright, shining faces, and when there they use good, clean language. Remarkable things have resulted from this training. One boy is now studying to be a Presbyterian minister, another to be a Jewish rabbi, and Mrs. Palmer has sent one boy to Lafayette College who is taking many of the honors in the course. This boy's mother is one of the proudest women in Pennsylvania, and she says her boy owes all his success to his training in the Boy's Industrial Association.

It is the aim of the society to discover the direct native talent, and it has been able, through the kindness of friends, to assist in many cases in giving a bright boy an incentive to a higher life that will result in better citizenship in the near future. The workers become so much interested in the boys that they suffer acutely when they lose them. There was one boy named "Hank the Hoodlum," who joined the Association, and who did his best to live up to its rules. He passed through many trials and tribulations, however, before he was finally made into a good and true boy. He was in reality a street waif, for he had neither home nor relatives of any kind, and was in the habit of sleeping around wherever he could find a bed. He was constantly in trouble with other members of the Association, for very often the boys in good standing take it upon themselves to punish the refractory ones. Hank was once guilty of stealing strawberries, and Mrs. Palmer discovered him while he was being thrashed by other members for his misdemeanor. She succeeded in stopping the uproar, but failed in convincing the others that they had done wrong in thrashing Hank. "Never you mind," they said "it'll do him good. He was just needin' a good thrashin'. He'll be 'round to the meetin's again and he'll behave better than ever before."

Hank did come back again, though it was months before he was thoroughly good at heart. Finally his young heart was touched by the Love that conquereth all things, and his savage manner was changed. The poor boy was crushed in the mines long afterward by a runaway train, and lingered through weeks and months of agony. But he was a Christian, and bore the pain in silent resignation.

Of the seven hundred boys who have thus been helped, several now hold important positions in business houses, some are successful in shops, and all of them have received an uplift toward good citizenship and purer morals which will never lose its force.

TEACHING A GROUP OF YOUTHFUL MINERS

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

Ambition that Lost a Soul

HIS name signified a star and "Star" we always called him. He had a pleasant face, and seemed so strong in arm and limb, that one would expect him to live on and on for ages. Royal blood flowed through his veins, of which he was very proud, and his great ambition was to become King of Bailundu. He was always friendly with the missionaries, and they were glad to see his smiling face and hear the low, soft tones of the musical instrument which he nearly always carried in his hands, playing as he walked along or rested by the way. He was held in high esteem by all of the villagers, and his judgment much relied upon; and the teachers often wished he would give his heart to God, he would be such a help in winning others, and many prayers went up for him. But, while he would work for the teachers and listen with respect to their words, he would shake his head and say: "It is all true, I am convinced that that is the right way, but our customs are such that should I become a Christian, I would never be elected King, and it is a great thing to be a King; I cannot yield my worldly advantages for the hope of eternal life." As time went on he hardened his heart, though he still confessed that the only thing that kept him out of the kingdom of God was the kingdom of Bailundu. At last he went to come no more. Strong and full of life and hope he started for the coast with a small caravan. He exchanged his rubber for cloth and other things and started homeward, when he fell ill. For a day or two he pushed on, then his friends made a hammock and carried him for two days more. Then came the end.

When a caravan is returning home, they shoot off their guns and shout and chant so their friends are apprised of their coming, and go out with mirth and songs to greet them. But, if one of their number has died during the journey, they come creeping home quietly, each man going to his own house, greeting no one by the way. The village people, seeing them enter thus, know at once that some house will nevermore see its master, and they watch to see whose house it is.

Then—oh! the weeping and the wailing, the firing off of guns! For a week they drum and dance, while all the relatives and friends gather to do homage to his memory. They take the hair and fingernails which have been brought home and, with great ceremony, bury them with some of his worldly possessions. His two wives must lie, for a month or more, on a mat, in a dark and smoky hut, where there is a hot fire and no fresh air, covered from head to foot with cloth. They scarcely taste food. At sunrise and sunset only going out of doors to wail for the departed.

All that remains of Star's ambition is a lonely grave by the roadside. He was a heathen; but are there not many in our own land today, who are closing their ears to the call of God for the sake of some worldly ambition which, in the end, will bring them no greater glory than blasted hopes and lonely graves, with no light on the other side?

BERTHA D. STOVER.

Bishop Hartzell's Work in Africa

The following contributions in aid of Bishop Hartzell's Gospel work in Liberia and for the founding of an African Mission press, have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Prev ack	$208.80
Miss Lizzie Dieffenbacher	1.00
Rev Jas Robinson	1.00
A M W, Jefferson	1.00
A friend of Missions	10.00
Girl's Missionary Circle, Detroit	1.00
N S Doty	6.00
F M Ely
Mrs M J Covell	1.00
Mrs S C Judd
Woman's Foreign Missy Society, Dexter
Jas Timmig
Mrs L M Swift
Fannie Claypool
A friend, Tarrytown	2.00
Total	$226.80

All contributions for this work will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN H[illegible]

· THE · METROPOLITAN · PULPIT ·

. . . The Sun Put Out . . .

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Acts 2 : 20, . . . The sun shall be turned into darkness CHRISTIANITY is the rising sun of our time, and men have tried with the uprolling vapors of scepticism, and the smoke of their blasphemy, to turn the sun into darkness. Suppose the archangels of malice and horror should be let loose a little while, and be allowed to extinguish and destroy the sun in the natural heavens! They would take the oceans from other worlds, and pour them on the luminary of the planetary system, and the waters go hissing down amid the ravines and the caverns, and there is explosion after explosion, until there are only a few peaks of fire left in the sun, and these are cooling down and going out until the vast continents of flame are reduced to a small acreage of fire, and that whitens and cools off until there are only a few coals left, and these are whitening and going out until there is not a spark left in all the mountains of ashes, and the valleys of ashes, and the chasms of ashes. An extinguished sun! A dead sun! A buried sun! Let all worlds wail at the stupendous obsequies. Of course, this withdrawal of the solar light and heat throws our earth into a universal chill, and the tropics become the temperate, and the temperate becomes the arctic, and there are frozen rivers, and frozen lakes, and frozen oceans. From Arctic and Antarctic regions the inhabitants gather in toward the centre, and find the Equator as the poles. The slain forests are piled up into a great bonfire, and around them gather the shivering villages and cities. The wealth of the coal mines is hastily poured into the furnaces, and stirred into rage of combustion, but soon the bonfires begin to lower, and the furnaces begin to go out, and the nations begin to die. Cotopaxi, Vesuvius, Etna, Stromboli, California geysers, cease to smoke, and the ice of hail-storms remains unmelted in their crater. All the flowers have breathed their last breath. Ships with sailors frozen at the mast, and helmsmen frozen at the wheel, and passengers frozen in the cabin; all nations dying, first at the North and then at the South. Child frosted and dead in the cradle. Octogenarian frosted and dead at the hearth. Workmen with frozen hand on the hammer, and frozen foot on the shuttle. Winter from sea to sea. All-congealing winter. Perpetual winter. Globe of frigidity. Hemisphere shackled to hemisphere by chains of ice. Universal Nova Zembla. The earth an ice-floe grinding against other ice-floes. The archangels of malice and horror have done their work, and now they may take their thrones of glacier, and look down upon the ruin they have wrought. What the destruction of the sun in the natural heavens would be to our physical earth, the destruction of Christianity would be to the moral world. The sun turned into darkness!

Infidelity in our time is considered a great joke. There are people who rejoice to hear Christianity caricatured, and to hear Christ assailed with quibble and quirk and misrepresentation and badinage and harlequinade. I propose to-day to take Infidelity and Atheism out of the realm of jocularity into one of tragedy, and show you what infidels propose and what, if they are successful, they will accomplish. There are those in all our communities who would like to see the Christian religion overthrown, and who say the world would be better without it. I want to show you what is the end of this road, and what is the terminus of this crusade, and what this world will be when Atheism and Infidelity have triumphed over it, if they can. I say, if they can. I reiterate it, if they can.

In the first place, it will be the complete and unutterable degradation of womanhood. I will prove it by facts and arguments which no honest man will dispute. In all communities and cities and states and nations where the Christian religion has been dominant, woman's condition has been ameliorated and improved, and she is deferred to and honored in a thousand things, and every gentleman takes off his hat before her. If your associations have been good, you know that the name of wife, mother, daughter, suggest gracious surroundings. You know there are no better schools and seminaries in this country than the schools and seminaries for our young ladies. You know that while woman may suffer injustice in England and the United States, she has more of her rights in Christendom than she has anywhere else.

Now, compare this with woman's condition in lands where Christianity has made little or no advance—in China, in Barbary, in Borneo, in Tartary, in Egypt, in Hindostan. The Burmese sell their wives and daughters as so many sheep. The Hindoo Bible makes it disgraceful and an outrage for a woman to listen to music, or look out of the window in the absence of her husband, and gives as a lawful ground for divorce a woman's beginning to eat before her husband has finished his meal. What mean those white bundles on the ponds and rivers in China in the morning? Infanticide following infanticide. Female children destroyed simply because they are female. Woman harnessed to the plow as an ox. Woman veiled and barricaded, and in all styles of cruel seclusion. Her birth a misfortune. Her life a torture. Her death a horror. The missionary of the Cross to-day in heathen lands preaches generally to two groups—a group of men who do as they please and sit where they please; the other group, women hidden and carefully secluded in a side apartment, where they may hear the voice of the preacher, but may not be seen. No refinement. No liberty. No hope for this life. No hope for the life to come. Ringed nose. Cramped foot. Disfigured face. Embruted soul. Now compare those two conditions. How far toward this latter condition that I speak of would woman go if Christian influences were withdrawn and Christianity were destroyed? It is only a question of dynamics. If an object be lifted to a certain point and not fastened there, and the lifting power be withdrawn, how long before that object will fall down to the point from which it started? It will fall down, and it will go still further than the point from which it started. Christianity has lifted woman up from the very depths of degradation almost to the skies. If that lifting power be withdrawn she falls clear back to the depth from which she was resurrected, not going any lower, because there is no lower depth. And yet, notwithstanding the fact that the only salvation of woman from degradation and woe is the Christian religion, and the only influence that has ever lifted her in the social scales is Christianity—I have read that there are women who reject Christianity. I make no remark in regard to those persons. In the silence of your own soul make your observations.

If infidelity triumph and Christianity be overthrown, it means the demoralization of society. The one idea in the Bible that atheists and infidels most hate, is the idea of retribution. Take away the idea of retribution and punishment from society, and it will begin very soon to disintegrate; and take away from the minds of men the fear of hell, and there are a great many of them who would very soon turn this world into a hell. The majority of those who are indignant against the Bible because of the idea of punishment, are men whose lives are bad, or whose hearts are impure, and who hate the Bible because of the idea of future punishment, for the same reason that criminals hate the penitentiary. Oh, I have heard this brave talk about people fearing nothing of the consequences of sin in the next world, and I have made up my mind it is merely a coward's whistling to keep his courage up. I have seen men flaunt their immoralities in the face of the community, and I have heard them defy the Judgment Day, and scoff at the idea of any future consequence of their sin; but when they came to die, they shrieked until you could hear them for nearly two blocks, and in the summer night the neighbors got up to put the windows down, because they could not endure the horror.

I would not want to see a rail-train with five hundred Christian people on board, go down through a drawbridge into a watery grave. I would not want to see five hundred Christian people go into such disaster, but, I tell you plainly, that I could more easily see that than I could for any protracted time stand and see an infidel die, though his pillow were of eider-down and under a canopy of vermilion. I have never been able to brace up my nerves for such a spectacle. There is something at such a time so indescribable in the countenance. I just looked in upon it for a minute or two, but the clutch of his fist was so diabolic, and the strength of his voice was so unnatural, I could not endure it. "There is no hell, there is no hell, there is no hell!" the man had said for sixty years; but that night when I looked in the dying room of my infidel neighbor, there was something on his countenance which seemed to say, "There is, there is, there is, there is!" The mightiest restraints to-day against theft, against immorality, against libertinism, against crime of all sorts—the mightiest restraints are the retributions of eternity. Men know that they can escape the law, but down in the offenders' soul there is the realization of the fact that they cannot escape God. He stands at the end of the road of profligacy, and he will not clear the guilty. Take all idea of retribution and punishment out of the hearts and minds of men, and it would not be long before our cities would become Sodoms. The only restraints against the evil passions of the world to-day are Bible restraints.

Suppose now these generals of Atheism and Infidelity got the victory, and suppose they marshalled a great army made up of the majority of the world. They are in companies, in regiments, in brigades—the whole army. Forward, march! ye hosts of infidels and atheists, banners flying before, banners flying behind, banners inscribed with the words: "No God! No Christ! No punishment! No restraints! Down with the Bible! Do as you please!" The sun turned into darkness.

Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists. And first of all you will attack the churches. Away with those houses of worship! They have been standing there so long deluding the people with consolation in their bereavements and sorrows. All those churches ought to be extirpated; they have done so much to relieve the lost and bring home the wandering, and they have so long held up the idea of eternal rest after the paroxysm of this life is over. Turn the St. Peter's and St. Paul's and the temples and tabernacles into club-houses. Away with those churches!

Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists, and next of all they scatter the Sabbath Schools filled with bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked little ones who are singing songs on Sunday afternoon, and getting instruction when they ought to be on the street corners playing marbles, or swearing on the commons. Away with them! Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists, and next of all they will attack Christian asylums—the institutions of mercy supported by Christian philanthropies. Never mind the blind eyes and the deaf ears and the crippled limbs and the darkened intellects. Let paralyzed old age pick up its own food, and orphans fight their own way, and the [illegible] Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists, and with your battle-axes hew down the cross and split up the manger of Bethlehem.

On, ye great army of infidels and atheists, and [illegible] yards and the cemeteries of the earth. Pull down the sculpture above Greenwood's gate, for it means the Resurrection. Tear away at the entrance of Laurel Hill the figure of Old Mortality and the chisel. On ye great army of infidels and atheists, into the graveyards and cemeteries; and where you see, "Asleep in Jesus," cut it away, and where you find a marble story of heaven, blast it, and where you find over a little child's grave: "Suffer little children to come unto me," substitute the words "delusion" and "sham," and where you find an angel in marble, strike off the wing, and when you come to a family vault, chisel on the door: "Dead once, dead forever."

But on, ye great army of infidels and atheists, on! They will attempt to scale heaven. There are heights to be taken. Pile hill on hill, and Pelion upon [illegible], and then they hoist the ladders against the walls of heaven. On and on until they blow up the foundations of jasper and the gates of pearl. They charge up the steep. Now they aim for the throne of him who liveth forever and ever. They would take down from their high place the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost. "Down with them!" they say. "Down with them from the throne!" they say. "Down forever! Down out of sight! He is not God. He has no right to sit there. Down with him! Down with Christ!"

A world without a head, a universe without a king. Orphan constellations. Fatherless galaxies. Anarchy supreme. A dethroned Jehovah. An assassinated God. Patricide, regicide, deicide. That is what they mean. That is what they will have, if they can. I say, if they can. Civilization hurled back into semi-barbarism, and semi-barbarism driven back into Hottentot savagery. The wheel of progress turned the other way and turned toward the dark ages. The clock of the centuries put back two thousand years. Go back, you Sandwich Islands, from your schools, and from your colleges and from your reformed condition to what you were in 1820, when the missionaries first came. Call home the five hundred missionaries from India and overthrow their two thousand schools, where they are trying to educate the heathen, and scatter the one hundred and forty thousand little children that they have gathered out of barbarism into civilization. Obliterate all the work of Dr. Duff in India, of David Abeel in China, of Dr. King in Greece, of Judson in Burmah, of David Brainerd amid the American aborigines, and send home the three thousand missionaries of the Cross who are toiling in foreign lands, toiling for Christ's sake, toiling themselves into the grave. Tell these three thousand men of God that they are of no use. Send home the medical missionaries who are doctoring the bodies as well as the souls of the dying nations. Go home, London Missionary Society. Go home, American Board of Foreign Missions. Go home, ye Moravians, and relinquish back into darkness and squalor and death the nations whom ye have begun to lift.

Oh, my friends, there has never been such a nefarious plot on earth as that which Infidelity and Atheism have planned. We were shocked a few years ago because of the attempt to blow up the Parliament Houses in London; but if Infidelity and Atheism succeed in their attempt, they will dynamite a world. Let them have their full way, and this world will be a habitation of three rooms—a habitation with just three rooms: the one a mad-house, another a lazaretto, the other a pandemonium. These infidel bands of music have only just begun their concert—yea, they have only been stringing their instruments. I to-day put before you their whole programme from beginning unto close. In the theatre the tragedy comes first and the farce afterward; but in this infidel drama of death the farce comes first and the tragedy afterward. And in the former, atheists and infidels laugh and mock, but in the latter God himself will laugh and mock. He says so. "I will laugh at their calamity and mock when their fear cometh."

From such a chasm of individual, national, world-wide ruin, stand back. Oh young men, stand back from that chasm! You see the practical drift of my sermon. I want you to know where that road leads. Stand back from that chasm of ruin. The time is going to come (you and I may not live to see it, but it will come, just as certainly as there is a God, it will come) when the infidels and the atheists who openly and out and out and above-board preach and practice Infidelity and Atheism, will be considered as criminals against society, as they are now criminals against God. Society will push out the leper, and the wretch with soul gangrened and ichorous and vermin-covered and rotting apart, will be left to die in the ditch.

A thousand voices come up to me this hour, saying: "Do you really think Infidelity will succeed? Has Christianity received its death blow? and will the Bible become obsolete?" Yes, when the smoke of the city chimney arrests and destroys the noonday sun. Josephus says about the time of the destruction of Jerusalem the sun was turned into darkness; but only the clouds rolled between the sun and the earth. The sun went right on. It is the same sun, the same luminary as when at the beginning it shot out like an electric spark from God's finger, and to-day it is warming the nations, and to-day it is gilding the sea, and to-day it is filling the earth with its light. The same old sun, not at all worn out, though its light steps one hundred and ninety million miles a second, though its pulsations are four hundred and fifty trillion undulations in a second. The same sun with beautiful white light made up of the violet and the indigo and the blue and the green and the red and the yellow and the orange—the seven beautiful colors, now just as when the solar spectrum first divided them.

At the beginning God said: "Let there be light," and light was, and light is, and light shall be. So Christianity is rolling on, and it is going to warm all nations, and all nations are to bask in its light. Men may shut the window-blinds so they cannot see it, or they may smoke the pipe of speculation until they are shadowed under their own vaporing; but the Lord God is a sun! This white light of the Gospel made up of all the beautiful colors of earth and heaven—violet plucked from amid the spring grass, and the indigo of the southern jungles, and the blue of the skies, and the green of the foliage, and the yellow of the autumnal woods, and the orange of the southern groves, and the red of the sunsets. All the beauties of earth and heaven brought out by this spiritual spectrum. Great Britain is going to take all Europe for God. The United States are going to take America for God. Both of them together will take all Asia for God. All three of them will take Africa for God. "Who art thou, oh great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain." "The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Hallelujah, amen!

Washington's Peace Jubilee

THE people of twenty States will be represented in a Jubilee to be held in Washington next week (May 24-25), commemorative of the restoration of peace between the United States and Spain. It will be practically national in its character, and will give expression to the sentiments of the American people, and commemorate by a great historical pageant the stirring scenes of the war. The arrangements are under the care of a large committee of Washington's most public-spirited citizens, who have given their time and money freely to make the jubilee a success. The entire city will be en fete.

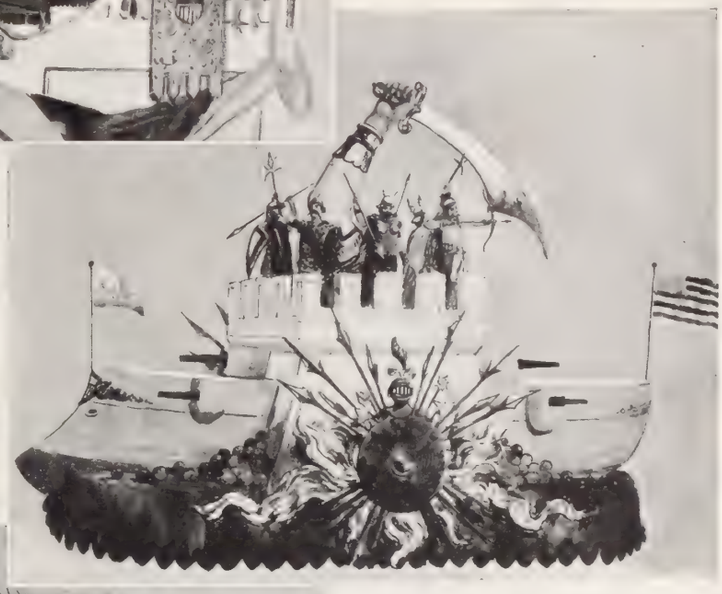
"Peace" will be symbolized by a king and his court, with a court of honor especially designed for the occasion. The throne-room of this fantastic palace will be of galvanized iron and wood; there will be two immense canopies, one on either side, and all profusely decorated.

Gen. Hawley, as chairman of the military features of the festival, has arranged the attendance of troops from several near-by States, and for a liberal representation of the army and navy of the United States to take part in the grand parade. Interest will undoubtedly centre in the "floats," which will be carried through the streets on huge vehicles, as parts of the civic parade. Several of these floats will be filled with people in costume, intended to represent historic personages identified with American events. Others will allegorically portray "Peace" and "War." The industrial trades will have cars showing artisans at work, and the merchant will have his golden argosy. Uniformed and civilian bodies will lengthen the grand pageant, and it is expected that 100,000 visitors will be accommodated in grand-stands.

President McKinley and his family, with the members of the Cabinet and their ladies, will attend the pyrotechnic display on the second evening. Seats will be provided for 11,000 spectators.

The Floats:

1. Columbus at the Court of Ferdinand and Isabella.
2. Group emblematic of "Victory."
3. "War."
4. "Uncle Sam, Liberty and the Thirteen Original States."



SOME OF THE FLOATS THAT WILL BE SEEN AT THE WASHINGTON JUBILEE

Presbyterians in Council

of his remarkable address at the funeral service of Dr. John Hall is still fresh in the minds of the Church.

An organizer of men, Dr. Radcliffe does not entirely confine himself to his own church, although it has always his best efforts; but in Presbytery and in Synod, in loyal support of the Boards of the Church, he is the ideal Presbyterian.

It is to crowded audiences of all classes—Cabinet, Judiciary, Senatorial, Congressional, the "smart set," the intellectual and exclusive of Washington society, to whom Dr. Radcliffe breaks the bread of life, as well as to the commercial element, to that great and interesting body known as Government clerks, and to teachers and students. His reading of the Scriptures is a notable feature of his pulpit work. He has in his whole ministry made a special study of liturgies, so that the "long prayer" becomes a symmetrical and blessed part of the worship, often spoken of. His devotion and attention to good music as a legitimate and essential part of real worship is well known. His preaching is expository in character, entirely without notes, and singularly varied in form. A critical "sermon taster" said of him that he was always a surprise—never two sermons built just alike, the train of thought or the plan of treatment never to be anticipated.

Whether addressing a room of sewing school children with a cake of soap for a text, or holding in wrapt silence the great dignified audience of New York Avenue Church, Dr. Radcliffe is equally happy and effective. An intense Presbyterian, true blue, he is not a sectarian. His relations with brother evangelical clergymen of every name are most cordial, and in any union movement he is to be depended on. A Pittsburgh boy, he graduated from Jefferson College, and from Princeton Theological Seminary. He has held but four pastorates: West Philadelphia, Reading, Detroit, where he married the daughter of one of his elders; and Washington, where as pastor of the New York Avenue Church, he has increased his own reputation as a preacher and Christian diplomat, and honored a church already honorable.

Christ is the centre and crown of his preaching, and to reach the individual soul for help and for present salvation, through loyalty to and faith in Christ and him crucified, is the aim and end of it all.

When on the 18th of May, Dr. Radcliffe will preach the Moderator's sermon and his successor is elected, one of the most brilliant chapters of a long ago consecrated life will be closed. In this non-sectarian journal, accustomed to record the happy events in all denominations of Christians, we congratulate the great Presbyterian Church of America on its wisdom in calling to its highest place of honor and responsibility, our friend and brother, Wallace Radcliffe.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Christ Before Pilate

S. S. Lesson for May 28. John 18: 28-40
Golden Text, John 19: 4

FEW men, whether professed Christians, or professed infidels, or heathen, will venture to find fault with Jesus. "Which of you convicteth me of sin?" (John 8: 46, R. V.), is a challenge which was made over eighteen hundred years ago, and which has never been seriously answered. But, as in the case of John the Baptist, the chief priests, scribes and elders could not say his ministry was of man, and would not say it was from heaven, lest Jesus should say, "Why then did ye not believe him?" (Mark 11: 29-3). So it is to this day as regards Jesus. Men know that Jesus is true: they can find no fault in him, but they fear the consequences of committing themselves to him. And he who suffered under Pontius Pilate is condemned today by thousands of Pilate's disciples who will not risk the loss of their own righteousness, of their caste, their popularity, their luxury, their position, or other worldly advantage. And thus, in spite of their conviction of the truth, they will not come unto him that they might have life (John 5: 40), and, like Pilate, they take part against Jesus with their eyes open.

How came the Roman Governor into such a position? Annas had sent Jesus bound unto Caiaphas, the high priest. Caiaphas sent him to Pilate, and now the responsibility was upon him of passing sentence upon One whom he knew to have been apprehended only by reason of the envy of the chief priests and elders (Matt. 27: 18). The deluded men looked upon the judgment hall as a defiled place, for Pilate, a Gentile, was the judge. But they did not know how their attitude to him who was the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world was in itself a proof of their inward defilement.

Pilate would not interfere with their religious scruples: he sought to be popular, and therefore he compromised his position, and went out to them, as they would not venture into the court, and put to them the question, "What accusation bring ye against this man?" "If this Man were not an evil doer, we should not have delivered him up unto thee," was the ready answer. But they did not so much as mention before Pilate the accusation of blasphemy which they had laid against Jesus in the priestly court; and they could not lodge a charge against him. "Take him yourselves and judge him according to your law," said Pilate again. "It is not lawful for us to put any man to death," was the answer. Jesus had foretold that he should be delivered into the hands of the Gentiles. That this word might be fulfilled, a Gentile must condemn him. Would Pilate's divided heart elect for himself this ignominious distinction? Pilate entered into the palace again, called Jesus and asked him, "Art thou the king of the Jews?" While this Gentile potentate sat in judgment upon God's Christ, his own conscience was arraigned before his prisoner. "Sayest thou this of myself, or did others tell it thee concerning me?" As though to say, hast thou any fear of political trouble or danger to the government through me, or is this only a pretext of the Jews to destroy me, and thou Pilate art party to it?

Pilate's answer was another question. "Am I a Jew? Thine own nation and the chief priests delivered thee unto me: what hast thou done?" It was a strange trial: accusers, witnesses and judges were equally at a loss how to substantiate a charge against their unusual Prisoner. But the Lord himself, speaking to Pilate's own soul, and for the teaching of those which should come after, replied, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight that I should not be delivered unto the Jews." Judge for thyself, Pilate: has One who is meek and lowly in heart, One who resists not evil, One who loves his enemies, One who heals the sick and casts out devils, judge if he has done anything which thou canst justly condemn. They were heart-searching questions, and Pilate was convinced but not converted.

"PILATE SAITH UNTO HIM, ART THOU A KING, THEN?"

"Art thou a king then?" "Thou sayest that I am a King." But of what kingdom? A kingdom to which Pilate was a stranger, but of which he felt the power. He was almost ready to come under the sceptre of him who is the Truth. Almost, but not quite. "What is truth?" he enquired, but waited for no answer: an expedient had struck him: he might effect a compromise and secure the safety of Jesus by proposing to release the worst criminal who was under detention at the time (Matt. 26: 17). Surely the people would not choose such an one! Why should he release any prisoner? He had "a custom" to release unto the people at the feast some prisoner "whom they would." Pilate's ruling passion was to keep in favor with the people, and so to secure his government position. How could such a man deliver Jesus? Face to face the unrecognized Prince of Truth, and the man who sacrificed truth and righteousness for personal advantage, stood in that judgment hall. The One to sacrifice himself; he saved others—himself he could not save; the other ready to sacrifice others, and to sacrifice justice itself that he might save himself and keep the position which he filled so badly!

Things turned out contrary to his expectation: the people chose Barabbas, and Jesus was thrown again upon his hands. Pilate had already declared, "I find no crime in him," and yet he took him and scourged him, and more, he did not interfere when the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, put it on his head, arrayed him in a purple garment, and mocked and smote him. Meanwhile the conscience which had for a moment been awakened was being hardened, and soon it would be paralyzed, and cease to act. It is an awful, a deadly thing to trifle with conscience. If Pilate had had any doubt about the case it would have been different: but reiterating as he did, "I find no crime in him," it was the most barefaced unrighteousness to scourge and to condemn Jesus.

♦

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

WHEN Christ was arraigned before Pilate a charge was made in the charge against him. The priests knew that there was no hope of the Roman governor endorsing a sentence of capital punishment for blasphemy, which was the offence on which they had convicted Jesus. Some offence must be alleged which was capital under Roman law, unless, indeed, Pilate could be induced to confirm the sentence as a matter of form, without inquiring into the charge. They tried the latter alternative first. In reply to Pilate's question as to the charge, they answered churlishly that if the Prisoner were not a malefactor they would not have condemned him. But Pilate knew better than that: he had seen too much of the Jewish priests to believe that they condemned none but malefactors. Finding that they could not hope to obtain Pilate's confirmation without an inquiry, they charged Christ with high treason against Cæsar. The wily character of Caiaphas showed itself in this charge. He knew that the Roman government was growing impatient of Jewish turbulence, and that at any time it might swoop down on the nation, disband the ecclesiastical government and carry the people away prisoners, as really did occur about forty years later. If now they denounced a man on the charge of claiming kingship, they could take credit for loyalty. Caiaphas had long brooded on this scheme, as was evident from his remark that it was better for one man to die than that the whole nation perish (John 11: 50). But as Pilate looked on the friendless, inoffensive Prisoner, he saw the absurdity of the charge. He therefore proceeded to question Christ on his own account. Christ answered him frankly, and Pilate soon saw that this Teacher of truth was no aspirant to the throne of the Cæsars. He probably regarded him as a harmless fanatic, and determined to release him. When he went out to announce this decision he [illegible] danger to himself. These vindictive priests were capable of moving against him at Rome. They could complain to [illegible] death a man who claimed to be a king. Pilate [illegible] a trivial offence; and Cæsar, not having [illegible] With the cynicism of a selfish man, he preferred to sacrifice an innocent man rather than imperil his own position. After vainly endeavoring to overcome their antipathy, he yielded to them to [illegible] His concession did not save him his place, and it brought upon him everlasting infamy.

Lest they should be defiled. It is strange that they should have been so careful. Their conduct shows how absurdly inconsistent the minds of formalists are. They thought more of the defilement that was entailed by contact with a Gentile court of justice than of the defilement of compassing the death of an innocent man. But the same characteristic survives. Not many weeks ago a man committed a heinous sin of a peculiarly disgraceful nature, and was so little troubled by it that he joked about it. The same man afterwards went into a restaurant and was horrified when his companion proposed that they should eat meat. He would not eat meat on a Friday. A priest in the Tyrol was sought for confession, some years ago, by a man whom he suspected of being implicated in murder and highway robbery. The penitent confessed his failure to attend mass, his omission of certain prayers and other trivial offenses, and said that was all. Then the priest mentioned a notorious murder and asked him if he had not been concerned in it. The man said frankly that he had, but said that such things were so common in the mountains that he had not thought it necessary to include it in his confession.

Take ye him and judge him. As the Jews could not put a man to death without Pilate's consent, this remitting of Christ to their judgment would at least save his life. Pilate was evidently reluctant to become responsible for his death, but he had not the firmness and courage which alone could save him. The English king, Charles I., was a man of similar character. When the Parliament attacked the king's chief minister, Strafford, the king tried to save him by promising never to employ him again, by suggesting light modes of punishment, but it was of no avail. When Charles found that his own position was endangered, he yielded and allowed the man, whose only crime was a too faithful allegiance to his king, to be put to death. There was no doubt that Strafford deserved his doom, but Charles would have been wise in protecting him. He could have had no more devoted servant. Like Pilate, he thought only of himself and his own interests, and was prepared to sacrifice any one rather than endanger them. Like Pilate, too, he did not save himself by his cowardice. He went to the block as he deserved, while Pilate is said to have committed suicide.

What is truth? The question seems to have been one of contempt. Pilate's idea of a king was one of a man like Cæsar, who had armies at his command. A king whose kingdom was based on the truth appeared to him a poor kind of kingship. "What is truth?" showed that he regarded truth as a flimsy foundation for a kingdom. Yet history tells a different story. The mighty empire of Rome soon fell, while the kingdom that Christ founded has extended its boundaries, and will yet embrace the whole world.

GEN. EATON

The Gospel in Our Colonies

Gen. Eaton Describes the Energetic and Successful Y.M.C.A. Work at San Juan—Our Soldiers' and Sailors' Reading-Room

IN his latest letter from Porto Rico, printed below, Gen. Eaton gives a bright and encouraging picture of the condition of religious work on the island.

SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO, April 22.

Editor "The Christian Herald":

Your readers are asking what progress is made in Americanizing San Juan; yet how few fully realize the meaning of that question! It must be remembered that this is, in a sense, the capital of the Island of Porto Rico; that it has a native population of 33,000, to which must be added the transients of all nations, the new arrivals from America, the soldiers who man the forts and the officers and sailors who man our ships of war in the harbor and conduct the work in the navy yard. Under Spanish rule there was the severest exclusion of all religious services, except Roman Catholic. It is hard for a people, raised under such conditions, to appreciate the free exercise of religious belief. They cannot accord it to others, and they cannot understand how others can accord it to them. But there is a force in man's nature which responds to this liberty, and the course of events under the American flag, carries forward the education in the change, even though a word of explanation is not uttered.

This progress could not fail, however, to bring the representatives of the distinctive religious beliefs in the States. I have already mentioned the efforts of the American Catholics to bring their church here up to the standard in America. I have also mentioned a number of Protestant denominations represented here, and they are all meeting with a considerable measure of success. The work of the Young Men's Christian Association among the soldiers and sailors here is especially comprehensive and significant. It is in charge of Mr. Frank L. Smith, who arrived here December 21, and who has already demonstrated his fitness for the work he has undertaken. He preached his first sermon on Christmas Day in a private house on Sol street, where the Y. M. C. A. is now located. He received his training as an evangelist in the Association secretaryship, and before coming here had successfully managed the Association work in the Seventh Army Corps under Gen. Lee at Jacksonville. In his new field he has been efficiently aided by his son.

He has been able to meet every difficulty with new plans to turn failure into success, and finally place the work so effectively in the minds of those to be reached here that it is already substantially self-sustaining, besides having the prospect of enlargement in San Juan, and of good openings in other Porto Rican cities. He found the theatre the most available place for Sabbath services, and preaching his first sermon there on Jan. 1st, 10 A.M., he has continued every Sabbath since. An hour before service is occupied by the Sabbath School, of which Rev. Andrew McKim, agent of the Bible Society, is superintendent. Mr. McKim speaks Spanish. Both Spanish and English are used in the Sabbath School and church services, the attendance being made up of those who can speak only Spanish, and of others who can speak only English. Mrs. Hanna, wife of the American Consul, leads the choir, playing the piano. An organ was purchased by Dr. Ward, but has not yet arrived. The theatre is owned by the city, and some untoward influence at first operated against permitting the services in it, and the janitor would refuse to open it. On one occasion the stage was extended to cover the entire floor of the theatre, and carpeted for a Sabbath night ball. Such is the sentiment toward the holy day here that the Sabbath is the favorite day for dances. The singing is in English from Gospel Hymn Books furnished from the States. The discourses are brief and effective. The attendance has been very encouraging, averaging over two hundred. Representatives of all religious denominations, as they have arrived here, have participated. Mr. Smith often holds two other services on the Sabbath, either for soldiers or sailors. By request of General Henry he organized a regular Sunday service in the prison, when three hundred prisoners join heartily in singing Gospel songs from slips printed in Spanish. General and Mrs. Henry are frequently in attendance.

Y. M. C. A. SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' READING ROOM AT SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO

Not long since here was enacted a scene never to be forgotten. The Spanish were in the habit of putting irons on a class of prisoners, never to be removed—a most cruel punishment. General Henry, after examination of the cases, ordered the irons removed. The prisoners were assembled, and with much difficulty the blacksmith was able to remove the irons. The joy of the men relieved was unbounded, and the effect upon the whole body of prisoners was great. They expressed their gratitude by presenting to General Henry a bouquet of exquisite artificial flowers made by their own hands, and by a vote of thanks. Next Sunday seventy copies of New Testaments sent by the Young People's Society, of Keyser, W. Va., will be given to seventy prisoners selected by the warden.

Early in January, out of his own thought and resources, Mr. Smith—a friend handing him twenty-five dollars—started a soup house for the poor of the city, who are numerous and suffer greatly. It was so wisely conducted that Gen. Henry entrusted to Mr. Smith the Government aid to the poor, and the merchants, instead of handing their centavos to beggars, bought tickets for soup and gave them. Nearly 2,000 have thus been relieved. After having made two contracts for rooms, and being compelled to give them up, Mr. Smith has now in successful operation Y. M. C. A. rooms, embracing a room for writing and reading and games; a room for classes in Bible and Spanish, and restaurant rooms; all have marble-tiled floors, and old Spanish paintings ornament the walls. The restaurant is fitted with neat tables. The food is American in kind and cooking. It is patronized by Government clerks and the American colony, and its average receipts are at the rate of 600 pesos per month. Mr. Smith has perfected the organization out of a working capital of $500. The restaurant furniture was donated by the Chestnut Hill Army and Navy Relief Association through the Philadelphia Y. M. C. A. The help are all Christians, and family prayers are held at seven o'clock each morning. In the absence of the Secretary the other day, they were led acceptably by the colored baker. The restaurant is closed on Sunday, as the only business testimony to the Christian Sabbath on the island, so far as known, excepting that of the Government. On that day rooms for reading and writing are open from 11 A. M until 9 P. M., the games being put away. Mr. McKim teaches the Spanish class every week day. It is delightful to see the soldiers, sailors and clerks enjoying the privileges of the rooms, especially in the evenings, when they leave little unoccupied space. Too much cannot be said for the skill with which this has all been done at so little expense; indeed, the outlay will soon undoubtedly not only be repaid, but a fund commenced with which to erect a permanent Y. M. C. A. building for San Juan.

JOHN EATON.

Y. M. C. A. Work in Our Colonies

In a letter from Manila, dated March 7, Secretaries Jackson and Glunz, of the International Y. M. C. A., report continued activity in religious work. Regular Sunday services are held, besides several additional week-day gatherings, and many visits are paid to the hospitals by the earnest workers—all of which have proved spiritually profitable. Some of the Y. M. C. A. workers have followed the troops in their field operations at the front, and have thus been able to do exceptional service at critical times, in field hospital, in the trenches and by the camp fire.

At San Juan de Porto Rico the religious work among the soldiers has progressed very favorably. A new Y. M. C. A. room has been opened at No. 47 Sol Street, with restaurant, writing room and recreation room. A class for teaching Spanish to soldiers and sailors is now in operation, Mr. Andrew McKim being the teacher. Mr. Frank L. Smith (THE CHRISTIAN HERALD correspondent) is supervising the entire work. Mr. Smith writes that he is hoping for aid in the erection of a permanent Y. M. C. A. building in the city of San Juan.

Antidotes Used Too Late

A press dispatch from Newark, N. J., says that a girl of that city accidentally swallowed some poison a few days ago. The parents sent for a Christian Scientist who prayed over the girl. Subsequently, as the girl became worse, a doctor was sent for, who administered the proper antidotes, but so much time had been lost that the poison had circulated through her system and it was too late to save her.

Many Missionaries Ready

All the Leading Denominations will Soon be Represented in the West Indian Field

FROM present indications, a considerable number of missionaries will soon leave these shores for regular service in Cuba and Porto Rico. They will include representatives of all the great denominations, and will go fully prepared and equipped for evangelistic work in those promising fields. On June 1, the first accredited missionary of the Presbyterian Church of America will sail with his family for West Indian shores. The Central Church of Rochester, N. Y., desired to be the first to send a missionary to Porto Rico, and in token of such desire subscribed a sum equal to one year's salary, leaving the selection to the missionary board in New York. Rev. Milton E. Caldwell, a regular minister of that denomination living in Cincinnati, O., has been designated, and he has accepted. He will take with him a young woman to act as teacher of a school which it is intended to establish near the mission church at Mayaguez.

DR. ALBERT BUXTON

The Methodist Episcopal Church has received a report from Bishop Ninde and a missionary secretary who returned recently from a tour. It has voted $5,000 as an initial fund, and is certain to choose two Spanish-speaking home missionaries from the Arizona and New Mexico field as the advance guard. The United Brethren, whose headquarters are at Dayton, O., announce their purpose of sending several missionaries soon. The Northern Baptists are said to have agreed to concentrate their evangelistic efforts in Eastern Cuba, while the Southern Baptists will establish missions on the Western end. The latter body bought a theatre in Havana, centrally located, that will seat 1,200 people, and transformed it into a church. This is the church in which Dr. Alberto J. Diaz baptized 3,000 persons, about one half of whom fell in the recent terrible war or were exiled. Of the seven churches which he founded only two remain.

REV. J. A. ERWIN

Recently he has returned to Havana and reopened his church. This is now one of the only two Protestant Churches in Cuba.

REV. MELVILLE MENGES

The American Missionary Association have taken a building for school purposes at San Juan, Porto Rico, and another at San Turce, a suburb, to which they will have evangelistic teachers assigned as quickly as possible. Similar schools will be instituted in the districts of Utuada and Mayaguez.

The Disciples of Christ were among the first to send special commissioners to the West Indian Islands. Secretary A. McLeon of the Foreign Board, who had already made a world-tour of mission fields, has returned from this errand, and upon his report two missionaries will be sent to Havana, Dr. Albert Buxton and Rev. Melville Menges. Two others will go to Porto Rico, Rev. J. A. Erwin and wife.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR
T. DeWitt Talmage
EDITOR
B. J. FERNIE. G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald [illegible] payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence [illegible]

Remittances [illegible] manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register [illegible]

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed [illegible] ico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. [illegible] before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. [illegible] back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration [illegible] per indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. [illegible] and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name [illegible] live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name [illegible]

The Christian Herald [illegible] the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded [illegible]

Letters [illegible]

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
[illegible] Nassau Street, New York City.
[illegible] New York Post-Office.

Judged by One's Own Decision

IT sometimes happens to great advocates to plead on opposite sides of the same case. It was Mr. Webster's lot in the celebrated Caines' case. Such a judicial mind would find it comparatively easy. But it is not often that a judge experiences the lot of the celebrated Justice Field, when a lawyer quoted him against himself.

It is said that a certain lawyer was arguing a certain case, when Justice Field thus interrupted him: "That is nonsense in a legal view." "Nevertheless," replied the counsel, "it has been so ruled by a Justice of the Supreme Court twenty-five years since." And he then proceeded to read from one of Justice Field's own decisions.

There is a verse, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Many a man might be confronted by his own past opinions as against those he now holds. But this may mean nothing more than progress in character. Ralph Waldo Emerson says consistency is of no importance: only loyalty to the truth. Speak what you think. Doubtless this is correct advice when no moral question is involved. But, if on moral questions a man changes his opinion too readily, it may well be feared he has first changed his character. Often the decisions of youth are more accurate on such questions than the decisions of later life.

The Mothers of Presidents

WITH mothers and grandmothers in the family, Presidential circles are all the more interesting and attractive to the American people. When President Garfield came to Washington, he came with his matronly wife, his merry children and a grey-haired grandmother. We saw them all together in the library of his residence on the corner of 13th and I Street. The children were on the floor with their pastimes; there was an open fire and the whole tout ensemble was very sunny and homelike. The present administration came without children, but with an invalid wife and a grey-haired grandmother. A little later, the heart of the nation went with the bereaved President to his mother's tomb. With President Loubet of France comes, also, a grandmother. The papers say that she still wears the costume of the peasant class, to which she belongs; the short dress and heavy shoes; and does not visit the capital. Nor, indeed, it would seem, does she rejoice in the honors which her distinguished son has achieved. For she says, "The more he is exalted the less time has he for his mother." It would be a holy influence in the Parisian home of the President there, if his mother were with him; to link to him the hearts of the people, and to continue the simplicity of home-life, to which he has been accustomed from his childhood.

Don't Shoot

WE see that the world has not yet entirely freed itself from the impression that personal dispute must be settled by violence. Another man had a wrong to right, and he shot a prominent citizen. During the past year, several newspaper offices have heard the crack of the pistol. If an editor writes something you do not like, kill him! Ah! this is going back toward barbarism; this is worse than the old-time duels, for then the assailant gave a man a chance for his life by previous challenge and choice of weapons. The time was when it was thought honorable for combatants to settle their differences with deadly weapons. Daniel O'Connell killed D'Esterre, James Stewart killed Boswell, Andrew Jackson killed Charles Dickinson, John H. Benton killed Lucas, Mr. Graves of the United States Congress killed Mr. Silly, Aaron Burr killed Alexander Hamilton, and even DeWitt Clinton exchanged five shots with John Swartout. But those days are far gone by, and any attempt to revive them ought to meet with the condemnation of all decent society. But they were not so bad as this frequent shooting in our time without any introductory civilities, which would give a man a chance to make his will, and say good-bye to his family.

There is evidently among certain educated and well-to-do men an impression that they can right their wrongs by manslaughter, and the idea is becoming more and more prevalent. There are those who think it looks brave to carry a pistol, and there are hundreds and thousands of men in the cities who always go armed. Now, I will undertake to say that any man who lives in a well-defended city, and is afraid to go out and come in without fire-arms, has not the courage of a sheep. If called to go out on the borders of civilization, or as an officer of the law to explore the haunts of a great city, deadly weapons may be an appropriate accompaniment; but a private citizen who, in peaceful times and in well-governed neighborhoods, carries dirk or pistol, has the spirit of murder, whether or not he commits the crime. In all the history of the world slander was never baffled nor was honor defended by taking the life of another. Newspaper abuse was never stopped by extinguishing an editor. An abusive newspaper corrects the harm it does by the reputation it gets for abuse. The most successful and honored men in the world are those whom certain newspapers attempted to annihilate. Every man comes to be estimated at what he is really worth. It is rather an unfortunate thing for a man to be abused only once by a newspaper, for then the public might be deceived in regard to him; but if the abuse go on for weeks and months and years, the people come to understand it as only the wreaking of some old grudges, and hence the charges fall powerless. Besides that, it is not now as once in towns and cities that there was only one newspaper, and that could have things its own way. There are scores of newspapers coming out day by day, and if one paper is unfair with you, other papers will do you full justice. But if there should come a case of defamation, in which no newspaper column is open to set you right, you have the law and a jury made [illegible] self, have reputation and family and sense of right and wrong, and will give you damages. But do not think that by violence you can adjust anything. Keep your heart right, and your life right, and you are independent of the world's bombardment.

There is a certain kind of man who never ought to have a pistol in his pocket, under his pillow, or anywhere in his house from garret to cellar, and that is the young man, or the old, who has a violent temper. And yet those are the kind of men who generally carry fire-arms to say nothing of a revolver. It is dangerous for you to have so much as a percussion cap, or a ramrod, if you have a bad temper. You carry a pistol, and suddenly, in a moment of insane fury, you may do something you may be sorry for through time and through eternity. With such a temper as you have, to carry a weapon of death is as unwise as to put gunpowder and lucifer matches in the same pocket. The orderly citizen in our orderly cities within the next hundred years will need no fire-arms. Ten lives are lost every year through the accidental discharge of fire-arms, where there is one life saved. This complete puppyism, which cannot live without being armed with deadly weapons, ought to be spanked and put to bed before sundown.

Lightning on Wings

WE have long been familiar with the [illegible] But after all our swift lightning has required a track, as much as does a rail-car. It would go on copper wire. Would it travel without a wire? The new method of telegraphy has answered this question affirmatively. Given a transmitter that excites electrical waves at one point, and a receiver by which they are read at another, and the wire is dispensed with. With a conductor eighty feet high, a message can be transmitted sixteen miles. Such a message overtops mountains and defies storms. Ships at sea can communicate with each other and with the shore.

A telegraph message has lately been sent from Washington to Fort Myer at the rate of 200,000 words an hour. The average rapidity of a good operator by the Morse system is thirty words a minute. The new system called the synchronograph carries 3,333 words a minute. The difference in volume of business is as thirty to thirty-three hundred. The theory of the new telegraph is the theory of wave-motion in alternate electric currents. This wave-motion is compared to a nicely-made rail-fence. It is synchronous with the revolution of the transmitter. Already two great companies have negotiated for the use of the new system, and the patentees have taken out patents in nineteen countries.

Taking to Itself Wings

IDLE HOUR, the elegant summer residence of Mr. William K. Vanderbilt, at Oakdale, L. I., was lately burned to the ground. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., were spending their honeymoon there. The watchman discovered the fire in the cellar, the alarm was given, and all the inmates readily escaped. From Sayville and Islip, the nearest points where were firemen, it took one hour to reach the scene of conflagration. By that time the fire had virtually burned itself out, so that with the inferior fire apparatus sent, nothing remained to be done. The loss was from $250,000 to $300,000.

Fire to the wealthy, who can easily replace the property burned is serious enough. And the young couple, whose only occupation for that sad hour was to watch the flames lick up the costly pile and leave them homeless, doubtless had some true sense of their loss. But doubtless [illegible] however, the loss of a home to the poor, or to those of moderate means, is a blow from which there is no recovery. The burning up of Chicago broke up many a family forever. Probably few ever witness such a scene without recalling: "And fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is." Nothing is more consuming, more merciless, more calamitous, than for one to fall a prey to this devouring element.

♦

BRIEF NOTES

The A. W. Halsey [illegible] tion of the work which the members of the Salvation Army are doing in South Africa by making a [illegible]

[illegible] try for several years past, has just been re-appointed [illegible] He will sail for India in a few weeks.

[illegible], or good tracts, or volumes of Mr. Moody's [illegible] will be gratefully received by Mr. [illegible] distribution in prisons and [illegible]

[illegible] ing, N. Y. A [illegible] feeling was manifested and [illegible] forward under the leadership of the pastor of the First Baptist Church, Rev. F. W. Lockwood.

Mr. John Wanamaker was elected chairman of the Executive Committee at the recent International Sunday School Convention, in succession to Mr. B. F. Jacobs, who now, as Honorary Chairman, will spend some time in visiting Sunday [illegible]

Mr. Dube, the young Zulu chief who has been studying for the ministry and has set sail for his own country to work as a missionary, will have an energetic colleague. Mr. Scott, one of the converts of the Seamen's Anchor Mission in Barbados, [illegible]

The International Young Men's [illegible] Association Committee has received conditionally $50,000 toward the Naval Department's work. The two conditions were made that a further sum of $100,000 should be raised, and that the name of this giver be not made public. Rear-Admiral Philip is at the head of the Naval Department.

The [illegible] reports an increase in the Jewish population of Palestine. Out of a total population which he gives as 200,000, about 40,000 are Jews, as against 14,000 twenty years ago. In Jerusalem there are 22,000 Jews; 660 families numbering about 5,000 souls inhabit the 22 Jewish colonies in Palestine founded by foreigners.

[illegible] and faithful servant by the death of Dr. A. H. Clapp, who was for over thirty-four years Editorial Secretary of the Home Missionary Society. Dr. Clapp was in his eighty-first year, but to the last, though often suffering extreme pain, he continued to attend to his duties and took a deep interest in the progress of the society.

A [illegible] organized in Chicago with the hope of getting concerted and united action on matters of moral and religious character. The President is Rev. J. W. Fifield, a Congregationalist; the Secretary, Rev. J. P. Brushingham, a Methodist. Among the members are: Rev. Myron W. Haynes, Baptist; Rev. J. H. O. Smith, of the Church of the Disciples, and Rev. Frank M. Carson, Presbyterian.

At the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Bible lectures open to the public, will be given daily except Sunday and Monday, in the morning. Dr. Torrey's subjects are on Bible doctrine. W. R. [illegible] sionary study on Friday mornings. During this month Dr. L. W. Munhall lectures on books of the Bible. A special summer course of four months beginning June 1, will be conducted by the Rev. Dr. James M. Gray, of Boston.

The Order of Saint Benedict, which has so long held a dispensation from the Pope to make and sell beer at Beatty, Pa., appears from a report in the Independent to have relinquished the business. Several Roman Catholic papers have protested vigorously against the monks being in the business, but until this year the protest has not been heeded. The O. S. B., or Order of Saint Benedict, called by the irreverent the Order of Sacred Brewers, has taken out no license this year.

A dispatch from Messrs. Crossly and Hunter describes a wonderful revival which has taken place at St. John's, Newfoundland. The meetings were held in the Gower Street Methodist Church, which was crowded every night for five weeks. More than a thousand members have been added to the Methodist Churches of the city, besides a large number who will connect with other churches. The number of those who publicly sought salvation as registered by the secretary was 1,536. From St. John's the evangelists went to Carbonear for a two weeks' series of meetings.

A church census of Pittsburgh and Allegheny, Pa., was recently taken by the Pittsburgh Dispatch. Eighty-two thousand families were canvassed, of whom about five thousand professed no church affiliation. Of the remainder, 26,102 families declared themselves Roman Catholic. The different branches of the Presbyterian denomina- [illegible] lies, and the Methodist Episcopal is third with 9,302 families. There are 8,723 families of Lutherans, [illegible] of African Methodists, and 366 of Greek Catholics.

Telegraphing Without Wires

FOR months past, the scientific world has been discussing a new method of transmitting electric signals over wireless spaces, by a system introduced by Guglielmo Marconi, a young Italian. Half a century has elapsed since Professor Morse announced his discovery of the electric telegraph, and since that event nothing of equal importance to Marconi's invention has come to the attention of the electrical savants. His first experiments were made two years ago, since which time interest in his method has steadily increased, scientists and capitalists alike recognizing the invention as a most valuable one. Marconi's machinery is comparatively simple. In a recent successful experiment at communicating between Wimereux, a village on the French coast, near Boulogne, and the South Foreland, in England, across the Channel, a tall mast was erected at Wimereux, 50 metres above ground, from the peak of which 150 feet of wire was suspended, the loose end being carried into a room by the window, and attached to the electrical instruments there. A similar mast was erected on the English shore, also equipped with wire and instruments. A touch on the key of one instrument sent the electric current through the wire to the top of the mast, whence it leaped in electrical waves across the wireless thirty-mile chasm between the two stations in a direct line to the top of the other mast, and passing through the 150 feet of wire, the signal was recorded by the further instrument with perfect clearness. It is essential, Marconi explains, that each mast-head, with its appropriate wire, should be within the "sphere of influence" of the other mast to which it is destined to transmit the message; thus, a wire 20 feet high carries the effective signal one mile; 40 feet, four miles; 80 feet, sixteen miles. The transmitter and receiver are not complicated machines, and the cost of equipping a wireless telegraph station is comparatively small. It is believed that, while the new system will not supercede telegraphy by wire, it may be made serviceable in communicating between short distances on land, and also between vessels at sea. After it has reached a somewhat more perfect condition, its cheapness and simplicity may bring it into very general use. The essence of the discovery is the fact that communication may be had without a wire connection, if the dispatcher is in the same electrical sphere as the receiver. An analogous principle obtains in the spiritual world. The prayer that reaches God's ear and receives an answer, comes from one whose spirit is in closest harmony with him.

If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you (John 15: 7).

OPERATORS IN FRANCE RECEIVING A MESSAGE FROM ENGLAND BY WIRELESS TELEGRAPH

An Island Disappears

A steamer just arrived from the Southern Pacific reports that Falcon Island, which was discovered in 1885 has completely disappeared and the steamer passed over the place where a year ago it lay, low in the water. The island was built up in the neighborhood of the Tonga group, about thirty-five miles from the island of Tofooa. A submarine volcano had reared from the bottom of the ocean a mighty mass of ejecta, and on this foundation rested the outpourings which rose above the water. The island consisted of two distinct parts. One of them was a hill of gentle slope and wide base, whose height was 153 feet. On one side, the hill ended abruptly in a cliff, whose base was washed by the sea at high water. The other part of the island was a flat, extending away from the base of the hill in a northerly direction and only ten to twelve feet above the high-tide level. The whole bit of land was just a bare, brown heap of ashes, around which the great rollers broke and swept up the black shores in sheets of foam. The island was entirely destitute of any vegetation save for a half dozen seedling plants that had found lodgment there. It is supposed that the continuous action of the currents ate away the volcanic lava which connected the island with the subterranean mountain, and that the island thus losing its support, tilted over and sunk to the bottom of the sea. After a brief existence of fourteen years it has now disappeared as completely as if it had never existed. If any one had built a fine house on the island, or had bought and cultivated land there, how mortified he would have been! The time is coming when, looking back across the grave, every man whose hopes and affections were centred on worldly things will have the same feeling about his investment.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth (Col. 3: 2).

Inspecting a Railroad

Rumors have been industriously circulated of late that the elevated railroads of New York were becoming weak and faulty. An inspection was therefore ordered, and it appears to have been thoroughly executed. The report says: "Your inspector walked underneath the structure the entire length of all its lines, frequently going over portions of them the second time in order to more closely examine those places where columns and tracks are widely separated. In this manner were examined foundations and columns, and a general view was obtained of girders, connections, etc., from the under side. Columns were frequently climbed by your inspector to scrutinize more closely some connection or other part not plainly visible from the ground. He also walked on the top of the structure, along or upon the tracks, over the entire system, frequently going beneath the ties among the girders or trusses, looking carefully at their various parts, and especially at the connections with tops of columns and with each other; also looking for loose rivets or other defects, often testing all the rivets with a hammer for an entire span, and sometimes several spans continuously. No weak or defective foundations were discovered." It was rightly felt that too much care could not be taken in ascertaining that a road over which so many people travel every day, was thoroughly safe. It is a pity that people do not exercise at least as much care where their eternal safety is concerned. Many proceed heedlessly, even after being warned that the course they are taking is perilous.

There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death (Prov. 14: 12).

Her Life for Her Property

A sad fatality is reported from Belle fonte, Pa. On the outskirts of the adjacent village of Boalsburg lived an aged widow, who was in comfortable circumstances. A man returning from work, saw smoke issuing from one of the lower windows of the house in which the widow lived, and immediately aroused her and brought her out. He then ran to the village to get assistance in extinguishing the fire. There was a prompt response and men with buckets hurried to the scene. They found the widow hard at work dragging her belongings out of the burning house. She was very much concerned about a trunk in the upper story in which there was considerable money and some valuable dresses. Everyone was busy trying to put out the fire and she could get no one to venture upstairs for the trunk. She made an attempt to go up herself, but her neighbors held her back and warned her that she would endanger her life. Twice she was prevented entering, but she succeeded in getting in on a third attempt, and was seen at a window trying to raise the trunk to the sill and throw it out. Just then the floor sank beneath her, and she and the trunk fell into the seething furnace of flame on the lower floor. When her charred remains were found, the arms still encircled what was left of the trunk in which her property had been stored. Every one perceives how foolish it was of her to risk her life to save her property, because every one understands that life is more precious than property; but how few there are who carry the comparison further and realize that more precious even than life, is the soul, the interests of which too many sacrifice to the interests of the body!

What shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Mark 8: 37).

Held by a Finger

A singular accident is reported by a journal of Jamestown, N. Y. It appears that a young lady living in that town, while operating a sewing machine at her home, had the misfortune to get her finger under the machine needle, which penetrated it. The needle became bent in the operation, and it was impossible for her to turn the machine so as to withdraw it. A man heard her cries while passing the house. He went to the rescue, but could not turn the machine to release the unfortunate young woman. A machinist and a physician were sent for. On the arrival of the machinist he was compelled to take the machine apart before the young lady could be released. The physician then extracted the needle, and the wound will very soon heal; but the experience is one which will doubtless be remembered by the victim for a long time. It was a curious and painful predicament to be thus held prisoner by a finger, but it was as securely done as if the whole body had been held in a vise. Something like this sometimes happens in the spiritual world. Some one habit or association holds the victim captive to evil in spite of the nobility or goodness of the general character. It was of such that Christ spoke when he recommended them to make any sacrifice, however painful, to save the soul:

THE SIGNAL MAST

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish than that thy whole body should be cast into hell (Matt. 5: 30).

A Dangerous Missive

The secretary of a company of wholesale druggists doing business in Pine St., New York, received a dangerous package by mail one day last week. The clerk who clears the Post Office box brought among the letters a package which looked like a box of medicines. It was wrapped in paper and was about five inches long and three wide and an inch thick. The Secretary, to whom it was addressed, removed the outer paper covering. Inside, was a box punctured all over the lid, as if to admit air. When the lid was taken off, a snake darted up its head from the interior and bit viciously at the wrist of the man who had the box in his hand. He dropped it instantly and called in the clerks. One of them had a pair of pliers in his hand with which he seized the snake, which was writhing on the floor. Another clerk brought a wide-necked bottle and the snake was put in it. It was then sent to an expert in snakes who pronounced it an asp whose bite was venomous. The Secretary is sure that an enemy sent it to him, but cannot think of anyone whose animosity was likely to take that deadly form. It was well for him that he at once recognized the dangerous nature of the missive and cast it from him before it did him harm. Unhappily, the receivers of mail sent by wicked men are not always so fortunate. Scarcely a month passes in which there is not some one detected in sending vile books or pictures by mail, which are more dangerous even than an asp, for while the asp might poison the body, these other missives poison the soul. We have need to be on our guard against those whom the Preacher described as "babblers," who would corrupt the morals:

Surely the serpent will bite without enchantment, and a babbler is no better (Eccles. 10: 11).

. . . The World's First Peace Congress . . .

Everything in Readiness for its Assembling at the Hague this Week — The Leaders who Compose its Membership — Watched by All Civilized Nations

CAPT. A. T. MAHAN CAPT. WM. CROZIER

THE AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS TO THE CONFERENCE

ON the eighteenth of this month there will open in one of the loveliest spots in Europe, a Congress whose proceedings will be followed with boundless interest by every truly Christian man and woman the world over. A Congress of Peace!—how entrancing the sound—a Congress to combat the greatest scourge from which humanity has suffered since the original sin, but for Christ's saving grace rendered us helpless in the face of Evil; a conference of the mightiest nations of the earth in the persons of their chosen representatives, to ward off if possible, the horrors of the great coming war so often predicted of late years, and made almost inevitable by the constantly increasing armaments of the great powers. Is this beautiful dream of peace to remain a dream, or is it to come within the domain of reality? Such is a question all are asking. If the Congress undertakes too much, if it attempts to bring about a general disarmament it will probably fail, but by aiming at a less radical reform, it may succeed in reducing the chances of a general war to a minimum—and this of itself would be an enormous gain.

SIR JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE (ENGLAND)

BARON DE STAAL (RUSSIA)

President of the Conference

M. LEON BOURGEOIS (FRANCE)

There is still another aspect of the question, which will doubtless receive full attention at the Congress. I refer to the suppression of certain destructive engines of war. I learn that the French delegation, with M. Bourgeois, former Prime Minister, at its head, propose to make a stiff fight on this point. It was not exactly to their taste that special mention should have been contained in the Czar's rescript of the desirability of eliminating submarine boats from the list of permissible war engines. France has made the greatest strides in the field of submarine warfare. She will maintain her right to protect her coast from foreign aggression by the use of submarine craft, but at the same time she will lead the movement for the suppression of all forms of explosive bullets. As to the personality of the leading delegates I can only speak for those with whom I have been thrown in contact. I could not think of one more fitting and worthy to occupy that exalted position than the President of the Congress, Baron de Staal. Well into the seventies, Baron de Staal has filled the extremely delicate and responsible post of the Czar's representative at the Court of St. James for over twenty years. As his name indicates, he is of German descent. He is a Lutheran Protestant by religion.

Germany will be represented at the Congress by Count von Muenster, German Ambassador in Paris. The fact that he has occupied this post for a long period of years, and that in that time he has successfully weathered several severe diplomatic storms, including the Schnaebele incident and the Dreyfus scandal, speaks volumes for his love of peace as well as his tact and prudence. Like the Baron de Staal, he belongs to the Lutheran denomination. France's representative, M. Leon Bourgeois, is considered one of the leading authorities in Europe on international law, to which qualification he adds the gift of oratory in a remarkable degree. As a parliamentary debater it is admitted that he has few equals in his own country.

COUNT WELSUSHEIMB (AUSTRIA) COUNT VON MUENSTER (GERMANY)

M. Bourgeois will also, in a certain measure, represent the Pope. He will be assisted by Messrs. d'Estournelles and Bihouard, the latter the French Minister at the Hague. Great Britain will also have an imposing delegation, headed by Sir Julian Pauncefote and the British Minister at the Dutch Court. Austria will be represented by Count Welsusheimb. The American Commissioners, as already known, are Hon. Andrew D. White, our Ambassador at Berlin; Hon. Stanford Newel, United States Minister to Holland; President Seth Low, of Columbia University; Capt. A. T. Mahan, of the Navy (retired); and Capt. William Crozier, of the army. It would be hard to conceive of a more appropriate spot for the holding of a Peace Conference than the beautiful villa situated in the

DECORATIONS IN ORANGE ROOM WHERE CONFERENCE SITS

QUEEN WILHELMINA

The Royal Hostess of the Conference

A BAS-RELIEF IN THE ORANGE HALL

wood or park adjoining the Hague. The very atmosphere breathes peace and quiet and repose. About eight months ago I visited the town on the occasion of festivities at the coronation of the young Queen of Holland. Never will I forget the impression produced on my mind by the aspect of this royal retreat and its surroundings. The Huis T'en Bosch, or "House in the Wood," as the Dutch love to call it, is a miniature palace, built by Princess Amalia von Solms, widow of Prince Frederick Henry of Orange, son of the famous "William the Taciturn," and grandfather of William III., King of England. She intended it to be a sort of mausoleum to his memory, and in the elaboration of her scheme she secured the services of the leading Dutch and Flemish artists of her day. The work, begun shortly after the Prince's death in 1647, required several years for its completion. The building has undergone many changes and restorations since, but in one portion it has remained practically untouched, and that is the famous "Oranjezaal," or Orange Hall, in the very centre, surmounted by the cupola seen in the exterior view. It is in this vast apartment, fifty feet high, that will shortly be held the most important, and possibly, in its results, the most far-reaching gathering in the history of nations. To convey an adequate idea of the superb decorations of the Oranjezaal would require more space than THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S columns permit of. As one enters, the eye is fairly overcome by the multitude of life-size figures that crowd the huge canvases and panellings on all sides. One feels oneself transplanted into another world, a world filled with mythological figures, gods, goddesses, nymphs, intrepid knights, fair women in gems and laces, some of which are painted so startlingly life-like as to seem ready to step down from their frames. The principal wall has a canvas twenty-five by thirty feet, from the brush of Jordaens, a painter of the Rubens school, giving an allegorical representation of Prince Frederick Henry's career, such as his triumph over vice, sickness, and other enemies of youth. It is a perfect revelation of art, is this Oranjezaal—the art of the seventeenth century, which in the opinion of a number of competent critics has never been surpassed since.

THE "HUIS T'EN BOSCH" (HOUSE IN THE WOOD) WHERE THE PEACE CONFERENCE MEETS

It is hardly necessary to say that the Dutch people are very enthusiastic over the coming Congress. In the first place, they are flattered at the choice of their legislative capital; secondly, they are a naturally peaceful and commercial nation, to whom war is naturally repugnant; and thirdly, they realize that with the introduction of a universal system of arbitration, their chances of being despoiled by more powerful rivals or neighbors are greatly diminished. Dutch newspapers are fond of referring to Holland's position as that of the "second colonial power," and, at the bottom, this is not a vain or idle boast. Though the little kingdom possesses a smaller colonial area than France, or even Germany, her East Indian archipelago alone, comprising Sumatra and Java, are the best colonized and best paying dependancies in the world. Thanks to her wise methods, she has secured the submission if not the friendship of millions of Malays at comparatively little cost of blood or treasure. Having subdued the colonial insurrection in Achin (a merely local affair, by the way), she feels that the only danger reserved for her future tenure must come from the outside. And if the Congress is a success, this danger will disappear, or at least be greatly minimized. And this is why the delegates to the Hague will be received with open arms, alike by the authorities and by the masses generally.

VALERIAN GRIBAYEDOFF.

A CORNER OF THE JAPANESE HALL

THE DINING HALL IN THE "HOUSE IN THE WOOD"

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

The Knitting Lesson

Two Stories with a Moral: The Knitters: A Laundress in Spite of Herself

A CHILD'S taste or distaste for certain kinds of work or for work in general—depends largely upon the tact of the teacher. A young lady of wealth, known to the writer, picked up the gentle art of laundry work when a child, playing around a kindly servant. "I like to wash to this day," the young lady declares. It was fun to learn; I never see the white linen coming smooth and sheen from under my iron, but I think of the lovely times I used to have in the kitchen with dear, wholesome Bridget. I burned my fingers sometimes, but Bridget made such a fuss over me that there was fun even in that."

In contrast with this, is the story of a young woman who cannot abide knitting. "It almost gives me a heartache to look at knitting-needles," she says. "Mamma had a hard time teaching me to knit, and oh, I had a hard time learning! She felt it was her duty, poor dear, to compel me to engage in some sort of occupation a part of every day. Also, when I was naughty and needed a little discipline, she made me take up my knitting and go to work. How I used to look longingly out of the window, watching birds and bees and butterflies and the other children at play. A finger-length on a stocking was my regular task every day. One day I hit upon what I considered a happy expedient. I pulled my loops out so long that it took very few rounds to make a finger-length. You could shoot straws through that stocking! When poor mamma found out what I had been doing, she cried as if her heart would break. 'Here I've been trying to make you good,' she said, 'without whipping you, and just see what you've done! It's the same as telling a falsehood. Put your knitting-needles away.' Her sorrowful outburst and her gentle despair affected me deeply. I took my knitting-needles up. 'I'll do better. I didn't think how naughty that was!' From that day I resolutely knit my daily task — but I always hated it. Now, there's my cousin, who learned knitting of her grandmamma in much the same way your friend learned laundry work of Bridget: she says that nothing rests her so much after a busy day as a quiet hour with her knitting. She and her grandmamma used to sing a sort of song like this during knitting lessons:

"Take your needle in your left hand.
Now a needle in your right—
Catch a loop up—toss it off:
Ah! that is a pretty sight!
Now, to shape the stocking wider,
Out of one loop we'll make two.
And, to shape our stocking narrow,
Out of two loops we'll make one.
Round and fast bright needles clicking
Travel till the stocking's done!"

This grandmamma's way of making work play and play work is along the lines of the great and wise Froebel's teaching, although grandma may never have heard of Froebel. The "Mother Plays" and the kindergarten games and gifts design to utilize fondness for play in a way that cultivates fondness for work. In the nature studies the familiar text is verified. "Go to the ant . . . learn of her ways and be wise."

"CATCH A LOOP UP—TOSS IT OFF!"

His Mother First

The French President recently visited Montelimar, his native town, near which his aged mother (she is eighty-six), lives on the old farm which she manages herself, going about in sabots when the weather is bad, like her peasant neighbors. A great official reception was arranged, and a crowd of glittering functionaries gathered to welcome him. On the balcony of the Sub-Prefecture, his mother waited his arrival, and watched with impatience the crowd and the ceremonials which intervened between her son and herself. The President saw her, sprang from his carriage, and, hat in hand, and smiling, brushed past everybody, rushed up to the balcony, embraced the old lady, his aunt and daughter. Dignified and still smiling, he turned to the crowd, and resumed the role of President of France while the official programme proceeded. The honest townspeople were all the better pleased with their countryman because he forgot them in his joy at seeing his old mother.

Good-Night Words

"If there is one time more than another," says H. Clay Trumbull, "when children ought to hear only loving words from their parents, and be helped to feel that theirs is a home of love and gladness, it is when they are going to bed at night. Good-night words to a child ought to be the best of words as they are words of greatest potency. The last waking thoughts of a child have a peculiar power over his mind and heart, and are influential in shaping his character for all time. Unlike those of the day, they are not dissipated the next moment by play. The night words to baby as he falls asleep are like good seed sown in good ground at a favorable season.

One Boy's Training

The mother of a successful young business man tells the following interesting and suggestive incidents in his early training:

I took Will up to a farmhouse in Maine one summer when he was about nine years old. We were in very comfortable circumstances, and I was [illegible] his wishes and indulgences, but one day he said: "Mamma, may I try to make some money by carrying sheaves for the farmers here?" "You may be taking work from folks who need it, Will," I said. "Oh no, mamma. The farmers are hurrying to get the harvest over with and they need more help." "Go ahead then." He got fifty cents a day, I think. We were in a sheep-raising district and in shearing time Will wanted to "tread wool," which is one of the ways the farmers have of compressing the wool into smaller bulk for transportation. He made tidy little sums, and I was delighted to see how he spent them. I had been treating him to soda water; he now took pride in treating me. When I'd express a wish for any small matter within his reach, he'd say sturdily, "Mamma, I'll give you that." He went to the country store and bought his little sister a most wonderful red print gown, which I had her wear out before returning to town. And he sent off and took THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and got a CHRISTIAN HERALD Library for the little Sunday School up there. When winter came I labored to invent opportunities for Will to keep up his little plan of being as independent as possible and generous out of his own means. I encouraged him to give to his sister and me, and to every cause he thought worthy. And I've been repaid for my trouble—for invention was lots of trouble sometimes. I never have any fear that that boy won't be able to take care of himself and his wife and babies.

PRESIDENT LOUBET HURRYING TO GREET HIS MOTHER

A Good "Mother Work"

MRS. SARAH MARIE HARRIS, President of the New York City Mothers' Club, is conducting an interesting work at the "Little Mothers' rooms, 302 East Twenty-first street. Mrs. Harris has organized a Mothers' class, composed of the mothers of the "Little Mothers." The "Little Mothers," as our readers know, are children who take care of younger children while the parents go out to work. Mrs. Harris' class began with two mothers whom she happened to have a chat with in the rooms, and who were so much interested that she invited them to come the following Tuesday and bring their children and friends. There were nine mothers next Tuesday, six babies and a lot of older children, and the crowd enlarges with every meeting. Gatherings are held in the big, sunny kitchen.

"We show them," says Mrs. Harris, "how nice and pretty a kitchen can be when it is well kept; and what cozy, little social times can be had at small cost. Tea and cookies are dispensed, and while the tea is steaming and when we are pouring it out, we talk together of motherly duties and privileges. I show them how to make the most of what they have to amuse the babies with. Pretty kindergarten plays with clothespins and empty spools are improvised, and the mothers see how the babies can be entertained and really instructed by means of such simple materials. One day I brought in a lot of nice, fresh rhubarb from my son's garden in Long Island, and it was used in the 'Little Mothers'' cooking lesson. Another time, some other friend will bring quite as modest a contribution as my pie-plant; and so neighborly feeling is engendered; and the beauty of it all is that East-side mothers are so eager to learn all that we can tell them about better ways of raising their little ones."

"Bye, Baby Bunting"

Bye, Baby Bunting,
Daddy's gone a-hunting,
Gone to get a rabbit's skin
To wrap my Baby Bunting in!

This old lullaby is of Indian origin. We are all familiar with pictures of fur-clad papooses strapped to boards. The little blanket was of rabbit-skin, and Indian mothers crooned the literal truth in the words of this quaint slumber-song.

The Children's Petition—a Unique Incident

In the neighborhood of the Gospel Settlement, 211 Clinton Street, there was talk of turning a bit of vacant ground into a market-place—an east-side market-place of dust and traffic, fish smells, etc. The children of that vicinity have no playground; there are no parks in reach. All the pleasure in life that a large proportion of them find is in the rooms and yard of the Gospel Settlement where they are always made welcome and happy by Mrs. Bird and her helpers. They were making the most of the vacant space spoken of when the dreadful news came that they were to be fenced out and the market house built up: their sorrow and consternation was, of course, imparted to their Settlement friends. The children had heard how grown people accomplish things by petitions to proper authorities. Why could not they? Their Settlement friends promptly drew up a petition, the children signed it—there was a long list of "Annies," "Minnies," "Tommies," "Willies," etc. Mrs. Bird brought their petition to the notice of Bernard Glick, Alderman of the Ward, and through his good offices the children came off victor and the little vacant space is theirs to play in. This is, we believe, the first time children have exerted municipal influence through formal petition.

Four Years Among the Filipinos

Life in the Jungles—Among the Planters—Industrial and Domestic Features—Pagan Superstitions

By per. The Macmillan Co.

A GROUP OF MORO WOMEN AND CHILDREN

IN view of the importance and timeliness of the subject treated, one of the most valuable additions to current literature is The Philippine Islands and their People, a book by Dean C. Worcester, Professor of Zoology, University of Michigan. Prof. Worcester spent nearly four years in the islands. The first sojourn of eleven months was in connection with the Steere expedition, in 1887-8, which was made for the purpose of studying birds and mammals and gathering ethnological material and zoological specimens. In 1870, he made a second trip in company with Dr. Frank S. Bourns and Matteo, a Filipino, and spent nearly three years wandering from island to island, through little-known interiors. His opportunities for becoming acquainted with the domestic and industrial life of the shy folks of the jungle, "the sullen, fluttered peoples," who constitute to-day so serious a part of the American "White Man's Burden," were exceptional, while his observations taken, before the revolution against Spain and prior to our own Spanish and Asiatic difficulties, have the virtue of being impartial as well as expert testimony. Phases of life showed then what was coming. Extortionate taxes, military conscription, confiscations, imprisonments, the high cost of the marriage ceremony, of burial service, corruption and greed of clergy and officials, the difficulties put in the way of planters who wished to improve their property by introduction of modern methods and machinery, were existent causes conspiring through discontent in all classes to bring about open revolt. This does not, as the Professor is particular to state, imply that all officers and priests were corrupt. He found many shining exceptions.

Since Negros is the first of these islands that has voluntarily asked our protection and raised our flag, it commands a larger share of American attention than by reason of its comparative area, it otherwise might, and the following extracts will be interesting to our readers:

Negros is probably the richest island of its size in the archipelago, and the fertile lowlands along the coast are extensively cultivated, although much good land still lies idle. Although the most primitive methods of cultivating the cane and extracting the juice are commonly employed, there are a number of fine estates on which comparatively modern machinery is used . . . It was our good fortune, while at Bais, to fall in with Sor. Montinegro, or Don Joaquin as he was familiarly called, the proprietor of one of the best-ordered sugar plantations in the colony.

Agricultural difficulties as manifested throughout the islands is illustrated by those of Don Joaquin:

There were six steam crushers on the place, while cars pushed by hand along a little tramway brought the cane from the fields. Don Joaquin told us that it had taken him six years to secure government permission for the establishment of this tiny railroad and to get the plant through the custom-house. He very strongly implied that it had cost more than time as well. Small wonder that modern machinery is seldom employed on Philippine plantations . . . Cane was suffering in the fields for want of men to cut it. The labor problem in the Philippines is a serious one for all who have occasion to employ men in large numbers. Don Joaquin was a humane man who paid his plantation hands well and dealt fairly with them, yet he was often hampered by lack of help . . . In many parts of the Philippines nature has done so much for the people that they have little trouble in obtaining food, clothing and shelter . . . The average Visayan, with a couple of bushels of shelled corn or a caban of rice in the house, and a bit of dried fish for desert, lies on the floor, smokes his cigarette, thrums his guitar, and composes extemporary songs on current events. Why should he not? His wife does the cooking, and brings the water. When the provisions give out, it will be quite soon enough to look for more.

Don Joaquin's hospitality is typical of what might be found among the planter class:

He sent his son, Don Ignacio Simo, with an invitation for us to come out to his plantation and live in a "little house" which stood idle there—it might afford us more privacy than the quarters we were occupying. That there might be no doubt as to the sincerity of his invitation, he sent his carriage to bring us, and buffalo-carts for our luggage. Imagine our surprise on finding that the casita was the handsome house of Montinegro's son, from which that young man had moved his family to make room for us! The whole establishment, including glassware, silver, bedlinen, and servants, was put at our disposal. Even then Don Joaquin would not allow us to take any meals at home. In his large and elegant dwelling he had what he delighted to call a mesa elastica (elastic table). It could be extended until it reached clear across one end of the house, and he prided himself on the fact that it was impossible to overtax his hospitality.

Quite as representative of experiences in other localities is the following:

At Bais it was only a matter of twelve or fifteen miles from civilization to savagery, and the Monteses who inhabit the neighboring highlands bore rather an evil reputation. We were urged to take a guard of soldiers with us for "moral effect." This we declined to do. Our experience had been that . . . when we boldly entered a country supposed to be dangerous and went quietly about our business, the superstitious natives were, as a rule, not long in concluding that we had anting anting, i. e., charms which protected us from harm. . . . Evening found us alone among savages . . . the younger members of the family were innocent of any clothing whatever. Six formidable lances decorated the wall. Five hungry dogs wandered about . . . a flock of chickens roosted overhead. . . . We had no difficulty in winning the good will of our entertainers; but it proved necessary to proceed with caution in forming the acquaintance of our neighbors. We learned later that they at first believed we had come to poison their stream. After watching us for a time, however, they decided that we were merely harmless lunatics, with a mania for gathering little birds, snails and other worthless things. They delighted to encourage us in this innocent, and to them intensely amusing pursuit, especially when they discovered that we were crazy enough to exchange scarlet cloth, valuable brass rings, and priceless gems of colored glass for the forest plunder they brought us.

And how is this for hospitality? It was in Siquijor, in a wretched hut; the explorers had been conducting researches in the teeth of a howling gale.

Here I found Bourns, sitting on the floor eating parched Indian corn from the cob, while a shivering native crouched over the fire toasting another ear. . . . We heard a great commotion at the side of the house, and found that our host was disturbing his sitting hen to get us some eggs . . . We lay down and covered with all the clothing that the region afforded. The news of our arrival had spread, and there was an eye at every crevice in the hut. There were many expressions of pity for our condition.

The picture is not always so amiable. At Marinduque:

Our baggage having been landed at low tide, just above the water's edge, the proprietors of buffalo-carts thought they saw an opportunity to drive a sharp bargain with us, as we had a huge pile of boxes and chests, and the tide was just on the turn. They accordingly doubled their usual charge . . . refused to move us at any price; so we had to half kill ourselves in a frantic effort to carry our heavy chests to a dry place, and then stand guard over them all night.

Rude implements and the most primitive methods are employed in agriculture, natives in the interior being quite ignorant of even the existence of better ways.

Rice was being harvested in large quantities . . . The only implement used by the reapers was a small knife, with which they cut the heads of grain from the stalks one at a time. The rice was then trodden under the feet of women and girls, and the hull removed by pounding in wooden mortars. The winnowing was done with flat baskets, rice and chaff being tossed up in the air together, and the more rapidly falling grain caught on the basket, which was then jerked aside in time to allow some of the chaff to fall to the ground. The operation was repeated until only clean white kernals remained.

Of the war-like Moros of Mindanao, it is said:

There were certain kinds of work that Moros would not do at all, but what they did they did with vim. . . . The men are very skilful boatmen and sailors . . . We had only to float over the clear, quiet waters of our little bay, and point out the corals that we wanted. A diver would quietly slip over the side, swim down to the bottom with perfect ease, and if possible wrench one of the desired specimens free. If it did not yield, he would come back to the boat, get a machete, and, diving again, would hold the specimen with one hand and chop away with the other until he cut it loose. . . . While men and boys were diving for us, the women and girls were busy shedding cocoanut husks, and preparing for us a soft elastic fibre which we found to be a perfect material for packing delicate specimens.

Child-marriage exists, also polygamy. Among all tribes women are expected to do their full share of the work. Some of these nearly naked savages seemed able to do more:

The married woman . . . took the loads which had made all five of us grumble when we came up, put them into a blanket, tied its ends together and threw it on her back. Thus burdened, she began the ascent.

Religion varies with the locality. One tribe is mentioned as having no religious beliefs of any kind. The Mangyans have no word for "god," "gods," or "immortality." They say, "when a Mangyan is dead, he is dead!" Mohammedanism, paganism, superstitions of all kinds take the place of religion; the Catholicism of half-civilized natives and mestizos is often little more than a mixture of pagan superstitions and some Christian forms and ideas. Professor Worcester's book is full of abundant evidence that medical missionaries will find a fruitful field of operation in the Philippines. The Professor does not believe these people more capable of establishing and maintaining a government of their own than irresponsible children would be. He is now in the Philippines, and his knowledge of the islands and people is valuable to General Otis.

By per. The Macmillan Co.

A BIT OF THE WALL AND MOAT OF OLD MANILA

* The Philippine Islands and Their People. A record of personal observation and experience, with a short summary of the more important facts in the history of the archipelago. With map, appendix, index and illustrations. Pp. 529. Publishers, The Macmillan Co., Fifth avenue, New York.

The Treasure Myrtle Found

MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THERE is not much amiss. Only tension and fatigue. Entire rest for four months, said the great doctor positively. "That is at present my only prescription for you, Miss Myrtle."

The young girl looked dismayed.

"Do you mean, Dr. Ellison," she exclaimed, "that I am not to use my eyes at all, not the least little bit, neither to read, nor to sew, nor to write a letter, nor even to play my scales? Why, what shall I find to do? I thought you would fit me with glasses, and that I should go on just the same as ever, always busy. I haven't the gift of being idle and happy. Doctor Ellison, I shall be wretched, and so will be everybody else around me."

"Miss Myrtle," the doctor answered gravely, "I think I can enter into your feeling of surprise and distress. To a young woman four months seems like a large section of eternity. But we live just one day at a time, and the weeks will slip by before you know it. I advise you to go to the country, to some quiet place in the mountains, some little farmstead or other, where you can walk through fields and lanes, and sit down under trees, and gaze into depths of green leaves and over velvet carpets of green grass. Go to such a place as your father and I were raised in, away back in Vermont, and spend one summer of your life in silence and dreaming. The defect of the education of the period, Miss Myrtle, is that it is robbing our girls of repose, one of the finest and sweetest elements of character. You will have a splendid opportunity to acquire it, Myrtle Bennett's dark eyes had filled with tears as she listened to the doctor, but she bravely brushed them away, and even smiled faintly as she laid her shining gold piece on the table, and took his hand to say good-by.

"I am not to be afraid of losing my sight permanently?" she asked, pausing in the doorway of the office.

"You are to be afraid of nothing, Miss Myrtle. As the old prophet said ages ago, you are to trust and not be afraid. I will stake my reputation against your recovery, my child, if you have the strength of will to obey my orders literally for the period I have named. Remember, too, that the case might have been far worse. You are not ordered to lie still in a darkened room; you may go about freely. You must only refrain from anything like use of those tired-out eyes. I wouldn't be sorry to hear that you had taken to the nursery hours of bedtime and rising, by the way. Keep up your courage, Myrtle; you come of a stiff stock which has never shown the white feather. And, one word more, you are not to put a veil on, not once, all summer."

Myrtle passed out into the clear sunshine and down the street, a disappointed girl. She had so many plans for the season before her: plans of study, of practice, of enjoyment. It seemed to her as if four idle months stretched on and on, an interminable desert waste; how should she adjust her life to such a period of inaction. As she went slowly up the white marble steps of her father's house, and turned the latch-key, there came over her as never before a sense of the inadequacy of money. There was plenty of that in her purse and in her home, but millions would not rest her eyes. The doctor would have given precisely the same prescription to Jennie Wells, at that moment stitching in her mother's sewing-room.

Myrtle paused on the way to her mother, to say good-morning to Jennie, who was a favorite in the family. She noticed that Jennie was pale and haggard, but the wan face brightened as Myrtle spoke pleasantly.

"Jennie, do you know that Doctor Ellison is sending me off to be hidden in the country all summer long, and he has forbidden my reading and my embroidery, and everything I shall have to look at: I'm to be a drone for four months."

"That doesn t sound so dreadful, Miss Myrtle," said the weary little seamstress. "Besides, you can afford it. If a doctor told me that, I couldn't mind him, yet I'm sometimes so tired I'd almost like to lie down and die."

"You are a good deal too tired to sit at that machine another minute," was Myrtle's unexpected reply. "Shut it right up, and fold that work away until to-morrow. Now sit back in the rocking-chair and put your feet up and take a nap. Yes, you shall do as I say, Jennie, and I'll make it right with mamma. If I am to be forbidden to use my eyes in my own service, I must make it my business to do what I can with my mind's eyes, and they show me that you need a bit of Doctor Ellison's wisdom."

Cheered already by this demonstration of kindness to another, Myrtle went on to her mother, who put down her book and looked wistfully at her daughter as she pushed aside the heavy silken portiere, and coming forward, knelt down and laid her head in Mrs. Bennett's lap. The mother had not been quite unprepared for the oculist's opinion, and she had dreaded its effect on her impetuous child.

It was natural that Myrtle should cry a little, as she began to talk to Mrs. Bennett, but she pulled herself together resolutely before many minutes passed, and told her mother what she had to expect.

"My dear," said Mrs. Bennett, as the doctor and Jennie had said already, "It might be worse. You have no suffering to endure—you are merely condemned to partial inactivity, which is a cross for one of your temperament, but really, my darling, it may be a blessing to you in the end." Myrtle laughed.

"That's what the doctor said, mamma. Well, where shall I go?"

"To Aunt Lanissa's at Woolscombe Hollow, of course." Mrs. Bennett considered a moment. "I wish I could spend the summer there with with you, Myrtle, but your father must go abroad, and Milly and I must go, too. I wonder whether Doctor Ellison would not recommend travel for you. That would pass the time agreeably, and I could look after my girlie myself."

"To people like the Bennetts, going abroad is one of the incidents of every-day experience; they cross the ocean as if it was an inland ferry, and Myrtle already knew Paris and London as she did New York. So she said very naturally:

"It would be more of a change, mother dear, and I fancy more nearly what my eyes need to go to Vermont. Could I not take Jennie Wells along?"

"As your maid?"

"Not precisely. As my friend and companion. She could read to me, keep me mended up, and write my letters from dictation. Jennie has been with us all so much and is so refined and gentle that I would not mind her reading your letters and father's to me, when they came. I could pay her enough to let her leave home without loss to the people there, and such a summer would do her a world of good. Jennie looks very thin and peaked."

"Well, we'll think it over. It would be a boon to Jennie, and all the more so that she would be doing you a real service and paying her way. I think, on the whole, I would prefer to send Jennie to Aunt Lanissa's with you rather than a servant. The dear old lady is afraid of what she calls the upsetting ways of city servants."

* * *

In the sunny south chamber at Aunt Lanissa's old homestead Myrtle found herself before long, comfortably established for her rest-cure. Her room had six windows, white-curtained and ribbon-looped; a cool, gray matting covered the floor, and the old-fashioned four-poster and the solid mahogany furniture were not put out of countenance by the divan, with its dozen soft cushions, the pretty modern desk, and book-shelves, and the low willow rocker, which Mrs. Bennett had sent up from town for Myrtle's especial comfort. Although she might not read, there was no prohibition against her listening to reading, and Jennie Wells, who had been famishing for books her whole life, was more than happy to read aloud every day. The two girls wandered about in the woods, went to the meadow where the men were plowing or sowing as it might be, and grew strong and rosy in the fresh mountain air.

"There'll be nobody to play the organ in church this morning," said Aunt Lanissa, sorrowfully, one Sunday, as they [illegible] ill, and our singing is poor enough even [illegible] they'll not want to come again. City folks, anyway, like to take a vacation when they come to the country, so far as church going 's concerned. That wouldn't matter if our own girls and boys weren't so ready to follow their example."

"You haven't many young people in this community, anyway, Mrs. Birkett," said Jennie. "Folks seem to me to be [illegible] and places with weeds rioting up to the front doors around this countryside. My! When I think of the crowds on our Avenue on hot summer nights, and the little tenement rooms swarming with children, three and five and seven sleeping in one little bit of a cell, and then see these empty houses, it puzzles me. Things seem misfits somehow."

"Our young people go to town," said Aunt Lanissa, "as soon as they are their own masters. And as for those shut-up [illegible] pieces, for a house wears out awfully fast when it isn't lived in."

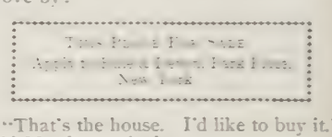
"I'll play the organ, Auntie," said Myrtle, who had been silent during the conversation. "I'll help the pastor out to that extent if I can do no more."

"Won't it hurt your eyes?" said Aunt Lanissa, anxiously.

"Why, no, dear. I can play with my eyes shut, if Mr. Sinclair will choose the old tunes that I know and tell me their order beforehand. And Jennie must sing in the choir to-day. Jennie sings like a thrush, Aunt Lanissa; she has a sweet, silvery voice, very true and firm. She hardly ever flats."

The buckboard was always promptly at the door on Sunday mornings, for Aunt Lanissa had four miles to drive to the church, and the colt, a frisky creature twelve years old, was supposed to take his time on the Lord's Day. It would have looked unseemly to drive fast had the colt been minded to trot, so Aunt Lanissa and her girls poked along over the quiet back road, bordered with pollard willows and maple trees, and soberly plodded through winding lanes where wild roses and violets bloomed. The sweet, clean, green country never looked purer and holier to Myrtle than on a Sunday morning, and she forgot that she could not read Bible or hymn-book while Nature's broad pages were spread open before her eyes.

On the way to church they passed one of the abandoned farms which had awakened Jennie's interest. It gave a touch of familiarity which rather jarred on the scene, when Jennie read aloud as they drove by:



"That's the house. I'd like to buy it," said Myrtle, musingly.

"Buy it!" exclaimed Aunt Lanissa in great amazement. "And pray what would you do with it when it was bought?"

"Oh," returned Myrtle, "I should have a party. I have always wanted to give a party all by myself. I might have a house party or a dozen house parties if I only owned that lovely old place."

"Why don't you then, Myrtle?" asked her practical aunt. "It can be bought cheap. But there—we're violating the fourth Commandment. The Lord's Day is no time for discussing worldly affairs. Jennie Wells, when we go home we'll drive by the other road and we won't be tempted. But we'll come back here to morrow, and I'll get the keys from the post office, Myrtle, and then we'll see." She gave Myrtle's hand a little motherly pat, and Myrtle's gray glove squeezed the black lace with a very loving pressure.

"THAT'S THE HOUSE. I'D LIKE TO BUY IT," SAID MYRTLE, MUSINGLY

* * *

Eben Piper was ill, and the minister had made up his mind that he could have no music; but when Myrtle offered herself as a substitute she was joyfully accepted, and never had the wheezy old organ been half so well played as on that Sunday morning, for music is always more dependent on the player than on the instrument, and Myrtle's gift was in her soul as well as in her finger-tips. As for Jennie, she could sing; and the congregation, following the lead of the two girls, poured out their hearts in "Old Hundred" and "Rock of Ages" and "Maitland," till the whole simple service was tender and sweet beyond its wont.

"One need not be altogether useless if she can play," said Myrtle on the way home.

"I am so glad to hear you say that," Aunt Lanissa answered "for I began to think you never meant to touch the piano again."

"Yes," added Jennie, "and Miss Myrtle is such a fine performer; she knows how to bring music out of anything from a banjo to an organ. She's just fine."

"To keep up one's music in a scientific way is a serious thing," said Myrtle, "and you must know I've been a real student, and have worked very hard. I've always felt a contempt for people who ran over the keys for mere pleasure, and played by ear, and cared for little catchy tunes, but since I've been idle and had more time to think I've somehow had it shown to me that its a good thing to give one's friends pleasure even if the music is not classical. I can play in the dark, and as I've said, with my eyes shut, and though it wouldn't satisfy a master, it may pass with you, dear Auntie."

"Yes, girlie, you'll sit right down when supper is over and give me 'Mary to the Saviour's tomb' and 'Naomi' and all my old favorites."

The next day dawned in great beauty, and early in the morning, armed with the keys of the house which had attracted Myrtle, the girls set out on a tour of investigation. Mrs. Birkett let them go alone; she and her handmaid, Martha Jane, were much too busy with housewifely duties on a bright Monday, to spend time in wandering far afield. But Myrtle did not care. In fact, she confided to Jennie that it was on the whole as well that Auntie had staid at home.

"For," she said "if I like this house, I'm going straight away to buy it. Aunty would wish me to take time to reflect."

"Won't you write over to your father, Miss Myrtle, for his consent?"

"Why, no, Jennie. I'll not use father's money. I'll take part of Cousin Grafton's legacy. That is my very own to do as I like with."

Jennie, whose pale face had rounded and filled in the country air, but whose purse had always been of the scantiest since she could recollect money as a part of life's necessities, thought for the twentieth time, how nice it was to be rich. But she did not think it with envy. She knew that Myrtle regarded her money as something to be used for others, and Myrtle was her friend.

"I'll not be foolish, Jennie," Myrtle assured her. "I'll see Squire Dill and let him make the best bargain he can for me, and look into the title and all that, and then if we do get the place, I'll have it cleaned and put in order at once, and our friends from the club shall be asked up here for an outing. And, Jennie, we might persuade your mother to come, and bring Rosy and Ned and the baby. Wouldn't that be a lark?"

Jennie's joy could not express itself in words.

"Oh! Miss Myrtle!" she gasped. "I've been half way to heaven ever since I left New York. If Mamsey and the others come here too, I'll be there entirely."

* * *

It proved possible for Myrtle to buy the house, and in an incredibly short space of time she had it renovated and painted, filled with suitable furniture, and still better, overflowing with guests. Two of her mother's old servants were installed to take care of it and so busy was she and so happy, she never thought that she was neither reading, nor writing, nor working in a single direction which taxed her eyes.

"My days never flew faster," Jennie wrote for her to the mother across the Atlantic. "When night comes I'm so sleepy that I'm off to dreamland the moment my head touches the pillow. Jennie is a very good little secretary. When I don't need her in this capacity any longer I shall look up another such position for her; it will pay better than sewing, and I tell her this is her training time. She is making the most of it."

The summer went by on wings, and Myrtle found that it brought her numerous chances for unselfish ministries. There was old Madame Faunce, who could move her arms and hands, but was paralyzed from the waist down, and obliged to sit in a reclining chair from morning till night. People called her querulous and sharp-tongued, but Myrtle found her an entertaining companion, when she had established the habit of a daily visit, and could beguile the old gentlewoman into describing her early life in Paris.

The minister's wife had a nursery full of children; their golden heads were like steps, and the little mother grew very weary sometimes with all she had to do, and the care of the minister and half the care of the parish besides. Myrtle would take her aunt's old rockaway, and a hamper of picnic dainties, and she and Jennie and the colt and the parsonage brood would go off to the woods for a whole day, leaving the mother to rest and stillness, and an hour or two to read in peace, or drive with her husband to some out-of-the-way farmhouse on the edge of nowhere in particular.

* * *

When Myrtle returned to New York in the autumn, and went to see her doctor, he looked at her beamingly.

"Young lady," he said, "you are perfectly well. Your eyes have had a rest cure. And I would not be surprised if while they were having it you had discovered that hidden treasure which in this generation most of us are forever seeking in vain."

"What can you mean?" inquired Myrtle, puzzled.

"My dear Miss Myrtle, I mean this, time enough to live; most of us are spendthrifts of time; it is all gone while we are getting ready for our lives. You have had time to be good, and to be happy. Don't lose the fine art, my child, since you have had the good fortune to gain it."

Margaret E. Sangster

Mothers' Cares

Mother, with your brood at night,
Safe within your tender care;
Every golden head in sight,
Not a darling missing there.
Haply you are very tired,
Sometimes heavy-hearted, too;
Just the things you most desired
Were not yours this day to do.
Troubles seem to come in troops,
Wearily your prayers are said;
'Neath your load your courage droops
As you drag yourself to bed.

Mother, count these happy days,
Fill them not with dole and fret;
Round them out with ceaseless praise,
God's great love is on you set.
When the little lads are still
Sheltered in your guardian care;
Yours to mould them as you will,
Not a darling missing there.
When the lads are bearded men,
When the little maids have grown
And the children leave you, then
Making homes their very own;

When you cannot tell at night
Where your best beloved are,
East and West and out of sight,
O'er the wide world scattered far;
One a sailor on the wave,
One a soldier in the strife,
One low lying in the grave,
Worsted one in woes of life—

Mother, then your heart may ache;
Happy days you're spending now,
When the little frocks you make,
Part the ringlets on each brow,
Hear the little daily tasks,
Soothe the passing childish grief
That of mother ever asks,
Sure to find, the sweet relief.
Thank the dear Lord when you pray,
For the crowding nursery brood
Are your own and his to-day!
"Praise the Lord for he is good!"

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A Parable of a Letter-Box

By Pastor Thomas Spurgeon

THERE is one way in which it is possible for the members of church and congregation to help the preacher, which I fear is falling somewhat into disuse. Time was when the conversation after the service was about the sacred theme rather than concerning the speaker, the singing and the fashions. Yet, thank God, the good old custom has not quite died out. Still there are some to be found who make it their business to apply and follow up the message.

Passing a pillar-letter-box recently I happened to notice that a letter had become fixed in the aperture. I suppose that he who thought to mail it was in so great a hurry that he could not tarry to see if his note dropped in. It was only half mailed, and had the next comer been of thievish propensities he might readily have abstracted it, appropriating the stamp and contents. I warrant you that if it had thus been prevented from reaching its destination, the correspondent would have laid all the blame on the unfortunate post office authorities. The fault, it would appear, is always theirs, not ours. I had a certain satisfaction in giving that letter a push—the slightest touch sufficed—and in hearing it fall into the receptacle below. If it miscarried anywhere I could at least be sure that it was mailed properly.

It has occurred to me that what I did for the letter, you hearers of the word might do for the sermon. Much of our preaching is, alas, faulty as to application. We do not drive it home. In that case it is useless. It must reach the heart to be of any service. If it affects the ear only, how easily it can be abstracted altogether. Sermons are needed nowadays that stir the soul and prick the heart and arouse the conscience. Of eartickers we have enough and to spare. But if the preacher fails to thrust the truth right in, perhaps some of the congregation can supply his lack of service. A word will sometimes suffice. An inquiry may serve the purpose. It gave me real pleasure to help that letter toward its destination, though it was none of mine. What joy it brings to the Christian worker to clinch the nail the preacher has been driving! On the way home from a meeting a friend can say a word which may prove to be a coup-de-grace. Say it then! Pray do not pass on without heed, or the next comer may be a thief, and snatch away the word. You will be surprised how little is needed to complete the impression. The word is nigh them, even in their mouth. Ask them a pointed question, tell them your own experience, indicate your personal interest in them, and the word which has lingered mid-way will reach the heart. Oh, blessed "word of faith which we preach"! God help us to urge it home on every unsaved soul.

One thing I discovered early in my ministry. How glad I am that I did. Some of those who seem most unconcerned are really quite the reverse. They wouldn't be thought "anxious" for the world, so they use the disguise of flippancy. It is mere bravado for the most part. They will be glad of a word by the way, even if they do not seem so. They often blame Christians for not addressing them personally, though it must be confessed they do their best to discourage them from attempting it. The utterances of the Lord's servant in public have not yet gone out of the other ear, so now is your opportunity to press them into the heart. The Lord will give you the thought and the tact if you will ask and trust.

Whatever we do, we must not, on the return from worship, say aught that will hinder the progress of the truth. This would be thieving indeed. If we cannot push the letter in, pray do not let us take it out. Silence is better than speech in such a case. But, if the truth be told, it must be admitted that after-service conversation with many is the reverse of helpful. I have known even the ministers themselves undo their pulpit influence by their private conversation.

I am not pleading for sanctimonious talk but I do urge God's people to see to it that nothing is said or done that will mar the mailing of God's letters. The sermon is not "done" when the book is closed, and the church doors are shut. Oh no. then it is that the sermon begins to be "done." Will my readers resolve that henceforth the hallowed hour and its holy influences shall not cease so abruptly.

Let them be continued while walking or driving from the sanctuary, and indeed for many an hour beyond. My late dear father used to say that he was as the sportsman who shot the birds, but that his faithful members were the retrievers who brought back the wounded game. The gun is of little use without the dogs. Oh that our churches had many such retrievers! Will you, my friend, God helping you, be one?

I have thought, too, that this half-mailing is like much of our praying. The petition is all that could be desired, as presumably that letter was — carefully worded, neatly folded, possibly highly-scented and duly addressed. But when it came to be presented, this was done half-heartedly. We are generally in far too much of a hurry. We cannot stay to urge prevailing pleas, or to await the assurance that our prayers are heard. We get as used to praying as we do to mailing our letters, and, truth to tell, we are inclined to be hurried and careless over both. Moreover, when we fail to receive a reply, we blame not ourselves, but God. Oh, for more directness in public prayer! A long letter is no good if it does not drop into the box, and a long prayer is worse than waste of time if it fails to stir the hearts of those who try to follow it, and, if lacking plea and power, it does not reach the throne.

Perhaps the next leader of our devotions will, as he mails his letter, push the last one in. I mean that I have known a prayer-meeting saved by a short, pointed, homely prayer towards the close. The other petitions were all that could be desired, only they seemed to lack the one thing that the last possessed, and the force of it seemed to carry the rest along, too.

Best of all is it to know that when we fail to pray aright the Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and our ever-pleading Jesus will see our petitions safe to the throne. If at any time our prayers seem to (may I say it?) "stick"—ah, me! I know the feeling all too well—our loving Saviour will take our case in hand. He watches all the letter-boxes. He is wherever prayer is offered. Nor will he let one sincere desire come short. How well this is for us, in the rush and turmoil of this busy life!

The Nebraska Prairie Church Fund

Deep interest is being shown in the meetings Mr. Baylis is holding in the different churches in New York and vicinity for the purpose of raising funds to build a church in the prairie town of Imperial, Neb. Many enjoy the gatherings and are refreshed in spirit by the earnest, plain Gospel message delivered by this preacher from the prairies. The following additional contributions to the work have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Previously acknowledged
R. M. P., Newark	5 00
Mr. Gleason	1 00
Contribution First Cong. Church, E. 166th St.	7 00
Contribution Pilgrim Cong. Church, Montclair, N. J.	12 20
Contribution First Baptist Church, New Brighton, N. Y.	3 50
Mrs. Robert T. Lees	1 00
Mrs. Mary Gunderson	2 00
J. C. Bain	1 00
Nemo, Dansville	1 00
Total	$97 95

Bad-Tempered People

BY AMELIA E. BARR

IF it be true that cheerfulness is the sunshine of the home, then bad temper is its gloom and gust and tempest, as any one knows who has seen an angry man or woman go through its rooms, clashing every door behind them. The remarkable thing is, that some pride themselves on their quick tempers, and expect to have innumerable impertinences and impositions forgiven, because "they lose their temper so easily;" the fact being that they do not lose, but exchange it for whatever at the time they happen to want. They lose their temper in the home that they may gain every other persons' rights and comforts. They lose it in the world, in order that extra hours, and disagreeable dunning and humiliating asking for favors, may not be assigned to them. They are always "owing it to themselves" to fly in a passion about something—to tell unpleasant truths that do no good—to send inoffensive persons out of their presence, depressed and uncomfortable. The meanness of this disposition is proved by the fact that it rarely shows itself to a superior. The bad-tempered person knows how to control himself, in the presence of those richer, more bad tempered, or physically stronger than themselves.

In family life it is particularly unjust that one member of it should not only make all the others submit to their whims, but also by their native surliness render that submission as disagreeable as possible. And whether they understand it or not, they are an offense to the universal feeling of kindred and brotherhood, and no one is really loyal to them. We have a striking example of this in the case of Nabal, a churl infamous for all time. His own household called him "such a son of Belial that a man cannot speak to him," and his wife entreats David not to regard his insolent temper, "for as his name is so is he. Nabal is his name, and folly is with him."

HOWEVER, men are not the only sinners in this respect. There is probably a shrew for every churl—shrill voiced, sharp-tempered women, ready to take fire at the smallest spark and scold at all creation. Such women are often excellent housekeepers; they have even strong affections, and at a pinch can heroically rise to every occasion of self-sacrifice. But "pinches" come but seldom; and the need for comfort, and peace, and happiness is an every-day craving. If they would only consider that Biblical proverb about the dinner of herbs, and the stalled ox, it might help them to understand why their husbands go to saloons and club houses at night, and their children keep as much away from home as possible, excusing themselves on the ground that "mamma is always nagging, and making every one miserable."

Bad temper has many forms. It may be aggressive, petulant, grumbling, violent, sullen, melancholly and sulky; but all these forms, unfortunately, find their highest development in the home, and round the family table. They cannot spread themselves long in the world without opposition; but in the home they have special toleration and particular opportunities. For the bad-tempered person knows just how and where to hurt—knows exactly what particular raw on each member he can most effectually strike—and what apparently innocent remark will in every case be most cutting.

TO BE courteous at home! That is the great household virtue, but the bad-tempered never reach it. They think it a kind of humbug, and the very highest of their attempts to be agreeable usually takes the form of chaff. But "chaff," to fine natures, is the most intolerable kind of pleasantry; not only for itself, but because it always ends in rudeness, quarreling, and the worst kind of personal abuse. In the market-place a man finds there is a limit to "chaffing," but in the home it is not apt to be openly reproved until it ends in open impertinence and quarreling.

If bad-tempered people would only reflect on the kind of submission rendered them, they would feel little pride in their power. It is very near kin to that unreasonable "giving way" which may be observed between the principal of an insane asylum and his patients. He does not contradict their most absurd views, nor oppose their most foolish wishes, simply because it is easier and safer to let them assert themselves than to control their maniacal violence. So also, lovers of domestic peace let the high-tempered have their way, rather than go through a scene or have a family row.

BUT THIS is a false and immoral position in every way, and a noble nature would feel such concessions to be highly humiliating. No one is justified in giving way to unreasonable temper. Such exhibitions ought to be heroically treated, and a healthy explosion of just indignation at their selfish, irrational conduct is frequently followed by the happiest results. Provoked by a temper which has worn out patience, and imposed upon good nature beyond further endurance, it is well "to have your say out" in protest against the wrong; remember that "having our say" is an affair of the heart—a thing done hastily, as David did under provocation—a very different expression of feeling from "speaking our mind," which is an affair of the head, and which is usually the result of a deliberate intention to say something spiteful or disagreeable.

In this way we may be lawfully angry and sin not. Indeed, there are few people who have not cause to regret the occasions when they should have shown anger and did not do so. Such wrongs to our own moral respect leave forever in the memory a sense of shame and chagrin, at our want of the necessary righteous courage to express our indignation at the proper time.

Of great deeds in the great emergencies of life, little account is to be made, it is the great, patient, daily life that tells—the being good at home! Many a man faithful in the sanctuary, and blameless in the world, is a stumbling block and a rock of offence in his own household. The temper he rules in the world, rules him at home; and though he pays all his tithes of mint, anise, and cumin to church and society, he is worse than a publican to his own family.

WITH WOMEN, especially, the small things relating temper make up their moral probation. They have rare opportunities for any great trial of their faith or fortitude, but every hour they can cultivate strength and beauty of character in the good-tempered bearing of the small trials that constantly assail them—sickly, fretful children; impertinent, lazy servants; thoughtless, irregular husbands; headaches, weariness, all the little pains and limitations incident to their sex and condition. These are "her warfare," and because it has been laid upon her, she must accomplish it without shrouding her home in gloom, or making its atmosphere electrical with impatience and irritability.

There is a popular idea that good temper belongs to rather inferior minds, and that a "high temper" is indicative of some sort of superiority. Nothing could be more untrue. The great men and women of the world have been noticeably good-tempered. Shakespeare, Bacon, Julius Cæsar, Charlemagne, Horace, Chaucer, Montaigne, Goethe, Raphael, Sir Walter Scott, only indicate a host behind them. That Carlyle was always grumbling and scolding, in spite of being a philosopher, and "having a word in him," and the only sane man among millions of fools, is only the exception that proves the rule. Good temper is a characteristic of great mental power; and those who think they show some intellectual superiority by unkind, ill-natured, sarcastic views are far mistaken. No people are so tolerant as really great men and women; for tolerance has its source in the heart, and not in the head.

APART from that divine assistance we may all have, there are some personal helps to good temper we should not neglect; for what good soldier is negligent because he knows his leader to be invincible? and a few evident ones I submit to those who are waging war against some dumb, sullen, or passionate devil.

First—Sleep well every night, and in pure. Don't eat anything or wear anything to-day.

Second—Few people regard words in just the same sense. Remarks taken for imports, indeed are often ignorant speaking with an angry tongue.

Third—There is a vast difference in temperaments. Some persons keep a [illegible] others have a thing of every [illegible] Some people's nerves are [illegible] touch; others lie right on the surface, and quiver to every word and look. If such people's feelings can not be measured with the slow, persistent injury of the man insensible to outside influences.

Fourth—Rise early. A late riser is sure to be irritable. He gets up with a sense of his day's work being belated, and is out of temper with himself before he comes in contact with others.

Fifth—Indigestion breeds bad temper. A man suffering the pangs of an exhausted [illegible] is safe for [illegible] as a sick and penitent drunkard.

Sixth—Shut your house door on all outside grievances. Never bring the quarrels of the market-place to the fireside.

IF WE have good temper naturally, we are very happy. If it is to cultivate, surely no sacrifice is more acceptable to the God who wishes our happiness than that of a proud, passionate nature "rocking itself to rest" in obedience to the whispers of His Spirit or the written commands of His law.

Missionaries in Samoa

The report that the London Missionary Society is taking an active part in the troubles in Samoa on the side of Tanu is authoritatively contradicted. The [illegible] is that its medical missionaries have treated the wounded on both sides and at latest reports the inhabitants were crowding [illegible] are thankful for the kindness they have received.

ROYAL
Baking Powder
Makes wholesome food. No alum.

Good To Eat
Swift's perfect food products are made with care and under U.S. Government supervision, and handled in cleanliness—Guaranteed of highest grade and of positive purity.
Swifts Premium Hams
Swift's Premium Breakfast Bacon
Swift's Silver Leaf Lard
Swift's Beef Extract
Swift's Jersey Butterine
Swift's Cotosuet
Sold everywhere
Swift and Company, Chicago
Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, St. Joseph, St. Paul

BICYCLE FREE OR CASH TO ANY ONE distributing my soaps, etc. I trust you. F. Parker, 277 E. Madison St. Chicago, Ill.

Beyond Comparison the Value of Electric Steel Wheels for Vehicles. All about them in free catalogue. Electric Wheel Co., Quincy, Ill.

"The Mill Cannot Grind with Water That's Past."

This is what a fagged out, tearful little woman said in telling her cares and weaknesses. Her friend encouraged by telling of a relative who had just such troubles and was cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

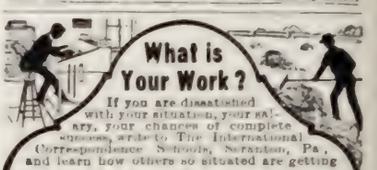
The little woman now has tears of joy, for she took Hood's, which put her blood in prime order, and she lives on the strength of the present instead of worrying about that of the past.

Neuralgia—"I had dreadful neuralgia, miserable for months. Neighbors told me to use Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cured me perfectly." MRS. FRED TURNER, Barre, Vt.

Erysipelas—"My little girl is now fat and healthy on account of Hood's Sarsaparilla curing her of erysipelas and eczema." MRS. H. O. WHEATLEY, Port Chester, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills, the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.



What is Your Work?
If you are dissatisfied with your situation, your salary, your chances of complete success, write to The International Correspondence Schools, Scranton, Pa., and learn how others so situated are getting
An Education by Mail
Students in the courses of Mechanical or Electrical Engineering, Architecture, or any of the Civil Engineering Courses are soon qualified for salaried draftsmen's room positions. Write for pamphlets.
The International Correspondence Schools, Box 861 Scranton, Pa.

Boys and Girls

We [illegible] away watches, cameras, solid gold rings, sporting goods, musical instruments, [illegible] bicycles and

SOLID GOLD PENS FREE.

Pen is 14k gold, iridium pointed, [illegible] and is fastened to a handsome gilt holder, [illegible] We send pen and holder free and postpaid as premium for selling 15 packages of Royal English Ink Powder at 10c each. Every package makes 20 ounces of fine ink. We need no money, send your name and address and we will forward you 15 packages with premium list and full instructions. When you sell the Ink Powder send us the money and we will forward your premium. This is no catch offer. We trust you. Don't miss this grand opportunity. Write for the goods today. Address Imperial Ink Concern, 45 Adams St. Oak Park, Ill.

Put away your Stove

Damp cellars, leaky attics or mouldy store rooms will not affect your stove and stove pipe and the nickel work will not tarnish, if you use a thin coating of Rustless Oleite upon them before you put them away.
FOR THE SUMMER.
It makes rusting and tarnishing impossible. Order of your dealer, or by mail, 25c. American Oleite Co., Box 32 St. Louis, Mo.

PERFECTION CAKE TIN—has a removable bottom which enables you to remove without breaking. The most delicate cake or bread from the bottom of greased without [illegible] cutter. We make [illegible] square and oblong. Put up in neat self-opening box. Sent postpaid on receipt of retail price, 20c. We are the largest manufacturers of Pure Aluminum, Scotch Granite and Tin Ware [illegible] AGENTS, write for [illegible] our best selling [illegible] Catalogue sent free. All goods guaranteed to give satisfaction. Address Dept. T HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, 25 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

FREE TO AGENTS

NEW IDEAL CAKE SPOON will stir Cake or mix Bread in ½ time. Used two ways. Sells for 15 cts. Keeper mortgage paper for agents. Big Profits. Send 10 cts for postage and [illegible] Aluminum, Silverware etc. G. Vining Novelty Works, 66 Wabash Av., Chicago.

Chambard's Tea, the most popular family medicine in France for biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, swelling of the stomach, congestions, eczema. The most agreeable and best purgative. Box 35 cents by mail. Legoll's Pharmacy, 286 7th Ave., N. Y., and leading druggists.

SCIENTIFIC KITES
LATEST CRAZE: ANYBODY CAN FLY THEM
SEND STAMP FOR 16 PAGE CAT.
E. I. HORSMAN 380 BROADWAY, N.Y.

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES: no experience needed; position permanent; self seller. PEASE MFG. CO., P.O. Box A, Cincinnati, O

Good Causes Helped

The following sums have been contributed by our readers for the support of the worthy causes mentioned below:

Bethesda Home.

Prev. ack	$59 50
Abby Galloway	1 00
W R Spaulding	1 00
Mrs C Finch	2 00
Miss Ida Lawrence	3 00
Augusta Lawrence	3 00
Mrs T A Murray	2 00
J A W, Tidioute	5 00
C M G, Roanoke	1 00
Jane Hope	5 00
Total	$82 50

Philafrican League.

Prev. ack	$50 50
A friend of Missions	20 00
Simon A Hershey	2 00
Total	$72 50

Door of Hope.

Prev. ack	$7 00
Tenth Legionary, N Y City	2 00
A friend, Ch	3 00
Mrs E Wilkinson	1 00
Jane Hope	5 00
Total	$18 00

Foreign Missions.

Prev. ack	$43 00
A F Richmond	1 00
Friend, Asbury Park	10 00
Total	$54 00

Good Samaritan Home.

Prev. ack	$7 00
J A W, Tidioute	5 00
Jane Hope	5 00
Total	$17 00

Any Good Cause.

Prev. ack	$53 40
C F Ward	50
Mrs J F Brown	2 00
Mrs E H Platt	35
John Hughes, Jr	50
Mrs C S Mann	50
Miss Nancy Scobee	50
Mrs Ella Roe	50
Friend, Asbury Park	10 00
M G Heath	50
Marry McKibben	1 10
A friend and subr, Aeushnet	50
Thank Offering, E Shelburne	5 00
Total	$75 35

Home Missions.

Prev. ack	$26 00
Tenth Legionary, N Y City	1 00
Total	$27 00

Mrs. Rose H. Lathrop.

Prev. ack	$11 50
Mrs N McVicar	3 00
Jane Hope	5 00
Total	$19 50

Jerry McAuley Mission.

Prev. ack	$4 00
Tenth Legionary, N Y City	2 00
Mrs Sarah Geale	2 50
Jane Hope	5 00
Total	$13 50

Mayesville Institute.

Prev. ack	$175 00
Be Ready Circle of K D, Chappaqua	5 00
Jane Hope	5 00
Total	$185 00

Miss Emma Nason's work

Prev. ack	$2 00
Mrs C Finch	1 00
Total	$3 00

Rev. R.H. Nassau, M.D.

A friend of Missions	$10 00
Lilly, Brattleboro	25
Total	$10 25

Pres. Foreign Missions.

Prev. ack	$2 50
Jane Hope	10 00
Total	$12 50

Christian Herald S. S. Missionary.

Prev. ack	$15 00
J McClun	1 00
A friend, Ch	4 00
Total	$20 00

St. Andrew's Coffee Stands.

Jane Hope	$5 00

Clinton St. Settlement.

Prev. ack	$18 00
Mrs C Finch	1 00
From a Scotch woman	5 00
A friend, Hanover	2 00
C M G, Roanoke	4 00
Mrs Julia A Miller	3 00
Total	$33 00

Gospel Work in Cuba.

Prev. ack	$38 20
P H H, Dover	2 00
J E Goldthorp	5 00
Mrs I S Stephens	50
A friend, Ch	5 00
J U K, Belleville	2 25
Total	$52 95

Dr. Currie's African Mission.

Prev. ack	$10 00
A friend of Missions	10 00
Subr, Dresden	1 00
Total	$21 00

Dr. Yoseph's Persian Work.

Prev. ack	$6 00
M P, Florence	50
Total	$6 50

Miss Annie Taylor (Miss'y in Tibet).

Prev. ack	$3 50
M P, Florence	50
H M, Florida	1 00
Total	$5 00

Cremorne Mission.

Prev. ack	$1 00
Mrs Sarah Geale	2 50
Total	$3 50

Orphan Relief in India.

Somerville Y P S C E, Germantown	$15 00

Lincoln Memorial University.

Prev ack	$12 00
C Germann	1 00
Gid Cummings	1 00
M W Brooks	3 00
J Cronk	1 00
Mr & Mrs W W Fairbanks	5 00
Mrs Elizabeth Cross	2 00
Mrs L E B, Unionf'n	2 00
Geo B & E La Mira Hayward	1 00
Henry Keil	1 00
Mrs Peter Burdewick	1 00
Mrs Dr Wakelee	5 00
James Bonney	1 00
Jane Hope	5 00
Total	$41 00

Florence Mission.

Prev. ack	$21 00
Mrs Sarah Geale	2 50
Jane Hope	5 00
Total	$28 50

School for Syrian Girls.

Prev. ack	$5 00
Abby Galloway	1 00
—, Seneca	1 00
Total	$7 00

Missionary in Africa (Mary Sharp).

Prev. ack	$10 50
A friend of Missions	10 00
Total	$20 50

Miss Reed's Mission to Lepers.

Prev. ack	$10 00
A friend, Ch	3 00
Two constant readers, Creston	5 00
Total	$18 00

Anna C. Ruddy's Kindergarten.

Subr, Dresden	$1 00

Gospel in Philippines.

Prev. ack	$15 00
Cora Rouillard	1 00
Eudora Barber	1 00
A friend, Ch	5 00
Total	$22 00

Armenian Fund.

Prev. ack	$166 03
—, Findlay	5 00
M P, Florence	1 00
Mrs Ira Willsey	50
Mary Freeman	1 00
J S Massett & wife	5 00
Mrs A W Friend	3 00
Cora Rouillard	1 00
Mrs A J Willing	1 00
Mrs Olive Seaton	40
Mrs Robert Wilcox	1 00
Miss S E Williamson	1 50
Miss Bertha Deuble	50
Sabula Nursery	2 00
M De—, Bridgeport	1 00
Mother & Daughter, Chanute	1 50
Subr, Dresden	1 00
T J Epps	1 00
M M C, Wilton	2 00
Mrs D Y Hallock	5 00
Ladies' Aid Soc, Meyersville	5 00
—, Seneca	1 00
Miss Elizabeth Innis	5 00
Simon A Hershey	1 00
Total	$212.43

A Prayer-Meeting in Hell

An aged minister, writes Mr. Moody, fancied he had committed the unpardonable sin. At last, after much conflict, he submitted to what he mistakably considered was the will of God for him to be lost. Then something within him whispered:

"Suppose there is a hell for you, what would you, with your disposition and habits, do there?"

The quick answer was: "I would set up a prayer-meeting," and with the words came the light of God to show him the absurdity of it all. The fact that one fears that he has committed this sin, is the surest proof that he has not.

TWO GOOD ARTICLES FOR YOUNG MEN

MURAT HALSTEAD

The Profession of the Press

Education by it and for it

By MURAT HALSTEAD

How MICHAEL CUDAHY

The Great Western Packing King

Made His First $1000

ROBERT BARR

In his "Travels and Troubles in the Orient" (second paper), tells how an intrepid American missionary postponed his execution day after day by a novel Arabian Nights' entertainment.

In this week's issue of

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Founded A. D. 1728 by Benj. Franklin

(OF PHILADELPHIA)

Date of Saturday, May 20

5 Cents Ask Your Newsman to Deliver it Regularly. 5 Cents

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

Price $5.00

Reclining Go-Cart

Allows baby to lie down and take a nap instead of sitting up all the time as in other go-carts. Style of cut, made of fine rattan, with best running gear. Price $5.00. Handsome lap-robe free if this paper is mentioned.

FINE RATTAN BABY COACH

Price $0.75

With velour, kremlin, cordu roy or silk plush upholstering, best quality running-gear and fine parasol. Price $9.75. Handsome lace cover free to all mentioning this paper.

We are headquarters for Go-Carts, Baby Carriages, Invalid and Reclining Chairs. If your dealer does not sell our goods, we will ship direct from the factory and prepay freight to the Mississippi. Send for catalogue, mentioning the one wanted. Representatives wanted.

PHILADELPHIA BABY CARRIAGE FACTORY,

713 & 715 Spring Garden Street, Philadelphia.

Children's Day Services for the Sunday School.

Blossom Time contains a patriotic song of peace, motion song, recitations and resp. scripture reading.

Sunshine and Song contains a stirring flag song a motion song, an emblematic recitation, etc. Enclose 10 cents for samples of our three latest services.

Columbia, a patriotic juvenile cantata, very brilliant, price 30 cts. The May issue of The Church Choir contains Children's Day and Memorial Anthems, sample copy free to choristers.

GEO. F. ROSCHE & CO.

Chicago, 38 Randolph st. New York, 22 N. Williams st.

615,000

Sacred Songs No. 1

ALREADY SOLD.

Music Edition, $25 per 100. Sample, 20 cents, by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. New York. Chicago.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs, S. S. and every good purpose. Books, Sheet Music, Octavos, Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments, New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free.

FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

"BIBI." (Solo). Detroit '99 March dedicated to Christian Endeavorers 50c. each. Send 15c. for one, or 25c. for both and obtain free particulars of offer of $35. for words for a Song and titles. Agents wanted. Smithdeal Music Co., Columbia, S. C.

HEMET LANDS

The Hemet Lands, with abundance of water, are located at Hemet, 95 miles from Los Angeles.

... Garden Spot of California ...

Soil and climate suitable to the cultivation of either citrus or deciduous trees. A greater variety of profitable products can be grown here than in any other portion of the State. Good market. Educational and religious advantages. Will send ... Free to Any Address ...

our large illustrated pamphlet giving reliable, instructive, interesting facts and figures about good California homes. lands in tracts to suit, on easy payments. Title perfect. Address

HEMET LAND COMPANY,

Dept. F. Hemet, Riverside Co., Cal.

$3.00 to $10.00 a day can be easily made working for me. People preferred who can furnish their own team. Applicants must furnish satisfactory reference as to character and standing. B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

$18.00 a Week and expenses to commercial men. Permanent position. Also 1 Advertising and Manager can find profitable employment at part time. Give references. R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

Established in Heart

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for May 28. Rom. 1 : 11, 12; Ps. 112 : 1-10

TRUE to the underlying principle of all Bible teaching, both the Psalmist and the Apostle lay stress on the need of the heart being right, rather than on the conduct. Their insight of human nature convinced them that when the heart of man was right—or established, or steadfast, as they phrase it—the conduct was sure to be right. Christ taught the same doctrine, and showed that the spring of evil was within, and that not until it was cleansed and purified and strengthened, could there be assurance of a really righteous life. There might be rigid formalism and the most punctilious observance of rites and ceremonies, the careful giving of a tenth to God, the strictest observance to the minutest points of the law, while the heart was corrupt. There were men then, as now, like white-washed sepulchres, whose moral life was irreproachable, yet who were mean and selfish and ungodly in their nature. The vital springs of life of which the heart is the type, have to be attuned to God's nature before we can be sure of getting the true godly life in the world. The Pharisee, the elder son in the Parable of the Prodigal Son, who could say, "Neither transgressed I thy commandment at any time;" the priest and the Levite in the Parable of the Good Samaritan, are all instances of outward goodness covering inward ungodliness.

The heart, or inward nature, being changed, or rightened, needs to become established, or steadfast, as when a tree spreads its roots in the earth, so that, though the winds may blow and the storms beat upon it, it is not uprooted. In the present day there is urgent need of this characteristic. In the press, on the platform and even from the pulpit come utterances which are liable to disturb a faith that is not well-grounded. We are told that certain facts which we had been led to believe, are merely myths, that certain doctrines which we had regarded as essential, are not scriptural and the very Scriptures themselves are mixed with human mistakes, scientific and literary. The young Christian hearing these things, is apt to ask, "are there none of my beliefs true?" "Is there nothing certain?" Happy is he then if, looking back on his own experience, he can say, like the blind man whose sight was restored: "Whether these things be so or not, one thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." The change of heart cannot be gainsaid. He who has quitted his sins, who seeks God, who desires to be holy, who longs to help others, and in all things to be like Christ—such an one knows that there is power in Christianity and that whatsoever theories or doctrines may be impugned, the divine life in the soul is a fact which has transformed his nature. His heart is established.

Then, too, he is unaffected by his environment. Sometimes a Christian is placed, in family or business life, in a position which is extremely trying to his disposition. He may be cruelly misunderstood, he may be slandered, he may be unjustly blamed, he may be injured and wronged in a hundred ways, but if his heart is steadfast leaning upon God, none of these things move him. Looking back he may remember a time when in such circumstances he would have been harassed and distressed beyond measure, when he would have been angry and perhaps have retaliated, but now though possibly the outer surface may be momentarily ruffled, there is below, a sweet peace that the storm does not reach. Or it may be that adversity comes upon him, he loses his property by the fraudulence of some one whom he trusted, or by robbery, or by fire and the tempter whispers to him that God has not taken care of his child. Perhaps sickness comes, too, and he seems beset on all hands, like Job. Then we learn whether his heart is really established, whether he is steadfast, trusting in God. It must please God very much if in such hours of darkness, his child can cry triumphantly: "though I am slain yet will I trust in him. I know in whom I have believed." But only when the heart is established is the Christian prepared for such experiences.

Consecration of Holy Trinity

The formal consecration of Holy Trinity took place on May 7, Bishop Potter officiating. The Bishop was assisted by a large number of clergy, and the occasion was very impressive. Our readers recalling the history which has been given in these columns of this magnificent edifice and St. Christopher's House adjoining it, will remember that the building and the ground covered by them representing $500,000, are gifts of Miss Serena Rhinelander, to the parish of St. James P. E. Church, of which Rev. E. Walpole Warren is rector. Rev. James V. Chalmers is vicar of the new church. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander formally presented the instrument of donation; and William Rhinelander Stewart, the articles of agreement providing for the conveyance of the church to the rector, wardens and vestrymen of St. James parish. Dr. Warren read resolutions adopted by the rector, church wardens and vestrymen of St. James, thanking Miss Rhinelander for her munificent gift, and Mr. William Rhinelander Stewart for his faithful services in managing the business connected with the erection of the buildings. Dr. Huntingdon, of Grace Church, preached the sermon. Miss Rhinelander and other members of the Rhinelander family were present. The church is a memorial to her father and grandfather.

Work for the Children

A Missionary Explains How Our Children's Home Helps to Build Up Her Sunday School

A STRANGER in New York would be astounded, if he went the rounds with a missionary engaged in night work, at the great number of children on the streets after hours when little ones are ordinarily abed. This is not necessarily because of depravity. It is because the overcrowded rooms in which they live become more and more uncomfortable as hot weather approaches. The roofs, the fire-escapes, the sidewalks, streets, alleys and courts are thronged with people seeking better air to breathe than they can find in their stuffy rooms. Children stay out later and later. Mothers knowing what poor comfort home offers, hate to call them in; sometimes they are almost too tired and sick to notice how the moments pass. In other cases, mother is dead, father drinks, nobody cares. The kindly missionaries go about, speaking to the children as opportunity offers, and inducing them by all the arguments they can think of to get them interested in coming to the mission, the Gospel Settlement and the Sunday School. A missionary, who yearly presents a number of small candidates for our Children's Home, came in recently with her usual list of names and said:

The good readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who help us to have Christmas trees and summer homes for tenement children, cannot realize as missionaries do what an all-the-year-round power for saving children they put into our hands. The promise of a Christmas tree, or an outing at a country home draws into the Sunday School many a child who might not respond to higher appeals, and thus we have an opportunity to influence him and to help his hard working parent or mother to make him aright. The following typical experience illustrates what I mean.

It was nearly midnight. I was returning from a visit to a sick child friend on Hester Street, whose mother I had left much cheered by the promise of a summer outing for the little one. I passed [illegible] on every street I traversed. On the sidewalk in front of a warehouse two small boys were making marks in some white stuff like sand. "What is it, dears?" I asked. "Jes some sugar, missus. It leaked out a bag dat got busted when de porters were carrying it in." "Would you like to play in sure-enough sand, and roll over and over in grass?" "Missus, [illegible] play on de grass in de park." "Oh, I mean way out in the country, where there's lots of grass just for children to play on." "Sure!" They were all alive with interest now, and we'd had a good talk, which I left off—to be continued at the Mission Sunday School, where they promptly appeared, and where they have been regular attendants ever since.

All contributions to this excellent work will be promptly acknowledged in these columns.

[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Junior C. E., Au Sable	1 00
J. A. W., Tidioute	5 00
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	$108 82

Five Hundred... Free Scholarships

We want to [illegible] immediately to introduce SUCCESS into tens of thousands of new homes this summer. As an extraordinary inducement to get deserving, energetic and ambitious young men and women to assist us in this great work, we have arranged the grandest scholarship offer ever dreamed of.

Apply Quickly...

We will make it possible for you to attend ANY school or college in America next year without it costing you one cent, if you can devote a few hours a day for the next month or so advertising and introducing the best weekly journal printed in the English Language—SUCCESS—into the homes of your friends and neighbors.

Full Particulars Sent Free. Write at Once. Address

The Success Company...
Cooper Union, New York.

AGENTS WANTED

FOR
DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC CORSETS.
[illegible] for backache, nervousness, indigestion, headache, liver and kidney trouble—[illegible] free
No. 1 corset $1. Postpaid $1 50. State waist size.
GEO. A. SCOTT, Room 7, 842 Broadway, New York.

HOLDFAST HAIRPIN
Will not split, warp or break. Stay where you put them. Never rust, and never wear out. Made in black, brown and light hair. State what you want and send 25 cents. If your dealer cannot supply you, send 10 cents for sample pin. CONSOLIDATED SAFETY PIN COMPANY, Box 129, Bloomfield, N. J.

Wash Suits C. O. D.

Send No Money. Just give us your [illegible] and we will send you the garment described and we will send it C. O. D. You may try it on and examine it at the express office and satisfy yourself that it is exactly as represented and we will [illegible] a wonderful bargain before paying the express agent your special price and charges.
$2.85 buys it in White Duck, White Pique, Linen Crash.. TAKE YOUR CHOICE.
This is a Wonderful Bargain.
Our Fashion Catalogue..... is now ready to mail. Free for the asking.
Take your Choice of White Duck, White Pique or Linen Crash, only $2.85. See description below.
Order right direct from this paper
No. 99. The above cut represents our very latest style of Wash Suit. Come in fine Irish Linen Crash, White Pique or White Duck, as you desire to state which cloth you desire when ordering. The jacket is full box and half tight front to close with four [illegible] buttons. The skirt is cut circular with the back gored set off with buttons. The entire suit is [illegible] trimmed with blue duck [illegible] as shown in the [illegible] above. This is an entirely original and fashionable creation and will appeal to every woman of taste and we consider it the bright particular bargain of our entire line of summer suits. As a special inducement to the many readers of this paper we offer you this suit at a price which is practically impossible to duplicate. Price, $2.85
GRAYDON PALMER CO., Madison & Market Streets, Chicago, Ill.

CURE CATARRH NOW.

This is Best Season of the Year to Begin the Treatment of Catarrh For a Permanent Cure.

Dr. Blosser, the discoverer of the great remedy, which has undoubtedly cured more cases of Catarrh, Bronchitis and Asthma, than any other known medicine, says that this is the best season of the year to begin the treatment of Catarrh.

As Spring approaches and warm weather sets in the disease can be permanently cured so that it will not return. Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure eradicates the disease by killing the germs, which are the direct cause of all Catarrhal disease.

Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure is put up in boxes containing enough medicine for one months treatment, which is sent, postage paid, for $1.00

A trial sample will be mailed free to any sufferer who has never tried the remedy. Write, or order at once, addressing Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

Alcolia Stove Free

A unique invention, consisting of a tin containing solidified alcohol, with an extension top for holding warming dish. May be relit from time to time and will burn continuously for one hour; is non-explosive, and can be carried in pocket.
The stove, ready to light, will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of cover from box of Armour's
Beef Extract and Vegetable Tablets.
To be had of all druggists and grocers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 25 cents.
The Tablets are Vegetables with Armour's Extract of Beef, compressed; cooked ready for use.
Each Tablet a Meal.
Will keep in any climate any length of time.
Recommended to soldiers, sailors, hunters, golfers, bicyclists, and travelers by land or sea, or wherever the conveniences of the kitchen are not at hand. Address
Armour & Company, Chicago.

Buy a Buggy Direct from the factory. The price will be a revelation to you concerning carriage values, with profits of middlemen and dealers cut off. You will pocket these profits. In buying a buggy, a carriage or wagon, or any kind of harness or horse accessories from our catalogue, you have a larger stock to choose from than any dealer can carry. You order with safety because our broad guarantee goes with everything we sell. If dissatisfied, send back your purchase and get your money, and we will pay the freight both ways.

No. 3634 Buggy. Price $37.25 With Leather Quarter Top
PAY ONLY ONE PROFIT
We manufacture on a large scale and with every improvement for economy and excellent work. To the cost of manufacture we add one profit—that is all you are charged. Before you spend your money study our catalogue and see what we offer you, and at what low prices. It is sent free.
THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE AND HARNESS COMPANY, COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Artistic Monuments...
COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES in White Bronze
Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.
White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligation. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.
The Monumental Bronze Co., 70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

New Ideas in Christian Work

An Open Forum for Practical Suggestions, to Which All Interested Readers are Invited to Contribute

PROBABLY a majority of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are interested in Sunday School work, some as teachers, others as parents of children who attend there, and still others in different ways. We commend this letter to their careful perusal:

Are Our Sunday School Teachers Inefficient?

To the Editor: How often is the question asked by the parents of our Sunday School children, "Who teaches my child?" and by the question not simply meaning the name of the person, or a general idea of who he is, but a deep, searching inquiry as to his character and qualifications for the office of a teacher! That there is grave need for such a question is not doubted by many who are familiar with the work done in our schools. It is a fact, probably not generally realized, that a considerable proportion of our teachers are unfitted to perform the duties devolving upon them, when tested by the highest standard. That we have so many of this class of teachers is largely so because the dearth of workers is so great that schools eagerly seize upon anyone who will offer his services. There is often even a kind of going out into "the byways and hedges and compelling them to come in." Such excuses as "I can not teach; I do not understand children," or "I have not time to devote to the study of the lesson," or "I prefer not to; I really do not care to undertake the task," are treated simply as expressions of modesty, or a desire to evade a definite answer. The person is deluged with a flood of compliments regarding his ability and special adaptation to the work. He is urged to make a start, at least. What are his qualifications for teaching? What his spiritual life? Is it deep, pure, strong, healthful, or otherwise? is never questioned. The qualifications of the pastor, the elders, the deacons, and other officers of the church are a matter for serious consideration, but who teaches the children in the cardinal principles of Christian faith and living apparently makes little difference.

This dragging teachers into service from every condition of spiritual, mental, and social life is a dangerous method. Often new converts, who have not yet begun to walk themselves, are allowed to direct the foot-steps of the still weaker babes in Christ. Those wholly unqualified mentally for dealing with the various phases of the progressive Christian thought and life of the present day, are given classes of bright, intelligent scholars. Social standing is often a passport to the office of teacher, when a spiritual or intellectual examination would prove the candidates to be more stumbling blocks than saviours to the children.

The youth of our Sunday Schools come largely from two classes of homes: one, of poverty, ignorance, and vice; the other, of luxury, indulgence, and lax virtues. This is a great enough difficulty to contend with by itself; but when we attempt to oppose this influence with teachers, who, at their best, are sadly deficient, and in many cases do not even aspire to a creditable standing, but are satisfied with asking the golden text, the catechism, a few disconnected and unintelligible questions, or reading a chapter from a story book—anything in fact to fill up the study hour, what results can be expected?

It is certainly the duty of every parent to prevent this state of affairs as much as possible by not simply taking it for granted that because the teacher is in the school, he is efficient, but by a scrupulous examination of the child at home to prove beyond a doubt that this is so. It is the duty of the church, as the custodian of the children in the larger spiritual sense, to see to it that none hold this responsible position who are not in every way worthy. If candidates for teaching were submitted to an examination, under the direction of the pastor and officers of the church, as to both their intellectual and spiritual qualifications, much might be gained.

The question may arise, If the dearth of teachers is so great now, what would be the result if such a course were pursued? There are several answers to this. In the first place the classes could be enlarged, the teacher devoting himself or herself to the particular duties of instruction, while assistants were provided for keeping order, marking cards and other mechanical incidentals. Secondly, there are many teachers in our public schools and other lines of employment who would be specially competent, and could be secured for a small compensation. Paid superintendents are not a new departure in Sunday School work. Why should not paid teachers be equally satisfactory? But it is not a foregone conclusion that the number of teachers would be reduced. The examination would cause many to seek the position, who now shun the place. It would offer a premium for ability and give a dignity to the office, which now has little or no standing in the community, for it is well known that any one may now teach who signifies a willingness to do so. A step in the line of educating persons for this work would be to establish weekly undenominational teachers' classes. A person should be secured to take this class who is not only competent to instruct along the ordinary lines of study, but also to show the various relationships existing between teacher and scholar—the duties, obligations and responsibilities—and to inspire the members of the class to active, efficient work.

Whatever may be said on this subject regarding the cause of so large a number of inefficient teachers, and the best plan of improving existing circumstances, this must be allowed without question, that the church is not giving enough attention to the spiritual and intellectual standing of its Sunday School workers. ANSON A. CARTER.

Newark, N. J.

Mr. Carter's able and earnest letter should not pass unnoticed by the teachers themselves. His suggestions are novel and practical. There is doubtless another side to the question which we would be glad to present in these columns. Meanwhile, the statements he makes are such as to compel serious reflection by all who are interested in Sunday School work.

. . .

Spiritually Dead Churches

A church which lives for itself alone is spiritually dead. There are, unfortunately, many such churches. Though not precisely a "new idea," it would at least be a new experience for such churches to try to "do something for somebody." Idle Christians, who meet week after week, year in and year out to hear the Gospel, and who never get beyond the stage of petitioning heaven on their own behalf, have not learned the joy and satisfaction of progress in the spiritual life. That joy can only be realized by setting to work for the Master, doing the thing that lies nearest to us. The letter below is a familiar illustration of the need of spiritual activity in churches if they are to be kept from becoming moribund:

Our village has a population of 6,000 or 7,000 inhabitants, with six Protestant churches, but seemingly without any thought of rescuing the degraded men and women who never enter our churches, and cannot be induced to in their present condition. READER.

Norwich, N. Y.

It seems that one man, with the aid and co-operation of a few Christian citizens, has made a self-sacrificing effort to establish and maintain a mission in the town. Such a work, if worthily conducted, should be heartily sustained by the churches, which will find themselves greatly helped and strengthened by such an experience.

. . .

Shepherding the Converts

CRISP, Texas, April 24.

Editor "The Christian Herald":

I was impressed after reading Mr. Wright's plan of successful evangelistic effort, and the apparent failure of co-operative work upon the part of Christian workers—failure to realize the greater results—and the consequent scattering of converts, who are lost as far as joining the church is concerned. The community wonders where these converts are. In the first place the churches are generally spiritually cold and indifferent, and when the evangelist holds his meeting there must be a revival of God's own children [that is the churches] who must be in a condition to receive the new-born souls whose very beings are thrilling to associate with them. Frequently I believe the condition of the churches is such that the regenerated ones find in them only a dreary and formal state of religion.

These things have worried me. I have prayed that I might receive light, and was led to these passages of Scripture: Matthew 24: 11, 23, 24, II. Thessalonians 2: 10, 11, 12, and I. Timothy 4: 1, and II. Timothy 3: 7, also 4: 3-4, and Titus 1: 10. A. B.

♣

The Late Rev. Dr. Clapp

Rev. Alexander Huntington Clapp, D.D., who died recently in New York City, was born in Worthington, Mass., September 1, 1818. He graduated from Yale in 1842, spent two years in Yale Theological Seminary and one in Andover, graduating from the latter in 1845. In 1850 he was Professor of Rhetoric pro tem in Middlebury College, Vt. He was ordained as a Congregational minister October 14, 1850, and became pastor of the Centre Congregational Church, Brattleboro, Vt. Here he edited "Lives of the Presidents" and other works. In 1853, by reason of severe affection of the eyes, he had to suspend preaching and resigned his charge. He resumed labor in the summer of 1855 with the Beneficent Congregational Church, Providence, R. I., and was installed its pastor. This charge he resigned in 1865, accepting the appointment as Secretary of the American Home Missionary Society, New York, and from that time until his death he continued in the service of this Society as Secretary, Treasurer, Honorary Treasurer and Editorial Secretary. While pastor at Providence he served as Chaplain of the Tenth Regiment of Rhode Island Volunteers, called for the defence of Washington. The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Iowa College in 1868. Dr. Clapp was a man of rare sweetness of character and marked abilities in the pulpit and on the platform and as a writer.

♣

Seeking for Jesus

John 6 24.

SEEKING for Jesus, a curious quest!
For nothing they know of his worth;
Yet, seeking, they find him, the wisest and best
That ever set foot on the earth.
Seeking for Jesus, but just for the food
The poor human body might need;
Yet, seeking they find the superlative God,
The Bread on which cherubims feed.
Seeking for Jesus, but why they scarce know,
They hurry so over the sea;
But urged by some impulse directly they go
To him who so loved Galilee.
Seeking for Jesus, O glorious quest!
They find him who points them the road
That leadeth to life with the holy and blest,
Sweet life in the service of God.

W. T. SLEEPER.

If your 'life's blood' is pure, Nature will take care of the rest. Hood's Sarsaparilla enables you to cleanse your blood of all impurities and make it strong and wholesome. It never disappoints.

Trial Package Free!

If any reader, suffering from rheumatism, will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 219 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

Learn Telegraphy AT HOME and become a Telegraph Operator to the Railway or Commercial Telegraph Service. Particulars FREE.

J. A. SHERIDAN, Supt., Reading, Pa.

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 1 cents. forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 50 Spruce St., New York.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS, 102 Fulton st., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Dealers supplied. 52-page illustrated catalogue free.

Its delicious flavor and fragrance win the little ones, and promotes the daily habit of cleansing their teeth. Rubifoam is a perfect liquid dentifrice.

Price, 25 cents. At Druggists. Sample vial of Rubifoam mailed free on receipt of postage, 2 cents. Address E. W. Hoyt & Co., Lowell, Mass.

RELIEF FROM RHEUMATICS..

Mr. W. H. Jenkins writes from Topeka, Kan., under date of August 5th, 1898:

GENTS: Several years ago I was crippled with rheumatism, and for 162 weeks I was unable to do business of any kind, and in that time I have expended nearly $3,000. I had given up all hope.

My mother in looking over the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE saw your advertisement, and we ordered one bottle of your Tartarlithine, which gave me immediate relief.

I have recommended your medicine to a number of parties in this city, who have had chronic rheumatism for years. One of them, a lady 68 years of age, is now doing her own work. So far your medicine has not failed to make a cure.

In conclusion your medicine is just as represented, and has entirely eliminated the disease from my body. My mother is enthusiastic over the benefits that I have derived from the use of your medicine.

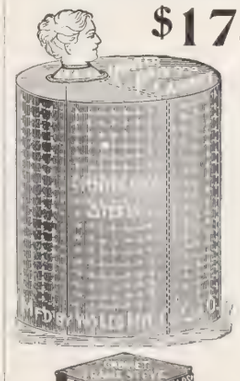
Regular package $1.00,
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE to sell Sash Locks and Door Holders. Sample Sash Lock free for two-cent stamp. Immense; better than weights; burglar proof. $10 a day. Write quick. Address BROHARD & CO., Dept. 11, Philadelphia, Pa.

$20.00 A Week Salary. Agents wanted. We give credit; allow 50 per cent. and 20 per cent. discount; prepay expressage. High grade and guaranteed jewelry, watches, topaz diamonds; plated and solid Colorado Silver tableware. Mutual Manufacturing Co., 126 Chambers St., Dept. 1, N.Y.City

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP for children teething should always be used for children while teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa.



$175.00 Monthly and EXPENSES GUARANTEED

GOOD MEN AND WOMEN

To appoint agents and sell our celebrated $5.00 Quaker Folding Thermal Vapor Bath Cabinet. Many earn more

...No Capital or Experience Required...

Greatest Monopoly and Money Maker Ever Offered Agents

No competition. A necessity in every home. Demand is enormous. Everybody buys. Over 400,000 in use — 82,386 sold by agents since January 1st Ten Millions to be sold.

We Are an Old Established Firm

Perfectly reliable. Capital $100,000.00. Largest manufacturers of Bath Cabinets in the world.

WRITE US TO-DAY stating age, references territory wanted, etc., and we will forward full information, terms, etc. Don't delay. Send your address anyway. THE WORLD MFG. CO., 613 World Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

What brings release from dirt and grease? Why, don't you know?

SAPOLIO

Pears'

Its least virtue is that it lasts so.

Soap is for comfort; the clean are comfortable.

Pears' soap cleanliness—is perfect cleanliness.

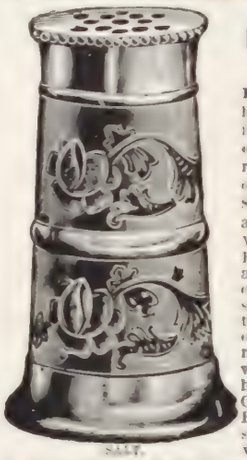
All sorts of people use it, all sorts of stores sell it, especially druggists.

This Little Lady EARNED a Bicycle

Baker's Teas, Spices, Extracts, Etc.,

W. G. BAKER (Dept. 76), Springfield, Mass.

For Both 25 cents For Both



If you are looking for a Great Bargain in Silverware, and that is what this is, you will find it among the Greatest Bargains ever offered by any reliable Manufacturer. For 25 cents we will Prepaid Both the Salt and Pepper Shakers. They are Quadruple Coin Silver Plated. Warranted for your ten years. Finely engraved and finished as well as ornamental to any table rich or poor. If on receipt of the same you do not think we have the Greatest Bargain you ever heard of, or heard of, return them at once to us and we will refund you your money. We have been doing business in Chicago since 1865. Any Bank or Express Company can tell you our Standing. Our Bargain Silverware Catalogue Sent Free.

A. W. LEONARD MFG. CO., 152-153 MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO.

Dont Take Any Chances

in an inferior vehicle or harness. Your life and that of your family depends upon their quality and reliability. You can't feel very much at ease if it is a vehicle or harness bought at the point and sacrificed often largely from the quality of material. Purchases must be bought largely on faith—faith in the honesty of the manufacturer.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS

but have been selling vehicles and harness direct to the consumer for twenty-six years. In fact we are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively. These facts speak volumes for the quality of our goods and our method of doing business. You take no chances, we ship any vehicles and harness anywhere for examination and guarantee everything. Send for our large Illustrated Catalogue before buying. IT'S FREE.

No. 606—Canopy Top Surrey, with side curtains, fenders, lamps, cushion, spring seat, shafts and pole or shafts. Price, complete as described, $85.

No. 75—Single Buggy Harness, with [illegible] Price complete as described, $8.50.

Elkhart Carriage and Harness Mfg. Co., W. B. PRATT, Secretary. Elkhart, Indiana.

Clover FOR THE Blood...

Cures Cancer, Eczema, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, and all Other Blood Diseases.

How many people realize the true value of our common red clover? It is the best blood purifier known. Some years ago Mr. D. Needham discovered a cancer growing upon his shoulder. He was advised to make a strong tea of red clover blossoms which he did, and the result was so satisfactory that he was led to study clover closely which resulted in his establishing a very extensive business in the preparation of medicines direct from the red clover blossoms. Needham's clover is now well known, and many prominent people have cured themselves of cancer, rheumatism, constipation, eczema, skin and blood diseases by its use. Send your name and addeess to D. Needham's Sons, 52 Inter-Ocean Bldg., Chicago, and they will mail a full description of Clover Blossom Extract, a history of how Mr. Needham cured his cancer, and testimonials from many who have used the remedy. If you have any disorder of the blood look into the merits of Needham's Clover. It is the best blood purifier known.

40 ... DREAMS OF LOVELINESS ... $1.00

Bouquet Collection Everblooming Tea Roses

They will bloom constantly this summer either in pots or planted out in the garden.

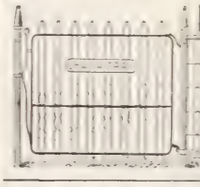
WE make the above Marvelous offer of 40 Roses for $1.00 postpaid anywhere in the U. S., not as a [illegible] but as an advertisement for [illegible]. They are strong healthy plants, well established, not little rooted cuttings from sand bed as many firms send out. We have several hundred of the choicest new and standard varieties to select from. We grow no common [illegible]

We offer the following bargains for May Planting: Order at Once. AD. will not appear again.

40 Beautiful Sunset Colored Coleus	$1.00	15 Flowering Gladiolus, 10 Dbl. Pearl Tuberoses	$1.00
40 Magnificent Flowering Chrysanthemums	$1.00	15 Gorgeous Flowering Cannas, tropical foliage	$1.00
40 Lovely Fragrant Carnation Pinks	$1.00	25 Fine Bedding Geraniums, [illegible] flowers	$1.00

SPECIAL OFFER—We will send above 7 collections for $6.00 by express at your expense.

Address INNISFALLEN GREENHOUSES, URBANA, OHIO.



HARTMAN'S STEEL PICKET FENCE

A Rare Combination OF BEAUTY AND UTILITY.

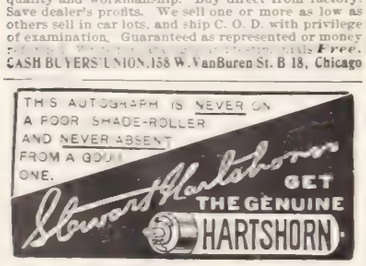
Combining a high degree of [illegible] with beautiful [illegible] and [illegible] qualities. Practically [illegible] for [illegible] of the property. Easily set [illegible] fastened to [illegible] is strong and durable. It greatly adds to the attractiveness of [illegible] Cemetery Lots, etc. Cheaper than a good wood Picket Fence—Lasts indefinitely. Looks well and is neat with our ornamental steel posts. Catalogue, circulars, etc. FREE. Address HARTMAN MFG. CO. Box 51, Ellwood City Pa. or R. 11, 309 Broadway N.Y. City.

$26 REAL BARGAINS

Road Wagons at $16.45
Top Road Wagons at $22.70
Top Buggies at $26.00

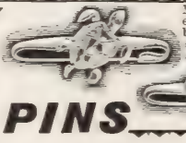
Spring Wagons $25. Stud Harness $15. Farm Harness $10. Also Carts, Saddles and everything in the vehicle line at lowest wholesale prices. All correct in style, quality and workmanship. Buy direct from factory. Save dealer's profits. We sell one or more as low as others sell in car lots, and ship C. O. D. with privilege of examination. Guaranteed as represented or money refunded. Write for Catalogue, which is Free.

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158 W. VanBuren St. B 18, Chicago



THIS AUTOGRAPH IS NEVER ON A POOR SHADE-ROLLER AND NEVER ABSENT FROM A GOOD ONE.
Stewart Hartshorn
GET THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

BEAUTY PINS



Made from our [illegible] GOLD [illegible] wire. Handsomely [illegible] and [illegible]. Used as Cuff, Ribbon or Waist Pins. [illegible] while we [illegible] a sample pin [illegible] by mail [illegible] 10 cts. A set of three Pins FREE for 25 cents. Silver or stamps. Money back if not delighted with them. Send to-day.

The Randolph Co., Jewelers Dept. C, Providence, R. I.

Latest Popular Fad. A Perfect Safety Pin.

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED

[illegible] Improved Elastic Truss Co., 768 Broadway, N. Y.

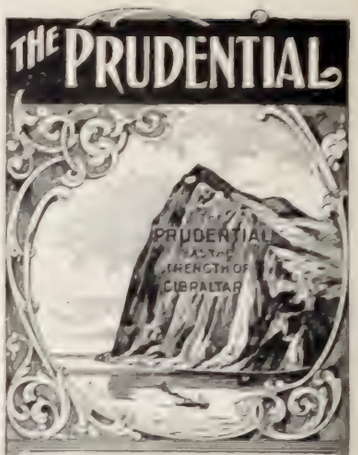
LARKIN SOAPS

AND PREMIUMS.—FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.



Why should you insure your life?

BECAUSE:

Prudence suggests it.
Reason approves it.
Uncertainty of life requires it.
Duty demands it.
Economy selects it.
No investment excels it.
Thoughtfulness seeks it.
Intelligence endorses it.
Affection constrains it.
Law supervises it.

We will be glad to furnish full information about Life Insurance adapted to your needs and conditions.

Ages, 1 to 70.
Amounts, $15 to $50,000.

Write,

The Prudential

Insurance Co. of America

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President. Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.

8000 BICYCLES

Discontinued Models closed out. '98 MODELS $9 to $10. Shopworn and second hand wheels, good as new $3 to $10. '99 MODELS $11 to $20. Great factory clearing sale. We ship to anyone on approval, and trust without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE by helping us advertise our superior '99 models. We give one FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.

E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO., CHICAGO, ILLS.

A NEW PROPOSITION: WHEELS Built to Order $12

Send for Illustrated catalogue of the famous TEMPLE & CROWN FRAMES and all standard makes of bicycle parts and fittings. Make your selection, we build the wheel accordingly. Lowest Prices Guaranteed. Agents Wanted, Write today.

RALPH TEMPLE CO., 94 Lake St., Chicago.

INGERSOLL WHEELS. $2.00 DOWN.

Profits. Highest Grade, $25. Lowest guarantee. Large Mail Order Catalogue of Bicycles and Sundries FREE. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., Dept. 67 Cortlandt St., N. Y. C.

HOW ABOUT THAT FENCE

you were going to build? We can furnish a fence that is equal in quality to the best on the market, direct to the farmer at wholesale rates. All interwoven—no loose ends to unravel or untwist. Cross wires can't slip. Prices low. Special prices and extra discounts to farmers.

ADVANCE FENCE CO., 1905 Old St., Peoria, Ill.

$13.25 BUYS A $25.00 BICYCLE

Don't buy a bicycle before you write for our 1899 catalogue. 2nd hand wheels from $5 up. We SELL [illegible] VICTOR MANUFG CO. Dept. G 42, 293 and 297 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

STARK BROS PAY CASH every WEEK if you sell STARK TREES. Outfit free. STARK NURSERY, LOUISIANA, MO., Rockport, Ill., Dansville, N.Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

VOLUME 22 NUMBER 21

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, MAY 24, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

COUNTESS ADELINE SCHIMMELMANN, WHO RENOUNCED RANK, FORTUNE, AND ROYAL FAVOR, TO LABOR FOR CHRIST (See page 501)

1. Castle of Ahrendsburg, the Countess' Birthplace. 2. Among Baltic Fishermen. 3. The Yacht Duen. 4. A Gospel Service on Board Ship.

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

M. L. ... ed? 2. Schley? 3. What office did Dewey hold when he went to Manila? 4. What rank was later conferred on him by Congress? 5. What country uses centimos for money? 6. How much is a centimo? 7. I have some for... on them? What country are they from. 8. What is the meaning of the word Cembroil? It is a foreign word I think.

1. Ag-gwin-al-do, in four syllables, and with "a" as in hat. 2. Sly. 3. Commodore. 4. Admiral. 5. You probably refer to centesimos, coins used in Italy, Spain and the Argentine Republic. 6. About one-fifth of a cent. 7. Hungary. 8. You doubtless mean Cinquefoil. In architecture, the term is applied to five-pointed ornaments and rosettes. In botany, to a number of plants having five-pointed leaves. The word means five-leaved.

Oliver E. B., North Branford, Conn. Where is the saying: "Cleanliness is next to godliness"?

It first appeared in the Beraitha, a Hindoo "sacred book," as the last Mishna of Sola. It has been variously credited since, some attributing it to John Wesley. The Hindoo philosophers, however, have the prior claim.

An aged reader at Vinita, Ind. Ter., writes:

I have been much interested in different accounts of old Bibles. When all are reported, I suggest that you say so in THE MAIL BAG, and then tell us who has reported the oldest, giving date, for some of us will forget, for many do not keep their HERALDS, but, as I do, pass them on to others each week. I found at a neighbor's, a veritable ancient literary curiosity in the shape of a copy of Baxter's Saints' Everlasting Rest, nearly 250 years old, printed in London in 1652. It must be an unabridged edition, for it is a ponderous, bulky volume of 1032 pages. It has been rebound. It is in excellent preservation, print very plain in black letter, with curious ornamental initials and headings.

F. N. McL., Forbestown, Calif. Please explain the words: "When it giveth his color in the cup:" (Prov. 23: 31). Why is the pronoun "his" used?

It means that we should not be caught by the fascination of its color in the glass—by its light and sparkle. No significance is to be attached to the pronoun "his," as used in the Authorized Version. The Revised Version substitutes "its color," which is doubtless correct.

D. D., Marshland, Ore. Of what use were the lamps and pitchers that Gideon used? (Judges 7: 16-20). When is it supposed the battle took place?

It was a night attack. The pitchers were used to hide the lamps until Gideon's force surrounded the enemy's camp. If you can imagine the sensation of an army being awakened in the darkness by a crash such as would be caused by the breaking of the pitchers, and then looking up and seeing the camp surrounded by lights, you can understand that there would be likely to be a panic, and the number of Gideon's little force would be overestimated. The battle is supposed to have taken place about 1,250 years before Christ, or, thirty-one centuries ago, in the Valley of Jezreel, near little Hermon in Palestine, now called Jebel el Duhy.

Subscriber, Allisonia, Va. Do you think the word "fire" in such passages as Matthew 13: 42 is to be understood literally?

We have no means of knowing, but are inclined to think not. We do not see how a literal fire could affect the immaterial soul. Fire is used as a symbol of destruction and of refining in other parts of the Bible. It should be sufficient for us that Christ, who knew the condition of the lost, should use such a figure to describe the awful doom of the impenitent and should couple it with such expressive figures as "weeping and gnashing of teeth."

J. C. D., Sheridan, Mo.: Bereaved Reader, Hoboken, N. J., and many others. Can you tell me where the soul goes to immediately it leaves the body? I am told by a Christian friend that it lies in the grave and will have no conscious existence until the resurrection. Another friend tells me that it goes straight to God in heaven. Which is right?

The Bible which is, of course, the only authority on such a question, does not answer it explicitly. It does, however, afford us ground for inference. For instance: in the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Luke 16: 19-31), Christ represents both men as being in conscious existence after death and before the resurrection. You will see that Dives wanted some one sent to warn his brothers who were still living on the earth. Another significant passage is Christ's promise to the penitent thief (Luke 23: 43). Paul evidently did not expect to lie unconscious in the grave after his death. Writing of death he says (Phil. 1: 23): "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ which is far better." Still more pertinent is his remark (II. Cor. 5: 8) about being absent from the body and present with the Lord. All these and other passages appear to us to imply a conscious existence of the soul apart from the body, beginning immediately after death. At the same time it does not appear to be one of the highest happiness. The remarks about the resurrection (such as I. Cor. 15: 40-49) appear, somewhat indefinitely, to imply a higher state of existence which we may enjoy when the spiritual body is conferred.

THE OLDEST TOWER IN HAVANA

This building has a melancholy interest. It has been occupied at different times as a prison, a hospital and a barracks. At the time of the blockade by our warships, it was occupied by Spanish troops. It is believed to be one of the oldest structures in the Cuban capital

Mr. J. E. Batcher, Lytham, Lancashire, England, writes:

Here in England, I read Dr. Talmage's sermons every week, and have done for the past fifteen years. I am not an ordained preacher, being only an ordinary workingman, but I teach on Sundays, and I write to tell you that I use the old and new sermons so much that I consider you are at least entitled to my thanks for the thoughts I constantly gather from these sermons. I think it is well sometimes to let a man know how much influence and power is exerted by his words. Your sermons are looked forward to week by week. You should know how they are appreciated in this part of the earth.

E. J. K., Brooklyn, N. Y. Can you give me approximately the number of persons in the world who are identified with the chief religions?

There are no absolutely reliable statistics. The quarterly of the American Statistical Society, however, gives a careful estimate based on population, and corrected by every means accessible. This gives the figures as follows: ... 230,800,533; Protestant, 143,237,625; ... 43,000,000; Shintoists, about 14,000,000; Jews, ...

Mrs. L. K. D. Who was Tam O'Shanter?

Robert Burns' poems, and not a character worthy of any admiration.

J. F., Poland, O. 1. Is more than one electric bat...

1. A battery consists of two or more cells. Two should answer your purpose. 2. The current from a voltaic cell is very steady in comparison with the stream of sparks from a magneto-electric machine, but of smaller force. Frictional electricity is convulsive, noisy and sudden, while voltaic is silent, gentle and powerful. 3. Yes. 4. A dry battery is composed of a zinc cup, in which is a mixture ... substance, which will not easily spill. A car... bon electrode is placed in the centre and the whole tightly sealed with an insulating cement.

L. A. N., Diligent River, N. S., Can. Please explain Mark 10: 25, what Christ meant by the needle's eye.

It was a proverbial expression, denoting literally a thing impossible, but figuratively a thing very difficult. In Oriental cities the gates are usually so arranged that a central entrance of considerable width is provided for beasts of burden, while a small side portal known as "the needle's eye," is used by foot-passengers. For the camels to use the smaller entrance would be an obvious impossibility; hence the illustration employed in the passage quoted may be said to have been drawn from actual observation.

Endeavorer, Philadelphia, Pa. Is a Christian justified in selling articles, such as soap, to persons leading notoriously immoral lives, and receiving for it money earned in a wicked way, or, say, to barbers who use it in shaving on Sunday?

We think he is justified. We doubt if he has a legal right to refuse such custom. No man can discriminate as to his customers. It would be impracticable for him to require a ... he would serve him, or to demand a pledge ...

York, N. Y. ... S. P. I. Wood ... more soul into the kingdom. Praise God!"

... neighbors used to have little dancing parties ... attend, believing it wrong. Two older sisters ... of the matter since, and cannot feel at rest about it until I know whether I will be forgiven.

... that it is not necessary to repeat them here. We are assured of forgiveness the moment we truly repent and ask the Father, in Christ's name, to pardon our sin (see I. John 1: 9). Your own experience may be made the means of persuading your sisters to view the pursuit of worldly pleasure in its true light—as a moral stumbling-block and a hindrance to spiritual growth. And let us add here that, in our view, a church with a dancing congregation and ... sermon would be punctuated with extracts from a "society novel," and preceded and followed by concert-hall ditties instead of the grand and inspiring hymns that encourage and comfort the earnest worshiper.

M. S., Moehland, Pa. Is there a form of insanity ... no purpose. Aside from this habit he doesn't seem a bad boy except that he has a great love ...

It is frequently found, in such cases, that the trouble is due to a too vivid imagination, combined with the lack of early moral training. The gift of imagination is a precious one; but, if distorted, or misdirected, it works great evil. If you can direct it into a proper channel, and at the same time impress the child with the wickedness, the shame and the dishonor of an untruth, you may accomplish much. Many young people are given to indulging in "romances" at a tender age, but are cured of it afterward. All lying is wicked, but there is a distinction between the vindictive lie told to deceive, to hide some fault or to injure another person, and the lie that is prompted by a vivid and ungoverned imagination, and with no purpose in view except to say something extraordinary. The faculty of saying or imagining extraordinary things is one to be guided and ennobled, not suppressed, but if the lie be vindictive, the child should be made to know that it is a crime. This is, in substance, the view taken by our leading public school educators in dealing with the question. In one institution in New York, where there are many children, the one detected in an untruth is punished by receiving a small pinch of powdered quinine on his tongue, which leaves a taste so bitter that he is not apt soon to forget it.

Mrs. H. D., Meriden, Conn. We believe not.

J. M. D., Phœnixville, Pa. See I. Cor. 15: 41. ...

Reader, Clinton, Me. Address him Madison Square Garden, New York.

Callie Collins. Write to Fleming H. Revell Co., Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Subscriber, Brantford, Can. Write to the War Department, Washington, D. C.

Erickson, Omaha, Neb. The year 1900 will be the last year of the nineteenth century.

W. H. H., Norfolk, Va. The principle is co-operative. We believe it to be a reliable concern.

C. B. E., Upton, Mass. We have no knowledge of their denomination. Why not apply to the parties direct?

Anxious American, Paterson, N. J. At Governor's Island, or at the recruiting office, Third avenue near Cooper Union, New York.

Frederick A. K., Anita, and Mrs. C. A. C., West Stockbridge, Mass. Send them to the nearest hospital, jail, prison or mission.

Walter C. W., Colorado Springs, Colo. In Mr. Moody's book entitled Texts from My Bible, published by Revell & Co., New York.

D. H. R., Newburg, N. Y. The A. B. C. of Bee Culture, by A. T. Root, is a good book on the subject. It is published by the author at Medina, O.

H. A., Arcadia, Ohio. They are worthless. No one would buy them unless they were sorted and pasted in. Even then it is doubtful, as the method of selection varies.

D. A. B., Tatum Station, S. C. We wish we could oblige you. Thousands would be glad of the information. They would not be lost if it was known where they were.

M. L., Rushville, Ill. In the New Testament: John the Baptist, John the Apostle, John Mark the writer of the Gospel, and John, a member of the High Priest's family, mentioned ...

Among the Dervishes of Persia

Miss Yoseph, Our Medical Missionary, Relates Her Adventures—The Most Peculiar of Oriental Religious Sects—Strange Legends and Superstitious Observances

SEVERAL months ago, Miss Hannah G. Yoseph, a native Persian lady educated in the United States, and now laboring as a medical missionary in her own land, contributed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some remarkably interesting letters descriptive of the social and religious life of the Persian people. To-day we publish the first of several letters just received from that talented correspondent, in which she relates her adventures among the dervishes of her country. These letters deal with a subject wholly outside the reach of the ordinary correspondent and contain much that is new and exceedingly interesting concerning the strangest of all the Oriental religious sects—the darvishy.

"MARAGHA, PERSIA.

"To the Editor of "The Christian Herald".

"I am going to tell you something about a few of the Mohammedan sects or societies, which have more or less secret and unknown ceremonies and beliefs; and what I am going to write is not from the Koran or any other religious book, but from my own experience among them.

"No doubt many of your readers have heard about darvishy. The name darvish makes one think of Arab and Bohemian life. Although I had lived in the country of the darvishy, still I knew very little of them until lately. What I state has been seen and heard in my own experience.

"In conversing with those who hold secret beliefs, it is a rare thing to find two whose statements agree, and one has to "warm their hand" (bribe them) to make them speak or reveal anything. Some of the darvishes say that there are seventeen, and others twenty-four, classes among them. Some are darvishes because their fathers were so before them; others have been so dedicated because the parents had vowed, if a certain Imam gave them a child, that it should be reared as a darvish, either for life or for a period of years. The infant darvish (a dedicated one), on the completion of the seventh day of its existence, is carried from door to door asking alms at least once a day. If the child be rich, the alms are given to the poor. Its hair is left to grow luxuriantly.

"Darvishes are usually very inoffensive people, meek and mild, probably due to the habit of taking opium, arsenic, etc. Their origin is traced to Medina. At the time of Mohammed (according to the legend), there was a man whose wife was childless. The husband went and cried to the Prophet "Ya Rasull Allah" (O, God's messenger) give my wife's talaka (divorce); she bears me no issue." Afterward forty children were born at once! For two years they were miraculously provided for, and as soon as they could walk, each went asking alms. But the people of Medina became tired of giving to so many and asked the prophet to send them away. So the prophet ordered them to a nearby mountain to shelter themselves in a cave. At this time a plague prevailed, except where the darvishes were, and until this day their presence in a community is regarded as a blessing. Day by day, the legend adds, one of the forty went to Medina and asked alms. Sometimes the forty sustained life upon a single nut and a piece of bread. One of the number used to come and ask alms of Hasraty Fatma. She noticed that he had not come for forty days. When he came again, she asked him: "What is the reason of your not coming for forty days?" He replied: "the last time you gave me a piece of bread; it lasted until to-day." She cursed him and all the other darvishes and said: "May you gather in much, but may you always be hungry." This legend is told all over Persia.

A DERVISH NAGHIB

"In every city, darvishes have two men to whom they look up. One is Moorshud, their spiritual father and teacher; the other is a sayid (a descendant of the prophet), who is their governor, and is called naghib.

"Their costume is not ungraceful, consisting of long, flowing white robes. A cone-shaped taj (diadem), is embroidered with verses from the Koran. Some carry kashkaal (collection boxes), suspended from the neck or shoulder. They also carry with them maces or clubs, and a few carry a horn of some animal. It is seldom blown and is greatly feared, people saying it brings calamity to human beings.

The dervishes may be classed as follows:

"I. Ahly shareyat (the men of the law of Koran).

"II. Ahly Kharawat (men of ruin or without law).

"III. Ajamy (from Ajam that is Iran).

"Ahly Shareyat follow the law of Mohammed strictly, give minajat at the time of death, and sing the Azon on the roofs to call the faithful to prayer; they wail and sing at the time of Moharrum (month of mourning), and when someone dies, they are invited to wail and make the people weep. Some of this class deny themselves sleep and food for three or four days at a time; they repeat God's name a million times, and say that God has one thousand and one names, the repetition of which is considered a great sanctity. Ahly Kharawat (the literal meaning of the word is wilderness, ruinous, careless, without law) beg from door to door, and repeat words and sing until people are glad to give almost anything to get rid of them. The Kharawaty puts up his little tent at the gate of the rich, and stays in it day and night, sometimes for days, weeks, and even months until the demanded amount is given to the darvish—sometimes a few tomans, or a quantity of rice or wheat, or perhaps a sheep.

"Kharawaty are professional opium and arsenic eaters. Some of them do not marry and these dress in a peculiar white garment like a shroud. Ajamy are an irregular class of darvishes and live mostly in Adarbajan.

"As I was anxious to know how some of the rites and offices of darvishes were observed, I made an appointment to go and see for myself. One of the first offices was the receiving of a new candidate. There is only one room in each city where darvishes meet, and here their moorshud teaches the secrets of their society. The homeless and strange ones make this room their home.

"The moorshud, their bishop, received us with many kind and Oriental expressions and showed us a place of honor near himself. The moorshud said, 'I say to my darvishes that Masih (the 'Anointed One,' from the Hebrew, which means Christ) was a darvish like ourselves.' 'Yes,' I replied, 'he became poor and homeless in order to make us rich in his love and heavenly blessings.'

"The moorshud, turning, said, 'We believe, too, that Christ was one of the many manifestations that God had made to this world, of which one of them is Ganaby Amur (Ally). We cannot believe that Christ was crucified. Astaferilla! Astaferilla! (God forbid! God forbid!) that death ever had any power on Issa!' (Mohammedans say that when the Jews came to put hands upon Christ, he escaped, but some one else, whom God had made ready there, was crucified and died instead of Christ, the latter being taken up to heaven.)

"About thirty-five darvishes were sitting around about the room and close to the walls like motionless statues. As soon as they heard the prayer of their candidate and his sponsor, the whole community of darvishes began to say over and over, 'Ya-hoo! Ya-hak!' (God's names). The candidate, before being brought in for the secret ceremony, was rolled in six or seven yards of white material (the sign of a shroud) and covered with it from head to foot. The sponsor said: 'Ya Ali madat' (O strength of Ali).

"Candidate: 'Ya Ali madat.'

"Sponsor to the moorshud: 'This man desires to become a darvish.'

"Moorshud: 'What, you' (to the candidate) 'you wish to become a Darvish! You may be deceiving me. You may wish to steal my rugs, my samowar, or something else that you have eye upon.'

"Candidate: 'No; I love your naphas' (breath, soul, being), 'and I would like to serve you.'

"Moorshud: 'Then I wish you would throw yourself down from that' (pointing to a two-story building).

"Candidate: 'Aywilla' (all right).

"Moorshud: 'You must put out your eyes.'

"Candidate: 'Aywilla.'

"Moorshud: 'You must cut off your hands.'

"Candidate: 'Aywilla; I love your naphas.'

"Then both the sponsor and the candidate walk toward the moorshud and sit before him. The latter takes a plateful of common earth and throws a handful upon the head of the candidate, repeating some mysterious incantations. Then both the sponsor and candidate fall down on their faces and say: 'Hy li lahillila illuhim moaanta malikoo haky lasin." On arising, the moorshud crowns the candidate with the darvish taj (diadem).

"Presently, we found ourselves in a Takrah (large room) and forty or fifty darvishes of all nations sitting camel-like fashion. They began their fanatical incantations which are called zicker (the repetition of certain words like Ya-Hoo and Ya-Hak). I wanted to move, but could not; I wanted to think, but could not; I tried to shake myself, and presently the candidate arose and exposed his shoulder, and the moorshud lighted a piece of explosive rag and put it on the flesh, upon the spot to be burned. He began to repeat some unknown words, and every little while he dropped his finger in a dish of water and rubbed it around the burning rag, so as to limit the scar. It burned till it almost reached the muscle, then the moorshud pressed the thumb upon the spot, and dressed it with some rags. This concluded the initiation—a baptism of fire which many Christians would shrink to undergo. Men on becoming darvishes take another name, and when the scar is burned, they also receive a new name.

"As I was about to leave, a darvish took off his taj (diadem), at the door of the room and brought it and put it at the feet of the moorshud, and went and stood at the door with folded arms darvish fashion, and said 'Hay willa illilla dasty zalum rasidam' (in the name of God, the hand of the cruel I received). Some one had beaten him.

"The moorshud said 'Hoo (God) be thy guide, Hoo be thy helper,' and took the taj and put it on the offended darvish's head and bid him to 'be comforted and arise.' As he did so we left the place.

"HANNAH G. YOSEPH."

A GROUP OF PERSIAN DERVISHES

Some are holding their maces or sticks of their office: others have the Kaskal (collection box). The man in the chair is the moorshud, being tied to signify that he is bound to his office.

· THE · METROPOLITAN · PULPIT ·

. . . THE BALANCES . . .

A Sermon by The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Dan. 5: 27. . . . . Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting BABYLON was the paradise of architecture, and driven out from thence the grandest buildings of modern times are only the evidence of her fall. The site having been selected for the city, two million men were employed in the rearing of her walls and the building of her works. It was a city sixty miles in circumference. There was a trench all around the city, from which the material for the building of the city had been digged. There were twenty-five gates on each side of the city; between every two gates a tower of defence springing into the skies; from each gate on the one side, a street running straight through to the corresponding gate on the other side, so that there were fifty streets fifteen miles long. Through the city ran a branch of the river Euphrates. This river sometimes overflowed its banks, and to keep it from ruining the city, a lake was constructed into which the surplus water of the river would run during the time of freshets, and the water was kept in this artificial lake until time of drought, and then this water would stream down over the city. At either end of the bridge spanning this Euphrates there was a palace—the one palace a mile and a half around, the other palace seven and a half miles around.

The wife of Nebuchadnezzar had been born and brought up in the country, and in a mountainous region, and she could not bear this flat district of Babylon; and so, to please his wife, Nebuchadnezzar built in the midst of the city a mountain four hundred feet high. This mountain was built out into terraces supported on arches. On the top of these arches a layer of flat stones, on the top of that a layer of reeds and bitumen, on the top of that two layers of bricks closely cemented, on the top of that a heavy sheet of lead, and on the top of that the soil placed—the soil so deep that a Lebanon cedar had room to anchor its roots. There were pumps worked by mighty machinery fetching up the water from the Euphrates to this hanging garden, as it was called, so that there were fountains spouting into the sky. Standing below and looking up it must have seemed as if the clouds were in blossom, or as though the sky leaned on the shoulder of a cedar. All this Nebuchadnezzar did to please his wife. Well, she ought to have been pleased. I suppose she was pleased. If that would not please her, nothing would. There was in that city also the temple of Belus, with towers—one tower the eighth of a mile high, in which there was an observatory where astronomers talked to the stars. There was in that temple an image, just one image, which would cost what would be our fifty-two million dollars.

Oh what a city! The earth never saw anything like it, never will see anything like it. And yet I have to tell you that it is going to be destroyed. The king and his princes are at a feast. They are all intoxicated. Pour out the rich wine into the chalices! Drink to the health of the king! Drink to the glory of Babylon! Drink to a great future! A thousand lords reel intoxicated. The king seated upon a chair, with vacant look, as intoxicated men will—with vacant look stared at the wall. But soon that vacant look takes on intensity, and it is an affrighted look; and all the princes begin to look and wonder what is the matter, and they look at the same point on the wall. And then there drops a darkness into the room, that puts out the blaze of the golden plate, and out of the sleeve of the darkness there comes a finger—a finger of fiery terror circling around and circling around as though it would write; and then it comes up and with sharp tip of flame it inscribes on the plastering of the wall the doom of the king: "Weighed in the balances, and found wanting." The bang of heavy fists against the gates of the palace is followed by the breaking in of the doors. A thousand gleaming knives strike into a thousand quivering hearts. Now Death is king, and he is seated on a throne of corpses. In that hall there is a balance lifted. God swung it. On one side of the balance are put Belshazzar's opportunities, on the other side of the balance are put Belshazzar's sins. The sins come down. His opportunities go up. Weighed in the balances—found wanting.

There has been a great deal of cheating in our country with false weights and measures and balances, and the Government, to change that state of things, appointed commissioners whose business it was to stamp weights and measures and balances, and a great deal of the wrong has been corrected. But still, after all, there is no such thing as a perfect balance on earth. The chain may break, or some of the metal may be clipped, or in some way the equipoise may be disturbed. You cannot always depend upon earthly balances. A pound is not always a pound and you may pay for one thing and get another; but in the balance which is suspended to the throne of God, a pound is a pound, and right is right, and wrong is wrong, and a soul is a soul, and eternity is eternity. God has a perfect bushel, and a perfect peck, and a perfect gallon. When merchants weigh their goods in the wrong way, then the Lord weighs the goods again. If from the imperfect measure the merchant pours out what pretends to be a gallon of oil, and there is less than a gallon, God knows it, and he calls upon his recording angel to mark it: "So much wanting in that measure of oil." The farmer comes in from the country. He has apples to sell. He has an imperfect measure. He pours out the apples from this imperfect measure. God recognizes it. He says to the recording angel: "Mark down so many apples too few—an imperfect measure." We may cheat ourselves, and we may cheat the world, but we cannot cheat God, and in the great day of judgment it will be found out that what we learned in boyhood at school is correct: that twenty hundred weight makes a ton, and one hundred and twenty solid feet make a cord of wood. No more, no less, and a religion which does not take hold of this life, as well as the life to come, is no religion at all.

But, my friends, that is not the style of balances I am to speak of to-day, that is not the kind of weights and measures. I am to speak of that kind of balances which weigh principles, weigh churches, weigh men, weigh nations, and weigh worlds. "What!" you say; "is it possible that our world is to be weighed?" Yes. Why, you would think if God put on one side of the balances suspended from the throne the Alps and the Pyrenees and the Himalayas and Mount Washington, and all the cities of the earth, they would crush it. No! No! The time will come when God will sit down on the white throne to see the world weighed, and on one side will be the world's opportunities, and on the other side the world's sins.

So God will weigh churches. He takes a great church. That church, great according to the worldly estimate, must be weighed. He puts it on one side the balances, and the minister and the choir, and the building that cost its hundreds of thousands of dollars. He puts them on one side the balances. On the other side of the scale he puts what that church ought to be, what its consecration ought to be, what its sympathy for the poor ought to be, what its devotion to all good ought to be. That is on one side. That side comes down, and the church, not being able to stand the test, rises in the balances. It does not make any difference about your magnificent machinery. A church is built for one thing—to save souls. If it saves a few souls when it might save a multitude of souls, God will spew it out of his mouth. Weighed and found wanting!

So we perceive that God estimates nations. How many times he has put the Spanish monarchy into the scales, and found it insufficient, and condemned it! The French Empire was placed on one side of the scales, and God weighed the French Empire, and Napoleon said: "Have I not enlarged the boulevards? Did I not kindle the glories of the Champs Elysees? Have I not adorned the Tuileries? Have I not built the gilded opera house?" Then God weighed the nation, and he put on one side the scales the Emperor and the boulevards, and the Tuileries, and the Champs Elysees, and the gilded opera house, and on the other side he puts that man's abominations, that man's libertinism, that man's selfishness, that man's godless ambition. This last came down, and all the brilliancy of the scene vanished. What is that voice coming up from Sedan? Weighed and found wanting!

People say there is a day of judgment coming. My friends, every day is a day of judgment, and you and I to-day are being canvassed, inspected, weighed. Here are the balances of the sanctuary. They are lifted, and we must all be weighed. Who will come and be weighed first? Here is a moralist who volunteers. He is one of the most upright men in the country. He comes. "Well, my brother, get in—get into the balances now, and be weighed." But as he gets into the balances, I say: "What is that bundle you have along with you?" "Oh," he says, "that is my reputation for goodness, and kindness, and charity, and generosity, and kindliness generally." "Oh, my brother! we cannot weigh that: we are going to weigh you—you. Now stand in the scales. I put on your side the scales all the good deeds you ever did, all the kind words you ever uttered: but on the other side the scales I put this weight which God says I must put there—on the other side the scales and opposite to yours I put this weight: "By the deeds of the law shall no flesh living be justified." Weighed and found wanting.

Still, the balances of the sanctuary are suspended and we are ready to weigh any who come. Who shall be the next? Well, here is a formalist. He comes and he gets into the balances, and as he gets in I see that all his religion is in genuflexious and in outward observances. As he gets into the scales I say: "What is that you have in this pocket?" "Oh!" he says, "that is Westminster Assembly Catechism." I say "Very good. What have you in the other pocket?" "Oh!" he says, "that is the Heidelberg Catechism." "Very good. What is that you have under your arm, standing in this balance of the sanctuary?" "Oh!" he says, "that is a church record." "Very good. What are these books on your side the balances?" "Oh!" he says, "those are 'Calvin's Institutes.'" "My brother, we are not weighing books; we are weighing you. It cannot be that you are depending for your salvation upon your orthodoxy. Do you not know that the creeds and the forms of religion are merely the scaffolding for the building? You certainly are not going to mistake the scaffolding for the temple. Do you not know that men have gone to perdition with a catechism in their pocket?" "But," says the man, "I cross myself often." "Ah! that will not save you." "But," says the man, "I am sympathetic for the poor." "That will not save you." Says the man, "I sat at the communion table." "That will not save you." "But," says the man, "I have had my name on the church record." "That will not save you." "But I have been a professor of religion forty years." "That will not save you. Stand there on your side the balances, and I will give you the advantage—I will let you have all the creeds, all the church records, all the Christian conventions that were ever held, all the communion tables that were ever built, on your side the balances. On the other side the balances I must put what God says I must put there. I put this million-pound weight on the other side the balances: 'Having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.' Weighed and found wanting!

Still the balances are suspended. Are there any others who would like to be weighed, or who will be weighed? You have come gambling. He gets into the scales. I can very easily see what his whole life is made up of. Stocks, dividends, percentages, [illegible] get into these balances and be weighed—weighed for this life, and weighed for the life to come." He gets in. I find that the two great questions in his life are: "How cheaply can I buy these goods?" and "How dearly can I sell them?" I find he admires heaven because it is a land of gold, and money must be "easy." All the week he has been weighing fruits, weighing meats, weighing ice, weighing coals, weighing confections, weighing worldly and perishable commodities, not realizing the fact that he himself has been weighed. "On your side the balances, O worldling! I will give you full advantage. I put on your side all the banking-houses, all the store-houses, all the cargoes, all the insurance companies, all the factories, all the silver, all the gold, all the money-vaults, all the safe deposits—all on your side. But it does not add one ounce, for at the very moment we are congratulating you on your fine house and upon your princely income, God and the angels are writing in regard to your soul: 'Weighed and found wanting!'"

But I must go faster and speak of the final scrutiny. The fact is, my friends, we are moving on amid astounding realities. These pulses which now are drumming the march of life may, after a while, call a halt. We walk on a hair-hung bridge over chasms. All around us are dangers lurking, ready to spring on us from ambush. We lie down at night, not knowing whether we shall arise in the morning. We start out for our occupations, not knowing whether we shall come back. Crowns being burnished for thy brow, or bolts forged for thy prison. Angels of light ready to shout at thy deliverance, or fiends of darkness stretching out skeleton hands to pull thee down into ruin consummate!

Suddenly the judgment will be here. The angel with one foot on the sea and the other foot on the land, will swear by him that liveth forever and ever that time shall be no longer: "Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." Hark to the jarring of the mountains. Why, that is the setting down of the scales, the balances. And then there is a flash as if from a cloud, but it is the glitter of the shining balances, and they are hoisted, and all nations are to be weighed. The unforgiven get in on this side the balances. They may have weighed themselves and pronounced a flattering decision. The world may have weighed them and pronounced them moral. Now they are being weighed in God's balances—the balances that can make no mistake. All the property gone, all the titles of distinction gone, all the worldly successes gone; there is a soul, absolutely nothing but a soul, an immortal soul, a never dying soul, a soul stripped of all worldly advantages—a soul on one side the scales. On the other side the balances are wasted Sabbaths, disregarded sermons, ten thousand opportunities of mercy and pardon that were cast aside. They are on the other side the scales, and there God stands, and in the presence of men and devils, cherubim and archangel he announces, while groaning earthquake, and crackling conflagration, and judgment trumpet and everlasting storm repeat it: "Weighed, and found wanting."

But, say some who are Christians: "Certainly you don't mean to say that we will have to get into the balances? Our sins are all pardoned, our title to heaven is secure. Certainly you are not going to put us in the balances?" "Yes, my brother. We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, and on that day you are going to be weighed. Oh follower of Christ! you get into the balances. The bell of the judgment is ringing. You must get into the balances. You get in on this side. On the other side the balances we will place all the opportunities of good which you did not improve, all the attainments in piety which you might have had, but which you refused to take. We place them all on the other side. They go down, and your soul rises in the scale.

You cannot weigh against all those imperfections. Well, then, we must give you the advantage, and on your side of the scale we will place all the good deeds that you have ever done, and all the kind words that you have ever uttered. Too light yet! Well, we must put on your side all the consecration of your life, all the holiness of your life, all the prayers of your life, all the faith of your Christian life. Too light yet! Come mighty men of the past, and get in on that side the scales. Come, Payson and Doddridge and Baxter, get in on that side the scales and make them come down, that this righteous one may be saved. They come, and they get in the scales. Too light yet! Come, the martyrs, the Latimers, the Wickliffes, the men who suffered at the stake for Christ. Get in on this side the Christian's balances, and see if you cannot help him weight it aright. They come and get in. Too light! Come, angels of God on high. Let not the righteous perish with the wicked. They get in on this side the balances. Too light yet! I put on this side the balances all the sceptres of light, all the thrones of power, all the crowns of glory. Too light yet! But just at that point, Jesus, the Son of God, comes up to the balances, and he puts one of his scarred feet on your side, and the balances begin to tremble from top to bottom. Then he puts both of his scarred feet on the balances, and the Christian's side comes down with a stroke that sets all the bells of heaven ringing. That Rock of Ages heavier than any other weight!

But says the Christian: "Am I to be allowed to get off so easily?" Yes. If some one should come and put on the other side the scales all your imperfections, all your envies, all your jealousies, all your inconsistencies of life, they would not budge the scales with Christ on your side the scales. Go free! There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus. Chains broken, prison houses opened, sins pardoned. Go free! Weighed in the balances, and nothing, nothing wanted. Oh! what a glorious hope! Will you accept it this day? Christ making up for what you lack. Christ the atonement for all your sins. Who will accept him? Will not this whole audience say, "I am insufficient, I am a sinner, I am lost by reason of my transgressions, but Christ has paid it all. My Lord, and my God, my life, my pardon, my heaven. Lord Jesus, I hail thee!" Oh, if you could only understand the worth of that sacrifice which I have represented to you under a figure—if you could understand the worth of that sacrifice, this whole audience would this moment accept Christ and be saved.

We go away off, or back into history, to get some illustration by which we may set forth what Christ has done for us. We need not go so far. I saw a vehicle behind a runaway horse dashing through the street, a mother and her two children in the carriage. The horse dashed along as though to hurl them to death, and a mounted policeman, with a shout clearing the way, and the horse at full run, attempted to seize those runaway horses to save a calamity, when his own horse fell and rolled over him. He was picked up half dead. Why were our sympathies so stirred? Because he was badly hurt, and hurt for others. But I tell you to-day of how Christ, the Son of God, on the blood red horse of sacrifice, came for our rescue, and rode down the sky, and rode unto death for our rescue. Are not your hearts touched? That was a sacrifice for you and me. O thou who didst ride on the red horse of sacrifice! come and ride through this world on the white horse of victory!

· A · Mother · of · New · York · Churches ·

The Centennial of "St. Mark's, of the Bouwerie"—The Church History Dates Back to Petrus Stuyvesant's Chapel of Dutch Colonial Days

PETRUS STUYVESANT

THE recent celebration of St. Mark's P. E. Church, on the corner of Stuyvesant Sq., E. Tenth street and Second Avenue, was an interesting event in the religious history of New York City. The spot upon which St. Mark's stands has been longer occupied as a house of religious worship than any other in the city. The edifice itself is practically the same as when consecrated May 9, 1799, by Right Rev. Samuel Provoost, first Bishop of New York, assisted by Rev. Dr. Benjamin Moore, who became, later, the second Bishop of New York. The establishment of the congregation antedated that. Hence, this venerable institution is a metropolitan landmark. One of our illustrations shows the church as it was when Bishop Provoost dedicated it; another, as it stands now. The steeple was added in 1829; the pillared porch in 1856; and at some period the grey stone walls were stuccoed brown.

The interior is not large. It has undergone slight, if any changes, from Revolutionary times. The roll of membership shows that many descendants of the quaintly-garbed old Knickerbockers who gathered on this spot every Sunday afternoon to hear Dominie Soleyns preach in Petrus Stuyvesant's chapel, claim St. Mark's as their spiritual home, although they have moved their residences farther up town. On the walls, one after another memorial tablet has appeared, as testimonial to some godly man or woman who gave his or her life to pious works. During the centennial week when the old brown church was almost covered outside with United States flags, beautiful plants were blooming in all the windows and on the brackets under each tablet, until the whole interior seemed encircled with fair and fragant tribute to the honorable and pious dead. Green palms decked the altar where many ministers have stood.

The first rector of the church was Rev. John Callahan; the last is Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Rylance, Rector Emeritus. Dr. Rylance is in Europe, and in his absence the three centennial services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Babcock, minister in charge, the Ven. Archdeacon Tiffany, Dean E. A. Hoffman of the Theological Seminary, Rev. Drs. Harris, Kimber, Greer, Rev. Messrs. Percy S. Grant, Richard Cobden and Wm. A. Harris. The sermon on Sunday was preached by Bishop Potter. On Monday addresses were delivered by Dr. Huntingdon of Grace Church, Dr. Rainsford of St. George's, Dean Van Amringe, of Columbia University (one of whose presidents was a rector of St. Mark's), Rev. Dr. Richey (who holds in the General Theological Seminary St. Mark's chair of Theology, endowed by Peter Stuyvesant), Rev. Dr. Jacob Shipman, and Rev. Dr. E. B. Coe, representing the Reformed Dutch Church which divides with old Trinity parental right of interest in St. Mark's. The historical address of Tuesday, a most interesting discourse, was delivered by Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of Trinity.

The plot of ground upon which St. Mark's stands was once a part of the "Bouwerie," as the farm of Governor Petrus Stuyvesant was called. This farm covered the whole of the eleventh, seventeenth, and a large part of the sixteenth wards of the present city.

What is now the Bowery, probably the most cosmopolitan street in the world, was then a country lane running between the "bouweries," or farms, of the Dutch burghers. Adjoining his manor-house, the old Governor had a small chapel built to accommodate people who found a journey to the "old Dutch church in the fort"—the only church then in New York—too long a walk. The little chapel was of the Dutch Reformed faith. It had fallen into decay when the present church was built upon its foundations and incorporated as "the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Mark's in the Bouwerie." In 1793, Peter Stuyvesant, grandson of the old Dutch Governor, and a vestryman at Old Trinity, made an offer to the corporation to donate a plot of ground, 150 by 190 feet, and $2,000 if the corporation would erect a church there. Trinity accepted, added a considerable sum of money, and later thirty lots out of the property known as the Consolidated Church Farm, which had been conveyed to Trinity by grant of Queen Anne. St. Mark's still owns and derives some income from a number of these lots. Others have been sold at various times to develop outside work. Hence it will be seen that St. Mark's is the daughter of the old Dutch Church and of Old Trinity also; and that points of wide historic interest centre in this church and in the graveyard surrounding it.

A tablet, about which green vines clamber lovingly, is let into the side wall shown in our picture of the church as it stands to-day. The tablet bears these words: "In this vault lies buried Petrus Stuyvesant, late Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of Amsterdam, in New Netherlands, now called New York, and of the Dutch West India Islands. Died in A. D. 167–, aged 80 years." (The last figure of the year is not clear reading.) Under a plain slab in the green churchyard, an early Vice-President of the United States, Daniel D. Tompkins. The family vaults of Hamilton Fish of Revolutionary fame; of Abraham Schermerhorn, and other men prominently identified with local and national history are also in this resting-place, which, like the burying-ground of Old Trinity on Broadway, is divided only by an iron fence from the rush and tumult of a metropolitan thoroughfare. On one side lie the quiet dead; on the other electric cars speed by, and during business hours hurrying multitudes continually pass. It was from a vault in this churchyard that the remains of A. T. Stewart, which have never yet been recovered, were so mysteriously removed.

A quiet and refined congregation of people who treasure the faith of their forefathers fills the pews each Sunday. Yet St. Mark's, rich as it is in traditions of the past, is fully abreast with younger institutions in progressive social and evangelical work. In 1856, mission work was undertaken on the East Side, and afterwards on West Forty-eighth street, where a chapel was built as a memorial to Rev. Dr. Henry Anthon. That institution, transplanted to Madison Avenue and East Sixty-sixth Street, is now the church of All Souls, an independent parish ministered to by Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton. Dr. Anthon was a pioneer in institutional church work, and while he was St. Mark's rector, several of the church farm lots were sold to carry out his plans. At the present Chapel of St. Mark's, on Tompkins Square, a great deal of mission and industrial work, embracing a Day Nursery, Girls' Guild, Athletic Club, Temperance Societies, Dressmaking and Cooking Classes, Mothers' Meetings, and various very interesting features are carried on. This institution, established at a cost of some $200,000, is largely the gift of Rutherford Stuyvesant, who raised it as a memorial to his wife.

THE CHURCH OF ST. MARK'S 1899 —REV. DR. JOSEPH H. RYLANCE, RECTOR EMERITUS

The Bowery Mission

The following contributions in aid of the work of the Bowery Mission have been received:

Previously acknowledged	$349 55
Jennie A. Killian	1 00
P. M. Barrow	1 00
Mrs. T. A. Murray	3 00
I. M. C. and Sister, Redwood Falls	75
Mrs. L. C. Allen	2 00
Louis De Lancett	1 00
R. W. Jones	2 00
J. Allie Finley	1 00
M. Elberson	1 00
M. C. T. Leonard	1 00
Total	$363 55

ST. MARK'S CHURCH, 1799

Practically the same building as the church of to-day

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Christ Crucified

S. S. Lesson for June 4. John 19: 17-30
Golden Text, Gal. 2: 20

THE Scripture must be fulfilled. In the beginning of his ministry the Lord said to John the Baptist regarding his baptism, "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." (Matt. 3: 15). And in every detail of his life on earth the Lord Jesus was fulfilling that which was written of him. All the injustice, the wicked, persecuting hatred of the chief priests and elders of the people did not exceed "all things that were written of him" (Acts 13: 29). Thus when Pilate's iniquitous sentence was passed upon him under pressure from those whom this ruler was appointed to govern, Jesus made no resistance. They took him therefore, "and led him away. And he bearing his cross (which was afterwards borne by another, Matt. 27: 32), went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha, where they crucified him and two others with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst." He was fulfilling Scripture. "Surely he hath borne our sins," etc., (Isa. 53: 4).

Do we realize fully what these words mean? Do we see how unspeakably abhorrent our sins must be in the sight of God, that no other way could be found consistently with his holiness by which sin could be forgiven and put away? He, the Holy One, who "knew no sin" must be "made sin for us" (II. Cor. 5: 21), must himself know all the overwhelming shame and confusion which comes upon us when we see ourselves, our unspeakable loathsomeness! That which is revealed to us when we see him: he must know as much as though he had himself been the guilty one! He was made sin for us! What it must have been for him, the unsullied, all Holy One, to bear on him the iniquity of us all, who can conceive? Oh let us bow down before him in shame and confusion: but also in our overwhelming gratitude and unspeakable adoration. "By his stripes we are healed." God be praised indeed, but let us not forget at what a cost.

Yes, he fulfilled it all to the very letter, and in the fulness of the spirit of what was written. He knew from the Scripture that he should not die alone; that to heap insult on their flagrant breach of justice, his enemies would crucify real evil-doers with him, that it might be as he himself said: "This that is written must yet be accomplished in Me, and he was reckoned among the transgressors." Nothing is so unbearable to human nature as to be unjustly accused, and to be classed with those whose deeds are utterly foreign and abhorrent to us. But the patient Lamb of God accepted all his Father's will without question, and submitted without any protest to be numbered among the transgressors!

Pilate wrote a title and put upon the cross, in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, that all might read, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." This did not please the chief priests and they demurred, saying, "Write not the King of the Jews, but that he said, I am the King of the Jews." For once Pilate was firm. He answered: "What I have written I have written."

And that Scripture must be fulfilled, it was written in Ps. 22: 18: "They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture." The soldiers, utterly ignorant of this Scripture, took his garments and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also his coat [or tunic]. Now the coat was without seams, woven from the top throughout. They said therefore among themselves, "let us not rend it, but cast lots for it whose it shall be." Thus God's word, which cannot be broken (John 10: 35), was accomplished.

Just before he yielded up his spirit to the Father, there remained just one short word which had not been fulfilled. "Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished that the Scripture might be fulfilled, 'and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink' (Ps. 69: 21), saith, 'I thirst.'" They filled a sponge with vinegar and put it to his mouth. He could not die until all was fulfilled.

Before this, one little incident occurred which cannot go unnoticed. "Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end" (John 13: 1). There stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary, the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene. When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, "Woman, behold thy son!" Then saith he to the disciple, "Behold thy mother!" And from that hour that disciple took her into his own home. At such an hour he could make provision for his loved ones! Can we ever doubt him now that he is no more a suffering Saviour, but is wearing a glorified human body, sitting at the right hand of God—can we ever doubt his tender care for us?

When Jesus, therefore, had received the vinegar, he said, "It is finished," and he bowed his head, and gave up his spirit (R. V.). His life was finished, his death was finished, the redemption of the world was finished: he had done all—no more remains to be done. All our salvation, our sanctification, cleansing and victory over death, when our Lord shall come show out of his finished work. But he identified himself with us, "made sin" and "made a curse" for us (II. Cor. 5: 12; Gal. 3: 13), that we might identify ourselves with him. Paul the Apostle knew what this meant when he said, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, [illegible] (Gal. 2: 20). He could go yet farther and glory in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom he said the world is crucified to me and I unto the world (Gal. [illegible]).

"NOW THERE STOOD BY THE CROSS HIS MOTHER AND HIS MOTHER'S SISTER"

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

PAINFUL as it is to dwell on the pathetic scene of our Lord's death, it must not be passed over, lest we lose the view, that ought always to be present with us, of the unutterable love which voluntarily endured such suffering for the redemption of the world. We must remember that this was a Man of thirty-three years, in the prime of life, and with a body sensitive, as is always the case with men of high poetic temperament. All the elements were present for acute agony. And the fiendish delight in witnessing suffering was glutted by seeing the death agony of a crucified man. The cross was laid on the ground and the victim was stripped and stretched upon it. A soldier held one of the victim's hands extended while another drove a nail through the palm. The other hand was similarly fixed to the wood: then the feet were crossed and one nail driven through the insteps. Then the cross, with the victim so attached to it, was raised to an upright position and dropped with a jerk into a hole that had meanwhile been dug to receive it. The victim's feet were usually not more than two feet from the ground, so his executioners and the spectators could easily converse with him, while he hung suspended. Generally there was a slight projection on the cross, on which the victim partially sat, so that his weight [illegible] cruel death we can scarcely conceive. The nails in the hands and feet sent the blood coursing at fever rate through the body, and the hot sun, shining on the bare head, increased the misery. There could be no movement, save of the head, to re[illegible] posture, no cessation of the excruciating pain. And this continued in the case of Christ for six long hours, from nine in the morning until three in the afternoon. Yet physicians tell us that this was not the cause of Christ's death. Agonizing as were his physical sufferings, his mental anguish was worse. It was that which killed him. It literally broke his heart. The medical explanation of his death is that the heart was ruptured; and proof of the fact is furnished by the blood and water which flowed from the sac, in which the heart is enclosed, when the soldier pierced it. Crucifixion alone did not kill so speedily. The victim was often two days in dying, and in the case of the two thieves, it was necessary to add to their torture by breaking their legs, so that they might be dead before six o'clock. Jesus was overwhelmed by spiritual suffering. Isaiah tells us the reason: "The Lord laid upon him the iniquity of us all."

Pilate wrote a title. It is remarkable that the brief inscription was not accurately remembered. No two of the four Evangelists agree as to the exact words which were written on the board. This fact ought forever to silence those unwise teachers who contend for the absolute verbal inspiration of the Bible. It does not signify to us whether Pilate simply wrote, "The King of the Jews," as Mark says; or "This is the King of the Jews," as Luke says; or "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews," as Matthew says; or "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews," as John says. The meaning is the same in all cases, and this, after all, is the essential matter. But the differences show that the idea of the Holy Spirit dictating to the writers the very words they were to write, cannot be true. Such inscriptions it was common to suspend on the crosses of evil-doers, so that passers-by might see and take warning. Pilate saw in the custom a way to vex the priests, who had forced him to do a thing he did not want to do. They protested, but he would not change it. Jesus, therefore, by official statement, died as a King. It is as a King that he would deal with us. A man who attended revival meetings in New York three years ago, went to his minister in a state of anxiety. How was it, he asked, that he could not get peace? He said that he had accepted Christ as his Saviour and was trusting wholly in him for salvation. "Have you accepted Christ as your King?" the minister asked. "Have you put away your sins, as he commanded, resolving as far as in you lies not to sin again?" The man answered: "Well, no, but I hope that I shall be forgiven." The minister said: "You never will: Christ does not forgive on those terms. You must accept him as your King, and abjure sin, otherwise you will get no peace."

Woman, behold thy son. It was characteristic of Christ that in that hour of anguish, his concern should be about some one else. He could not say much, for he was near death; but the fragmentary utterance was enough. John understood that his master was confiding a precious commission to him as a last legacy, and he took the broken hearted mother to his home. A few years ago, a humble servant of Christ, in Brooklyn, N. Y., heard of a widow, a devoted Christian, who in her old age was penniless and sick. He was very poor, himself, having a family to support on a very small income. But the condition of this widow preyed on his mind. What ought he to do? He went to one and another trying to get some richer man to take charge of her, but no one would do it. "Let her go to the poor-house," they said. Finally he took her into his own household. One of his well-to-do friends saw her there and blamed him for taking an additional burden on himself. "I was obliged to do it," he said. "I am sure that Christ loves her and I cannot bear that anyone whom he loves shall suffer want so long as I have a roof over my head." So like the Apostle John. "He took her unto his own home."

· An · Evangelist · Countess ·

The Wonderful Life-Story of Adeline Schimmelmann, Lady-of-Honor to the German Empress, who Left Royal Court, Hereditary Castle, Title and Influence to Work for the Master Among the Lowly

(See pictures on first page)

OUR readers, who have already been informed through these columns of the good work of that Christian noblewoman of Denmark, Countess Adeline Schimmelmann, will be interested in the following letter, giving a fuller history than has yet been published of this remarkable lady. The writer is Mr. George Williams, of De Kalb, Ill.

"There came recently to De Kalb, Ill., a person of whom you probably have heard through the work she does, the Countess Adeline Schimmelmann. Perhaps in the life of this noble woman, whom the Lord hath led in such wondrous ways, there are facts of general interest for the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is certainly an exceptional thing to see a Countess doing mission work. What led her into this work? Not her birth, nor the way in which she was brought up and lived till her thirtieth year; although her rank, her education, her experiences in the world surely prepared her to become the fitting instrument which she now is in the hand of God.

"Adeline, Countess Schimmelmann, the daughter of Count Schimmelmann of Lindenborg, one of Denmark's greatest noblemen, was born at his castle, Ahrendsburg, near Hamburg, in Holstein; thus, by nationality a Dane. The Countess was brought up in Germany, her mother being German, and the family staying mostly on the estates near Hamburg. When only three years old, the young lady had been presented at court in Copenhagen, to the late Queen Charlotte Amalie. Shortly after the Franco-Prussian war, she was presented to the late German Empress, Augusta, who fell immediately in love with the handsome young lady. Charmed by the beauty, the sweet disposition, the fine manners, the natural tact and the simplicity of Countess Adeline, she wished to retain her at the court in Berlin, and made her a lady of honor in attendance upon herself. From that time the young Countess was one of the most fashionable court ladies ever seen in Europe's palaces; the late German Emperor, Frederick, introduced her once to other monarchs as 'the most charming young lady in Germany and several other kingdoms beside.' The longer Countess Adeline stayed at Berlin, the more Empress Augusta discovered what a precious jewel she possessed in this girl of seventeen, whose heart and mind were pure, sincere, simple, and full of good and kind qualities; and she treated the young lady like a daughter.

"As beauty of the court, honored and beloved, the Countess enjoyed society life and saw only the very best side of all that the world could give; everything that money, influence, honor, art and science could bestow, was hers. Dark and sad things, the world's poverty and misery, were carefully hidden from those kind, clear blue eyes, which bore witness that her young pure heart knew nothing of wrong and evil.

"Her parents were members of the Lutheran church, the State church of Denmark, in which the Countess was raised and to which she still belongs. From childhood she prayed, read the Scriptures, received the sacraments and was considered an excellent Christian. But she did not find full satisfaction in her faithful observance of these outward forms of Christianity. She felt that something was lacking. God revealed to her that she did not keep the first commandment, to love God with all the heart, but only with divided affections. She tried to so love God, but felt that she could not; then the Divine Voice came to her, saying that her salvation depended not upon how much she loved him, but how much he loved her, giving his only Son, Jesus Christ, whose blood cleanseth from all sin. Peace and joy came then to her troubled soul and she rejoiced in the Lord.

"By this time, her father, whom she loved most on earth, and whose sunshine and joy she was, died; and all worldly pleasure lost its worth for Countess Adeline. To divert her thoughts from her own sorrows, the Empress proposed that the Countess should, as Imperial Representative, visit all the prisons in Berlin. It was then that the distinguished lady, who up to that time knew nothing of distress, got a glimpse of the sin, the toil and tears of this world. Her heart, by nature kind and sympathetic, and filled now with the love of Christ, went out to all deserted and neglected ones.

"A few months later, on the way to Denmark, the Countess was accidentally detained in a different place from the one she intended to reach, because of her trunks having gone a wrong way. It was a lonely island in the Baltic Sea where thousands of fishermen live by hard and perilous toil; going out for weeks in open boats to the fishing-grounds, getting no warm meals, having no home and making very little money. When they came ashore, nobody cared for them; their few pennies were soon gone for whisky; crimes were frequent among those rough people, who had no friend. Seeing their plight, Countess Schimmelmann determined to establish a free kitchen for these men, where they could get at every hour warm coffee or a good meal. Think of this—a lady who up to that time had cared only for fashions, dainty toilettes and society, now a lonely woman among thousands of rough seamen, cooking for them, providing for them with her own means. What made this immense change possible? Only the love of God that was in her heart. Think of the dauntless courage of it—a timid woman living among people with whom the police did not like to interfere. Soon the effect of her work became apparent; the men stopped drinking, swearing, and playing cards; they waxed gentle and quiet, feeling that this woman whom they called 'our mother,' had a loving heart for them. Naturally her impelling nature could not be hidden; she told them of the love of Christ; God's Spirit gave the right words to her lips, words which touched those cold hearts, so that many men were converted. For years she stayed with the fishermen, though it was unpleasing to her proud relations. Feeling her isolation, the Countess adopted little twin boys, a fisherman's sons, and educated them as her own children, proposing that they should assist in her work, which was growing from year to year. Later, she took a third, an older boy into her house, who soon became a great help. She bought a cutter, and sailed about among the fisher fleet, dispensing coffee and food, and telling them of the Gospel. She came in contact with sailors of all nations, to whom she, as the result of her excellent education, could speak in six different languages.

"The Lord enlarged her means so that in addition to this work among the Pomeranian fishermen, she was enabled to start a sailor's mission. Meetings were held, tracts and gospels distributed on board ships sailing under all flags and in all harbors, and the work was attended with great blessing.

"But persecution came to the Countess by her own brethren, who were angry with her because of her mission work. She was kidnapped and put into a lunatic asylum. But in all her hardships Christ upheld and made her more than victorious. He strengthened her, kept her mind free, her thoughts clear, her heart quiet, though she shed many bitter tears. Finally inquiries about the well known lady were instituted, and her whereabouts discovered. Five weeks of this unjust imprisonment had passed before she was liberated, but she had suffered for Jesus' sake and that is never without reward. Parliament interested itself in her case, the whole country was on her side, and she became one of the best known and most popular persons in Denmark. Her Gospel meetings were overflowing, and she spoke, 'not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts.' Her mission homes that had been destroyed by her persecutors were rebuilt; the cutter started again; her adopted sons were restored to her; her fortune was partly regained, and her name was honored as that of a brave, true, and pious lady.

"The Lord enabled her to keep her promise, given when she was kidnapped, to do three times more mission work—more than ever if she should be delivered from imprisonment. She secured of Prince Waldemar, of Denmark, a racing boat—the schooner yacht Trimmelom, changed the ship's name to Duen, and hoisted on the main top her light-blue flag bearing a white dove, and with the prayer that God's Spirit might in some way touch everybody who came on board, set sail on her work for sailors of all climes. This private yacht, now the movable home for the Countess and her sons, sailed under command of an excellent captain and manned by a well-trained crew, from port to port. The lady's health being broken by the tortures she had undergone, it seemed almost impossible for her to continue her active work of holding meetings; yet God gave her strength day by day, and Countess Schimmelmann preached the Gospel not only to sailors and fishermen, but also to large crowds of workingmen on land.

THE LATE ROSWELL P. FLOWER

"People of all classes came to her meetings, whether held in Denmark, Germany, England or Italy, and Countess Adeline Schimmelmann's International Mission became a reality, growing from year to year in extent and in its power to carry a blessing to thousands of human souls.

"So the Countess came last year, following what she felt to be a call from God, to this country, her Duen sailing across the Atlantic with her eldest son and eight helpers on board, while she crossed in a White Star liner to New York, and met the yacht at Montreal. From Montreal the little craft sailed up the St. Lawrence, anchoring first on United States ground in lovely Alexandria Bay, where the distinguished guest was received with American hospitality. Entering our lakes, the Duen visited all larger places on the shores, as Rochester, Buffalo and Detroit. It was in Detroit that on one dark night the Countess going ashore for a meeting, fell into the river. She did not utter a single cry; her faith in God sustained her and enabled her to retain her presence of mind; as she was sinking the third time, her son and one of her sailors succeeded in rescuing her. She was saved, she felt, to go on to her work in Chicago.

"Finally the boat brought its noble mistress to the Western metropolis, 6,000 miles away from her home-country. For the winter the Duen was transformed from ocean flyer into free kitchen, where during the four months from December to March over 50,000 homeless men, desolate and without work, found food and shelter for Jesus' sake. The Countess has held hundreds of meetings, bringing the Gospel of Jesus Christ to thousands of people; speaking in their own languages to Americans, Germans, Skandinavians; inviting members of all churches and denominations; bringing many souls to Christ and awakening many that had become lukewarm. Thousands will stand up in the Judgment Day and bless this woman who rescued them from death and told them of Christ's love.

Ex-Governor Flower's Death

THE announcement of the sudden death of ex-Governor Roswell P. Flower, was received with widespread interest and regret. On the morning of May 12th, he had left his business cares behind him and gone to Eastport, L. I., for a day's fishing. He was apparently in robust health. That night, at 10.30, he was dead, having succumbed to an attack of indigestion and heart failure.

It was by indefatigable energy and industry, directed by a clear and strong intellect, that Mr. Flower reached his position of power and influence. He began life as a farmer boy in Jefferson Co., N. Y. In the summer months he made the money which paid his expenses during the winter terms, graduated at sixteen, became a teacher, a worker in a brickyard, a railroad magnate, a Congressman, and finally Governor of his State. As Governor, he gave an honest and effective administration. On leaving office, he gave his undivided energy to the development of the vast enterprises commanded by him.

In business and public life, his honesty was unquestioned, and he was a great patron of industry. That feature of his character in which readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be most interested is his career as a public benefactor. At Theresa, his birthplace in Jefferson County, stands a beautiful Presbyterian Church, built by him in honor of his parents. St. Thomas' Home and Chapel in 59th St., and the Flower Hospital at 63d St. and Ave. A, New York City, are monuments to his generosity. The St. Thomas institution was a memorial to his son. Outwardly brusque, Mr. Flower was at heart tender as a woman. During his first year as Governor he pardoned 95 convicts: the second, 110. He was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but his benefactions, public and private, were undenominational. On Saturday, May 13, many poor men and women who had been helped by him mingled with the carriages of wealthy friends which rolled up to the door of his home where he lay in his last rest. Mr. Flower was in his sixty-fourth year.

How to Kill Jealousy

There were two business men—merchants—and there was great rivalry between them. One was converted. He went to his minister and said:

"I am still jealous of that man, and I do not know how to overcome it."

"Well," he said, "if a man comes into your store to buy goods, and you cannot supply him, just send him over to your neighbor."

He said he wouldn't like to do that.

"Well," the minister said, "you do it, and you will kill jealousy."

He said he would, and when a customer came into his store for goods which he did not have, he would tell him to go across the street to his neighbor's. By and by the other began to send his customers over to this man's store, and the breach was healed.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.
T. DeWitt Talmage
EDITOR.
B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald ... payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence ...

Remittances ... manner available to the remitter. Post-office and ... be sent at our own risk.

Register ...

Foreign Postage ... should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. ... before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted ...

Back Numbers. ... by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address.—Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change ...

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald ... the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters ...

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Our Cuban Relief Work

WE extend to our readers, and to all who have had a share in the Christ-like movement for the relief of the starving Cuban reconcentrados, congratulations upon the finished work, as it is presented in the statement printed in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Begun at a time when the conditions in Cuba were almost hopeless, when hunger was claiming its thousands of victims and Spanish oppression and cruelty were threatening a subject people with extermination, the gifts of food from Christian America came to the sufferers with multiplied blessing. By the timely aid furnished through the generosity of the readers of this journal, the worst ravages of the famine were stayed, and thousands now live to bless the hands of succor that were then reached out to save them from perishing. The work so nobly done for stricken Cuba adds another laurel to the trophies won in the campaigns for humanity in many lands besides our own, by our splendid phalanx of consecrated Christian men and women. To the roll, which already includes Russia, Armenia, India, the Western Famine, and the New York Relief movement of 1894, there must now be added Cuba—the latest and in many respects the grandest of their many charities.

It is also a matter of congratulation that, in the conduct of this Fund (as the appended statement shows), the total administrative expenses should have been only one and one-quarter per cent. of the entire contributions. This economical record has hardly a parallel. The advertising done at an expense of $1,700 produced returns aggregating upward of $12,000, while the circularizing—which reached nearly half a million homes at a cost of $8,000—produced $25,000 to the Fund, thus bringing the work $3 for every dollar invested, and yielding a net profit from this investment of over $17,000, a most substantial addition, where every dollar meant the possibility of saving a life.

Nor should the efforts of the Kings' ... be forgotten. ... grant of sanitarium ... of Christian ... made many thousands of dollars' worth of garments for the refugees, at an expense of $... which included rent, ... wages, materials, machines, and other incidentals, their own labor being given gratuitously. ... co-operation was well worth thrice the investment.

And so it was, through every branch of the Funds' work—every dollar being put to best advantage. Of the relief afforded to the "Silent Sufferers," the life-saving work at the Lee Orphanage (which is still receiving Fund support), and of the benefits conferred by the Fund in other directions, it is not necessary now to speak, as these are already well-known to all our readers.

Our Cuban Relief Fund.

Contributions .	$141,105.95
Disbursements, . . .	140,587.96
Balance on hand, . . .	$517.99

DISBURSEMENTS IN DETAIL.

	Central Cuban Relief Committee ...
	Central Cuban Relief Committee ...
			$100,775.22
Feb. 21.	Red Cross Society, for traveling expenses of Dr. and Mrs. A. M. Lesser to Cuba and return ...	250 00
Mar. 2.	Red Cross Society ... respondent and bookkeeper, from New Orleans to Havana ...	100 00
Apr. 5.	Red Cross Society, various remittances ...	93 77
Mar. 11.	Red Cross Society, traveling expenses, etc., for four trained ...
			545.77

RELIEF OPERATIONS, FREIGHT CHARGES, ETC.

	Gen. Fitzhugh Lee ...
	" " " ...
April 7.	" " " ...
	... Superintendent of cargo ...
April.	Cablegrams, telegrams, etc., in connect ...
Mar. 31.	Zaldo & Co., Cuba, for sundry expense in connection with relief ...
April.	Cartage, expressage and sundry expense ...
			7,591.90

LEE ORPHANAGE FOR RECONCENTRADO ORPHANS

July 14.	Cabled to Dr. Sotolongo ...	500 00
Aug. 1.	" " ...	500 00
Aug. 16.	" " ...	500 00
Aug. 20.	" " ...	500 00
Aug. 23.	" " ...	500 00
	...
	2. Remitted to " ...
	21. Remitted through Dr. Rodolfo Guzman ...
	...	500 00
	...
	...	500 00
	1897. Remitted through Gen. Fitzhugh Lee ...
April 6.
			6,800 00

CLOTHING FOR RECONCENTRADOS

	... to King's Daughters, for material, operating expenses, rent ...
	... etc., at Clinton Hall, New York, for the manufacture of cloth ...
April 1	... ing for Reconcentrado men, women and children ...	2,489 31
			2,489 31

For Drugs, Medicines, Etc., Sent to Cuba, as Follows:

	... or absorbent cotton, bandages, etc ...
	... for quinine pills, calomel, etc. ...
	...
	...
	...	55 00
Jun. 24.	Mr. Chambers, for messenger services ...
			1,052 81

SUPPLIES FOR LEE ORPHANAGE, HAVANA.

Mar. 4.	John Wanamaker, sheets, towels, tables, chairs ...	500 00
Dec. 21.	John Wanamaker, Christmas toys and freight charges ...	60 00
			560 00

CONSULAR RELIEF OPERATIONS

Mar. 22.	Central Executive Committee, Cuba, Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, Chairman.	1,000 00
Mar. 26.	" " " " "	1,000 00
Mar. 30.	" " " " "	500 00
Mar. 14.	U. S. Consul W. B. Barker, Sagua La Grande, Relief Work in Sagua	1,000 00
Mar. 14.	" " " " "	1,000 00
Mar. 14.	U. S. Consul Brice, Matanzas, for Relief Work in Matanzas ...	1,000 00
Mar. 22.	Silent Sufferers Relief Committee, Fitzhugh Lee, Chairman; E. R. Johnstone, Treasurer; C. M. Pepper, Secretary ...	1,688 54
Mar. 24.	U. S. Consul W. A. Stakeman, Manzanillo, for Relief Work ...	500 00
Mar. 24.	U. S. Consul Dr. P. E. Hyatt, Santiago, for Relief Work ...	500 00
Mar. 24.	U. S. Consul or Agent F. Iznaga, Trinidad, for Relief Work ...	500 00
Mar.	Sundry cash payments to indigent Cubans ...	57 49
			8,746 03

ADVERTISING AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

All discounts and commissions donated.

	...
	...
an. 19.	N. W. Christian Advocate .... " " " ...
an. 19.	West Christian Advocate .... " " " ...
an. 15.	Central Christian Advocate ... " " " ...
an. 27.	Christian Endeavor World .... " " " ...
	...
Feb. 3.	Interior ... " " " ...
Feb. 3.	Advance ... " " " ...
Jan. 30.	Churchman ... " " " ...
Jan. 13.	Sunday School Times ... " " " ...
	Total expenses for advertising.		1,720.79
	Contributions resulting from advertising	12,845 45
	Net gain from advertising	11,124 66

CIRCULARIZING

Mar. 20.	Jessup & Moore Paper Co., paper for 414,000 Pamphlets, Special Appeals, Circulars and Acknowledgments ...	$2,709 48
Mar. 20.	H. Lindenmeyer & Sons, paper ...	105 00
Mar. 20.	...	17 ...
Mar. 20.	E. J. Merriam, paper ...	87 20
	For Composition, Electrotyping and Printing, etc., 414,000 Pamphlets and Special Appeals, Letter Circulars, Envelopes and ...	2,085 33
Apr. 20.	...	227 ...
Apr. 20.	Berlin & Jones Envelope Co., Envelopes for Circulars ...	301 05
	Postage on 414,000 Pamphlets and Special Appeals and Acknowledgments ...	2,732 00
	Total expense for circularizing.		8,265.52
	Contributions resulting from circularizing ...	25,405.92
	Net gain from circularizing ...	17,140.40

ADMINISTRATION EXPENSES

Office stationery, etc ...	481 54
Postage on letters ...	198 46
Wages of envelope addressers, entry clerks and office assistants ...	1,290 61
Accountant's expenses ...	70 00	2,040.61
Grand Total of Disbursements,		$140,587.96

BRIEF NOTES

... reported as having taken place last week in the ...

... minister of the United Brethren (Moravian) ... age of seventy-three. He was widely known in the denomination.

... has eight candidates fully approved for missionary work. They are thoroughly well equipped for service, and are all anxious to begin work. Some fields are urgently asking for such help. The ... the eight missionaries could be sent immediately.

... Temperance Union in many of the States are celebrating their twenty-fifth anniversaries. The next National Convention to be held at Seattle, Washington, will be October 20-25, the commemoration ... Special notice will be given to this feature of the meeting.

The Southern Baptist Convention at Louisville, Ky., has accepted the resignation of Prof. ... Seminary, who filled the chair of Church History and was President of the Seminary. Dr. Whitsitt is one of the most learned and able men in the Baptist church, and it will be extremely difficult to find any one capable of filling the offices he has resigned, so successfully as he has done.

We are glad to learn that a lady, after reading an article in this journal on the work of the Misses Talmage at Amoy, China, made the institution of which they have charge a legatee in her ... of one dependant. At his death the amount of about $1,500 will be paid over to the Misses Talmage to aid them in their missionary work. The will states that the legacy is left because of the account published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The Salvation Army has filed its certificate of incorporation with the Secretary of State at Albany, N. Y. The property of the Army, according to this statement, is: Real estate, $450,000; value of leasehold, $22,500; value of farm colonies, $... personal property, $163,500; total, $745,250. The ... Frederick ... Booth-Tucker, Commander; Edward John Higgins, secretary; William Conrad Hicks, treasurer; Alice ... Holmes Ferris, legal secretary.

The Chautauqua Assembly announces for 1899 a series of courses by prominent ministers, who will deal with problems of theology, ethics, and the ... George Adam Smith, of Glasgow; Amory H. Bradford, Montclair, N. J.; Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, New York; Dean George Hodges, of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary; Chancellor O. C. S. Wallace, of McMasters University, Toronto, Can.; G. L. Robinson, of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago; Prof. Francis G. Peabody, of Harvard; and Dr. W. P. Thirkield, of Gammon ... Seminary, Atlanta, Ga.

Sworn to before me this 16th day of May,
A. D., 1899.

WM. C. VERMILYEA
NOTARY PUBLIC
NEW YORK

Wm. J. Guinness
Notary Public

Public Accountant's Certification.

This is to certify that I have carefully examined every item of expense in connection with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Cuban Relief Fund, and have diligently compared every stub, receipt, voucher and check, and find the same correct and in accord with the above statement in every particular.

Lorin Houston
Public Accountant.
31 Nassau Street, New York.

Cromwell's Tercentenary

NOTABLE, especially to us in this country, is the celebration which has just taken place in England of the three hundredth anniversary of Oliver Cromwell's birth. There was a time when Cromwell meditated coming here, to join his Puritan brethren who came over in the Mayflower. How different would the history of his country have been had he been one of that noble band! It would have been an easier life for him, in spite of all its hardships, but what would have been the fate of his own land? The oppression and injustice which drove the Mayflower pilgrims across the Atlantic, where with his mother, wife and children, he lived a peaceful, devout life, until the miseries of the time called him to the front and required his presence in London. It is gratifying that at last, after three centuries, the people whose present liberty is largely the result of Cromwell's valor and wise statesmanship, have recognized his greatness and have shown their appreciation of him.

The memory of the just is blessed but the name of the wicked shall rot (Prov. 10: 7).

Marking the Danger Spots

One of the most useful bureaus of our government is the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department. No country in the world has so elaborate and extensive system of work as that which exists in this office. It issues a weekly bulletin notifying mariners of derelict ships and other dangers to navigation, and every month a pilot chart of the Atlantic and another of the Pacific oceans. The master of a vessel weighing anchor, from San Francisco to Yokohama, can, by reference to the Hydrographic Office's chart of the Pacific, so shape his course as to keep out of the way of an abandoned ship which the chart informs him had been reported on a certain date in a certain position, moving in a certain direction with a certain current. If the skipper does not deem it necessary to alter his course to avoid such an obstruction, he at least doubles the lookout to keep a sharp watch for it when his ship approaches the latitude and longitude indicated on the chart. The chart for the Atlantic Ocean has been issued every month for the past fifteen years, while that for the Pacific has only been published during the past four years. The charted positions of derelicts and icebergs as given on these maps of the sea have so often been verified by the commanders of ships that the skippers of all nations have come to regard the charts as almost infallible. The captains know the value of such information, and carefully examine the charts during their voyage. They do not neglect them as people too often neglect their Bibles, which are similar charts of the voyage of life. Many a spiritual wreck might be avoided if the voyager consulted more frequently the Book which warns him of his danger.

Holding faith and a good conscience; which some having thrust from them made shipwreck concerning the faith (I. Timothy 1: 19, R. V.).

Gives His Body

A citizen of Maryland has formally bequeathed his body to Johns Hopkins Hospital. He is suffering from a lingering disease which must eventually prove fatal. Some time ago he left his farm and went to the hospital for treatment. The doctors there did their utmost for him, but after having him under treatment for eight weeks, finally confessed that it was impossible to effect a cure. They were able, however, to give him so much temporary relief under his suffering that he was grateful, and he volunteered to give them his body for dissection after his death. The offer was accepted, and the man has added a clause to his will to give effect to his promise. To friends who were surprised that he should make such a disposition of his body, he said he was utterly indifferent as to what became of it, and the doctors were welcome to it if it would be of any use to them. We may hope that he does not feel in that way about his soul. The body he can afford to treat with indifference, and all the more so if he has the hope which sustained the Apostle, who like him had to bear suffering and weariness of the flesh.

For we that are in this tabernacle, do groan being burdened; not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon that mortality might be swallowed up of life (II. Cor. 5: 4).

An Eccentric Will

A press dispatch from Hanover, Mass., describes a strange funeral which recently took place there. The deceased was Edward Y. Perry, who is reputed to have been a millionaire. He left elaborate directions to ensure his funeral being exactly according to his own ideas, and they were implicitly followed. At one stage of the proceedings his will was to be read. It left a plot of land in the city to be divided into ten lots, and directed that a lot be given to the first ten worthy persons who came along and were prepared to build on the land. The testator ordered that the remainder of the estate should be converted into a trust fund, the income from which was to be spent on the poor of the city. Food, fuel and medical attention are to be provided for all worthy persons who are residents of Hanover; and young men of that city of no means who want to go to college are to be aided. The trustees are likely to have plenty of applicants for participation in the fund. It will not be necessary to send out men to urge them to accept it, as it is to urge them to secure that inheritance which God offers to those who come to him by Christ:

To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them who are sanctified (Acts 26: 18).

Heroism at Manila

A report recently received by the Government from Major-General Otis describes a remarkable act of heroism performed by Sergeant Leon H. Chick of the artillery during the fire at Manila. The Filipinos, it will be remembered, set the city on fire in several places before they evacuated it, and there was at one time reason to fear that the whole city would be burned. Captain A. T. Wood determined to check the fire in one direction by destroying some houses so as to prevent it spreading from one quarter to another. Shells, to which fuses were attached, were placed in these houses, and were fired by electricity. One of the shells, however, failed to explode, owing to a defect in the fuse. Sergeant Chick, however, entered the building with a new fuse which he put in the shell, and quickly made his escape. He was barely outside when the shell exploded, the building fell in ruins and the progress of the fire was stayed. It was a heroic thing to do, for it was possible that the shell might explode while the sergeant was in the building. As General Otis says, the man literally took his life in his hand in the performance of the duty. Everyone admires so gallant a deed, and is glad the doer escaped. It is strange that people who are thrilled by such a recital will often listen unmoved to an infinitely more pathetic story in which they have personal concern. When the whole world was threatened with destruction Christ interposed to save it, although he knew that in order to do so he must give himself to death on the cross.

He humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross (Phil. 2: 8).

THE TERCENTENARY OF OLIVER CROMWELL'S BIRTH

1 Oliver Cromwell—2. The Old Grammar School at Huntingdon—3. Cromwell's House at Ely—4. Hinchinbrook House

. . . . A Day Among the Auto-mobiles . . . .

Horseless Carriages Superseding Present Methods of Locomotion---Different Styles of the New Vehicles

A DRY-GOODS PACKAGE WAGON

AN ELECTRIC DELIVERY WAGON

A LIGHT MOTOR CARRIAGE

THE "horseless" age seems to have begun, and the old prediction credited to Mother Shipton many generations ago, that "carriages without horses shall go," is in a fair way of fulfilment, if one may judge by the rapidly growing popularity of the auto-mobile, which can now be seen—though yet in comparatively small numbers—in every large American city. It is well-known and widely patronized in all the important cities of Europe, and at the annual electrical exhibition now being held in New York, the various styles of motor-carriages are a centre of interest. Although much too expensive for general use, it is reasonably certain that this new product of our later civilization will soon go far toward revolutionizing present transportation methods.

Our photographer has succeeded in presenting, on these pages, pictures of a number of the new carriages, showing the styles that are now being produced in American manufactories, and which are gradually becoming popular. Those shown in the photographs are equipped with electricity as a motive power, and are known as motor-carriages, motor-vehicles and auto-mobiles.

Experiments have been made with gasoline or naphtha engines, but have not proved so satisfactory as electricity. In almost every town and village throughout the country, it is now possible to have the storage batteries recharged with a supply of electricity sufficient to drive an electric carriage an average day's journey, and it is estimated that the cost of such locomotion is about one cent a mile, and even smaller, where the owner of the carriage has his own electric plant. From thirty to seventy-five miles a day may be made with an auto-mobile, when the batteries are properly charged.

The electric equipment of a motor carriage is very simple and easily managed. In the lighter vehicles, a single two-horse power motor is used, and in double-seated vehicles, two motors of the same capacity are required. These are connected with storage batteries which are supplied with each carriage. The motors, which are completely enclosed in order to be dust-proof and water-proof, are of the same type as those used on trolley cars, though lighter and better finished. The power is transmitted to the wheels by a simple and effective arrangement. The speed can be readily regulated; the carriage can be run at three, six or twelve miles per hour, according to requirements, and either backward or forward. Many are in use in New York at the present time, and move in and out on the busiest thoroughfares, threading their way slowly and accurately among the maze of vehicles on Broadway, or moving swiftly and noiselessly along the up-town avenues, or the Hudson River drives. These motor-carriages—some of them cabs, surreys, phaetons, landaus and heavy delivery-wagons—move with entire confidence in the most crowded parts of Nassau, Wall and John streets, and with much greater facility than the ordinary carriage drawn by horses could possibly do.

A SIX-MILES-AN-HOUR CAB

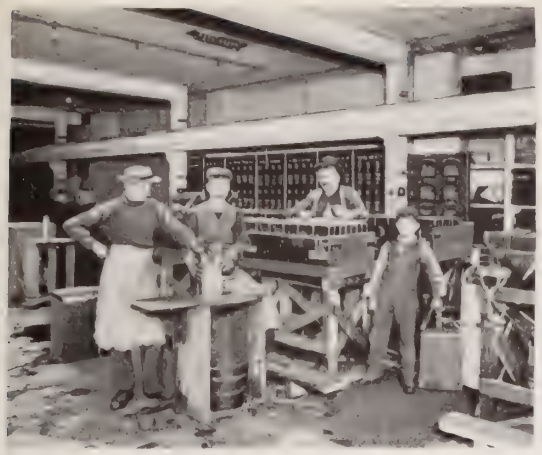
OUT FOR A RIDE ON RIVERSIDE DRIVE

ONE OF THE LATEST PLEASURE VEHICLES

A [illegible]

AN ARTISTIC DELIVERY WAGON

A PLEASURE PHAETON



MAKING STORAGE BATTERIES

AN ELECTRIC CAB READY TO START

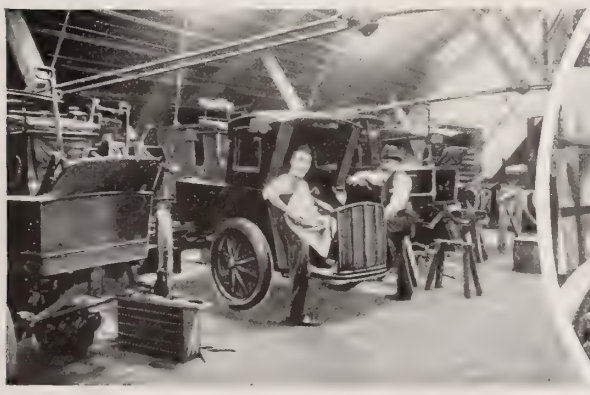
TIRES AND WHEELS

The operator in most of the carriages sits slightly to the left, where he can have control of the compact machine, and where he can start, slow down, go full speed, or stop at will. There is less chance of accident by collision or otherwise with an automobile, than with an ordinary carriage. The brake or the reverse lever can be applied instantly, and the whole machine can turn on much less ground than the ordinary vehicle. The movements of motor-carriages are under control at all times. If desired, they can be "geared" so as to run up a fairly steep grade; but the ordinary motor-carriage is "geared" for comparatively level running, though it will easily take any ordinary rise to be found in the streets of a town or village. The motor-carriages are supplied with electric bells loud enough to be heard above the din of public traffic. The consumption of electricity is recorded in a small meter, in sight of the operator, who can tell at a glance the state of his battery, and whether he has enough electricity left to go any distance. This is very important, as otherwise one might make the unpleasant discovery, while miles away from a source of supply, that his batteries were almost exhausted. Reasonable care can always avoid such a contingency.

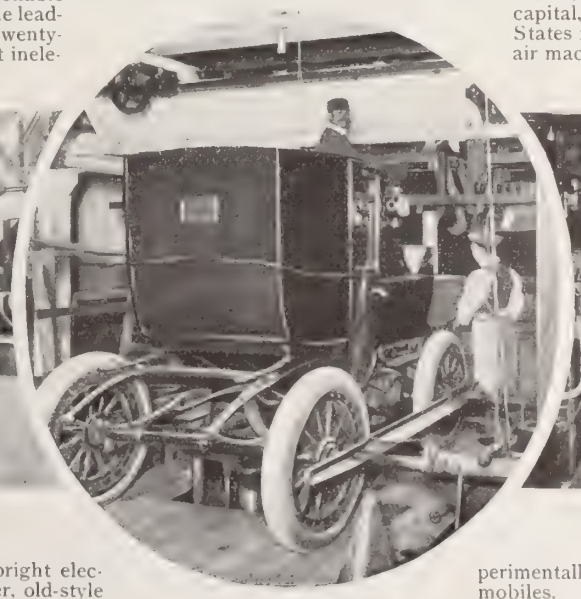
An interesting and desirable attachment in some of the carriages is the "running plug," a small key which, when removed, cuts off the current, stops the vehicle, and makes it impossible for it to be used by anyone except the operator himself. As inquisitive people might be likely to tamper with such a machine out of idle curiosity, in a moment when it is unguarded, the "running plug" prevents the possibility of their starting up the machine.

Soon horseless carriages will cease to be a novelty. Their numbers are increasing in our cities, and their utility and comfort are everywhere recognized. Many of the large dry goods stores in New York are now using them for delivery, and find them cheaper, safer and better than the old system, and capable of carrying heavier loads. One sees the more fashionable style of motor-carriages waiting for "fares" in front of the leading hotels, and at the coach stands on Fourteenth and Twenty-third streets. The contrast between the heavy, but not inelegant motor-carriages, with its rubber-tired wheels, its bright electric lights, and its substantial fittings, and the lighter, old-style vehicle, is a striking one. Electricity has already proved the greatest rival the horse has ever known. In substituting electricity for horse-power on the street cars of New York and other cities, hundreds of thousands of equines have been literally thrown out of commission. In the case of a single metropolitan surface road in New York, nearly 3,000 horses were formerly used, the feed for which came from the near-by farms on Long Island and in New Jersey. Hundreds of "green horses" were bought every season by this street car company, and the stables required the services of a large force of laboring men. Now, the farmers are compelled to seek another market for their oats, hay and straw; the price of horses of the class used in car service has dropped to a point where profit ceases, and the hundreds of employees have to seek some other occupation. This experience of a single car line has been repeated wherever electricity has supplanted the horse. Indications point to a similar revolution in many other lines of business where horses are now employed. Prices for auto-mobiles now range all the way from $750 for a modest road wagon to $1,950 for a surrey and $3,000 for a hansom, but competition will doubtless soon put these vehicles within the reach of a large majority of those who now keep horses for purposes of pleasure or business or both. There are some lines of business in which "man's faithful friend," the horse, will still remain a necessary factor for many years to come; but it seems inevitable that his usefulness will be somewhat limited. The advance guard of what has been designated as "the auto-mobile invasion," is represented by nearly a dozen companies which have been organized for their manufacture—three of them being in New York City—and with American mechanical skill pitted against European ingenuity, it will be strange indeed if lighter, cheaper and better machines are not soon produced here than any that have been put on the market thus far. Nearly a hundred auto-mobiles are now in regular operation in the metropolis, over thirty of them being for private use. Auto-truck companies, with large capital, have been organized in Eastern, Middle, and Western States for the purpose of manufacturing electric or compressed air machines, of which a number have already been made experimentally. They are much heavier than the passenger auto-mobiles. Their great carrying capacity and facility in handling will soon bring them into very general use.

INFLATING TIRES OF MOTOR-CARRIAGES BY PNEUMATIC PRESSURE



IN THE MOTOR-CARRIAGE REPAIR SHOP



LOADING AUTO-MOBILES

CHARGING THE STORAGE BATTERIES

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

African Home Life

Domestic Occupations in the Kraal—Mission Schools—Laundry Work

THE fact that the great Zulu chief, Umquawe, requested Dr. and Mrs. Thompson, missionaries of the American Board, who have labored for years in Africa and are now on a visit to America, to bring the wife of his heir to this country to be educated, is significant of better things for the women of Zululand than they have known hitherto. This girl's husband and his brother are already here, receiving an education which embraces industrial arts.

Cecil Rhodes is planning, it is said, extensive railroad systems for Africa, and Africa is beginning to show eagerness for improvement; that is, in places here and there where God's devoted missionaries have opened the hearts of the people and prepared the way for civilization. Umquawe, who is sending his children over here, is a frequent visitor at the Inanda missions, whither he goes on state occasions clad in civilized costume, which he does not wear in his kraal. One of the first effects of mission work upon the wild people of the veldt is to stimulate them to intelligent industrial effort and to cause them to clothe themselves in neat and modest apparel. The washerwomen in our illustration belong to one of the mission schools of Inanda. There is a laundry in connection with the school, and the women are there trained to do the work in the American or European way; but often they take the clothes to the falls in the river near by, and wash them out on the stones in the old method to which they are accustomed, and which answers well enough when nature provides such ideal laundry arrangements as this river affords.

A BUSY GROUP OF NATIVE WASHERWOMEN, NATAL, SOUTH AFRICA

The life of the Zulu woman is very hard. The man looks after the cattle, it is true, but all the rest of the home and farm work devolves upon her. She is up early, digging or plowing in the fields; she cuts the wood, brings the water (often from a distant river), builds the fires, cooks and serves the food, never sitting down at meat with her husband and sons; helps to make pots and mould brick, and also to weave baskets, in which last labor the man sometimes shares. Her thatched hut has no outlet for smoke, and is very dark and uncomfortable; as a rule, she sweeps it out quite faithfully twice a day; the first time, which is in the morning, she rolls up the sleeping-mats and hangs up the blankets, and tidies otherwise in such ways as she knows. She also sweeps the plot around her hut. Every kraal contains a number of huts, and every morning many women will be seen performing these duties. The Zulu hut resembles a great wicker-basket inverted and thatched with grasses. The only opening is a door so small that one must crawl through it.

The industrial schools, which missionaries are establishing wherever and whenever possible, will do much to lighten the burden of the African woman. She is not only taught to do her work in the best and easiest manner, but her husband and her sons learn how to replace smoky huts with neat homes provided with chimneys; men learn, too, that polygamy is wrong, and that it is not honorable to make women bear burdens which they should carry, and perform labor which is more properly theirs.

♦

Saving Her Pet

A touching incident occurred in connection with a recent fire at 342 Quincy street, Brooklyn. A little girl saved her cat's life at the peril of her own. In telling the story, she says:

"I never thought about getting burned at all [illegible] with doors and windows closed. Yesterday when we heard the people upstairs calling 'Fire!' mamma and I ran into the hall, saw the fire up above. We picked up some clothes and a policeman smashed the front door in and told us that every one was out of the house, and that if we did not hurry up we would be burned to death. Half the ceiling fell in, and out we went. Soon as I reached the street I remembered Babe, and, dropping the clothes, ran back. The policeman shouted and tried to catch me, but in I went and got wet through. I got to the kitchen at last. Babe was all burned and singed, but she ran to me. I picked her up and out we went.

If this child could risk her life for her pet, how much should we not be ready to risk in saving our friends from spiritual peril?

♦

Flo's Class

Flo was the comfort of her teacher's life. It was not that her lessons were always perfect. Sometimes they were not when she had been giving so much of her energy and her play-time to gathering recruits, finding out why certain members had failed to appear, visiting sick classmates, and similar work, that her beloved lesson had of necessity suffered some neglect. The little thing was full of loving interest in all the children she came in contact with, and of active sympathy with her overburdened teacher, who taught during week-days at the public schools as well as at the mission Sunday. Where the class room to be the teacher class of that school and the pride of the Superintendent's heart, the teacher used to say, in response to all compliments: "I could never have kept this class together or built it up but for Flo. It's Flo's class."

♦

Praising Children

Unstinted praise should never be bestowed upon the child; but praise of the action performed, of the effort put forth, is most helpful, says E. C. Caryl, in The Normal Instructor. I have seen children under the influence of injudicious praise as proud as little peacocks. "You are a smart boy, John," and "Mary is the brightest girl in school" flatters John and Mary at the expense of other scholars, who, though not so bright as either, may be more truly deserving, as having put forth more effort. "How you must have worked to get that lesson, Mary!" says the judicious teacher; or, "I am so glad you thought out that difficult problem, John," or, "The work on your slate is good; try for perfect work to-morrow." In the latter case, thought is centred not on the child, but on the effort put forth. This path being open to all, can not engender pride in one and jealousy in another. It stimulates endeavor.

♦

School Girls for the Birds

Hundreds of girls attending the public schools of New Brunswick, N. J., have passed resolutions that they will wear no more birds or bird's feathers on their hats. Mme. Lehmann, the great concert singer, and a member of the New York Philharmonic Society, who has taken such an active interest in the protection of birds, wrote a letter to Mrs. Jordan, musical instructor of the public schools, promising the girls to come and sing for them in November if they would help in the crusade against bird-killing. As Mme. Lehmann usually receives fabulous sums for singing, the girls are appreciative of the lady's attention, and New Brunswick is congratulating itself over the treat in store for their town when the famous singer will entertain them. New Brunswick women are taking up the crusade begun by the children; and even the City Improvement Society, an august body of grown folks, are following in the chidren's wake, and endorsing the movement.

My Grandpa and the Crickets

[illegible]

H. R. [illegible]

♦

The Religious Life of Our President

"My [illegible] a great woman and a good woman," Mr. McKinley once said to Dr. Manchester, his pastor in Canton. "William will come out all right if he trusts in the Lord," the mother said in her turn. Mr. McKinley was converted when a youth; soon after he went to Canton, he was elected superintendent of the Sunday School of his church; and is to-day one of the church trustees. The President and his Canton pastor are intimate friends and keep up a close correspondence. Dr. Manchester speaks with pleasure of an incident in the Presidential campaign of 1896, when Mr. McKinley refused to receive on Sunday a delegation of young men from Detroit. The minister says:

He told them he was going to church and advised them to do [illegible] groups after that.

An intimate friend of Mr. McKinley is quoted by Dr. Manchester as follows:

[illegible] man. I have been with him many times, and during all of his campaigns. We have frequently attended political meetings and campaigns, and have often returned at a late hour, but I have never known him to go to his bed until he had read from his Bible and had knelt in prayer.

A good Christian and a good son makes a good husband. Our President's devotion to his wife is well known, and America has reason to be grateful to God that the home-life of our chief magistrate is a model one. The home life of rulers has not always been such. Foreign kingdoms have fallen from high estates because of corruption of the home. It is a comfort to think that the progress of Christianity has so modeled public sentiment that more is required of rulers than of ordinary men and women, and that rulers feel that their obligation to live up to exalted standards is greater than that of ordinary people—that they must be examples to their people. The court where Henry VIII. ruled, is presided over by one of the purest and most pious women of the age; and the young Russian Czar, where Catherine II. lived, is a home of love, peace and purity.

♦

"A Paris Doll"

That is what people called a certain little girl whose loving mamma dressed her so daintily that she always looked as "if she had stepped out of a band box." The little maid was very quiet and gentle in her ways, and very fragile in appearance. Her pallor troubled her mother; and one day when the child's drooping took on the form of actual illness, the poor lady was almost distracted. "And I'm so careful of her," she said to an elderly friend. The old lady replied: "Perhaps you are too careful, dear. When she gets a little better, put her into plain, strong gowns and turn her out to play in the sand and the grass. Let God and nature help her. Sometimes we are so careful of our treasures that we do not give God a chance to do anything for them."

One : : : Dark Night

MARGARET E. SANGSTER

.. Or ..

The Crisis in Martha Yorke's Married Life

THE day had been lowering, and toward evening it grew bitterly cold, and rain fell with gusts which blew in one's face, and dashed under one's umbrella, and made the pedestian long for the warmth and cheer of the fireside. As Mr. Yorke hurried along and approached his own door, he felt in his pocket for his latch-key, and turned it, ejaculating under his breath, "Thank God!" It was a night to make a man grateful for a shelter from the storm, and Abel Yorke as he took off his top-coat and shook it, and set the drenched and ice-streaked umbrella in the rack, thought how pleasant it was to be in the house, and how delightful the easy chair would be, the fire in the library, and the children climbing over him and begging for a story. Little Willie had been not quite well in the morning. Perhaps he was worse, and that was why there was no rush of little feet to welcome papa home, no cheery greeting from a smiling wife, no babel of merry voices.

"Martha!" he called from the foot of the stairs. "Martha, where are you all?"

No Martha answered, but a grave-looking elderly maid came lumbering slowly up from the kitchen.

"Mrs. Yorke told me to say, sir, that dinner was ready as usual, but she would not be in and you were not to wait. She and the children have been called out of town. There's a note for you in the library."

In ten years of a tranquil married life, Mr. Yorke had had no such surprise as this. He felt amazed, resentful, confused, but he did not stop to analyze his emotions. Martha and the children and little sick Willie gone—out of town—without apprising him at the office, without consulting him! There could be no excuse, for there staring him in the face was the telephone communicating with the office for Martha's especial convenience. He had not left the office all day, and she had not rung him up.

The human mind acts very swiftly on occasion. Mr. Yorke flew upstairs with a bound as it seemed to him, but he was so angry nevertheless that he fell upon the letter, waiting for him in Martha's bold handwriting, with something of the impulse of a cat springing upon a mouse.

It did not take long to read. There was no preamble, no pretence of "dear," no wasteful introductory affectionate explanation. The letter read as follows:

"I have discovered your perfidy and will no longer remain under the same roof with you. I have taken the children and gone to my mother's. MARTHA YORKE."

With a woman's inconsistent relenting, she had added a postscript, "Willie's cold is better."

Mr. Yorke tumbled all in a heap into the nearest chair. An earthquake could not have upset him more. Gradually his benumbed faculties revived, and he took in automatically the exquisite order and peace of his fireside, everything so clean, so shining, so luxurious. In one corner of the sofa lay Mildred's doll, and a toy horse stood beside the window. The father crossed the room, picked up the doll, smoothed its frock, stooped down and lifted up the tin horse. As he did so, a great dry sob shook his frame, and his face darkened, but no tears came. The man had an iron self-control, and his life habit stood him in stead. Martha, Martha, Martha, he said over and over in his soul, but no word escaped his lips. His wife had left him and taken the children! Could a worse calamity overtake a proud and honorable man? What did it mean? Why had she suddenly so far forgotten what was due herself and him? They could never look each other in the face again, forgetful of this. Mr. Yorke hardened as he glanced around his lonely house; softened as he saw the bed turned down as usual for the night, and his dressing-gown hanging over the back of his chair.

He went down to the dining-room and made a pretence of eating his dinner. But it was the merest pretence. Martha's blunt declaration, "I have discovered your perfidy," was tolling itself over and over like the sound of a fog-bell in the night, and he could not escape it.

Hardly had he risen from the table when a special delivery letter was handed him. This, too, was in a woman's hand. It was faintly suggestive of violets, and sealed with white wax. Mr. Yorke opened it, not eagerly, but almost with a protest, and a shrug of his shoulders. Alice Raymond was a client, and an interesting young woman, but why need she pursue him to his home with her letters? As by a flash-light he now recalled that Martha had been annoyed and cold when twice or thrice lately Miss Raymond's affairs had so occupied him that he had not been able to go somewhere with his wife, and she had been more disappointed than usual in consequence. With a lawyer's customary reserve he had not given her an intimation concerning the nature of Alice's business with him, and, feeling perfectly innocent, it had not occurred to him that his wife could misinterpret attentions, which seemed in the circumstances perfectly appropriate and natural. Like many another agreeable man, Mr. Yorke's attitude toward women was marked by an air of deference, not to say gallantry, and, if he was less polite at home than elsewhere, was not that, too, a thing to be expected? Why—Martha, she was his wife! She had his name, his life, his means in her possession; she was his children's mother! That Martha should be jealous of his manner to a girl of twenty, half her age and his, was an absurdity. Yet in the silent house, at the empty table, the special delivery letter gave him a pang, and his face grew darkly red, for what was there in that scent of violets? What of reproach, what of accusation? They were Alice Raymond's flavor. This was Alice Raymond's birthday, and he had sent her, simply as a friend and her legal adviser, a great bunch of costly blue violets that very morning.

He read her note:

My Dear Mr. Yorke—You were kind to remember my birthday, and I am indebted to you for much courtesy. This is simply a note of goodbye. I have suddenly decided to go home, and I shall not return to the East until after my marriage, which will take place in June, when my business affairs, so safe in your kind hands, will be transferred to my husband's guardianship. Mr. Stanley and I have been engaged for a year, but we are only now announcing the fact to our friends.

Truly yours, ALICE RAYMOND.

Mr. Yorke's frame of mind was beyond description. To tell the truth Miss Raymond's engagement or her marriage, her coming or her going was a matter of indifference to him at the moment, but he did feel that he had been made ridiculous, and he was conscious that while one young woman had laughed at him, and accepted his devotions as a tribute to her youth and beauty, another, the woman of all the world to him, had almost broken her heart over what she now denominated his perfidy. And Martha was not of a forgiving disposition. He knew that. Her temper was of the slow kind, hard to rouse; once roused a lion for endurance and savagery. Somehow or other he must make his peace with Martha. But the situation was horrible. He could not drag Alice into it; she was blameless, or almost so, and as for himself, to go down in the dust and beg his wife's pardon seemed to him a thing impossible.

Meanwhile the night wore away. The rain changed to snow. It was a dreadful night, inclement, fearful; a night when cars would be stalled in the storm, and wires would be down, and people exposed to the tempest would freeze to death. Not a night for a delicately cared-for woman, and a sick child, and a little girl like Mildred, to be exposed to the fury of the cold, even in Parlor cars; for this cold would creep in everywhere. It might cause Willie's death! Mr. Yorke groaned in utter agony of soul. He did not undress that night.

"A SPECIAL DELIVERY LETTER WAS HANDED TO HIM"

On the cars speeding to Chicago, Mrs. Yorke with her little ones was torn by a new anxiety. The sick child was in no condition to be taken from a warm house and a warm bed and his own father and doctor. The mother, angered beyond all bearing by the sight at the florists of a magnificent basket of violets, bearing her husband's card, going to a girl of whom already she was resentfully suspicious, had acted on an over-mastering impulse, and had taken no counsel of wisdom or discretion. She had packed her trunks in a cold fury, written her curt note, and started for Chicago, dragging the children with her, and with her feeling at white heat, had cared only to punish her husband. As hours wore on and Willie's fever increased, and the storm grew hourly worse, she had time for reflection. Finally she grew desperate. Mildred was asleep; she had cried because papa was not there, but her mother had hushed her, with promises of grandma's house, and Aunty Lou, but Willie, Willie was a very ailing child, hoarse, and croupy.

"My God!" exclaimed the mother, at last, "my child will die. What a wicked woman I have been—how foolish!"

She did not know that she spoke aloud, but she did, and the only other woman in the car heard her. Wrapped from head to foot in a traveling cloak, Mrs. Yorke did not recognize her companion, nor did Alice Raymond notice who Mrs. Yorke was.

"I have some medicine in my bag which may relieve the little fellow. Let me help you," said a sweet voice, and the remedy was found, a hot water bag and a spirit lamp were produced; together the two worked over the suffering child for hours and hours. Toward morning he was better. By the time, twenty-four hours later, that the train pulled up in Chicago, Mrs. Yorke and Miss Raymond, without a word, had found each other out, understood everything, had each mutely asked the other's pardon and were friends.

"What possessed you, Martha," said old Mrs. Parsons, "to come to Chicago at this season, and without sending me word. Surprises are charming, but you or Abel would better have notified me. And it was a great risk for little Willie. Why did not Abel come with you?"

"Abel is coming on the next train," said the wife. "I had to get to you, Mother. Don't say you don't want me. Once in awhile there is nobody like mother. I had to see you."

"I suppose Louise worried you with her fears of pneumonia," said the old lady complacently, "but I've only had the grippe, and am all right now. It will be nice to see Abel and to have my children all around me once more."

Meanwhile the telegraph carried this message to Mr. Yorke:

"Forgive mistake. Willie better. Come by first train. Martha."

♣

The Nebraska Prairie Church Fund

Deep interest is being shown in the meetings Mr. Baylis is holding in the different churches in New York and vicinity for the purpose of raising funds to build a church in the prairie town of Imperial, Neb. Many enjoy the gatherings and are refreshed in spirit by the earnest, plain Gospel message delivered by this preacher from the prairies. The following additional contributions to the work have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Previously acknowledged	$97 95
I. H. N., W. & E. B., Brooklyn	2 00
A Child of Christ, Stewartville	10 00
C. O. D., Mechanicsburg	5 00
Mrs. A. S. Barbour	2 00
One who loves Jesus	25
Trinity M. E. Church, West New Brighton	21 95
Thomas Nugent	1 00
In His Name	50
B. H. S. A., Savannah	5 00
W., Chanute	5 00
Mrs. G. W. Ford	5 00
K. E. Barclay	5 00
Mrs. E. P., Chanute	5 00
A poor old English woman, Morden	2 00
Mary Isabella Banks	5 00
E. Glover Mansfield, Jr.	5 00
A King's Daughter	2 00
Ben. F. Jones	1 00
Richard Lavery	5 00
Mrs. K. H. Jones	2 00
Miss M. Corliss	50
Mr. Freed	5 00
First Reformed Church, Flushing, L. I.	21 75
Central Presbyterian Church, Orange, N. J.	25 50
Mr. Williamson	5 00
Total	$271 40

· Vision · and · Disclosure ·

A Sermon Preached May 18, at Minneapolis, Minn., before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, by Rev. W. Radcliffe, D.D., the Retiring Moderator. Text, Prov. 29: 18: . . . . . / "Where there is no vision the people perish."

IDEALS rule the world. The dream may be a vagary. The vision is the perception of reality, the revelation of forces and possibilities, before unseen and unappreciated. The dream may also be a madness and guide through night to chaos. The vision uplifts, consumes and glorifies principle, impulse and life. Where there is no vision the people throw off restraint. Where there is vision, in the very revelation, the people see a great light. Spain had dreams, and she reels toward chaos. America had vision, and she marches to glorious destiny. Everywhere, man moves from meanness to nobleness, from limitations to enlargement, from subjugation to freedom, from sin to grace—not so much by syllogism and argument as by the distant and radiant vision. We live in two kingdoms. The opening of the inner eye gives revelation, we become affiliated to the spiritual universe, the invisible things of God become visible, in their light we see light and are transformed from glory to glory. The redemption of humanity is in the awakened perception and vivid realization of the Christ. The Gospel is the Christ. The Christ is the Gospel. Apostolic conquest was because of inspired vision. When the disciples say one to another, "we have seen the Lord," their hearts burn within them, and their lives glow with service and sacrifice. As the vision fades or becomes distorted, material things attain undue proportion, doubt enters, spiritual passion is chilled and spiritual adventure shrinks and dies.

There come to the church and the individual the alternations of enthusiasm and coldness, of power and weakness, of formalism and reformation, of apostacy and return, and the quickening has ever been, not in war or contest, not in legislation or syllogism, but in the renewed and more distinct vision of Christ. In the presence of that beauty our deformities seek hiding. In the radiancy of that grace, our own being becomes illumined. In the sufficiency of that work, our hopes are enlivened and enriched, and in the authority of that Presence, the soul bows and yields.

The Answer to Every Need to-day, and every day, is in this revelation. If there be anxiety or fear, if there be lack in faith and faithful service, if materialism threatens and chills our life, or infidelity in new forms insinuates doubt or marshalls mighty attack, if in any way life or doctrine or ordinance have threat or anxiety, the redress must still be in the restoration of the divine vision. "Look unto me and be ye saved." The test and deliverance of a church, a nation or of a man is in his ideals. Men to-day are confused and doubting. They despair in the fatalism that is debilitating, or become reckless or effeminate in an epicurianism that only eats and drinks. Difficult problems, intellectual perplexities, practical perils encompass us. Our redemption is in the full vision; for, standing in the full vision, we stand with Christ and look with his eyes and have inspiration in his spirit.

First. The vision. It is a vision of the Divine Christ. Modern philosophies patronize our Lord. Robe and palace and courtiers may be his, but the crown is withheld. In every magnifying of his humanity they detract from his divine claim. If he is not divine, his law is no more authoritative than Justinian's, his exhortations no more truthful than Seneca's, his example no more winning than Plato's, his work no more sufficient than Cæsar's.

We hear a great deal to-day about transitional theology. Systems may change, but truth abides. If we clothe our prophet only in human flesh, we dethrone and repudiate. There is

No Room for Compromise

His own claim of Divine Sonship is explicit, and the Father has glorified himself in its confirmation. He that would see God must see him in the face of Jesus Christ. No appreciation of humanity, no winsomeness of teaching and example, no beauty or power of life should seduce us from the unequivocal and triumphant ascription to his divinity. Let no man take his crown. To surrender his divinity is to surrender his redemption. "All our springs are in thee." His commission and benediction are to a worshiping church. He from whom is our hope, to whom is our obedience, in whom is our life, and by whom we conquer is the One whose coming was with the song of angels; whose divine look upon the water brought its blush; whose almighty touch multiplied the bread; whose benign presence blessed the weary and heavy laden and constrained to his arms the little children; whose feet trod the waves; whose voice commanded the winds and broke the bands of death asunder—who laid down his own life and took it again—who ascended far into the opening heavens, before the gladdened eyes of his worshiping church, and who in the heavens, clothed in our humanity, waits, rules and lives, Emanuel, God with us.

It is the vision of

The Wounded Christ

"Thus it behooved Christ to suffer." His supreme mission was not example, but sacrifice and propitiation. We must not be misled. Vicariousness is written into all history. It is the story of all humanity. When men talk of heredity they declare the fact of vicariousness. We are bearing in ourselves the sins, the sorrows, the hopes, the acquirements of generations past. The cross is not unique to the history of redemption, nor limited to the spiritual experiences of the soul. It throws its shadow over all existence. The life is in the blood. We must restore the old terms and fill them with their revealed meaning and proclaim them in their authoritative exclusiveness. "Substitution," "propitiation," "expiation," "atonement:" these are the key-words of the Scriptures. They reveal the sinner presenting the substitute; and in the blood of the substituted victim, an atonement made and a Holy One satisfied. Not to the Israelite, but to all humanity is the promise made. "It shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him."

I sympathize with every honest effort to see larger truth, or to put the old truth in new and more acceptable garments. But the truth must abide and have revelation. The atonement is the way of salvation. "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth from all sin." The Cross must abide the central theme of a regenerated life and regenerating Gospel. The crucified is the only answer to the guilty, the only peace to the troubled, the only rest to the weary and heavy laden. We must not strive to heal the wounds in his hands and side. Whatever beauty, grace, wisdom, power he may bring to our varied wants and ambitions and possibilities, over all and through all must appear the shadow of that cross. Back, back, back from temporalities, politics, questions, literature, society, philosophies—back to the sweet story of old—simple, comprehensive, enduring, satisfying. To the uplifted Cross flow all nations, all influences, all delights, all moneys, all song, all life. It is the messenger of peace. Out of atonement is the highest conception of love and fatherhood. The Cross inspires both reverence and [illegible] relation of the divine heart. Justice is the expression of love, and love moves the universe. Divine love will swallow up death; it only has within itself the expression of divine justice. It is the quickening of spiritual life. It is the inspiration of morality. It is the develop-

"Thou Bleeding Lamb
[illegible]"

The vision of

The Regnant Christ

He is the Son of God with power. When Paul reveals him to the Philippians, it is not only as the one obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, but by very reason of that humiliation as the One whom God hath highly exalted, and given a name which is above every other name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow—of things in heaven and things on the earth and things under the earth. When he was revealed to the Apostle John, he moved with authority and glory in the midst of the golden candlesticks. When he was pictured in the Canticles, he wore the gold ring set with beryl. He wears the seal ring of Jehovah.

We are getting a little tired of the old word mediator. It is rather obsolete to speak of the mediatorial reign of Christ; but with the words, the truth also slumbers that this Christ, as our redeemer, has sovereign authority; that he has authority by virtue of that sacrifice. He is incomplete in his relationship to you and me save as the sceptre, and the crown, and the gold ring gleam before our eyes and in our hearts. We teach the children in the Sabbath School that Christ executes, as our redeemer, the offices of prophet, priest and king; but evangelistic and easy-going Christians persuade us almost unconsciously that there is nothing in Christ's work save that of an atoning sacrifice. A monotonous call of "Come to Jesus" is a belittling Gospel. A Christ only imploring men to be saved is a belittled Saviour.

Indissolubly linked together are these three offices of Jesus Christ, and one link broken, all falls to the ground. He who accepts him as prophet, and not as priest and king, has a broken chain. If to the prophet relationship, and the priesthood of Jesus Christ, we add this royal prerogative, we are bound with chains stronger than those of steel, indissolubly united in the very work and nature of Jesus Christ.

The Mediatorial Reign of Christ

governs all conditions of life—human, celestial and the devilish; touches men and angels, heaven and hell, so that everywhere, and in all things, and through all time, Christ reigns, and his soul touches them, and his authority uses them and gathers them all up for the development of his one eternal purpose. All physical conditions are under his control. This One who was born in Bethlehem; who walked in Palestine; who bowed yonder in Gethsemane; who died upon the cross—this One is in heaven carrying our humanity to the right hand of the Father, glorified regal, absolute.

This world does not exist for Cæsar, but for the Church through Christ. And he is the hope, over all things thus to the Church. The Church is his especial care because he is its origin and its life. He has assured his divine presence alway unto the end of the world. There may be a change through changing conditions, adaptations to new developments; but always the Church of Christ, always a living Church, because always a living Christ. He rules in all things for the sake of the Church. His sceptre sways that his eternal purpose for the Church may have development, the kingdom of nature and of providence that through these there may be the eternal kingdom of his grace.

The progress of the years is Christ's work. Beneficence, sympathy, sacrifice, progress—everywhere shows the gleaming of the gold ring and the pointing of [illegible] viction makes life worth living. In war [illegible] change and destruction and revolution, Christ is educating, remodeling, furnishing, controlling. Life is transfigured, trial is made a joy, and all things work together for good. That sovereignty of Christ's has endowed us [illegible] with its stimulating [illegible] ment; that same sovereignty endows us with the present with its imperative attainments and opportunities. Mightiest changes are before us in individual and organized life. The inspiration of all attainment is hope, a better future, a better time. But only as we are inflexibly and enthusiastically loyal to that sovereignty.

To-day we stand before the impressiveness of his command, comprehending more than ever of the world's achievements and opportunities. That very gift is necessity and command. It is significant to the thoughtful Christian to recognize the of the past year, in each the pointing finger of this mediatorial King — the Spanish-American war, the Anglo-American friendship, the Czar's proposal for peace, the re-formation of China, the opening of the Soudan: liberty, unity, peace, light, redemption. The most significant century of history is closing; the most significant opportunity of history is opening. The world is brought nearer. The pulse of a new life, the omnipotence of new ideas, the expectation of awakened hope thrills and vivifies the distant and darkened nations. In the East, the sun does not rise: it leaps above the horizon! The dawn has suddenly come before our astonished gaze. We are living in the golden age of humanity. The beams of the Son of Righteousness gleam into open doors to the North, to the South, to the East, to the West. Hermit nations are no more. Not alone in multiplied converts but in ideas, principles, habits, commerce, government, education, fellowship, he has revealed himself in achievement and unwonted opportunity. Ours is to awaken, to arise, to see, to listen.

Five Epochal Events

To-day as we convene in General Assembly, the Peace Congress meets in the capital of Holland. The very call is the echo of Christ's prayer, "Thy kingdom come." That Congress declares that God hath done great things for us. Nations are flowing together. In the presence of these opportunities the Church cannot be careless. We dare not refuse obedience. He calls us to subjugation. Force is the only argument known to savages from Joshua to McKinley. The earth must be subdued that it may bring forth the rose and the fruit—that it may bring forth the trees of life whose leaves are for the healing of the nations. Our national life has new impulse and dazzling ambition. We are looking out from our provincialism with an awakened thought and high purpose. There are dreams of wealth, extended commerce, enlightenment, liberty. We have made war for humanity. We have conquered for humanity. That victory will be a defeat and that endowment a poverty and destruction, save as through these open doors the church shall immediately and enthusiastically carry the vision of Jesus Christ.

I See Peace

White fields, inviting doors of commerce, and enlightened races: but I see them all beyond the Cross. There is no other way than by Calvary. Culture is not the salt to save the republic. Liberty will become license, commerce a curse, and wealth a blight save as they are received and held in the light of that glorious vision in the person and work of the crucified and regnant Christ.

I believe in imperialism, but an imperialism that is a beneficent republicanism. I believe in a war for humanity, but in a war for humanity which carries to humanity the enduring peace and good will of the Gospel of Christ. We cannot escape responsibility. This is not the time for swollen ease. If we dally, another will dominate. If we evade, the sceptre will be given to another. We will take no step which will condemn our forefathers or rebuke the ring of the Pilgrim's staff upon Plymouth Rock; but with kindred faith and enterprise, we will seek to carry to the dark places of the earth the light and glory of the celestial vision. We have come into the kingdom for such a time as this. Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines—these are the summons of our Mediatorial King. Questions of politics do not enter here, nor personal wish. It is not a matter of words. The man of Macedonia waves and calls to us from across the waters. This is not the day for microscopic vision. We have waited long over material considerations and delicate distinctions and refined discriminations. We are tempted to see and consider only the little circle which bounds the domestic, the comfortable, the politic. It is the day for

Telescopic Vision

A wide horizon, high achievements, beatific prospects, stars of magnitude and brilliance, worlds of spiritual wealth await and invite our enterprise and conquest. Lift up thine eyes and see. It is not the time for retrenchment. To retrench is to retrograde.

Our foreign mission enterprise must recognize opportunity and hear the authoritative command. It is a matter of humiliation that in the yearly increase of money, of numbers, of influence, of opportunities there has been no increase of appropriation or gifts. We have gone for years upon the same level. There comes no intelligent method and no uplifting enthusiasm. It seems to be constantly a matter of hysterics or lassitude. Our Mediatorial King commands as never before. Opportunities gleam with the glory of his presence. The future offers attainments and victories of grace unprecedented. Indifference is disloyalty. Apathy is sin. There is especial obligation upon us. American republicanism has its mold and inspiration from Presbyterian republicanism. American imperialism must have its counterpart in Presbyterian imperialism which will awaken to the significance of itself; which will recognize its own fitness and opportunity, and in the distinctness and responsibility of its own life, go forth and carry its republican beneficence, its spiritual republicanism, its divine spiritualness to the ends of the earth.

We are just entering the twentieth century. We have signalized other epochs with special gifts. The Reunion with $5,000,000; our Ministerial Relief Fund with $1,000,000. We would be indifferent and unfaithful if did not have the significant recognition. Other churches are moving. Our objects are manifold. We are proud of our record in education and in mission work. Schools and colleges in this and other lands, implore for aid and enlargement. They are the depositories of power for the Church. The hour is striking. The time should not pass without the initiation of a movement which will lay upon the altar a million of dollars for each century for the educational and missionary work of the Presbyterian Church. I summon you to thoughtfulness, to gratitude, to high and holy endeavor. It will cost money, but it is always better even to be crucified with Christ than to be released with Barabbas, to be poor with apostolic power than rich in Roman condemnation.

Our Significant Position

The world of art is to-day impressed with the faithfulness and power of the artist who has brought upon canvas not a picture, but the entire life of Jesus Christ. The artist, until his fiftieth year, depicted the life of the boulevards and the drawing room. A sudden revelation has given him renown and power in the highest themes of religion. He tells the story of his conversion, that, contemplating a work, he entered one of the churches of Paris, and, bowing his head, saw a vision. A peasant and his wife sat amid the ruins of a castle—a scene of utter destruction and despair. Over the ruins came gliding a figure of One whose hands and feet were dripping with blood, whose face was drawn in agony. He sat down by the suffering ones, and laying down his head, outstretched his hands and feet as though to say: "See, I have suffered more than thou. I alone am the solution of sorrow. I alone can solve the problem of life against which Art and Science and Military are marshalled in vain." The vision was the artist's awakening. It left the church with him; followed him; sat between him and his canvas. He could no longer paint frivolity, idleness, and sin. He was compelled to paint the picture of his vision. Completed, it did not satisfy. He must study. He must paint the real Christ amid the surroundings of his Palestine home; and out of that vision and its study came all that wonderous pathos and beauty and power of Tissot's pictured life of Christ. It is the parable for the Church.

The Disclosure.

The vision we have been considering will not come through mere knowledge of the truth. Knowledge cannot raise the dead. The ministerial touch has no disclosing power. The person of the Holy Spirit must be recognized in his presence and power if the vision is to come with its illumination and control. The need of the church is not in dogmas or treasuries or machineries or methods. With these multiform, abundant, adapted as never before, the hands hang down and knees are feeble. Enterprise never languishes when faith is clarified. The vision is by the Holy Ghost. We must re-emphasize the doctrine in pulpit and principle. He is. He is a person. He is here. He is almighty. He is not straitened nor given in measure. Honor him and he will honor you. To our cry, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O arm of the Lord!" comes like the thunder and the flash, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength O Zion!"

A revival is simply a day of the Spirit's power. It is possible to return to the simplicity and enthusiasm of other days. Now we see men like trees, awakening. We stumble. We wander in uncertainty and ineffectiveness. When Christ touched the eyes, the man could see. The deliverance and success of the Church will be not in its machinery, nor its wealth, nor its accomplishments, but in the recognized presence and spiritual submission to the supernatural power promised of olden time. As ever, he is Waiting to be Gracious.

We are straitened in our own selves. We must restore and vivify our conception of the Holy Spirit and our humble acceptance of his method and control. Our assertive energy and pride of conquest may themselves dishonor his presence and withhold his power. In waiting, we may renew our strength. Let us be known as those who sing our hymns not only to Christ, but to the Holy Ghost as God. He stands waiting with responsive revelation to every honest cry of "Lord, that I might receive my sight." The supreme, imperative, essential need of to-day is the divine touch of the Holy Spirit which will arrest our wandering and bewildered gaze, illumine the Word, give money to our treasuries, devotion to our worshipers, peace to our councils, wisdom to our legislation, unity to our brotherhood, simplicity to our faith, radiance to our hope and ardor to our sacrifice, because it will give clear-eyed, enrapturing and inspiring vision of him who walks in the midst of the golden candlesticks. Thou Spirit of the living God, Light of light, Truth of truth, Life of life, come in thy vivid disclosure, come in thy quick deliverance, come in thy gentleness and power, come in thy glorious revelation! Heal us with thine almighty touch. Anoint our eyes with eye-salve, that we may see. Speak, that our opened eyes may behold the glory of the King, and in that light see the great light that shineth unto the perfect day.

A Holy Life

O YE who wander in the night
And blindly grope and fall,
Let Jesus be a ray of light
To guide you home withal.

Why stand without that Light in view
And bend to Satan's rod,
When you can have your heart made new
By giving it to God?

Let not your hopes be fixed on earth
Or its alluring prize,
But try to have an angel's worth
And win the shining skies.

This world is but a wreck at best—
A place of sin and strife,
And he who would have peace and rest
Must lead a holy life.

Graham, Tex. —G. K.

The Wheat and the Tares

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for June 4. Matt. 13:24-30

VERY difficult of interpretation as this parable is, and prolonged and bitter as the disputes about it have been, there are lessons in it which we shall do well to learn. The facts are simple. Here is an ordinary farmer tilling a field and sowing it with wheat. It is his own land which he prepares for cultivation, and when it is ready, he sows good seed and has a right to expect a good crop. But some vindictive enemy desiring to injure him cunningly sows weeds in the field. He gains nothing by it. It is an act of simple malevolence. It is not that he claims the field or that he attempts to cultivate it. He utilizes the preparation which the owner has made and he goes his way. It is a secret act done in the night and no one knows of it. But when the wheat appears, the servants discover that the delicate sprouts are not all wheat. There are tares growing with it. These tares are the darnel, or false wheat, so like the wheat that only an experienced eye can detect the difference. They propose to weed the field, but the farmer forbids this. They might make a mistake and root up the wheat. Besides, the roots of the tares are intertwined with those of the wheat, and, in taking out the one, the other may be pulled up. Let them grow together till the harvest, when both will be cut down. It will be easy to discriminate then, because the darnel has no ear. Then they can be separated and the tares burned, while the wheat is garnered.

Christ's explanation of the parable is not sufficient for the theologians. It leaves unsettled the question whether the field is the world or the church. But the mingling of the seed applies to both. The church is not free from the tares; it was not free in Christ's own time, for there was a Judas among the chosen twelve. In the world we know that there are good and evil, and very often they seem to us so much alike that we can scarcely tell one from the other. But time determines. The difference is one of nature and character; and this nature will manifest itself. The good man will assuredly do good. There will be fruit from him. There is no need of worry or distress, no ground for apprehension of confusion. The real character will inevitably manifest itself. Hypocrisy may succeed for a time in deceiving society, but in the end it will reveal itself. Both good and evil grow up together, but in the end, the difference is so clear, that there is no possibility of mistake. The essence of Christianity is in nature. It is not in forms, or observances, or duties. All good results will come if the nature is right; if it is not right, there is nothing that can supply the deficiency. Church membership does not avail; benevolence does not avail; even martyrdom, as Paul says, will not avail—the nature must be Christ's nature, the disposition and character must be in harmony with Christ, otherwise the man will be classed with the tares.

So there must be patience. Persecution has never availed to turn out the evil and it never will. Let them grow together. And there is a reason for this in the spiritual world, beyond that in the natural world; for the bad man may in the process growth become good, while the tares can never turn into wheat. Expostulation, admonition will do more for the human tares than excommunication. There is always hope and therefore the more need for patience. The reapers are not men; the reapers are the angels. It is they who distinguish the one from the other. Men have always erred when they have undertaken the duty. And there must be toleration. Withdrawal from the world has been tried in monastries and nunneries but never with good result. The two seeds are to grow together. But the evil men are not to flatter themselves that it will always be so. There comes a time of separation. God is not so indifferent to the nature of men as some would have us suppose. It is only the good who are gathered into the garner. Closely as the evil may have been associated with them there will be an end to that. It is not always that the righteous will be vexed with the enforced companionship with the ungodly. He must bear it now, keeping himself as far as he is able from pollution, or rather being kept by One greater than himself, but in the end he will be delivered.

A Missionary to Porto Rico

The Rev. Milton E. Caldwell begins his work in Porto Rico this month. As has been previously stated in these columns, Mr. Caldwell is the first accredited missionary of the Presbyterian Board of Missions in America to reach the promising field so newly opened to Protestant effort in the West Indies. Rochester, N. Y., has the honor of sending him, having subscribed his salary for one year. Mr. Caldwell's family is with him. A lady, who will have charge of the mission school to be opened at Mayaguez, also accompanies him. Among all denominations entering Cuba and Porto Rico now it is realized that instruction of the children is an important feature of the work.

REV. MILTON L. CALDWELL

The Gospel in Micronesia

ONE of our American missionaries on the far-off Pacific island of Ruk (a member of the Micronesian group), sends us this very interesting letter:

To the Editor "Christian Herald":

A trading vessel came into our lagoon yesterday, and brought us a few letters, the dates more than a year old. One from you bears date February 1, 1898, and contained a check for $10. I thank you for it, and shall make it specially valuable to the work.

A San Francisco vessel brings us later news. We would be glad to know what nation is to have the Caroline Islands, how much religious toleration there is to be, and some other things. There has been a great deal of fighting among these natives during the past year; not open, manly warfare, but wanton, cruel murders, stealing unawares upon sleeping, or unarmed people, and shooting them down. Such deeds are the outgrowth of past feuds, which are constantly fanned to a flame by new acts of cruelty and bloodshed. If some Christian government will come in, stop the fighting, and prohibit the sale of arms and ammunition, it will be a great help to missionary work. It could be easily done, for the people are not brave. There is no organized authority of any kind here.

The next greatest need is some industry for the people. It is only to a limited extent that the missionaries can help in this matter We teach the boys and girls who are in our schools to do many kinds of work. We try to make the mission premises an object lesson to them in the way of neatness and cultivation; but that is only as a drop in the great cistern of natural incapability and laziness. When they come to us they know nothing of systematic work of any kind, and unless the grace of God has taken a strong hold of their hearts, when they leave us they gravitate to their former state.

We have eighty young people directly under our care and instruction, fifty in the training school and thirty in the girls' school. Besides, there are quite a large number of pupils in the day school and forty little ones in our kindergarten. Our Sunday congregations average two hundred as does also our Sunday School. Our teachers, except classes taught by missionaries, are taken from the more advanced among our scholars who come together each week for teachers' meeting.

The common conversation among the people is vile, as I suppose it is among all heathen. Nearly a year ago our attention was in some way more especially called to it, and we felt that a crusade must be made against it. A society was formed called "The Children of Joseph," in which the members pledged themselves to abstain from lying, swearing and vile talk. Those who keep the pledge during the week wear a white ribbon on Sunday. The society is very popular with the young people, and there is a great improvement in the tone of the general conversation. Very cordially yours, MRS. MARY E. LOGAN.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Qualifying for Public Service*

THE government of the United States is the best of employers. Fair compensation, regularity of payment, reasonably sure tenure, tasks which are not too difficult and hours which are not too long, offer strong attractions to young persons of both sexes who have no settled income, and whose ambition does not lead them into independent money-making ventures. Indeed, since the era of exclusive partisan patronage has given way to the non-partisan merit system, under which every citizen is given an equal chance, the Civil Service has been used by many young men and women as a path to larger fields of efforts in private life. They enter government employ, spend their spare hours in studying law or medicine or finance, and save enough from their salaries to enable them to start in a professional or business career.

In exchange, however, for furnishing such advantages, the government demands that it shall have, not simply competent employees, but the most competent who can be found. This is the reason for the competitive feature of the examinations it has prescribed as a test of fitness. If fifty persons are examined, and twenty-five of them pass with credit, these twenty-five are entered on the registers of eligible candidates in their precise order of excellence. The one who has passed with the highest average will have the first chance of appointment; the next in order will have the second chance, and so on. It is therefore all-important that any one who takes an examination should make the best average of which he is capable; and he should begrudge no amount of time and trouble spent in preparation to this end.

The examinations are of a practical character, in spite of all statements to the contrary by enemies of the existing system. For example, the applicant for appointment as post-office clerk who "crams" for an examination in astronomy and chemistry spends his strength to no purpose. It is to save such time and energy that this little book is written, so that any candidate may learn from it just what is necessary, and what unnecessary, in brushing up his studies; and what his chances are, all things considered, for making his way into Civil Service, and staying there.

*From How to Prepare for a Civil Service Examination: by Francis E. Leupp. A decidedly interesting manual and one calculated to be especially serviceable to all who aspire to fill government positions, since it points out the lines in which they must qualify. It is really a complete guide to the Federal Civil Service. Pp. 553; cloth binding; price, $2. Hinds & Noble, New York, publishers.

The Wreck of Friendship†

IN one way or other, the loss of friendship comes to all. The shores of life are strewn with wrecks. The convoy which set the [illegible] in the sunshine cannot all expect to arrive together in the haven. There are the dangers of storms and collisions, and the separation of the night, and even at the best, if accidents never occur, the whole company cannot all keep up with the speed of the swiftest.

There is a certain pathos in all loss, but there is not always pain in it, or at least it is of varied quality and extent. Some losses are natural and unavoidable, quite beyond our control, the result of resistless change. Some loss is even the necessary accompaniment of gain. The loss of youth with all its possessions is the gain of manhood and womanhood. A man must put away childish things, the speech and understanding and thought of a child. So the loss of some friendship comes as a part of the natural course of things, and is accepted without mutilating the life. We each go our separate ways without much regret.

Among the petty things which wreck friendship, none is so common and so unworthy as money. It is pitiable that it should be so. Thackeray speaks of the remarkable way in which a five-pound note will break up a half century's attachment between two brethren, and it is a common cynical remark of the world that the way to lose a friend is to lend him money. There is nothing which seems to affect the mind more, and color the very heart's blood more, than money. There seems a curse in it sometimes, so potent is it for mischief. Poverty, if it be too oppressive, grinding down the face, may often hurt the heart-life; but perhaps oftener still it only reveals what true treasures there are in the wealth of the affections. Whereas, we know what heartburnings, and rivalries, and envyings, are occasioned by this golden apple of discord. Most of the disputes which separate brethren are about the dividing of the inheritance, and it does seem to be a case that few friendships can survive the test of money.

Neither a borrower nor a lender be,
For loan oft loses both itself and friend.

†From Friendship, by Hugh Black, M.A. Bound [illegible] & Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

An Old Man's Philosophy*

"I'VE learned to mend most things," said the old man; "it isn't given to every one to make, and I'm one of the menders in the world not the makers. There's one thing I can't mend—and that is broken hearts."

There was silence: Roy broke it at last by saying with knitted brow, "I'd rather be a maker than a mender, but lots of people aren't either."

"Quite right," nodded the old man; "most folks are breakers."

"I wish I was as clever as you," said Dudley; "you mend umbrellas, and kettles, and plates, and windows, and gates, and all sorts. How did you learn?"

The clock was done. Old Principle put it carefully by and then mounted on some wooden steps, and took down a tin saucepan. The boys knew the shelf well; as though apparently it was just a row of tinware for sale, many a pot and pan held treasures that geologists would have given a great deal to possess.

Now when Old Principle held out a peculiar shaped stone with loving pride, Roy and Dudley pressed forward to look at it.

"I know, it's a Roman hammer," shouted out Dudley."

"It's a Saxon jug," suggested Roy.

"It's part of a jaw of a mammoth many thousand years old, and there are two teeth in perfect preservation." Old Principle said solemnly.

"Where did you find it?"

"Ah, you must come and see! In a cave that I have only just discovered, and which must originally have been by the side of a river. I'll take you there tonight if you can get permission to come."

"Old Principle, do you think we ought to make opportunities?" questioned Dudley, presently; "Roy thinks we ought, and I did make one the other day, but it didn't turn out well."

"Ay, Master Roy is always for making," said the old man, with a smile; "he will try to cram his life with what will come fast enough naturally, if he only waits."

"But will it?" questioned Roy, flushing up with eagerness. "Do you think it will? I'm longing to do something big and grand and good; I mayn't live to grow up, you know, and I'm sure we're meant to do something when we're boys."

"We're trying to do good to all men as we have opportunity," said Dudley, gravely.

"Ay, stick to that, boys, and you'll succeed. There's none too small to be true philanthropists."

"What is a philanthropist?" asked Roy.

"A man who benefits his fellow creatures. 'Tis a good principle to keep in mind."

"But it's difficult for boys to do grown-up people good. They always do boys good."

"Now, look here, Master Roy. I've lived and learned where you haven't, and I try to pass my principles on to you. That's how I do you good. You come to me and take what I give you, and, seeing you act out the advice I offer you does me good. You do me good, too, every time you come to see me; it's cheery to hear and see you."

"But that's very tame for us," said Roy, a little scornfully.

"Oh, well, if your own likes must come into the question, it's a different story! I didn't know it mattered about our feelings as long as the good was done! 'Tis a bad principle to try to please others only when it pleases ourselves."

Roy looked a little ashamed of himself. He said no more on the subject.

*From His Big Opportunity, by Amy Le Feuvre; illustrated in half-tone and bound in cloth; 193 pp. Price 75c. Fleming H. Revell Company, publishers, New York, Chicago and Toronto.

Books Received

[illegible]ary E. Richmond. Co., 16 Fifth [illegible]

[illegible] food value as determin[illegible] guished chemists and physicians. Some [illegible] introduced into the tea [illegible] picking, curing and pre[illegible] use are represented [illegible] graphs taken in the W[illegible] Pp. 72. Publishers, W[illegible] Dorchester, Mass.

NOTE.—Safety from alumned food lies in buying only the Royal Baking Powder, which is the best cream of tartar baking powder that can be had.

CRAZY WORK [illegible] Embroidery Outfits [illegible] Remnants, [illegible] Lemarie's Silk Mill, [illegible]

SPECTACLES at wholesale. Send [illegible] wanted COULTER OPTICAL CO. Chicago, Ill.

"To Err is Human."

But to err all the time is criminal or idiotic. Don't continue the mistake of neglecting your blood. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will make pure, live blood, and put you in good health.

All Gone. Had no appetite or strength, could not sleep or get rested, was completely run down. Two bottles Hood's Sarsaparilla cured the tired feeling and I do my own work. Miss A. Dow, [illegible], N. J.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills are hard to [illegible], the best [illegible] and [illegible] to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

IMITATIONS OF OXYDONOR
ARE DANGEROUS TO USE

The Original is made by the Discoverer and Inventor
DR. H. SANCHE
Which is the only safe instrument.

[illegible]

From Rev. JOHN A. THOMPSON, D.D.,

[illegible]

PRICE NOW $10

DR. H. SANCHE & COMPANY,
[illegible] Avenue, New York City,
[illegible] State Street, Chicago, Ill.
[illegible] Pine Street, Detroit, Mich.
Canadian Office: 2365 St. Catherine Street, Montreal, P.Q.

WASHING DISHES

A mountain of dishes confronts the average housewife after all the family have dined. They are greasy dishes, too, and hard to get clean with soap and water. The best, easiest, quickest and cheapest way to wash dishes is to use a little in the dish-water. It acts like magic, cuts the grease and makes the dishes perfectly clean. In fact all cleaning is made easier by this great cleanser, and at half the cost of soap.

GOLD DUST
WASHING POWDER

For greatest economy buy our large package.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY
Chicago St. Louis New York Boston

The IDEAL Steam Cooker

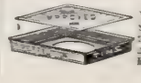
Reduces Fuel Bills One-Half. Makes tough meats tender. Prevents steam and odors. Whistle [illegible] Dinner Sets, Bicycles, Watches, and other Valuable Premiums given with order for Cookers. [illegible] Agents Wanted. TOLEDO COOKER CO., Box 18, Toledo, O.

$20.00 A Week Salary. [illegible] monds; plated and solid Colorado Silver tableware. Mutual Manufacturing Co., 126 Chambers St., Dept. I, N.Y. City

$60 Sewing Machines for $18.

We sell every reliable Sewing Machine made. We employ no agents, pay no commissions, which explains how we can sell you from $25 to $60 less than Singer Machines. Every machine sold is guaranteed latest improved, with all attachments, and warranted for 20 years. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Other electrical specialties. Full particulars and will be mailed free.

Address: J. N. HOOK & CO., A 1351 Central Ave. CINCINNATI, O



AGENTS WANTED!

[illegible] Richardson Mfg. Co., 92d St., Bath, N.Y.

... The Family Tie ...

BY AMELIA E. BARR.

JEHOVAH is not only the King of kings, and the Father and Lover of men, he is also "the God of the families of the whole earth;" and Christ is not only our Saviour and Elder Brother, but it is in "our Lord Jesus Christ the whole family in heaven and earth are named." These two facts alone sanctify and ennoble the family relation, and give to it an importance which for lack of consideration many of us hardly realize. Come then and let us together give an hour to the consideration of the affection and solidarity of the family tie.

A family is built up of natural affinities. It is not a guild, nor a league, nor a society; these unions are raised artificially and sooner or later come to an end. But families are not built up on similarity of tastes or objects or opinions; their foundations are in the affinities of nature. We none of us choose our father or mother or brother or sister; they are chosen for us, and we are bound to them by ties reaching into two eternities.

How wonderfully are families arranged! They are composed of the two poles of entire humanity—masculine and feminine—and these together, not separately, make up the whole of man. Then, as to family affection, how diverse it is! The love we have for our father is not the same kind of love we have for our mother. Boys love their sisters differently to their brothers. Sisters love each brother with an affection special to their case and character. Then the diversity of family love is supplemented by the diversity of character; the strength of the father, the tenderness of the mother, the fidelity of the sister or brother. Again, one brother is brave and adventurous, another practical, a third poetic. One member is strong, another weak and sick, drawing all the sympathies of the entire household to that point. All these and many other traits are not accidental, they are of divine ordination, and no family is complete without this variety.

. . .

THERE are a few grand old words connected with the family that are fading away, and which we all ought to do our best to restore to daily use. They are Kin, Kinsman, Kindred, Kinsfolk. They come from the oldest root in the whole Aryan stem, and they should not be pushed out of meaning and use. But Kin is nearly gone. Kind and Kindly have changed their original significance, and instead of Kindred and Kinsfolk—words with a delightful meaning—we have "Relations," a word which may mean anything or nothing. For we stand in all kinds of "Relations" to our family and to the whole world. How this undesirable change has come about, Professor Muller or Dean Trench may perhaps find out for us; we only recognize the fact.

But whether "Kindred" or "Relations" they are our miniature world, and the discipline involved in this connection, is very complete and wonderful. What faith, and patience, and forbearance we show to the faults that we have been used to from infancy! Family affection is a divine thing, for it enables us not only to tolerate but to love those whose action we are obliged to condemn; and it even blinds us so far as to make us excuse in our own what we condemn in others. We think of, and we talk of, and we feel towards our kindred as if they were different beings to the rest of mankind. If they are wronged, how bitterly we feel it; if they fail in anything we are ready to blame any one and any event, rather than believe they have failed deservedly. In the bottom of our hearts we may not approve their conduct, or even enjoy their society, but Kin is less than Kind when it is willing to admit the fact.

. . .

THE WAY in which the family influence tells, is very natural and beautiful. Usually, there is one member stronger, or wiser than all the others; and it is delightful to see how cordially and completely the less strong and wise fit into his groove. Say it is the father, they adopt his creed about everything in a simple, hearty way that has no misgivings. They are wholly of his persuasion, and accept his family views and opinions with a good-humored confidence that is almost touching.

Sometimes the eldest brother or sister is the leading spirit. If it is the brother, he leads, not because he is older or wiser, but because "he is a fine fellow." If it is the sister, it is not because she is prettier or more graceful or because she is a woman, but because "she is a dear, helpful, sympathizing girl." For in the family, as in the world, it is the superiority of character that tells; and the triumph of the family persuasion is the triumph of some sort of personal nobleness.

. . .

THEREFORE, this family influence is a powerful one between husband and wife. If a husband has any strength of character, he is sure to bring his wife to his way of looking at things. If this was not the case, what a wall of separation there would often be between married couples. But as a general thing the young wife nestles comfortably into her husband's beliefs. It is not his arguments that work her to this voluntary agreement, but the silent force of a stronger or wiser character acting upon her daily life; and there is really something very fine and sweet in this adaptability and unconscious acceptance of a superior influence.

Much has been said and written about the duty of "setting a good example" in the family; but there is no necessity to worry about our example; for the only example worth anything is that shown by being really ourselves. If a father is upright, a mother loving, a brother brave and truthful, a sister gentle and tender, those who live with them know it, and are influenced by these virtues. Parents and kindred who deserve to be honored and loved, are honored and loved as a matter of course; and it would be a wretched world if this were not so. For when every other anchor drags, the one that binds us to home and family holds firm.

. . .

IF THESE things are true, we ought then to do everything we can to preserve the family influence and the family tie. Family gatherings should be kept up. There are selfish people who gird against them, and think it a mark of superiority to sneer at Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Year's festivals. They are willing to separate themselves from their family, and wish to be regarded as an unit of individual life. Such people don't deserve any kindred. There was an old Roman imprecation, only hurled at an enemy in the bitterest hatred, "May you die the last of your family!" and they deserve all the loneliness of pain and sorrow, and all the hunger of the heart this terrible curse implies. For such miserable cynics are moved only by a selfish feeling that family gatherings interfere with their duty to themselves; a duty which they regard as the first and the highest. There are many good gifts of God which we wickedly despise, but the man or woman who willingly cut themselves loose from home and family ties, have made themselves willingly something less than human.

. . .

DOUBTLESS the advance of the modern realistic spirit has penetrated even into the sacred places of family and home; and, though the sense of family obligation is not weakened, it is undoubtedly more materialistic and exclusive. We smile at the barren delight which irradiates a Scotchman's face at the sight of a seventh cousin; and are more and more disposed to exclude from our family sympathies all but those on our special twig of the family tree. Yet blood is still thicker than water, and all other things being equal, a far-off cousin is really nearer to us than a stranger.

Love of money is a great weakener of family ties. Men want more and more money, and they give more and more time to getting it, until they have no room in their hearts for anyone but wife and children. Ambition also is a fatal loosener. Through it, England has become too small for her sons, and they have found homes in China, India and in the great Austral plains. In the same way the Eastern States have emptied themselves into the West; and the South into the North; but all the more we should adorn this exodus at Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year, and birthdays with some gracious and tender sentiment. There is nothing but good in wearing a soft inner lining to the rough garment of our daily existence.

. . .

GOD grant that none of us may ever be too old, or too wise in our own conceit, or too selfish, to shelter our souls in this sweet family affection. No matter how far we have drifted away from the home, we cannot afford to forget it. If we cast away this blessed past, we remain but half ourselves. The past is inalienably ours. We will not be base enough to be unfaithful to it. We will blend the noble hopes of our future with the tender memories of our past. And so, when home and family fade from our sight, we shall have them always in our heart. Alas! if we do not, we shall certainly come to a day when the wide, wide world will be a world too wide for us.

Amelia E. Barr

Walter Baker & Co.'s
BREAKFAST
COCOA.

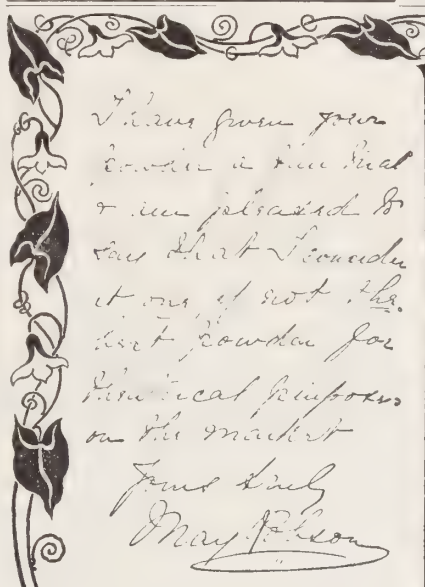
Costs Less than One Cent a Cup.

Be sure that the Package bears our Trade-Mark.

A Perfect Food.
Pure, Nutritious, Delicious.

WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd.
Established 1780.
DORCHESTER, MASS.

$14.50 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL
buy direct from factory. Save agents large profits. No money in advance. WARRANTED 10 YEARS.
$45 Arlington Machine for ... $14.50
$35 Arlington Machine for $12.50
Other Machines $8.00, $9.25 and $11.50
all attachments free, over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write today for special freight offer.
CASH BUYERS' UNION,
158-164 W. VanBuren St., B-18 Chicago, Ill.



ENDORSES
POZZONI'S
Medicated
COMPLEXION POWDER

Box 50 cts. J. A. POZZONI, St. Louis & New York. Sample Free.

AN 1899 BICYCLE
...Absolutely Free...

If you are interested in securing a first-class 1899 Bicycle without the expenditure of more than a single cent, invest that cent in a postal card and address it for full particulars to

...THE SUCCESS COMPANY...
Cooper Union, New York.

Good Causes Helped

The following sums have been contributed by our readers for the support of the worthy causes mentioned below:

Bethesda Home.

Prev. ack $25 00
D. C. Steiner 5 00
A J. 3 00
L W. 1 00
Total $34 00

Door of Hope.

Prev. ack $18 00
Mrs. G F Hauser 1 00
Total $19 00

Foreign Missions.

Prev. ack $5 00
D C Steiner 10 00
Two Friends, Dunkirk 1 00
Ramsey Intermediate Class, Prairie Grove S S, for China 1 35
[illegible] 1 00

Any Good Cause.

Prev. ack $75 35
Ada L Dixon 5 00
[illegible] 1 00
B W Northrop 10
David Hoag 1 00
A Subr, Selma 8 50
In Jesus' Name, Fairfield Ctr 5 00
——, Sudbury Ctr 1 00
N. N. 6 00
Stephen Stride 1 00
[illegible] 1 00
Mrs J E Burton 10
——, Fernandina 1 50
Jas E Ostrander 10
J A McC, Phila 1 00
Mrs J D Eastland 10
D M W. 1 00
[illegible] Wescock 1 00
3 Sisters, Sudlersville 10 00
Mrs May Lee 2 00
[illegible] 1 00

Home Missions.

Prev. ack $27 00
D. C Steiner 5 00
Total $32 00

Mrs. Rose H. Lathrop.

Prev. ack $19 50
E Carpenter 1 00
Total $20 50

Jerry McAuley Mission.

Prev. ack $13 50
W Caswell 5 00
[illegible] 1 00

Mayesville Institute.

Prev. ack $185 00
Women's Meeting of Bethlehem Chapel 4 36
Total $189 36

Miss Emma Nason's

Prev. ack $3 00
——, Cliftondale 5 00
E A Cummins 5 00
Total $13 00

Christian Herald S. S. Missionary.

Prev. ack' $20 00
[illegible] 1 00
Mr & Mrs D B K Van Raalte 2 00
Total $23 00

Society for the Prev. of Cruelty to Children.

E A Cummins $9 00
Blanche Sargent 1 00
Total $10 00

Clinton St. Settlement.

Prev. ack $33 00
Walter Corliss, M.D. 2 00
Friend, Senecaville 1 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
——, Williamson 5 00
Friend, Pendleton 5 00
I H N, Intercourse 1 00
Total $50 00

Gospel in Philippines.

Prev. ack $5 00
B P. Waupaca 5 00
Mrs S G Buchanan 1 00
In Jesus' Name 3 00
Total $30 00

School for Syrian Girls.

Prev. ack $7 00
Mrs G F Hauser 1 00
A M P. Florence 1 00
Mary [illegible] Brattleboro 1 00
Total $10 00

Spanish Testament Fund.

Prev. ack $167 95
Mrs J W Clarkson 1 00
Mrs A. Watrous 50
Y P S C E [illegible] 1 00
Princeton 5 00
[illegible] 1 00
Loyal Circle of K D. 5 00
Emmanuel Bapt Ch Sunday 5 00
Miss J P Crozier 5 00
Mrs Sinnamon 2 00
A Pa[illegible] 1 00
Mrs [illegible] Huston 10 00
Lancaster Member 65
Miss A E Richards 1 00
Brooklyn and Plainfield Members 1 00
Miss [illegible] 25
Mable Gardner 2 00
Geo S Campbell 2 00
L C Hubbard 2 50
Mrs. K C Thayer 1 00
Mrs E L J, per D. M [illegible] 5
H S & family Colchester 5
Mrs J Roesch 1 00
A N [illegible] 1 00
Mrs J F Heisley 35
L A W, Westfield 1 00
Total $236 70

Lincoln Memorial University.

[illegible] $4 00
Henry Turrill 25 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
Miss A Thatcher 1 00
Mrs S [illegible] 1 00
Ben F Jones 1 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
E A Cummins 25 00
C A K, So Framingh m 5 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
M C Bosworth 10 00
Total $122 00

[illegible] in Africa

Prev. ack $267 80
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
Mable Gardner 3 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
Margaret Lamond 1 00
[illegible] 1 00
Valley Stream M E S S 6 21
Unknown, Woodcock 2 00
Gertrude Garvin 1 00
[illegible] 1 00

Porto Rico S. S. Work.

Prev. ack $326 90
Mrs Dora C Barnitz 50
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
Mrs G G Gibson 1 00
Henry Denny 25
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
[illegible] 1 00
W Caswell 15 00
I H N, Lawrence 5 00
S S S, Middle Island 1 00
Mrs. D Tedrow 1 00
A L C, San Francisco 1 00
I H N 1 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
[illegible] 1 00
Chicago 10 00
Clarissa Scovill 1 00
Mary L Shipman 20 00
W W Clark & Son 2 00
[illegible] 1 00
Mrs J H Anderson 50
J T Prentice 2 00
Mrs. [illegible] 1 00
S A Cochran 1 00
D D S, Le Raysville 1 50
[illegible] 1 00
Collected by Hattie Dutcher 1 10
Faith M A B, James- [illegible] 1 00
Mrs G F Hauser 1 00
Kinzie B Zeigler 10
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
M [illegible] 1 00
J R Oatliam 1 00
Cahuenga, U S S 3 35
Mrs E E Peck 50
Lizzie M Kaup 1 00
W M. 1 00
Maggie Tabb 25
Reader, Peoria 2 00
Mrs. Emily E Warner 1 00
Subr, Leechville 1 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
Mrs E A Evans 1 50
A W Whitner 1 00
Conrad E W Snow 15
[illegible] 1 00
Mary L Cady 15
Mrs F W Klock 2 00
Mrs L C Sartorius 1 00
Geo W Hack 2 00
In Jesus' Name 3 00
S M Clark 1 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
E Carpenter 1 00
E A Cummins 5 00
Total $437 40

Gospel Work in Cuba.

Prev. ack $52 95
I H N 1 00
A B 1 00
Walter Corliss, M.D. 1 00
R C, Milford 2 00
W M. 1 00
——, Morden Man 1 00
J A McC, Phila, Pa 1 00
Mrs S G Buchanan 1 00
In Jesus' Name 3 00
Mrs S W Eaton 1 00
Total $69 15

Armenian Fund.

Prev. ack ..... $[illegible] 43
L A Swartz 5 00
A A Szabo 5 00
Mrs Chas Phillips 3 00
Ella Fitch Backus 5 00
John Musil 1 00
A M P. Florence 1 00
R B Watrous 1 00
Mrs Frederick Lynn 1 50
Total $234 93

China Flood Sufferers.

D Gladstone $5 00
[illegible] 5 00
E J Gehrmann 5 00
Mary C Austin 5 00
Mrs [illegible] 1 00
Mrs J S N. Patterson 2 50
Ben F Jones 5 00
——, Minn 1 25
M Parsons 1 00
F O B, Princeton 2 00
——, Aguascalientes, Mexico 12 86
Miss F Hoyt 1 00
Mrs [illegible] & friend 50
S J Seymour 5 00
A friend of Jesus, Brunswick 1 00
For Jesus' Sake, Buckfield 1 00
——, Peterboro 1 00
W [illegible] 1 00
Mrs E S Stone 1 00
H MacMillan 50
Chas A Hagaman 10 00
Subr ..... [illegible]
Total ..... $[illegible]

The condition of the organs of the system is important. If your blood is not pure there is some weakness that should at once be strengthened by Hood's Sarsaparilla, Nature's true blood purifier.

JOSEPH WHEELER

The Memory of Our Fighting Men

By Joseph Wheeler

Major-General Volunteers, U. S. A.

"American Kings" Series

William A. Clark The Copper King

WILLIAM A. CLARK

Editorials on The New Memorial Day

By BRIGADIER-GENERAL J. P. S. GOBIN, Past Commander-in-Chief G. A. R.

The Streets are the People's

By CARTER H. HARRISON, Mayor of Chicago

THE FALLEN OF THE FIGHT, a Decoration-Day Poem, by Frank L. Stanton.

Stories by JOHN HABBERTON, VANCE THOMPSON, BARRY PAIN.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Founded A° D° 1728 by Benj. Franklin

OF PHILADELPHIA

Dated Saturday, May 27.

5 CENTS THE COPY OF ALL NEWSMEN

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

Music Easily Learned

AT HOME, [illegible] Piano, Organ, Guitar and Voice. We [illegible] Tunes, Notes, Chords, Accompaniments, and the Laws of Harmony in a short time. In the Cheapest, Easiest, most Rapid and most complete way ever [illegible] strongest kind of testimonials received. Goes to the bottom of every [illegible] a fondness for music because you succeed from the start. A few [illegible] Accompaniments in all Keys. We send [illegible] Circulars Free. Write for them. Worth hundreds of dollars to anyone interested in Music. 10 Lessons, 10 Cents. U. S. CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC CO., R 241 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO, ILLS.

Double Entry Book-Keeping

Approved System. Taught Thoroughly by Mail. Send for circulars.

HENRY VON DEYLEN, 314 Clifton Place BROOKLYN N. Y.

$18.00 a Week and expenses [illegible] Permanent position. [illegible] can find profitable employment for part time. Give references. R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

$3.00 to $10.00 a day can be made [illegible] ing for me. People preferred who can furnish their [illegible] Manufacturer's [illegible] goods [illegible] B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

DO YOU WANT More than Savings Bank Interest? To Sell Land or Mortgages? [illegible] write FIDELITY INVESTMENT CO., TACOMA, WASH

Children's Day Services for the Sunday School.

Blossom Time contains a [illegible] song of peace, [illegible] recitations and responsive readings.

Sunshine and Song contains a stirring flag song a [illegible] and effective recitations etc. Either 10 cents for samples of our three latest services.

Columbia, a patriotic [illegible] Very brilliant, price 30 cts. The May issue of The Church Choir contains [illegible] and Motets. An [illegible] pie copy free to choristers.

GEO. F. ROSCHE & CO.

Chicago, 58 Randolph st. New York, 5 S. Williams st.

613,000

Sacred Songs No. 1

ALREADY SOLD.

Music Edition $25 per 100. Sample 20 cents by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. New York. Chicago.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs [illegible] purpose. Books, Sheet Music, Octavos, Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments. New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free. FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

THE HAIR 27th Ed. [illegible] and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER. [illegible] "Every one should read this little book."—Common

THE STANDORETTE
An Invalid's Stand, Easel, Reading Stand, Book Rest, Music Stand, Card Stand, Sewing Stand, Drawing Board, all in one handsome piece of furniture. Compactly folded; shipped in box
D. H. ALLEN & CO., Miamisburg, O.

WANTED—A case of bad [illegible] that RIPANS will not relieve. Two [illegible] pain [illegible] time [illegible] Nine [illegible] RIPANS in one package and accept no substitutes. RIPANS [illegible] 5 cents. If [illegible] packets for 48 cents may be sent by mail [illegible] Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 1 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 59 Spruce St., New York.

Our Children's Home

WHILE the children of the tenements are making eager inquiries as to "when the country will open," their friends all over the United States are remembering them in gift and prayer. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these ye have done it unto me" are precious words which may well apply to those who are co-operating with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in this blessed work for the little ones of whom jesus said: "Suffer little children to come unto me." Letters, brief though they be—often only a line—which come with every contribution, show that the gift is sanctified by prayer and faith. Such gifts will bear much fruit. The good seed is sown in fresh young hearts, the Christian influence of the Home, the close walk with nature, God's handmaid, in the flowery fields and on green hillsides—all supply conditions which promise rich returns. The following extracts from many letters show in what sacred interest all givers hold this work.

Mrs. M. B., $5. God's blessing rest ever on the Home and the workers there.—A. B. E., $3. May the good work prosper is my prayer. —I. S. C., $1. May heaven bless the good work.—Mrs. C. A. K., $3. Praying that it may prove a blessing to some little child.

The handwriting in some of the following indicates age or invalidism of the giver; others are in childish chirography; still others show that business men, the happy, the young and the strong, carry the welfare of the tenement waifs upon their hearts.

J. H. D., $3. Hope it will make some poor little waif happy and well.—J. D., $3. For your Fresh-air work.—One who loves little children, $3 to make a little waif happy.—H. M. DeL., $1. Help some little child.—J. R., $3 for the children's happiness and health.—B. K. S., $5, to be used for the children.—A friend, $1 for the little "Fresh-airs."—A. M. C., $1 for the children.—L. & M., $1 to help send a child to the country.—L. J. S., $2. I hope to send more for the Fresh-air Fund next month.—A friend, $5 to help the Fresh air work.—M. J., $1. A little help in Jesus name.—Mrs. C. H. H., $1. I am prayerfully interested in this work.

By these three friends of children, thirty-one little tenement waifs will be made happy:

H. E., $35. Please place to the credit of the twelve little tots you are to take to the country for me this summer.—Mrs. D. B., $25. for the little "Fresh-Airs."—E.W. $2. "The Lord's Tenth."

Could the same amount of money applied in any other way accomplish so much good? The Fortnightly Social Club of Harlem sends $24, "the proceeds of a sale the young ladies of our Church held for the benefit of the Fresh-Air Fund." The Junior Christian Endeavor of Au Table, Mich., sends $1. "hoping it will do a lot of good."

The following contributions have been received:

Previously acknowledged	$408 82
A M R, Stewartsville	10 00
B H S A, Savannah	3 00
A M C, Bath	1 00
Mrs C G Atkinson	10
W, Chanute	6 00
Elizabeth & Wm Hunter	3 00
L & M, Gray Horse	1 00
P S Conde	1 00
James Richards	3 00
A Friend	1 00
A Friend, Cromwell	5 00
Harriet E Strong	35 00
Mrs T A Murray	5 00
Ben F Jones	3 00
A Reader, Fall River	3 00
Mary Jackson	1 00
Lillie T Smith	2 00
A B Erskine	3 00
Barbara K Smith	5 00
The Fortnightly Social Club, Harlem	24 00
A Constant Reader, Zanesville	10
One Who Loves Little Children E Freedom	3 00
J H Dudley	3 00
Mrs Chas H Hubbard	1 00
Mrs David Brown	25 00
J D, Worcester	3 00
E W, Dartford	2 00
Mrs C A Kutscher	3 00
Total	$564 02

Good Resolutions

"The new birth isn't making good resolutions or good intentions, or turning over a new leaf, or making promises or vows. That isn't the new birth at all.

"Perhaps some of you say, 'What is it?' Well, listen. Christ says, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." There is life in his word. You take the Word of God into your heart, and there is the germ, there is the life. If I should take my watch and plant it, I wouldn't get any little watches, would I? Why? Because the germ of life isn't there. If I should plant a bushel of gravel, I wouldn't get any more gravel would I? But let me plant a bushel of corn at the proper time, let me get the seed and put it in the ground in the month of May, and let the dew of heaven come upon the land, and the rain and the sun, and out of the death of that corn will come a new life. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life."

The Gospel in Bulgaria

ONE of the most prosperous evangelical churches in the Principality of Bulgaria is the Congregational Evangelical Church at Sophia, of which Rev. M.N. Popoff, a young Bulgarian educated in this country, has been pastor for six years.

REV. M. N. POPOFF.
Pastor of C. E. Church, Bulgaria

The church was organized in 1885 and the building erected in 1887. The auditorium can seat 400, while in time of emergency more than 600 can be accommodated. A fine organ was presented several years ago by friends in America. A two-story parsonage stands near the church.

The Sophia Church has contributed about $900 annually to general Christian work. It is nearly self-supporting. The pastor's salary is $480 yearly and free parsonage. The members number about 260, and the Sunday School 90. The services are all well attended.

In connection with the Sophia Church are several active societies, including a Woman's Benevolent Society, Young Men's Society, Temperance Society, and Bible Class. During fourteen years the church has had four ministers, viz., Dr. J. N. Matincheff, Mr. A. C. Tsanoff, Rev. N. T. Boyadjieff, and Rev. M. N. Popoff. The present incumbent is the accredited representative of all the Bulgarian Evangelical churches to the Bulgarian Government.

E. S. AKRABORA.

"O to Do Something!"

"His work shall be rewarded." Jer. 31:16.

O TO do something, something, just what my Saviour ordains!
A pensioner of his bounty I go to secure my claims.
Go to do errands of mercy to all who are needing a friend;
Go while the Saviour is waiting his weary ones here to defend.

O to do something, something—millions are calling to-day
For faithful and earnest endeavor the great tide of evil to stay,
Calling to sacrifice nobly of what we hold dear here below;
To show forth the news of salvation that God through his grace will bestow!

O to do something, something for Jesus my best beloved Friend!
Who loves me and says to me ever, "I'll strengthen and help to the end;
Strengthen the helpless and weary, their burdens to rest upon me."
When life with its toils are but dreary, my refuge and help is from thee.

O to do something, something for Jesus the Lord of my life!
Who left the dear home of his glory to mingle with turmoil and strife,
Left all to give to the erring a way of escape from their sin,
Left the blest mansions of glory a lost world of sinners to win.

O to do something, something, Saviour of sinners I pray
That I may be taught of the Spirit and live close to thee day by day;
May I be watchful and earnest to tell of the love thou dost give;
The love that to death even brought thee, that all who would trust thee might live.

Boston. MRS. C. B. PARMENTER.

A Soap Reminder

Just to remind you that you will never regret having ordered Wool Soap for your toilet and bath, for it's the purest soap afloat, the soap you are sure of, the soap safe for you and for baby.

If your dealer hasn't it, send us his name, and we'll send you a cake free.

Swift and Company, Makers, Chicago

"To enjoy fair eyesight the rest of my life, is one of the most comforting thoughts that can possibly enter my mind except the thought of a final home in Heaven." —BEECHER.

THE INESTIMABLE BLESSING OF SIGHT.
AVOID SPECTACLES & EYEGLASSES, HEADACHE & SURGICAL OPERATION.
ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ON THE EYE, MAILED FREE.
THE IDEAL COMPANY, 239 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

It Is a Certainty That Catarrh

can be cured. You will believe it after using a sample of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Mailed free. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 55 Broad St., Blosser Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Chambard's Tea, the most popular family medicine in France for biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, swelling of the stomach, congestions, eczema. The most agreeable and best purgative. Box 35 cents by mail. Legoll's Pharmacy, 286 7th Ave., N. Y., and leading druggists

$2.45 buys a MAPLE AND REED BODY Baby Carriage
32 page Catalogue Free. We Pay Freight and ship on 10 days trial. No money required in advance. Address VICTOR MANUFACTURING CO., Dept. H 21, 295 and 297 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

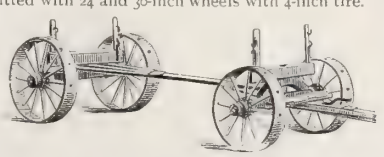
Trial Package Free!

If any reader, suffering from rheumatism, will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 219 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

Farm Wagon for Only $19.95.

In order to introduce their Low Metal Wheels with Wide Tires, the Empire Manufacturing Company, Quincy, Ill., have placed upon the market a Farmer's Handy Wagon, sold at the low price of $19.95. The wagon is only 25 inches high, fitted with 24 and 30-inch wheels with 4-inch tire.



This wagon is made of best material throughout, and really costs but a trifle more than a set of new wheels, and fully guaranteed for one year. Catalogue giving a full description will be mailed upon application by the Empire Manufacturing Co., Quincy, Ill., who also will furnish metal wheels at low prices, made any size and width of tire to fit any axle.

The Latest Improved McCREERY FOLDING VAPOR BATH CABINET. Has a Door and all the latest improvements. A home treatment that will cure la grippe, rheumatism, all blood, skin & kidney troubles; reduces superfluous flesh. Price $5. Face steamer $1.50 extra. Folds neatly in small space. Free descriptive book and testimonials. Special inducements to salesmen. MOLLENKOPP & M'CREERY, 138 Summit St Toledo, O.

Cures Without Medicine.

THE ELECTROPOISE APPLIED

THE HUMAN BODY is a machine of fine parts skilfully put together by a master hand. When we feel indisposed some part of that machine is not performing its function. When we take medicine it often simply clogs the wheels still more. What the body needs is oxygen. Oxygen to the body is like oil to an engine. It cannot run without it.

The Electropoise is a remedy which cures without medicine, placing the body in such condition that it will take directly into the circulation all oxygen required, thus throwing off all the impurities and leaving the system as nature intended it.

The Electropoise conscientiously used will cure Catarrh, Neuralgia, Asthma, Hay Fever, Insomnia and Indigestion.

A Doctor Writes of It:

"Without a doubt the Electropoise has the gift and power to cure multitudes who without it must surely die, and that too, in early life or in the very maturity of strength when their untimely death is most difficult of solution.
C. COLEGROVE, M.D., Holland, N. Y.

"IN DARKEST AFRICA."

40 CANAL ST., NEWRY, IRELAND, Jan 27, 1899.
Dear Sir It gives me great pleasure to be able to testify to the wonderful curative powers of your instrument, the Electropoise. I believe it was blessed of God as a means of preserving my life in Darkest Africa, where malaria abounds and oxygen is much needed by the system.

For years I suffered with rheumatism in my left knee, but I am happy to say that through the use of the Electropoise it has entirely disappeared.

A brother missionary was badly troubled with a bad sore on his limb, and unable to get about except by means of a crutch; after one course of treatment by the Electropoise the sore healed of itself, and the crutch was laid aside. It has been successfully used in several cases of extreme nervousness; dropsy has also been cured, and it has been used to advantage among the natives. A number of our missionaries can testify to the good they have received through its use. Praying it may continue to be a blessing to thousands, I am,
Yours truly, ROBT SHIELDS.

[The Rev. Mr. Shields has been a missionary in Africa under the Methodist Missionary Society for the past twelve years.]

FREE TO "CHRISTIAN HERALD" READERS.

To every reader of this paper ordering an Electropoise, we will mail free of all cost one copy of Dr. DePuy's famous book, "Home and Health." The regular price of this book is $1.25.

THIS COUPON

When inclosed with an order for an Electropoise will secure, free of all cost, one copy of "Home and Health," cloth bound and gilt lettering, 288 pages. Good only until June 20, 1899.

AGENTS WANTED in every City, County and State to sell Electropoise. Agents already making from $50 to $200 a month, and some of the best Territory open to applicants. Many of our best Agents are women.

Order an Electropoise at once, apply for the Agency in your vicinity, and see how easy it is to place it in your friends and acquaintances. Some of our agents are CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. One created $800 since our advertisement appeared a month ago. Send address and Half Cent with Agents for our 112 page illustrated book, containing information regarding this treatment.

Also upon request we will mail a 12-page treatise on Rheumatism and its cure.

The Electropoise Company, Dept C, 1123 Broadway, New York.

N.B. We are prosecuting IMITATORS

ROASTS

ARE GIVEN A MOST DELICATE AND APPETIZING RELISH, IF JUST TOUCHED UP A BIT WITH

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL & GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE

FOR SIXTY YEARS THIS SAUCE HAS GIVEN PERFECT SATISFACTION THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, AGTS. NEW YORK.

CHAIRS FOR INVALIDS
TRICYCLES FOR CRIPPLES
CATALOGUE FREE
FAY MFG Co
ELYRIA OHIO
3 Pine St.

8000 BICYCLES

EARN A BICYCLE

FREE USE

Write at once for our special offer.

C. B. MEAD CYCLE CO. CHICAGO, ILLS.

MONUMENTS

DON'T WHITE BRONZE

NO MOSS GROWING. CLEANING. NO CRUMBLING. CRACKING.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

RUPTURE

EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS.

IMPERIAL TRUSS CO., 104 N. Fourth St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

INGERSOLL CYCLOMETER, 25c.

Postpaid 25c. Large Map Order Catalogue of Bicycles and Other Goods FREE. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., Dept. 67 Cortlandt St., N. Y. C.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

HOW ABOUT THAT FENCE

ADVANCE FENCE CO., 1905 Old St., Peoria, Ill.

STARK BRO's PAY CASH EVERY WEEK

NURSERY, LOUISIANA, MO., Rockport, Ill., Dansville, N.Y.

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES

PEASE MFG. Co., P.O. Box A, Cincinnati, O.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY
BEYMER-BAUMAN
DAVIS-CHAMBERS FAHNESTOCK
ANCHOR
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT ULSTER UNION
SOUTHERN SHIPMAN
COLLIER
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO.
MORLEY
SALEM
CORNELL KENTUCKY

New York
Chicago
St. Louis
Cleveland
Salem, Mass
Buffalo

YOU cannot afford to take chances in painting when, by exercising a little care and common sense, the use of mixtures of unknown composition and questionable value can be avoided and the best materials (and, as you will find, by far the cheapest) can be obtained.

The best materials are Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil. The brands named in margin are genuine.

FREE

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

FREE PIANOS OR ORGANS
One Year's Trial

All freight paid by us if not satisfactory

OVER 50 STYLES TO SELECT FROM

Handsome Premium Free.
Premium Book.

$155.00 up. Our new 1899 Coupon entitles you to deduct $10.00 from the price of any Organ, or $20.00 from any Piano. We give more for the money than any Company in the World. You can prove

Our Motto:

LARGE SALES, SMALL PROFITS.

Incorporated for Fifty Years. We Lead, Others Follow.

BEETHOVEN PIANO AND ORGAN COMPANY
BOX 741 WASHINGTON, N. J.

$16.50 NO MONEY IN ADVANCE!!

Bettter Wheels at Lower Prices than Ever Before Offered.

Arlington No. 69.

If You Want a Good Low Priced Wheel Buy the "Brunswick" at $14.50. Others at $12.50, $11, $10 all good wheels and everyone a bargain and stripped as low as $7.50

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. Van Buren St., Dept. 18 Chicago, Ills.

MONEY SAVED IS MONEY EARNED.

ELECTRIC STEEL WHEELS.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., Box 136. QUINCY, ILL.

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED

Improved Elastic Truss Co., 768 Broadway, N. Y.

LARKIN SOAPS

AND PREMIUMS.-FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.

Our Folding Boats are puncture proof. Galvanized steel ribbing. For hunting, fishing, exploring and family pleasure. Water Wagon tows them on the polar trip. Lieut. Schwatka explored the Yukon with them. Awarded first premium at World's Fair. Send 6c. for catalogue. 40 engravings.

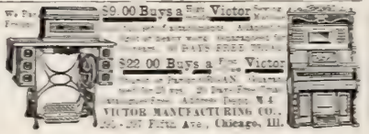
KING FOLDING CANVAS BOAT CO., Kalamazoo, Mich.

NO DIRT LEFT

in clothes washed with the "BUSY BEE WASHER"

100 pieces in one hour and no hard work done. That is the record. AGENTS WANTED. Excessive sale. Write for terms.

Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 119 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.



$9.00 Buys a Sun Victor

$22.00 Buys a Victor

VICTOR MANUFACTURING CO., 225-227 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A GREAT RHEUMATIC REMEDY.....

New York writes: "Your TARTARLITHINE

Regular package $1.00.
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.

THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

There are none so deaf as those who won't buy

Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums

The only scientific sound conductors. Invisible, comfortable, efficient. They fit in the ear. Doctors recommend them. Thousands testify to their perfection and to benefit derived.

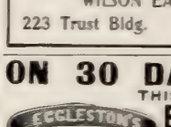
Information and book of letters from many users, free.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
223 Trust Bldg. Louisville, Ky.

ON 30 DAYS TRIAL

THIS NEW

ELASTIC TRUSS



C. H. EGGLESTON & CO., 1201 MASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

CATARRH.

EUCALOL CURES CATARRH.

FREE

THE EUCALOL CO., 156 Fulton Street, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

VOLUME 22 NUMBER 22

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, MAY 31, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

DECORATION DAY, 1899 — "HER HOPES LIE BURIED WITH HER HERO DEAD"

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Mrs. H. H. D., Fortuna Ariz. It does not seem to us that the marriage ceremony, quoted in your letter, is sacrilegious. It conforms to the prescribed form in Protestant churches.

R. G., Poughkeepsie, N. Y. 1. Give a definition of character. 2. I had a dispute lately concerning riding for pleasure on Sunday afternoon, when the employer, a Christian man, made the employee work in the morning. Is it wrong? 3. Please explain Matt. 15: 26, 27. 4. What was the dispute Jesus had in the Temple with the Scribes when he was twelve years old?

1. Character is what a person really is; reputation is what others believe him to be. 2. Sunday riding, if for pleasure, is desecration. 3. Additional light is thrown on the incident by comparing it with Mark 7: 24–30. Christ designed to intimate to his disciples that his mission was first to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel." At the same time it was clearly his purpose to try this woman's faith, and when she replied (see verse 27) he granted her request as the reward of her belief and as an object-lesson to his disciples. 4. The dispute or discussion was probably confined to hearing and asking questions on the prophecies, which was the rabbinical form of teaching. He had not yet assumed the office of Teacher, as he had yet to increase in "wisdom and stature" (see verse 52); but doubtless his answers, and still more his questions, addressed to the rabbins, astonished them when contrasted with those of other pupils, and must have invested him with a dignity and importance altogether unusual in such cases.

Mrs. Elizabeth P., Corning, N. Y. 1. Why do Catholics worship St. [illegible]? 2. Why [illegible] Catholic? 3. What is the difference between foreknowledge and foreordination?

1. He is one of their "patron saints," all of whom are objects of veneration and adoration. 2. Patrick, who is variously claimed as a native of Armoric Gaul and of a little village on the Clyde in Scotland, was, according to his own "Confession," the son of Calpornius, a deacon of the early Christian Church (5th century). Christianity had reached the British islands from Asia more than a hundred years before and the churches which Patrick founded, were doubtless identical with others that had received the Gospel from the same source. Patrick was not even claimed as a disciple of the Roman Church. Several of the most eminent historians of that church do not even mention Patrick's name and there is ample evidence that the Christian Churches in Britain were not in repute at Rome until the eighth century at earliest. Much that is legendary and traditional has been written about his ministry by the monkish historians of later days, but there seems to be very little foundation for their claims. Ussher, in his "Religion of the Early Irish," states that no Irish religious teacher was canonized until 1150 A. D. The ultimate canonization of Patrick was the first official acknowledgment by Rome of the old evangelical church he had founded. 3. Foreknowledge or prescience is the faculty or attribute of knowing an event before its occurrence; foreordination or predestination is being set apart, destined or devoted to a particular use, end or condition beforehand.

R. Green, Kankaee, Ill., writes that he is the possessor of a remarkably old Bible, printed by Christopher Baker, London, 1509. It has many beautiful engravings and the translation from the Greek is spoken of as being "Englished by L. Tomson."

Mother, Plainfield, N. J. I have a number of garments in good condition which my children have outgrown, also a lot of hats and shoes left over from last summer. I would like some needy children to have them. Can you tell me where to send them? I shall prepay charges.

We are sure that the matron of our Children's Home will be able to use them to good advantage this summer in clothing our tenement waifs, who are often pitiably ragged. Address [illegible] THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y., and they will be promptly acknowledged.

T. M. G., Warrenton, Va., writes:

We are trying to check the sale of strong drink [illegible] THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could help us, it would strengthen our cause.

Our correspondent's letter is accompanied by two articles which have been widely circulated in Fauquier Co., Va., one addressed to the ladies of Warrenton and vicinity, urging them to organize against the traffic, and the other an appeal to the citizens to abolish bar-rooms. The agitation seems to have attained considerable strength, and deserves popular support.

THE PERAHERA—AN ANNUAL BUDDHIST PROCESSION IN CEYLON

This is one of the great religious festivals, when the disciples of Gautama Buddha make their bravest show, and the long lines of priests, the gaily caparisoned elephants bearing the temple relics, and the eager throngs of devout natives combine to make a most picturesque presentation of heathen worship.

Rev. J. M. Lindsay, Ont. In a late issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the statement is made that the Japanese language was the purest in the world: that it had no word of its own which was the equivalent for "swearing," and that it had refused to adopt any from other languages. The Gaelic, a much older language, and which competes with the Hebrew in antiquity, has no word in its vocabulary for profane swearing. It has been kept remarkably pure. When the Celt wants to use words of that character—if he ever does use them—he is compelled to borrow from neighbors.

This is quite interesting and doubtless true; but Japanese is a living language of to-day, while Gaelic is not recognized as such.

W. L. Jarvis, New Orleans, sends this letter:

To the Editor: As a subscriber I wish to say it has given me pleasure to see THE CHRISTIAN HERALD prove such a blessing. I have watched its course, witnessing the progress and ascent to higher and nobler things each year, your fight for souls, for humanity, and in the interest in all that is good and great. The personal sacrifices made by individuals, through your example, teaching and advocacy of the causes you espoused, justify me in calling your attention to the injustice or oversight in the discrimination between officers and the rank and file of our army and navy.

The call for volunteers was responded to by almost double the number of men required. They came of our best citizens, and the men in the ranks were from all departments of life, some who will doubtless fill the highest offices in the future. Let us battle for the volunteers until such time as they are taken care of, our government thus rewarding the citizen soldiery. Is it not the duty and should it not be a privilege for this nation to do equally well?

[illegible] selves of the recognition that is due to our brave volunteers, and we believe them to be entitled to the lasting gratitude of the nation; but the proposition that they should be rewarded with positions under the government is one which comes within the legitimate domain of politics, the discussion of which is wholly outside the field of a religious newspaper.

[illegible] "sacrilege"?

It means the profanation of holy and sacred [illegible] not necessarily the robbing of churches or temples. The word "sacrilege" is here to be [illegible] violence to God's temple by the introduction of worldly affairs for the purpose of gain or pleasure.

A. E. H., Newark, N. J., writes:

[illegible]

[illegible] books are that Satan disputed the burial, claiming the body because of the blood of the Egyp[illegible] [illegible] leader's sin at Meribah. Having "the power of death," he opposes the raising of Moses' body again for these reasons, but the latter's [illegible] resurrection. Josephus [illegible] the people.

Anna S. W., Drain, [illegible] explain the forty [illegible] [illegible] ly belongs to you? Or does it apply to lawsuits [illegible] answered in THE MAIL-BAG recently. 2. Send to one paper only. It is a violation of existing rules to send the same article to both [illegible] crowded with poetic contributions. 4. It means simply that Christians should not cultivate a quarrelsome and litigious disposition, which seeks to carry all differences into court, instead of adjusting them quietly and privately. In its extreme meaning, it counsels submission to injustice (when private effort [illegible] er than a resort to law.

Reader, Winnipeg, Man., Can. Some years ago, when a boy, I took from my employer a sum of money by mistake, but afterwards [illegible] am now converted and want to return the amount, but cannot remember the sum. What shall I do about it?

Though you may not be able to remember the exact amount of your indebtedness, you can doubtless recall it approximately. If you take enough of your own money to cover the original amount, and add legal interest—satisfying yourself that you have assuredly covered the sum—you may then forward it to the proper address, feeling reasonably sure that you have made proper restitution.

[illegible] Cleveland, O. [illegible] do not know.

J. E. A., Baltimore, Md. Address him by letter direct.

B. L. W., Blue Springs, Neb. Arizona is a Territory.

Cora May W., Sargerstown, Pa. No clue to authorship.

R. S., Rutledge, Tenn. In 1800 Easter Sunday was April 6.

W. J. H. The verse to which you [illegible] be found in I Peter 3: 6.

F. S. W., Brantford, Ont., Can. We cannot give the desired information.

H. R. R., Winsted, Ct. Repeat your question, giving full name and address.

Dr. T. W. H. We do not believe there is any truth in the report. Some succeed, but many do not.

A [illegible] Kenner, Rosetta D. The description is a well-known fabrication: it is utterly untrustworthy.

P. L. P. Write to Moody's Colportage Library, [illegible] of the American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia.

Mrs. L. M. D., Grampian, Pa. The World-Wide Encyclopedia is a first-class, up-to-date publication in every respect.

A. P., Louisville, Neb. 1. Golden-rod. 2. It has always been emblematic of strength. 3. German. 4. It is pronounced "Sly."

J. F. W., Victor, Mont. Write to the American Tract Society, 150 Nassau Street, New York City, about the Bible Dictionary.

S. N., Mass. 1. They will be returned to owners if identified. 2. None. 3. The despatches have already explained what you want to know.

J. A. M., Middletown, Ia. We never heard the sentiment, and do not know who uttered it, but he seems to have been a sensible man.

Miss Helen F. Clark, of the Chinatown Mission, 21 Mott street, New York, writes to thank unknown donors who sent contributions for her mission work.

H. T., Hamlin, N. Y. Yes, you can qualify for admission [illegible] antiquity. There are free classes in Cooper Union, N. Y., where you can get information.

R. H., Worcester, Mass. Battles of El Caney and San Juan Hill, July 1, 1898. June 22, General Shafter's troops began disembarking at Baiquiri and Siboney, near Santiago.

Riverside, Cal. In THE MAIL BAG of March 22 the question is asked: "Are a pomegranate and an orange the same fruit, and where does the pomegranate grow?" The pomegranate grows to perfection in Southern California. The blossom is a beautiful red flower tinged with white. The fruit is full of seeds, which are eaten and are very good. The fruit grows on trees about the size of orange trees.

R. Green, Kankakee, Ill., writes that he is the possessor of a remarkably old Bible, printed by Christopher Baker, London, 1509. It has many beautiful engravings and the translation from the Greek is spoken of as being "Englished by L. Tomson."

Mother, Plainfield, N. J. I have a number of garments in good condition which my children have outgrown, also a lot of hats and shoes left over from last summer. I would like some needy children to have them. Can you tell me where to send them? I shall prepay charges.

We are sure that the matron of our Children's Home will be able to use them to good advantage this summer in clothing our tenement waifs, who are often pitiably ragged. Address [illegible] THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y., and they will be promptly acknowledged.

T. M. G., Warrenton, Va., writes:

We are trying to check the sale of strong drink [illegible] THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could help us, it would strengthen our cause.

Our correspondent's letter is accompanied by two articles which have been widely circulated in Fauquier Co., Va., one addressed to the ladies of Warrenton and vicinity, urging them to organize against the traffic, and the other an appeal to the citizens to abolish bar-rooms. The agitation seems to have attained considerable strength, and deserves popular support.

Rev. J. M. Lindsay, Ont. In a late issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the statement is made that the Japanese language was the purest in the world: that it had no word of its own which was the equivalent for "swearing," and that it had refused to adopt any from other languages. The Gaelic, a much older language, and which competes with the Hebrew in antiquity, has no word in its vocabulary for profane swearing. It has been kept remarkably pure. When the Celt wants to use words of that character—if he ever does use them—he is compelled to borrow from neighbors.

This is quite interesting and doubtless true; but Japanese is a living language of to-day, while Gaelic is not recognized as such.

W. L. Jarvis, New Orleans, sends this letter:

To the Editor: As a subscriber I wish to say it has given me pleasure to see THE CHRISTIAN HERALD prove such a blessing. I have watched its course, witnessing the progress and ascent to higher and nobler things each year, your fight for souls, for humanity, and in the interest in all that is good and great. The personal sacrifices made by individuals, through your example, teaching and advocacy of the causes you espoused, justify me in calling your attention to the injustice or oversight in the discrimination between officers and the rank and file of our army and navy.

The call for volunteers was responded to by almost double the number of men required. They came of our best citizens, and the men in the ranks were from all departments of life, some who will doubtless fill the highest offices in the future. Let us battle for the volunteers until such time as they are taken care of, our government thus rewarding the citizen soldiery. Is it not the duty and should it not be a privilege for this nation to do equally well?

[illegible] selves of the recognition that is due to our brave volunteers, and we believe them to be entitled to the lasting gratitude of the nation; but the proposition that they should be rewarded with positions under the government is one which comes within the legitimate domain of politics, the discussion of which is wholly outside the field of a religious newspaper.

[illegible] "sacrilege"?

It means the profanation of holy and sacred [illegible] not necessarily the robbing of churches or temples. The word "sacrilege" is here to be [illegible] violence to God's temple by the introduction of worldly affairs for the purpose of gain or pleasure.

A. E. H., Newark, N. J., writes:

[illegible]

It is certainly a remarkable record. We would be pleased to hear from others who have knowledge of notable Bible-reading records.

Mrs. M. B. W., E. Corinth, Me. Will you ask your readers if any of them have seen a poem by Whittier, not to be found in any of his standard works, in which, referring to an election, he says, "The 'Free-willers are out;' " "Free-willers" being a term applied to "Free Will Baptists," now "Free Baptists," who divide with the Quakers the honor of never having countenanced human slavery? I am very sure I saw such a poem when I was a girl, and several others claim to have seen it also. If the poem cannot be found I would like to hear from any one who has seen it and can tell anything of its contents.

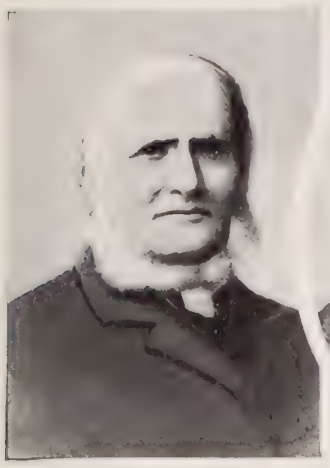
Possibly some reader may be able to give the desired information.

Mrs. S. G. M., Marion, Ala. Please explain Jude 1: 9, and tell where an account of it is found?

The passage in Jude, referring to the dispute between Michael and Satan over the body of Moses, is regarded by Vitringa, Lardner, McKnight and other distinguished commentators as symbolical, "the body of Moses" being intended to represent the Mosaic law and institutions (see Zech. 3: 1), in the same manner in which modern Christians call the church "the body of Christ." According to others, it has reference to a Jewish legend connected with the secret burial of the great lawgiver in a valley of Moab, and the dispute between Michael and Satan over the body of Moses

A Hundred Years of Mission Work

THE CENTENARY OF THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY CELEBRATED WITH IMPOSING CEREMONIES AND DEVOUT ENTHUSIASM IN LONDON



REV. CANON SUTTON

RT. REV. BISHOP OF WINCHESTER

PRESIDENT SIR JOHN KENNAWAY

REV. JAMES JOHNSON

RT. REV. BISHOP WHIPPLE

LEADERS IN THE CENTENARY OF THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY

THIS generation so familiar with the work of Foreign Missionary Societies, is liable to forget that it is not more than a century since such work was new to the church. The fact is brought home to us by the celebration which has just taken place in England of the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Church Missionary Society, one of the oldest, one of the most active, and one of the most influential of all the missionary organizations. The celebration has been a royal one. While its centre was in London, where St. Paul's Cathedral was crowded with a vast congregation, and Westminster Abbey was filled with the most eminent and illustrious of the sons of the church, and Exeter Hall and other large buildings were filled day after day by people eager to join in the celebration, it was not confined to the metropolis, but great gatherings were held in three thousand cities and towns at which the same enthusiasm was displayed.

In spite of the divisions in the Protestant Episcopal Church, which just now are especially acute, the celebration has called forth the hearty congratulations of men of all parties. Archbishops and bishops who are seldom seen together on the same platform, came to join in the general rejoicing and vied with each other in their devout thankfulness for the triumphs which God has wrought through this society. America had her appropriate representative in the venerable and beloved Bishop Whipple, whose spirit and life have been throughout of the missionary order. There was no man in those vast gatherings, when England produced her ablest and most eloquent preachers, whose words were listened to with more delight than this saintly man, who might, had he been less modest, have told stories of privation and hardship and consecration in his own experience, as thrilling as those of the missionaries to heathen lands.

The reports of the society came from every country in which work is being done, and in many instances there were representatives who could speak as eye-witnesses of the value of the work. According to the summary of these reports, the society has 496 mission stations, with a total staff of laborers in the field, European and natives, of 7,193, while its native Christian adherents number 240,876. It has 2,257 schools and seminaries, and in the medical branch it has hospitals, in which there were during last year 9,285 in-patients, and nearly 600,000 out-patients.

Like most great and useful institutions, the beginnings of the Church Missionary Society were small and apparently feeble. In 1797 four noble men of God—John Venn, Chas. Simeon, Chas. Grant and Wm. Wilberforce, while dining at Henry Thornton's, in his house at Clapham Common, near London, which is still standing, talked over the project of a missionary society in connection with the Evangelical party of the Church of England. After this, the project was discussed at the Eclectic Society—a small society of evangelical clergy and laity—and a resolution was passed to form a missionary society. Early in April, 1799, some rules were made, and a meeting being called on April 12, at the "Castle and Falcon," a well-known hotel in Aldersgate Street, London, at which sixteen clergymen and nine laymen attended, the rules were passed and the society was formed. Five principles were laid down by John Venn, for the guidance of the society, as follows: "Follow God's leading," "Begin on a small scale," "Put money in the second place, not the first," "Under God all will depend on the type of men sent forth," and "Look for success only from the Spirit of God."

ENTRANCE TO EXETER HALL

There was great opposition at the first from conservative clergymen in the church, but the founders persevered. During the first two years the collections for the support of the society amounted to only $4,560, but only $475 was spent, and that for printing. There was greater difficulty in getting missionaries than money, and even when some men were found who were willing to go to India, the opposition of the East India Company formed an insurmountable barrier against work among the heathen. The first five missionaries the society sent there went in the capacity of chaplains to British soldiers and rulers, and these did excellent work as such, especially the devoted Henry Martyn, afterwards a missionary to Persia.

The first missionaries sent by the society to a really heathen people were two men who were sent out in 1804 to a tribe on the Rio Pongas, north of Sierra Leone. This work was carried on for thirteen years with great loss of life, until 1817 when the mission stations were wholly destroyed and the missionaries driven out at the instigation of slave-dealers. The work, however, was not without fruit, for a chief was converted who remained a steadfast friend of Christianity until his death in 1861. Work was subsequently begun in Sierra Leone, but the results were enough to discourage the stoutest hearts. The climate was so deadly that the missionaries died, one after another, and some lived only a few months after landing. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the society had, in six years after entering the country, two thousand natives in its schools, and several thousands attending the services. One of the trophies of this work is Rev. James Johnson, whose portrait appears on this page. He is a native of the colony, the son of an emancipated slave. He is still serving as a missionary of the society in his native land.

It was in connection with the Sierra Leone mission that the society enlisted one of its very greatest men. In 1816, Edward Bickersteth, father of the present Bishop of Exeter, threw up his practice as a lawyer to go out as a missionary in the deadly climate of Sierra Leone. Bickersteth came back with one of his negro converts, and went through the country speaking and preaching. Wherever he went he stirred his hearers to their hearts' depths, and set them praying and working with redoubled earnestness. In 1829 Bickersteth's efforts had resulted in raising the income to $260,000 a year, and there were seventy missionaries at work.

The present President of the Church Missionary Society is a layman. He is, however, a whole-souled friend of missions, and comes of a family whose missionary activity has been proverbial in three generations. He is Sir John H. Kennaway, a Devonshire baronet, who represents his county in Parliament. His grandfather was president of the Devonshire auxiliary of the society, in which office, at his death, he was succeeded by his son, and now his grandson is President of the parent society.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, LONDON

A vivid presentation of the earth-girdling work of this great society in its centenary year, was given by one of the speakers at the celebration, who pictured the anniversary being celebrated at daybreak at each of the stations in foreign lands. He said, when with us it is midnight, our station among the Maories at our antipodes would just be beginning their new day. A little before two in the morning our Australian brethren would take up the strain. Before their hymns had ceased the Japanese stations would succeed them, and then the Chinese stations one after another. Then India's hymns would rise, Calcutta leading the way. From that point there would be one long succession of doxologies as the sun passed over India, Ceylon, Persia, Palestine, and Africa, until an hour beyond noon. Then another break, nearly three hours long, while the meridian line passed across the Atlantic. When once Newfoundland broke the silence there would thereafter be no pause until, little more than two hours before midnight, the last echoes from the Yukon died away.

· THE · METROPOLITAN · PULPIT ·

. . . The Bride of Nations . . .

A Sermon by The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Isa. 62 : 4. . . . . Thy land shall be married

As the greatest tragedies are meaningless, so does the circle of future joy around our entire world include the epicycle of our own republic. Bold, exhilarant, unique, divine imagery of the text. At the close of a week in which for three days our National Capitol was a pageant and all that grand review and bannered procession and National Anthems could do, celebrated peace, it may not be inapt to anticipate the time when the Prince of Peace and the Heir of Universal Dominion shall take possession of this nation, and "thy land shall be married."

In discussing the final destiny of this nation, it makes all the difference in the world whether we are on the way to a funeral or a wedding. The Bible leaves no doubt on this subject. In pulpits and on platforms and in places of public concourse, I hear so many of the muffled drums of evil prophecy sounded, as though we were on the way to national interment, and beside Thebes and Babylon and Tyre in the cemetery of dead nations our republic was to be entombed, that I wish you to understand it is not to be obsequies, but nuptials; not mausoleum, but carpeted altar; not cypress, but orange-blossoms; not requiem, but wedding march; for "thy land shall be married." I propose to name some of the suitors who are claiming the hand of this republic. This land is so fair, so beautiful, so affluent, that it has many suitors, and it will depend much upon your advice whether this or that shall be accepted or rejected.

In the first place: There is a greedy, monster who comes in as suitor seeking the hand of this republic, and that monster is known by the name of Monopoly. His sceptre is made out of the iron of the rail track and the wire of telegraphy. He does everything for his own advantage and for the robbery of the people. Things went on from bad to worse until in the three legislatures of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, for a long time Monopoly decided everything. If Monopoly favor a law, it passes; if Monopoly oppose a law, it is rejected. Monopoly stands in the railroad depot putting into his pockets in one year two hundred millions of dollars in excess of all reasonable charges for services. Monopoly holds in his one hand the steam power of locomotion, and in the other, the electricity of swift communication.

But Monopoly is not so easily caught now as when during the term of Mr. Buchanan the legislative committee in one of our States explored and exposed the manner in which a certain railway company had obtained a donation of public land. It was found out that thirteen of the senators of that State received $175,000 among them, sixty members of the lower house of that State received between $5,000 and $10,000 each, the Governor of that State received $50,000, his clerk received $5,000, the Lieut.-Governor received $10,000, all the clerks of the legislature received $5,000 each, while $50,000 were divided among the lobby agents. That thing on a larger or smaller scale is all the time going on in some of the States of the Union, but it is not so blundering as it used to be, and therefore not so easily exposed or arrested. I tell you that the overshadowing curse of the United States to-day is Monopoly.

I have nothing to say against capitalists; a man has a right to all the money he can make honestly—I have nothing to say against corporations as such; without them no great enterprise would be possible, but what I do say is that the same principles are to be applied to capitalists and to corporations that are applied to the poorest man and the plainest laborer. What is wrong for me is wrong for great corporations. If I take from you your property without any adequate compensation, I am a thief, and if a railway damages the property of the people without making any adequate compensation, that is a gigantic theft.

Monopoly, brazen-faced, iron-fingered, vulture-hearted Monopoly offers his hand to this republic. He stretches it out over the lakes and up the great railroads and over the telegraph poles of the continent, and says: "Here is my heart and hand; be mine forever." Let the millions of the people North, South, East and West forbid the banns of that marriage, forbid them at the ballot-box, forbid them on the platform, forbid them by great organizations, forbid them by the overwhelming sentiment of an outraged nation, forbid them by the protest of the Church of God, forbid them by prayer to high heaven. That Herod shall not have this Abigail. It shall not be to all-devouring Monopoly that this land is to be married.

Another suitor claiming the hand of this republic is Nihilism.

He owns nothing but a knife for universal cut-throatery, and a nitro-glycerine bomb for universal explosion. He believes in no God, no government, no heaven, and no hell except what he can make on earth! He slew the Czar of Russia, keeps many a king practically imprisoned, killed Abraham Lincoln, would put to death every king and president on earth, and if he had the power, would climb up until he could drive the God of heaven from his throne and take it himself, the universal butcher. In France it is called Communism; in the United States it is called Anarchism; in Russia it is called Nihilism, but that last is the most graphic and descriptive term. It means complete and eternal smash-up. It would make the holding of property a crime, and it would drive a dagger through your heart, and put a torch to your dwelling and turn over this whole land into the possession of theft and lust and rapine and murder.

Where does this monster live? In all the towns and cities of this land. It offers its hand to this fair republic. It proposes to tear to pieces the ballot-box, the legislative hall, the Congressional assembly. It would take this land and divide it up, or rather, divide it down. It would give as much to the idler as to the worker, to the bad as to the good. Nihilism! This panther having prowled across other lands has set its paw on our soil, and it is only waiting for the time in which to spring upon its prey. It is Nihilism that glares out of the windows of the drunkeries upon sober people as they go by. Ah! its power has never yet been tested. I pray God its power may never be fully tested. It would, if it had the power, leave every church, chapel, cathedral, schoolhouse and college in ashes.

Let me say it is the worst enemy of the laboring classes in any country. The honest cry for reform lifted by oppressed laboring men is drowned out by the vociferation for anarchy. The criminals and the vagabonds who range through our cities talking about their rights, when their first right is the penitentiary—if they could be hushed up, and the downtrodden laboring men of this country could be heard, there would be more bread for hungry children. In this land, riot and bloodshed never gained any wages for the people or gathered up any prosperity. In this land the best weapon is not the club, not the shillalah, not firearms, but the ballot. Let not our oppressed laboring men be beguiled to coming under the bloody banner of Nihilism. It will make your taxes heavier, your wages smaller, your table scantier, your children hungrier, your suffering greater. Yet this Nihilism will feet red of slaughter, comes forth and offers its hand for this republic. Shall the banns be proclaimed? If so, where shall the marriage altar be? and who will be the officiating priest? and what will be the music? That altar will have to be white with bleached skulls, the officiating priest must be a dripping assassin, the music must be the [illegible] tudinous victims, the garlands must be twisted of nightshade, the fruits must be apples of Sodom, the wine must be the blood of St. Bartholomew's massacre. No! It is not to Nihilism, the sanguinary monster, that this land is to be married.

Another suitor for the hand of this nation is Infidelity. When the midnight ruffians despoiled the grave of A. T. Stewart in St. Mark's churchyard, everybody was shocked; but Infidelity proposes something more [illegible] robbing of all the graves of Christendom of the hope of a resurrection. It proposes to chisel out from the tombstones of your Christian dead the words, "Asleep in Jesus," and substitute the words, "Obliteration — annihilation." Infidelity proposes to take the letter from the world's Father, inviting the nations to virtue and happiness, and tear it up into fragments so small that you cannot read a word of it. It proposes to take the consolation from the broken-hearted, and the soothing pillow from the dying. Infidelity proposes to swear in the President of the United States, and the Supreme Court, and the Governors of States, and the witnesses in the court room with their right hand on Paine's "Age of Reason," or Voltaire's "Philosophy of History." It proposes to take away from this country the Book that [illegible] the difference between the United States and the Kingdom of Dahomey, between American civilization and Bornesian cannibalism. If Infidelity could destroy the Scriptures, it would in two hundred years turn the civilized nations back to semi-barbarism, and then from semi-barbarism into midnight savagery, until the morals of a menagerie of tigers, rattlesnakes and chimpanzees would be better than the morals of the shipwrecked human race.

The only impulse in the right direction that this world has ever had has come from the Bible. It was the mother of Roman law and of healthful jurisprudence. That book has been the mother of all reforms and all charities—mother of English magna charta and American Declaration of Independence. Benjamin Franklin, holding that Holy Book in his hand, stood before an infidel club in Paris and read to them out of the prophecies of Habakkuk, and the infidels, not knowing what book it was, declared it was the best poetry they had ever heard. That book brought George Washington down on his knees in the snow at Valley Forge, and led the dying Prince Albert to ask some one to sing "Rock of Ages."

I tell you that the worst attempted crime of the century is the attempt to destroy this book; yet Infidelity, loathsome, stenchful, leprous, pestiferous, rotten monster, stretches out its hand, ichorous with the second death, to take the hand of this republic. It stretches it out through seductive magazines, and through lyceum lectures and through caricatures of religion. It asks for all that part of the continent already fully settled, and the two thirds not yet occupied. It says: "Give me all east of the Mississippi, with the keys of the church and with the Christian printing-presses—then give me Wyoming, give me Alaska, give me Montana, give me Colorado, give me all the States west of the Mississippi, and I will take those places and keep them by right of possession long before the Gospel can be fully entrenched.

And this suitor presses his case appallingly. Shall the banns of that marriage be proclaimed? "No!" say the home missionaries of the West, a martyr band of whom the world is not worthy, toiling amid fatigues and malaria and starvation. "No! not if we can help it. By what we and our children have suffered, we forbid the banns of that marriage!" "No!" say all patriotic voices, "our institutions were bought at too dear a price and were defended at too great a sacrifice to be so cheaply surrendered." "No!" says the God of Bunker Hill and Independence Hall and Gettysburg. "I did not start this nation [illegible] a farce." And the cry ten thousand voices, "to Infidelity this land shall not be married!"

But there is another suitor that presents his claim for the hand of this republic. He is mentioned in the verse following my text where it says: "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." It is not my figure; it is the figure of the Bible. Christ is so desirous to have this world love him that he stops at no humiliation of simile. He compares himself in my text to a suitor begging a hand in marriage. Does this Christ, the King, deserve this land? Behold Pilate's hall and the insulting expectoration on the face of Christ. Behold the Calvarean massacre and the awful hemorrhage of five wounds. Jacob served fourteen years for Rachel, but Christ, my Lord, the King, suffered in torture thirty-three years to win the love of this world. As often princesses at their very birth are pledged in treaty of marriage to princes or kings of earth, so this nation at its birth was pledged to Christ for divine marriage.

Before Columbus and his one hundred and twenty men embarked on the Santa Maria, the Pinta, and the Nina, for their wonderful voyage, what was the last thing they did? They sat down and took the holy sacrament of the Lord Jesus Christ. After they caught the first glimpse of this country and the gun of one ship had announced it to the other vessels that land had been discovered, what was the song that went up from all the three decks? Gloria in excelsis. After Columbus and his one hundred and twenty men had stepped from the ship's deck to the solid ground, what did they do? They all knelt and consecrated the new world to God. What did the Huguenots do after they landed in the Carolinas? What did the Holland refugees do after they had landed in New York? What did the Pilgrim fathers do after they landed in New England? With bended knee and uplifted face and heaven besieging prayer, they took possession of this continent for God. How was the first American Congress opened? By prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. From its birth this nation was pledged for holy marriage with Christ.

And then see how good God has been to us! Just open the map of the continent, and see how it is shaped for immeasurable prosperities. Navigable rivers, more in number and greater than of any other land, rolling down on all sides into the sea, prophesying large manufactures and easy commerce. Look at the great ranges of mountains timbered with wealth on the top and sides, metaled with wealth underneath. One hundred and eighty thousand square miles of coal. One hundred and eighty thousand square miles of iron. The land so contoured that extreme weather hardly ever lasts more than three days—extreme heat or extreme cold. Climate for the most part bracing and favorable for brawn and brain. All fruits, all minerals, all harvests. Scenery displaying an autumnal pageantry that no land on earth pretends to rival. No South American earthquakes. No Scotch mists. No London fogs. No Egyptian plagues. No Germanic divisions. The people of the United States are happier than any people on earth. It is the testimony of every man that has traveled abroad. For the poor, more sympathy; for the industrious, more opportunity. Oh, how good God was to our fathers, and how good he has been to us and our children. To him! Blessed be his mighty name! To him of cross and triumph, to him who still remembers the prayer of the Huguenots and Holland refugees and the Pilgrim Fathers—to him shall this land be married. O! you Christian patriots, by your contributions and your prayers, hasten on the fulfilment of the text.

We have been turning an important leaf in the mighty tome of our national history. One year at the gates of this continent over 500,000 emigrants arrived. I was told by the Commissioners of Emigration that the probability was that in that one year 600,000 emigrants would arrive at the different gates of commerce. Who were they? the paupers of Europe? No. At Kansas City, I was told by a gentleman, who had opportunity for large investigation, that a great multitude had gone through there, averaging in worldly estate eight hundred dollars. I was told by an officer of the government, who had opportunity for authentic investigation, that thousands and thousands had gone, averaging $1,000 in possession each. I was told by the Commission of Emigration that twenty families that had recently arrived brought $85,000 with them. Mark you, families, not tramps. Additions to the national wealth, not subtractions therefrom. I saw some of them reading their Bibles and their hymn books, thanking God for his kindness in helping them cross the sea. Some of them had Christ in the steerage all across the waves, and they will have Christ in the rail trains which at five o'clock every afternoon start for the great West. They are being taken by the Commission of Emigration in New York, taken from the vessels, protected from the Shylocks and the sharpers, and in the name of God and humanity passed on to their destination; and there they will turn your wildernesses into gardens, if you will build for them churches, and establish for them schools, and send to them Christian missionaries.

Are you afraid this continent is going to be overcrowded with this population? Ah, that shows you have not been to California, that shows you have not been to Oregon, that shows that you have not been to Texas. A fishing smack to-day on Lake Ontario might as well be afraid of being crowded by other shipping before night as for any one of the next ten generations of Americans to be afraid of being overcrowded by foreign populations in this country. The one State of Texas is far larger than all the Austrian Empire, yet the Austrian Empire supports 35,000,000 people. The one State of Texas is larger than all France, and France supports 36,000,000 people. The one State of Texas far surpasses in size the Germanic Empire, yet the Germanic Empire supports 41,000,000 people. I tell you the great want of the Western States is more population.

While some people may stand at the gates of the city saying: "Stay back!" to foreign populations, I press out as far beyond those gates as I can press out beyond them and beckon to foreign nations, saying: "Come, come! all ye people who are honest and industrious and God-loving!" But say you: "I am so afraid that they will bring their prejudices for foreign governments and plant them here." Absurd. They are sick of the governments that have oppressed them, and they want free America! Give them the great Gospel of welcome. Throw around them all Christian hospitalities. They will add their industry and hard-earned wages to this country, and then we will dedicate all to Christ, and "thy land shall be married." But where shall the marriage altar be? Let it be the Rocky Mountains, when, through artificial and mighty irrigation, all their tops shall be covered, as they will be, with vineyards and orchards and grain fields. Then let the Bostons and the New Yorks and the Charlestons of the Pacific coast come to the marriage altar on one side, and then let the Bostons and the New Yorks and the Charlestons of the Atlantic coast come to the marriage altar on the other side, and there between them let this bride of nations kneel; and then if the organ of the loudest thunders that ever shook the Sierra Nevadas on the one side, or moved the foundations of the Alleghanies on the other side, should open full diapason of wedding march, that organ of thunders could not drown the voice of him who would take the hand of this bride of nations, saying, "as a bridegroom rejoiceth over a bride, so thy God rejoiceth over thee." At that marriage banquet the platters shall be of Nevada silver, and the chalices of California gold, and the fruits of Northern orchards, and the spices of Southern groves, and the tapestry of American manufacture, and the congratulations from all the free nations of earth and from all the triumphant armies of heaven. "And so thy land shall be married."

A DERVISH BEGGAR

Some Strange Dervish Legends

Fantastic Religious Beliefs of the Secret Sects of Persia—Adam, Ali, Moses, and Christ Intermingled with the Reincarnation and the Transmigration of Souls—The "Ali-Allahis" and their Extraordinary Creed

TO-DAY we devote space to the second letter of our Persian correspondent, Hannah G. Yoseph, on the dervishes, in which the writer sheds a flood of light on this most interesting subject, bringing to the surface many facts never before disclosed concerning this mysterious people. Her letter is a notable contribution to the history of the religions of the Orient.

"MARAGHA, PERSIA.

"A few weeks ago, while sitting in my drug-room, a tall, handsome darvish, of about thirty-five years, came bowing very low, and extended his right arm to the floor, then to his head, then to his heart, as a sign of humility. As he sat down he said:

"'Your servant said you wished to speak to me.'

"'Yes,' I said, 'I would like to know something more about darvishes, and I hear that there are a great many Ali Allahis among you?'

"'Yes, there are a few who are Ali Allahis. I have an intimate friend who is one, and will bring him here if you command so,' at the same time taking out from his side pocket something which he began to sew.

"'Daba Darvish' (Father Dervish), I said, 'what is it that you are embroidering so gracefully?'

"'I am making a taj (a dervish hat). For these we receive from one toman to as many as fifteen. Only a few darvishes know how to sew and embroider. It helps toward our opium money. We all use opium, as it gives us strength to go about and make our livelihood.'

"'I have never yet seen a man that used opium who lived long enough to grow old,' said I. 'Can you show me a darvish who has used it and has grown old?'

"'It is true I have not seen among the teryakches (opium-eaters) any old men.'

"'Dada Darvish, will you embroider a taj for me to send to Yengidonya (America) to a newspaper which is called Jarchre Maschy (THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), which has done much good to the just, and never hesitates whether the needy are Mohammedans, Jews, Christians or heathen. If disease and plague have confronted them; if enemy or famine have visited them, it always extends a hand of fellowship, a voice of comfort, just as it helped the people in Hoondistan and in Asmanli.'

"'Hakim Khanina, the owner must be a very rich man,' responded the darvish.

"'I do not know about that; but I know this, that some years ago, when there was famine among you Mohammedans, and men were eating their own children, many of the Christian people in America sent money for the hungry over to Mimi.'

"Darvish, astonished, holding his long beard in his right hand, said: 'Li lahillilla—li lahillilla! And we Musselmans see each other starve, and are not helping. Wallah! (a pious exclamation). We have turned into lafar' (heathen).

"There is a class of men who like it to be thought that they are living like darvishes. They sit upon grass mats, but pile up the expensive rugs and carpets around them. Last summer I was called to visit the wife of a rich molla. We entered the haramkhana and found the two rooms completely bare, except a yard-square grass mat, on which were two smoking pipes and an earthen water jug. When the husband entered, the wife stood up until her lord commanded her to be seated.

"She had toothache, but would not let me remove the tooth. She called her maids and said to me: 'Hakim Khanim, take out one of her teeth; let me see if it hurts, then I will let you remove my tooth.'

"The poor maid came meekly, but there was no bad tooth to be removed. Her mistress, looking at her with anger, said: 'Dog! Why do you not allow the doctor to remove a tooth?'

"'Wallah, Khanim,' said the maid, 'I will let the doctor remove all, if you will only have your tooth removed.'

"Her husband said to the maid: 'I will turn my back, so that I may not see your face, and you can let the hakim remove a tooth, so that the knanim would see it does not hurt much.'

"'But I never do remove a sound tooth just for pleasure,' I said.

"I rose to bid them Khodo hafiz (farewell) and the molla said: 'I am a poor man.' His wife spoke to me: 'Hakim khanim, ask him, if he is poor, why he is going to marry another wife?'

"Among this class it is quite fashionable to pretend poverty in the sight of Mohammedans in order to increase the appearance of sanctity.

"The sect or society of Ali Allahy is a most difficult subject to deal with. Any member found revealing the secrets of the society is assassinated. There are a few things which I cannot put down because my English vocabulary is limited.

"This secret society has adopted a great many ceremonies from the Christians, and through fear of the Moslems are keeping them secret. They are very friendly to Christianity. I believe they have certain practices which they do not like to practice before strangers.

"The name, Ali Allahy, means the people who worship Ali (the third Oman Caliph) as God. There are eleven or twelve sects: Darvidy (from David), yeddilar (sevens), Alavy, Atash Bagy, Abdalbagy, Benyamins, Kadery, Sahiby, Nozaby, Nasery and Sheik Ibrahimy. They are called by different names in different states, those near Mimi being called Abdalbagy and those in Maragha Ali Allahy. In Turkey they are called Guiran. They call themselves Yol Haky (turn way), Ahly Tarik (people of ceremony), Mornen (faithful), Arkantin, Iman, jafar, Sadie, etc.

"There is not much difference between the sects in their religious beliefs. Kadery legends say that when Gabriel was flying through space he reached an arch, and suddenly a voice from within it said 'Who art thou?' Gabriel said (rather haughtily) 'I? I am and thou, thou art.' His five hundred wings were removed and he was left hanging between heaven and earth for five hundred years. One day, after his wings had grown, an old man (who was Ali), meeting Gabriel, said to him, 'When thou approachest that arch again and the voice asks thee who thou art, then say Thou art the Creator and I am the creation.' One day, when Gabriel was again flying, on reaching the arch the voice said to him, 'Who art thou?' Gabriel said, 'Thou art the Creator, and I the creation.' Thus answering, a door opened into the arch. Gabriel entered and saw a lamp burning with three kinds of light: the white was God's influence; the second light, red, was Ali; and the third light, green, was Mohammed. These three are the 'light of the world' according to the doctrine of Ali Allahy.

"They also believe that God has manifested himself to the world in seven different dones [the meaning of done is skin, cover or person] at different ages and times. The first manifestation appeared in Yah, the second in Adam, the third in Sultan Purderver, the fourth in Shahis, the fifth in Shah Fazil Kalantar (who was the originator of the society of Ahly Tanik), the sixth in Ali (who gave the law), and the seventh is Kayam (present), but hidden from sight, and will remain so until the time for his final appearance.

"Ali Allahy have an annual feast called 'the feast of enguin and see.' There are a few secret signs by which these people know each other. The mountain of Sahind is considered sacred by them, and many thousands every year make zeyarat (pilgrimage) to a spring to which they say the Ali came when he fled to Ajam from Arabistan from his enemies. He was thirsty and threw his spear angrily, and the point penetrated the rock and a spring of water gushed forth.

"About the origin of Ali Allahy, one told me the following legend: 'There was a Shah Namatoolls Wally 300 years ago who left us the tale. When Ali Asalamalieum was Caliph, a criminal was to be beheaded, and Ali himself beheaded him. He brought the dead man to life and said to Janabi Ameer, 'thou art God.' Forty times he was killed and brought to life, and each time Janabi Ameer told him, 'I am not God.' The convict still persisted: 'Thou art God, how otherwise could you bring me to life?' Janabi Ameer said: 'No, I am only a man, and was Adam. I came to give law and order to the people and they did not obey. After many years law was given through Noah, but the people grew wicked and we brought the flood. I departed from this world and came down through Abraham, and found the people just as wicked as ever. After teaching and instructing them they became better. I again departed and came through Moses, but they did not receive my laws and I cursed them. I next came down through Issa in meekness, patience and love. Day by day the people grew more wicked. Then I came down through Mohammed, and the people still went after their evil ways. I will again appear to the world—my last and final appearance will be more terrible than any of the previous ones.'

"A molla told me: 'After death, if I have been faithful, my being, through a mysterious way—that is, from my ashes—will spring up herbs or worms, and they will be eaten by birds and animals; birds and animals will be eaten by man, and beings will be born, for whose fate I will be directly responsible. If I have been good, from my being springs up a prince, a prophet, a fortunate. If bad, I will live according to the degree of my condition—through a donkey, cat, dog, or, worse still, through a worm or a fly.'

"HANNAH G. YOSEPH."

A CAMP OF DERVISHES ROASTING MEAT FOR THE EVENING MEAL

: : : A Church of Manifold Activities : : :

How Institutional Methods Have Multiplied and Developed the Spiritual and Social Life of Morgan Chapel, Boston

FROM time to time, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has published accounts of the methods employed by various institutional churches in leading cities throughout the country, whose example has doubtless afforded inspiration and encouragement for workers elsewhere. One of the most notable institutions of this character, whose work has been followed by marked success, is Morgan Chapel, Boston, Mass. Our photographs on these two pages afford some idea of the varied and attractive features that have been introduced in this particular church, whose pastor, Rev. E. J. Helms, has been the leading spirit in the new departure. When Mr. Helms began his pastoral duties at Morgan Chapel, nearly four years ago, he found the old-fashioned, time-honored methods prevailing: regular doctrinal sermons, Sunday School, Class Meeting and Prayer Meeting—all of the type to be found in the average New England Methodist Church at any time during the last twenty-five years. He went to work with the object, not of disrupting, but improving. At the present time, all the services formerly held are still preserved, while many new modern features that add zest to religious life, and do much to develop the social side of the church as a great Christian family, with broad spirituality and enlarged activities, have been introduced with marked success. One of the first things Pastor

THE CARDBOARD CLASS (INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL)

IN THE PRINTING DEPARTMENT

[illegible] with instant favor, and has [illegible] larger enterprise than could [illegible]

One of the worst features of life in the tenement sections of a great city where temptation of every sort is multiplied, is the tendency of [illegible] liquor on Saturday evenings. Temptation in the form of gilded saloons lure them at every corner. To counteract this evil, Pastor Helms devised the Saturday night free concert, which has exercised a potential influence upon the men themselves and has been a blessing to their families. In this undertaking, the voluntary services of the members of the church societies are enlisted for carrying out an attractive musical and literary programme. At eight o'clock the concert opens, and when it closes there is held a rousing temperance meeting, which lasts until eleven o'clock, the hour for closing the saloons. Coffee is served during the entertainment and a general invitation is extended to sign the pledge—an opportunity of which hundreds avail themselves. These gatherings are held under the auspices of the Total Abstinence Guild. Even these unusual activities did not exhaust the church's energy. A Medical Mission was next established, and several city physicians volunteered to help in the work among the needy poor. Then followed an Employment Bureau,

THE WORKERS' LUNCH ROOM

REV. E. J. HELMS AND MRS. HELMS

SLOYD WORK IN THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL

Helms did was to open a Reading Room, which was supplied with periodicals and other attractive literature, through the generosity of many contributing friends. This was kept open at all times, and soon had a large patronage. Next, as the church is situated in a thickly-peopled tenement district, contributions were invited for the purpose of supplying bathing facilities. A number of public baths were placed in the basement of the church for the use of which the nominal fee of five cents was charged. These baths from the outset have been more than self-supporting, and have yielded a surplus which is used for the support of the Reading Room.

Next, a School of Handicraft was opened, in which pupils were taught printing, cobbling, tailoring, dressmaking and carpentry, all the instructors being unpaid where employers were charged a small fee, sufficient to cover the running expenses. Hundreds of deserving workers are helped to situations every year through this bureau. Mention has already been made of the Trade School. After a time it developed into a bureau of Co-operative Industrial Work, by means of which many hundreds of unskilled and necessitous people have been greatly benefited. Idle men can get shelter and food by doing a light task: unemployed women are kept busy, at ten cents an hour, repairing garments which are sent in by friends of the work—the garments being sold afterward. Shoes, food and fuel are supplied in cases where charity is deserved, and the bureau is conducted generally on the lines of philanthropy and charity. One of the unique features of the Morgan Chapel system is the Evening Training School for the study of the Bible, music and sociology.

WORKERS IN THE COBBLING DEPARTMENT

IN THE WOODYARD

THE EMPLOYMENT AND MENDING BUREAU

A KINDERGARTEN CLASS MISS MARY E. FRENCH, HEAD OF EMPLOYMENT BUREAU DINNER HOUR IN THE NURSERY

Instruction is given in all kinds of musical instruments, and the vocal and instrumental classes are under teachers from the various Boston conservatories.

No part of the work has received more care and attention than that which is carried on among the children. Three years ago, a Day Nursery and Kindergarten was opened in a part of the chapel vestry, but the accommodations were soon outgrown. Now the Nursery is kept open from 7 A.M. to 6 P.M., and on Sundays during church hours, in order to give the parents an opportunity to attend the services. For each child cared for a nominal fee of five cents is charged, and the arrangement has proved a great boon to working mothers. The Kindergarten Training School meets every afternoon on week-days, and it would be difficult to find anywhere a happier or brighter set of children or more enthusiastic teachers. The teacher is principal of a large kindergarten and training institute in Boston. On Saturday afternoons, the Children's Industrial School meets, the average attendance being about 300. Plain sewing, garment designing and similar work are taught to the girls, while the boys are instructed in drawing and cutting out designs in paper. The sloyd work of the little lads is something really remarkable. Of course, moral instruction is a marked feature of the general training in all the classes.

Writing of the success which has attended the Morgan Chapel work, Pastor Helms recently used these words: "Many churches hesitate to undertake any institutional church methods, for fear of the great expense involved. Others dread the opposition likely to be incurred by certain elements in the church. The success that has attended the introduction of new methods at Morgan Chapel, Boston, and the small increase in the expenses of the work may encourage others in similarly difficult fields to venture in like directions."

It is now over fifty years since Morgan Chapel was built. Being intended originally for a family church it is poorly adapted for institutional work, and many alterations had to be made, the cost of which was borne by the congregation themselves. One of the most encouraging results of the new departure is the very marked increase in church membership since the institutional idea was put in operation, and this has yielded an increase of revenue almost sufficient to meet the expense involved. A stimulus has also been imparted to the missionary work of the church, which now regularly contributes $500 yearly in excess of its former contributions for this purpose. There is, moreover, a visible augmentation of the spiritual energies and activities of the church in other directions. Audiences at the various religious services have been greatly increased and evidences are abundant of a deeper spiritual interest than ever before. There is a continuous revival. More conversions were reported last year than in any previous year of Morgan Chapel's history. In proportionate gifts to missions, as well as in spiritual results, it now holds the second place among the churches of the New England Conference —a result attributable, under Divine approval, to the adoption of methods suited to the times, and especially to the wants of the multitudes whom it is proposed to reach with the Gospel of Jesus Christ and of brotherly helpfulness and social good-will.

MR. GEORGE GAMLIN, CLASS LEADER

SEWING DEPARTMENT IN THE SATURDAY INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL

MISS M. FAGAN, SUP'T OF NURSERY

A GROUP OF LITTLE KINDERGARTNERS

A PUBLIC BATH

A NOOK IN THE FREE READING ROOM

A Perfect Child

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for June 11. Luke 2: 40-52

WHAT Christ was as child, is a fruitful field of conjecture. It is strange that it should have been left to conjecture. If, as seems probable, his beloved disciple John, was his cousin, he must have known something of that period of the life of his Master, and he had, besides, in his home, one in the person of Mary, who would infallibly remember, as none other could, all the incidents of his boyhood; but John is silent on the subject, and the other Evangelists have little to impart. The solitary incident of this visit to Jerusalem in his twelfth year, when he was made a "Son of the Torah," as the ceremony was called, in which he took upon himself the obligations of the law, is the only glimpse we have of his childhood. It was probably passed peacefully at Nazareth, much in the same way as the lives of other boys of the time. He would be instructed in the law, which was the principal study in the Jewish home, though he does not appear to have attended any of the advanced schools. Later in life, it was evident to the scholars of the day that he had not received special training, for they asked contemptuously, "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" The ordinary study, the usual amusements and the learning of the carpenter's trade, doubtless filled up his young life. If he had been precocious, or had developed in an unusual manner, the people of Nazareth would not have been so surprised as they were at his words and deeds (Mark 6: 3), when he visited the place in his manhood.

The incident in the temple seems to show, however, that even in his boyhood, some consciousness of his divine nature and mission had come to him. His answer to his mother cannot be understood on any other theory. She spoke to him of "thy father," meaning Joseph; but it was not to Joseph that he referred when he said, "my Father," for it was not Joseph's business which had kept him behind the caravan in Jerusalem. That it was a clear and definite idea is improbable. Possibly it was stirred by his visit to the historic temple, the passover rite which he had witnessed two or three days before, and the sight of the eminent teachers who were explaining the religion of the time to the people. He was in an atmosphere which would be likely to develop the intuitions of a heavenly mind.

Whatever conception may have come to Jesus at this time appears to have made no change in his relations to his family. He went back to the former life at Nazareth, and, as Luke says, "was subject unto them." He had come to live a man's life on earth, and he neglected no part of it. It is not always that they who call themselves by his name follow his example in this. There is sometimes an attitude of superiority, a condescension and a vanity on the part of the young Christian, when he is the only religious person in the household, which are unlike Christ. The divine nature in him was manifested in the ordinary relations of life, not in separating him from them and raising him above them. But this was not a flash of light; it was the dawn that was to become the day. There was growth not in stature alone, but in wisdom. Therefore there could not have been perfection to begin with. It was a gradual unfolding, and even to his own consciousness the perception of the truth must have been a process rather than a revelation. But during the process there was filial obedience. "He was subject to them." It is an example to be followed by those who have not his justification for an independent course. If Christ himself yielded his own will and repressed himself and submitted to the will of that village carpenter and his wife, surely none of his followers need shrink from their humiliation. What noble patience, too, he displayed as to his work! For seventeen or eighteen long years he was content to live that humble, unconspicuous life, waiting the call to manifest himself to the world. With such a mission committed to him and such a work before him, there was no impetuosity, no impatience, but the calm majesty of divinity.

CUBAN RELIEF FUND

Belated Contributions Received up to May 20, 1899, and Included in the Report Contained in Last Week's Issue, but not Heretofore Acknowledged in "The Christian Herald"

ALASKA

[illegible] 12.00

Total 12.00

ARIZONA

Grayard, W H 1 00

Total 6.50

CALIFORNIA

Bashain, J P 2
Bayley, T L 2
[illegible] 50
Duke, G A 25
Findlay, Mrs B L 1 50
Griswold, E C 50
Hardy, W P 13 00
Harter, J P 25
Hurlburt, F M 2
Inglehart, John 2
[illegible] 3 00
Kilby, Minnie 2 00
Kinley, Minnie 2 00
Lowers, Mrs M E 1 00
Martinez, D 10
Mayfield, Mrs R 2
Myers, Mrs 1
Nitecker, Mrs E 5 00
cal school for girls 5
Smith, Mr & Mrs H 1
Smith, Mrs S 1
Stewart, Mrs M J 2 00
[illegible] 2 50
Waters, Mrs T H 75
Williams, W W 2
Winchell, Theo 25
[illegible] 1 00
[illegible] 1 50
Friendly Circle K D, Central M E Ch, San Francisco 5 00
Impromptu col. Biggs 4 20
Mrs E N, San Jose 2 50
S R W, Santa Paula 1 00
—, Lodi 25
1st Bap Ch, Madera 8 00
Mendocino Bap S S 5 24
Middletown Y P S C E 1 50
C E Soc, Toluca 1 00
Los Angeles 3 50
Jr League, Burbank 50

Total 114.19

COLORADO

Barrow, Mrs M A 1 00
Daniels, Mary E 5 00
Daniels, W J 5 00
Daniels, Mrs W J 5 00
Hutchinson, Arthur 1 00
Jordan, Mrs A 1 00
Reichter, Mrs 25
Rollings, Mrs G 25
Savage, Mrs W L 1 00
Shumway, Mrs J L 3 00
Sumner, E & Alta 1 00
Thiatts, Grace 10 00
Turner, Mrs E S 2 00
Wheeler, Mrs Huldah 10
Jonnnie M, Topeka 10
Nellie M, Topeka 10
S S Class, Holland 1 00
S S Class, Bird City 2
[illegible] 1 00
Concord S S,
Intermediate Dept of
Col taken at a small Union S S on Children's Day 6 57

Total 73.21

IOWA

Empire 1 00
Y P M C, Wray 12 00

Total 54.75

KANSAS

Newman, D A 25
Rohde, Henry 25
Sander, Charlotte M 25
Snakenberg, Mrs E 2 00
Wade, J H 2
Wagstaff, M B 2
Wolf, H P 25
Wolf, John 10
" Star
Pres S S & C E Soc, Marion 7 74
S Flint S S, Danville 5 00
[illegible] 1 45
Keo a 10 29
Ladies of Grandview 1 25

Total 168.16

INDIAN TER.

cational Inst 1 55

KANSAS

Edwards, Euz 1 00
Grell, C J 2
Hardy, Gertrude 25
Heath, R D 2
Hetzell, Y & wife 2 00
Hills, F M 1 00
Johnson, Mrs Alex 50
Johnson, Maggie 25
Johnson, Mrs V L 50
Lee, P B 2 50
Masheed, Dr 50
Muddson, Miss Theda 10
Montgomery, Mrs L 25
Shumway, Mrs J L 3 00
Sumner, E & Alta 1 00
Thiatts, Grace 10 00
Turner, Mrs E S 2 00
Wheeler, Mrs Huldah 10
Jonnnie M, Topeka 10
Nellie M, Topeka 10
S S Class, Holland 1 00
S S Class, Bird City 2
[illegible] 1 00
Concord S S,
Intermediate Dept of
Col taken at a small Union S S on Children's Day 6 57

Total 73.21

MINNESOTA

Purves, Mrs C 1 00
Smith, Mrs J T 1 00
WFM Soc of M E Ch,
Austin
Hebron C E Soc 2 50

Total 41.15

MISSOURI

Andrews, B H 5 00
Asher, Solomon 1 00
Backledge, Mrs 45
Fulkerson, S & wife 2 00
Glazier, J & Nannie 2 00
Hanemann, Chas 3 00
Miller, Jno B 50
Sharpe, Mrs Jane 1 00
—, Fulton 2 40
Concord M E Ch,

Total 70.85

NEW YORK

Barber, Rev J T 4 00
Bartlett, Mrs E J 2
Battrick, Mrs E E 50
Brandon, Mrs L J 5
Brandes, Carl 2
Brandes, Sarah 2
Clark, Mrs L A 1 00
Countryman, Mrs H J 2
Cox, Mrs E L 1 00
Dempster, Wm W 1 00
Hardy, Mrs W A 1 00
Keese, Mrs H 1 00
Staubacher, C W 75
Stevenson, Hattie 1 00
Henry M 2 00
David 1 00
Mrs 4 00
1 25
1 00
1 00
1 00
1 13 40
Library 1st Ref ch, 10 00
Woman's Assoc 1st Ref ch, Rochester 10 00
R P ch, Hackville 4 00
SS, Axton 2 00
Hilton S S el No 2 1 40
branch S S, Brooklyn 2 10
Washingtonville 2 00
WFM Soc of M E ch,
Trinity Meth C E Soc,
WHMS, Hedding M E ch, Lansingburg 5 00
C E S, Napoli 14 03
Jr C E Soc 1st Reformed, Central Bridge 1 00
Ellenville 3 00
Journey Club, Sag Harbor 3 85
No 599 10 00
No 587, Hannibal 10 00
I M B, for Jesus sake 5 00
Fridge, Miss D Man—
Charlotte, Flushing 2 00
T B, Brooklyn 2 00
—, Linwood 2 00
Ref ch S S, Fonda 8 00
YPSCE, Carthage 5 00
Jr C E of Seventh Day
Jr C E S, Plattekill 2 39
Y P S C E
Fund Soc,
Brooklyn
Freely ye have received
Miss
Richford 11 75
Fund Soc,
Brooklyn
Freely ye have received
Miss
Richford 11 75

Total 716.67

SOUTH DAKOTA

Brandt, Mr & Mrs J 1 00
Wood, Mrs S A 1 00
Good Will Mission 3 00
—, Bowdie 1 00

Total 74.97

VERMONT

King's Dau, W A C, Barre
Reader, Beldens 50
Rockingham S S,

Total 37.25

WISCONSIN

Ellis, Mrs Emma 1 00
Esser, J H, col by 15 63
Fry, Rev Josiah 1 00
Mineral Point 15 50

Total 63.13

WYOMING

Total 23.00

FOREIGN

Bromfield, Daniel 2 44
Fulford, Miss I 5 00
Sinclair, Daniel 72
Shaw, I C 1 00
Chili 10 00
Sch of Boys & Girls 10 00
India 10 16
From readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Total 137.33

MISCELLANEOUS

Silverthorn, Ella J 10
Word, J W 25
N W 1 50
TDWT 10 00
Anon 100 00
Invalid 2 00
W 50
B Y P U of Thorn

Total 125.02

BRIEF NOTES

Most of our subscribers when writing to "The Christian Herald" after expressing themselves in terms most complimentary concerning the paper wind up their communications with a statement that when through with reading their copy they send it on to distant friends, thus sharing it with others. To these subscribers, we would say that they will find it to their advantage to avail themselves of The Coupon Offer explained on another page which ensures prompt service direct from the main office for the balance of the year at twenty-five cents in cash and one coupon. This is actually cheaper and much more convenient than to pay one cent postage each week to forward their copy. It also enables them to use their own copy in their immediate neighborhood, and thus while saving money, to do good by widening out the already enormous circulation of "The Christian Herald," and enlarging the sphere of its usefulness.

[illegible] Society in one of [illegible] adult re[illegible]

[illegible] The Rev. F. B. Harwood [illegible] when the men are locked up for the night, "the [illegible] knowledged leader of this movement.

Rev. T. B. Pandian, a Hindoo Christian, [illegible] left that [illegible] India, has come [illegible] has given him a letter of introduction. Churches [illegible]

An inkstand believed to be thirty-four hundred years old has been found at Thebes, and has [illegible] wood, and has two compartments, an upper one [illegible] red ink, and a lower one for holding pens. The black and the red ink are certainties, for some still remains, in a dry condition, within the receptacles. If the estimate of its age is correct, which there is no reason to doubt, the user of the inkstand was a [illegible]

[illegible] and will be in session for three days. Among the speakers will be Rev. Drs. MacArthur, J. Wilbur Chapman, Burrell, Schauffler, Hurlbut and Mc[illegible]lyn; Dr. Pentecost, of Yonkers, Dr. Packard and Dr. Sims, of Syracuse; Dr. Barbour, of Rochester, and Dr. Phelps, of Buffalo. All particulars as to [illegible] ing the Secretary, Mr. E. W. Hawley, Bible House, New York.

Mr. and Mrs. T. MacKnight, well-known missionary workers, are now at Las Palmas, Can[illegible] have suffered physical deterioration in the African field. As the Canaries are very conveniently situated for workers in West Africa, it is believed that the project will be a great advantage to those to whom a brief respite from labor under a tropical sun and in a deadly climate has become absolutely [illegible] home furlough. The Canaries have a salubrious atmosphere and fevers are unknown.

Mr. D. L. Moody writes from East Northfield, Mass., as follows: "I am very anxious that the Christian public generally should understand the character of the Student's Conference to be held in Northfield June 30th to July 9th. Some have thought that the meetings of this gathering are open only to the student delegates, but this is not the case. All the platform meetings are open to the public, and are yearly attended by hundreds of men and women who are not delegates. There are abundant and comfortable accommodations provided for all who wish to attend. This Conference affords a splendid opportunity for pastors and others to help young men. Hundreds in our churches might be stirred up to come and it would prove the turning point in many lives. Some of the most widely known teachers in this country are to be present, among them Drs. Faunce and Schauffler, of New York, Dean Hodges of Cambridge, Mr. Robert E. Speer, Mr. R. P. Wilder and Mr. John R. Mott and others. There will be no opportunity to meet the brightest Christian men from over one hundred colleges and universities. Arrangements are provided so that parties who wish to do so may camp out at very small expense."

Lilies and Roses

A Story of Memorial Day—The Union of Two Homes—Peace Prayers

PERHAPS in the history of many homes, in both sections of our country, the following story (in which real names are not given) might be duplicated on this Memorial Day, when tender womanly hands, North and South, are strewing flowers on the old graves and the new; and praying for the reign of the Prince of Peace, when war and occasions of war shall cease.

The sister of Captain Harry Graham, of the U. S. A., killed at Gettysburg, grieved because her mother could never speak of Harry's death without bitterness. She would have loved to talk of the gallant young brother whose face she dimly remembered, and who occupied a hero's niche in her heart. But she had to keep silence about him, for his name always excited her aged mother to some remark out of keeping with her gentleness of character.

"Strange," thought Alice, "that the one to whom I can talk most freely about our Harry is a Southerner whose brother fell fighting on the other side." All the girls at Vassar, Northern, Southern, Eastern and Western, had heard with interest her story of Harry's goodness and gallantry; blue eyes, black eyes and brown eyes had sparkled with unshed tears, when she told of her mother's long years of heart-break and bitterness. Some of the girls could exchange experiences of a similar nature. Antoinette, the Louisianian, understood better than any one, for she, too, had a beloved brother in Metairie Cemetery, whose dear name she dared not call in her mother's presence for fear of shaking a gentle and tender lady with emotions that Antoinette was tortured to witness, and in which she could not share, for she, like Alice, was too young to have caught the sad rancours of the sixties. Antoinette visited Alice and Alice Antoinette, and each mother learned to love the other mother's daughter; and the daughters in the privacy of their rooms talked about the dear, dead brothers with sympathetic reverence. Shortly Richard Graham, somewhat older than Alice, won Antoinette for his wife; and the Southern and Northern mothers met at the bridal and fell in love with each other, recognizing each in each such beauty of character and motherhood, that that the reverse was hardly possible. But while they could converse freely about their living children, of their dear, dead boys neither mother spoke to the other. A year crept by, and a little grandson was born in the Northern home, and the Southern mother and Northern mother were there together, and each looking at the new babe thought she saw in it a likeness to her dead son, but neither spoke. The day of the christening came, and the name for the new baby had not been decided upon. Each mother wanted it named for her dead, but neither expressed the wish; both felt under the ban of a cruel silence. At last, the good minister, holding the little one in his arms, said: "Name this child?"

And then the young mother spoke in a clear voice that trembled: "Harry, for my husband's brother, and Emile, for mine." And the minister said: "Harry Emile, I baptize thee in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. Amen!" The two aged grandmothers put their arms about each other and wept; the cruel spell of a bitter silence was broken: each talked to each about the dear, dead son, who was so brave and so true. With the baby's cradle between them, they knelt that night, and clasping their aged hands across his little sleeping form, prayed that the peace of God which passeth understanding might keep, not only their own hearts, but all the world in such perfect peace that war should be no more and that the sweetness of other mothers' spirits might never be tried as theirs had been.

Every Memorial Day, until one of them had passed away, there came to the Northern mother a box of flowers gathered in an old-fashioned Southern garden by the aged hands of the other, and with it a little card, on which was written in cramped characters: "For your dear boy's grave, from your sister in Christ."

MEMORIAL OFFERINGS

Over the bowl of roses and lilies, the two friends would smile and whisper lovingly, and thank God that their prayers for peace and perfect love in the hearts of these stricken ones had been answered.

* * *

On Memorial Day, this year, another box of flowers will come from the old Southern garden. Between the grave of a Northern captain and his mother is a later mound, the grave of Lieutenant Harry Emile Graham, who fell at Santiago; he was brought back by his cousin from New Orleans, an officer of the U.S.A. While the two women who loved him best are praying for the coming of Christ's kingdom when war shall be no more, they wonder if the Peace Congress at the Hague is not a bow of promise.

The White House Grounds

Reports from Washington state that visitors to our National Capital will behold the novel spectacle of our White House grounds turned into a corn and potato patch. This does not mean that the first lady of the land and her husband have turned farmers and gardeners—not that there would be any diminution of dignity in such a metamorphosis, for since the time of the patriarchs, rulers of men have been tillers of the soil—but that experts have failed so far to get a good carpet of greensward on the lawns, and have decided that the only way to accomplish this is by first restoring the soil to its virgin condition, and that the best way to do this is to plant corn and potatoes. Dandelions have taken almost complete possession of the lawns, and it is largely to get rid of these that the ground is to be ploughed and seeded.

A Friend of Dumb Animals

The well-known writer, Mrs. Frances Holley, of Bismarck, N. Dak., has been appointed State Agent for the prevention of cruelty to animals by Governor Fletcher. There is no salary attached, but there is an appropriation of $500 to cover expenses incurred in looking after the welfare of the dumb helpers who draw our loads and bear our burdens so patiently. Mrs. Holley's predecessor was Mrs. J. M. Bartholomew, wife of the Chief Justice, who interested himself so prominently in measures looking to the protection of beasts and birds.

O living loveliness of flowers serene,
Decking the loveliness of living green,
Ye tell how true affection and true faith
Are stronger still than hate or war or death.

The Filipino Farmer

The native Filipino has rude, agricultural implements and primitive ways of farming. There are no horses; ponies do the lighter, buffaloes the heavy work. The natives—sometimes the children—ride the buffaloes to and from the fields. "It took quite a bit of coaxing," a returned soldier says, "to make these beasts pass a United States soldier. He was an unfamiliar sight and the buffaloes wanted to stop and look at him."

Come, Little Children

"COME, little children," the birds are singing,
"Come to the woodland away
Help us to set the hillsides ringing
With music and laughter and play!"

"Come, little children," the flowers are crying,
"The fields they are waiting for you.
The daffodils, daisies and cowslips are sighing,
'O, where are our playfellows true?'"

And the brooklet is babbling, "O, children come quickly!
And barefooted wade in my stream!
Along all my banks the lush grasses grow thickly,
And my pebbles like bright jewels gleam!"

O, come, little children, from tenement shadows,
Out in God's pure air to roam,
Out by the river, mid bird-songs and meadows,
To your beautiful, God-given home!

—GODLOF HARPER.

The Servant Question

IT is time women were taking this matter in hand with the purpose of setting some wrong things to rights. The difficulties of the servant question are emptying homes and filling up boarding-houses. Women are banding themselves together for the purpose of correcting many social evils through the power of organized movement and in the light of combined experience and opinions, and here, in this servant question, is a domestic evil, right within the home and certainly to some extent threatening home disintegration for which, we believe, some effective remedy should be found. In various ways the problem is being attacked. Through training classes in domestic science, house service is being rendered more capable and dignified; at the same time, more expensive, and thus out of reach of all but the wealthy. Another way in which individual women, here and there, seek to modify the question is by making their servants as comfortable as themselves, having the kitchen bright and pretty, etc., etc. Across the ocean women of no less exalted station than the Empress of Germany and the Queen of England's daughters are putting their shoulders to the wheel of this problem and conferring medals upon serving women who have remained a certain length of time in any one family; the German Housewives' Association of New York apply the same idea when they bestow a twenty-dollar gold piece instead of the medal. Those movements are all in the right direction, but they are only attacking the problem "in spots," as it were. Organized measures, to be effective, must be made by both employers and employed, acting in unison. For the good of both, both must demand that a reference (now regarded as almost worthless, no matter whose name is appended) shall be accurate testimony. A good mistress should not be at the mercy of her servant because she cannot replace her at short notice; nor a good servant, through caprice of her employer or through any accident, in danger of being out of work. We do not know just how these ends are to be attained—there are many questions, many difficulties in the way, and much experimenting is involved—but we are sure that when women set their minds resolutely to work, a plan which shall make the burdens of the housekeeper lighter, and insure the comfort and livelihood of domestic help will be evolved.

Katie's Lesson

Katie had just come back with her mamma from church, where the minister had preached from the text: "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead," and she was very thoughtful. "Mamma," she said, "I'm so little and I haven't anything. What can I do for Jesus?" Mamma said slowly: "Whosoever shall give a cup of water to drink in my name——" Katie blushed. "Oh, mamma!" she cried, "I understand." The day before, her aged uncle who could not walk, and who was querulous and unpleasing to the child, had not had his request for a drink answered with pleasing promptness. "Mamma," Katie confided that night when she said her prayers, "I'll never mind running around waiting on people any more. I never thought that such little things could be service to Jesus."

One Million Subscribers

Expecting Great Things

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has the faith to believe that there are a million families in this country who would be glad to subscribe for it were they acquainted with its surpassing worth. We further believe that all of our present subscribers are so thoroughly pleased with the paper that they would be glad to see our faith fully realized. They know the blessed influence THE CHRISTIAN HERALD exerts, for they themselves have felt it. Week after week they have scanned its beautiful pages, have read its inspiring messages, have reveled in its literary and artistic wealth, have been deeply interested, edified and instructed, and, after having read it from beginning to end, have sent it to some distant friends that they also might enjoy its perennial riches.

All Love It

Few papers published are read and re-read as is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and none affords greater pleasure and delight, or makes warmer and more lasting friends. It is an indisputable fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has a larger percentage of renewals than any other paper, and that, from its very beginning, it has carried more permanent subscriptions than any other publication; and its subscription list is constantly increasing. Nine years ago its circulation was 31,000; to-day it is a welcome visitor in 198,000 families. But what has been done in the past is only an indication of what may be done in the future, provided we all work heartily together with a view to securing the million on which we have now set our heart.

A Financial Sacrifice

To bring this about we have determined to enlist the cordial co-operation of our friends, and ourselves to make such a financial sacrifice as will demonstrate our own sincerity in the matter. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be produced at less than its regular subscription price, which is $1.50 per annum. But to interest those who cannot appreciate its beauties, simply because they do not see the paper, we have decided to accept, during the month of June, an unlimited number of Half Yearly trial subscriptions at 25 cents each, subject to the easy conditions set forth in the annexed coupons. We could not make this sacrifice but for the experience of the past that a very large percentage of our subscribers renew, and when they renew they are glad to pay the regular subscription price, because they are satisfied that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is well worth all we ask for it.

A Magnificent Record

This year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD attains its majority. It will be 21 years of age in September next. Its history is grand beyond compare. It has collected and expended A MILLION DOLLARS IN CHARITY. The peasants of Russia, the martyrs of Armenia, the orphans of India, the reconcentrados of Cuba, the rescued men of the Bowery, the unfortunate girls of the Bethesda Home, the ten thousand hapless waifs of the tenements, all rise up and call it blessed. God be thanked for the opportunities and the privileges which were ours in the past; and may He graciously continue to pour out His blessing upon THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, its editors and proprietor and its readers, and make us one and all increasingly useful in His service.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if received at the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until June 30, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Best Home Paper

But, in addition to these great monumental charities, there is the mission of blessedness and usefulness of the paper itself which results in light, cheer, hope and happiness in the home circle. And it is this which we now wish to extend. We are engaged in a great Home Missionary effort. You can help us. We know you will help us, and thus have part and parcel in all the good which, under divine blessing, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shall accomplish in years to come.

We Look to Our Friends

Let us begin this work by doubling the present number of its subscribers. While this is a great undertaking, an unprecedented task, it is nevertheless an easy one, for it means just one new subscriber for each and every one now on our list. Surely every subscriber can do this, and we believe you will do your share, while we will gladly do everything within our power to help you.

How to Do It

Our plan is as follows: On the following page you will find six coupons. Please tear them apart at the perforated lines, then distribute them among such of your Church and Sunday School friends as will be likely to subscribe. They will thank you for doing so. Explain to them the beauties, the riches, the great attractiveness of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and urge them to give it a trial. Tell them that each coupon saves half a dollar on this semi-yearly trial subscription, and you will be surprised how quickly they will avail themselves of the exceptional opportunity thus offered. If six coupons are not enough for your purpose, write us and we will send you as many more as you may require, absolutely free of all charge. Do not forget, however, that the coupons are good only until June 30, and cannot be received after that date.

Your One Opportunity

Or, if you prefer, you may make a regular canvass among your friends and solicit, by mail or in person, their subscription at our regular price—75 cents for six months. Then retain half a dollar from each subscription and send us a coupon and 25 cents in cash. Thus, while doing good by spreading the glorious influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, you are actually benefiting yourself. No such offer has ever been made and surely we shall never repeat it. Hence this is your one opportunity, which, if missed, will never be offered to you again.

Now for Victory!

Whichever plan you adopt, may success attend your efforts. We shall never rest until we have a full round million subscribers, and we feel sure that the most active friends in this aggressive campaign will be our present subscribers, who know and appreciate the good THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing, and will be glad of this opportunity to encourage the efforts of its editors and proprietor to maintain its high standard as the brightest and best family paper in the wide, wide world.

Let All Co-operate

Now for united co-operation! Let the glorious month of roses bring a harvest of subscriptions greater than any in the unequaled history of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and full of encouragement for the faith that is strong enough to believe that we shall some day attain our million!

Ellis Mapsch

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if received at the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until June 30, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if received at the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until June 30, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if received at the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until June 30, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if received at the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until June 30, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if received at the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until June 30, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if received at the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 1st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until June 30, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF MAY, A. D. 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Not Available for Premium Subscriptions

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

The Brightest and Best Family Weekly in the Wide, Wide World

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30, 1899

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Not Available for Premium Subscriptions

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

The Brightest and Best Family Weekly in the Wide, Wide World

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30, 1899

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Not Available for Premium Subscriptions

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

The Brightest and Best Family Weekly in the Wide, Wide World

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30, 1899

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Not Available for Premium Subscriptions

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

The Brightest and Best Family Weekly in the Wide, Wide World

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30, 1899

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Not Available for Premium Subscriptions

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

The Brightest and Best Family Weekly in the Wide, Wide World

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30, 1899

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Not Available for Premium Subscriptions

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

The Brightest and Best Family Weekly in the Wide, Wide World

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JUNE 30, 1899

A Transvaal Conference

HOPES are entertained that some solution of the problem of the Transvaal may be found at the conference, which is to take place, at the end of this month, between President Krueger and Sir Alfred Milner, the English governor of Cape Colony. The interview is to be held at Bloemfontein, in the Orange Free State. The primary object of the conference is to induce President Krueger to advocate the redress of some of the grievances of which Englishmen and Americans resident in the Transvaal complain. At present, although they pay nine-tenths of the whole amount raised in taxation, they have no rights of citizenship. Even in Johannesburg, where they constitute the bulk of the population, they are not allowed to vote in municipal elections, nor to control in any way the spending of public money, nor to have any share in the management of educational matters. Even if they abjure their allegiance to their own countries, a period of twelve years must elapse after such abjuration, before they are allowed to become citizens, and then only if three-fourths of the Boer population endorse their application. If they are charged with any offense, or have a suit at law, they must appear before a Boer judge and jury. The government exercises a rigid censorship over their newspapers, and the Executive has the power to expel, without trial, any editor or resident who offends him. Although the "Outlanders," as they are called, have done more to develop the country and enrich it than the Boers themselves, they are harassed and thwarted by taxes on their implements and working necessaries,such as dynamite; and by concessions and monopolies, devised to embarrass their operations and enrich the Boers. It is conceded by the more intelligent of the Dutch residents that such grievances ought to be redressed; but hitherto President Krueger and the ring of Boers who keep him in power, have steadfastly resisted any concession. Mr. Chamberlain, who is Secretary of the Colonies in the English Government, has strenuously endeavored to obtain some relief for the Outlanders, and has now arranged this meeting between President Krueger and Sir Alfred Milner in the hope that at least some of the more irritating causes of discontent may be removed. It is evident that hitherto, although President Krueger is a Bible reader, and even preaches occasionally, he has not been disposed to follow the Apostolic example in overlooking differences of nationality and regarding all men as brothers:

Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all (Col. 3: 11.)

♣

Recovered Through a Blow

A dispatch from Toledo, O., to the New York Herald reports the strange recovery of a demented man through a blow on the head. Many years ago the man was thrown from his horse and in falling injured his spine. He lost memory and had strange illusions, one of which was that he was only twenty-one years old when in reality he was over sixty. His condition has varied, but his mind has never been clear. The doctors in several hospitals have treated him, but have never been able to do him any good. He remained harmless but was demented. His relatives took care of him to prevent his being sent to an asylum. A few days ago he was standing near a buzz-saw watching the cutting up of some large logs. Suddenly one of the pieces of wood flew from the edge of the saw and struck him on the head. It stunned him and at first it was thought that he had been killed, but in a short time he recovered consciousness. Then his relatives saw a look on the old man's face that they had never seen before since he was hurt in his youth. He awakened as if from a long sleep. He now takes an intelligent interest in all that goes on and is deeply interested in the trolleys and other improvements which have been introduced of late years. It was a strange means of cure. Yet there are many who have recovered their spiritual health as this man recovered his mental vigor—by an apparent misfortune. Like the prodigal, it is when they are in want that their thoughts turn to the only true source of recovery.

When he came to himself, he said . . . I will arise and go to my father (Luke 15: 17, 18).

♣

A Strange Defense

In a trial for murder at Pittsburg, Pa., recently, the prisoner made an extraordinary plea in defense. She was charged with having killed her own mother by shooting her with a revolver. At her trial she did not deny the shooting, but said that she did it "under orders from the spirits." They commanded her to kill her mother, and in obedience to them she went to a drawer, where there was a loaded pistol, and took it to her mother's room. Her mother was asleep, but she awakened her and fired at her four times, each bullet taking effect. She added that her mother taught her to believe in spiritualism. It was fatal and pernicious teaching. It is singular that people who are so credulous as to believe in spirit communications, which are as a rule either the suggestion of their own disordered brains, or of other persons, should neglect the cautions of the Bible which did assuredly come from the unseen world.

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets have gone out into the world (I. John 4: 1).

♣

A Safe Float for Warships

A peculiar contrivance has been offered to the Naval Department by the inventor. Its object is to preserve silver, gold and valuables in case of a war-vessel being wrecked, and possibly also log books and other important documents. The invention is an egg-shaped device, fire, water and burglar-proof, it is claimed, and designed to float under all conditions of weather, and yet so heavy and strong as to make it difficult to be broken. It is designed to rest in a cradle, built upon the deck of a vessel, from which it will not move until the vessel founders. Then it floats, and the action of the water raises a flag signal, rings a bell and starts a light which will burn for several weeks. The inventor hopes to have every warship fitted with one of his contrivances. Officers who have examined the float say that it would be of great service in preserving the records of a ship, and in making it more certain that in the event of a vessel going down at sea, some one might pick up the float and secure the valuables and the log books. So much, at least, would be saved, if there was such a float on board a vessel that foundered. Unhappily, there is no such provision in cases of spiritual and moral shipwreck. The soul, the most valuable part of the man, is lost when his body is laid in the grave.

Fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body (Matt. 10: 28).

♣

The Peace Conference at Work

No gorgeous military procession, accompanied by salvos of cannon and blare of trumpets, announced the opening of the World's Peace Conference at the Hague. Although it was the first instance in history of all the great nations assembling to discuss measures for the maintenance of universal peace, the opening was so quiet and unostentatious that the good burghers of Holland's capital might well marvel at the lack of the glittering pomp and display that are the usual attendants of the assemblies of the "great ones of the earth." Nearly thirty governments, including all of importance, were represented by delegations; but it is understood that when the Conference is fully organized, those governments that are now unrepresented will all be invited to participate, in order that it may be in the fullest sense "A Parliament of Man, a Federation of the World," representing all the civilized nations of both hemispheres. At the opening session on May 18—the Czar's birthday—M. de Beaufort, President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands, delivered the inaugural address and welcomed the delegates. M. de Staal, the representative of Russia, then assumed the Presidency of the Conference. Up to the present time, the sessions have been short, and progress is necessarily slow. Many of the delegates doubtless are unable at the outset to clearly comprehend a programme which has for its object the subversion of many accepted ideas of monarchial power and prerogative, and time must be allowed for ample discussion. The Conference is divided into three sections—one to consider disarmament; another, the laws of war and mediation, and the third, arbitration. In the last, the American delegates are expected to make a strong impression upon the Conference. A great mass of diplomatic documents will be submitted including the memorandum of Prince Metternich for a peace conference (1876), the arbitration tribunal plan of David Dudley Field (1871), and the proposed arbitration tribunal for all the Americas (1890). The immediate aim of the Conference will be to assert the duty of all disputants to resort to mediation by the neutral powers before appealing to the sword. Compulsory arbitration, according to the Czar's instructions communicated to M. de Staal, could be attained either through a supreme tribunal of the great powers, or by a tribunal consisting of those powers whose interests are at stake, supplemented by the friendly mediation of some neutral power. Russia, Great Britain, France and the United States are distinctly favorable to arbitration, while some of the other powers are represented as opposing it. Possibly they foresee complications arising in the future, as they have in the past, in which they can gain more by the sword than would be awarded to them by an impartial tribunal. Even when that time comes when all nations have submitted to the rule of the Prince of Peace, there will be occasion to reprove and restrain the greed of some of the nations.

M. DE BEAUFORT

He shall judge among many peoples, and rebuke strong nations afar off (Micah 4: 3).

PRESIDENT KRUEGER'S STATE PROCESSION ON THE WAY TO JOHANNESBURG

♣

Ruined by a Personal

Local journals of Bridgeport, Conn., tell a pathetic story of the ruin of a widow, through answering one of the wretched "personal" advertisements in a New York journal. She had property valued at over a hundred thousand dollars, and was in her youth one of the belles of Bridgeport society. A few years ago she saw an advertisement for a wife, and she wrote to the advertiser describing herself and her property. A correspondence was thus commenced, which led to a personal acquaintance. The man who had advertised was handsome, well-dressed, and claimed to be the owner of a considerable fortune. Eventually they were married. The husband then persuaded his wife to raise a large sum of money by a mortgage on her property. No sooner did he get the money into his hands than he left her and went West. She heard nothing of him for some years. The first intimation of his whereabouts came in the form of a notice from a California Court that he had applied for a divorce. She went out there to contest the case, but as she was unable to pay the expense of witnesses, she was beaten. She returned East, and tried to retrieve her losses, but her ventures were disastrous, and last week she was sent to the poor-house. It was a cruel, heartless thing to so rob a confiding widow, and then leave her to the tender mercies of the poor-house, but how foolish she was to put herself in the power of such a man! Sad as her case is, it is not so bad as that of people who, listening to the wiles of the great enemy of the human race, make shipwreck of their lives and lose their souls.

Be sober, be vigilant because your adversary the devil as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour (I. Petcr 5: 8).

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Christ Risen

S. S. Lesson for June 11. John 20: 11-20
Golden Text, Cor. 15: 20

BY REV. M. DWIGHT

HOW those words, "I am the way," (John 14: 6) apply to every part of the ministry of our blessed Lord and Head! "No man cometh to the Father but by me," is only a part of all which is included in them. No man riseth from the dead but by me, he could have said with equal truth, for he is "the resurrection and the life" (John 11: 25). His resurrection is the guarantee for ours.

Mary Magdalene was in a measure under the power of things seen and temporal. Among the followers of Jesus, disappointed hopes were expressed in the words, "We hoped that it was he which should redeem Israel" (Luke 24: 21). Nothing had turned out as they expected. He who had delivered so many had not delivered himself. He who had raised others from the dead, had himself been carried a lifeless corpse to the grave; and it seemed indeed as though man, and Satan, and death had prevailed against God, his Christ, and life. But as yet the way of the Cross was not understood: through death he destroyed death, through being made sin for us (II. Cor. 5: 21) he conquered sin, through humbling himself God highly exalted him. It was the manifestation of God's thoughts and God's ways, which are higher than ours (Isa. 55: 8).

"Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping." She had been the first to come to the sepulchre "while it was yet dark;" and seeing the stone rolled away she had run to Peter and John to tell them. But her idea was not the result of faith in his word. He had declared that he would rise again. In the empty tomb she only saw human intervention. She did not say, Can his word be true? Is he risen? No. She said, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." But as she wept she stooped down and looked into the sepulchre. Already what was to be seen there had convinced John of the resurrection.

But Mary saw what neither Peter nor John had seen. There was life within that tomb; she saw two angels in white, sitting, the one at the head, the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain. Heavenly beings had taken possession of the empty tomb; the place of death became filled with life, and the first voice from that tomb was, "Woman, why weepest thou?" Mary, still on earthly lines, answered, "Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." It was her own personal loss. "My Lord," and human agency "they" which occupied her. And when she had thus said, she turned herself back and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus. When we are full of our own ideas, and especially with that which touches us personally, we have not an eye to recognize Jesus even when he is near to us.

Supposing him to be the gardener, she said to him, "Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away." Jesus saith to her, "Mary!" she turned herself and saith unto him, "Rabboni!" which is to say Master.

She knew the voice. Jesus may appear to his own in many very unexpected ways, and they may be strangely unconscious of him. We are so apt to have our own ideas as to the way in which he will make himself known. But his sheep "know his voice" (John 10: 4); when he speaks they are conquered at once. No sooner did he say "Mary," than there was the instant answer, "Rabboni," my Lord. It meant I am thy servant, at thy disposal. Now Mary understood; she saw before her the risen Christ. Mary's first impulse was like that of the woman from Galilee, "to hold him by the feet and worship him" (Matt. 28: 9), but this must not be; others who were so weak in faith that they needed tangible proof of his resurrection might do this. But Mary's worship was not to consist in emotions which might gratify her, but in obedience which would serve him. "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended unto my Father: but go to my brethren and say unto them I ascend unto my Father and your Father; and to my God, and your God." What a message, and by what a messenger! It was not to apostles, but to the woman who knew how to wait that the Lord appeared, and to her, not to them was spoken the first word after he rose from the dead.

"JESUS SAITH UNTO HER, WOMAN, WHY WEEPEST THOU?"

"Touch me not;" take not hold of me: henceforth faith is to take the place of sight; I am risen, I shall soon ascend and you will learn to sit with me in heavenly places (Eph. 2: 6). I have come down to human life; I have been made flesh and dwelt among you; you must now become partakers of the divine nature that you may dwell with me; seek nothing for self; let self be crucified with me, and be ye partakers of my resurrection. But go unto my brethren. No word of reproach against even Peter, no mention of their forsaking him. "My brethren." He is not ashamed to call them brethren. Say unto them, "I ascend unto my Father." That would not be so difficult to understand, but when he added, "And your Father," how ashamed must Mary have felt that she had so little understood him, or taken his words for true when he spoke of his rising again; how miserably she had maintained his cause, and yet he says, "My Father and your Father," putting his disciples on a level with himself, "My God and your God;" for, as Man, he was a worshiper in common with his fellowmen.

It was his death and resurrection which had made possible this oneness with himself. Now he would send the Holy Ghost to dwell not only with men as he had done, but in his own, to make real in their lives what he had taught, and to reproduce in them the life he had lived.

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

VERY simply is this story told. The writer offers no explanation, makes no argument, propounds no theory, but relates the facts in the direct manner of one who witnessed them. His narrative differs in certain details from those of the other Evangelists, but it is more copious and as it was written after the others and the writer probably had their works before him when he wrote, it is doubtless the most accurate. We see in it that none of Christ's followers was expecting a resurrection. In spite of their Lord's repeated assurances, they had no thought of seeing him again. The women went to the tomb in the early morning, with their spices, to complete the embalming, which had been interrupted on the evening of the crucifixion, by the setting of the sun and the beginning of the Sabbath. They clearly expected to find the body there and when they saw that the tomb was empty and reported the fact to the disciples, there was general surprise and consternation. John, it is true, believed when he saw the empty tomb, and Mary Magdalene believed when she saw and recognized the Lord, but it was not until evening, when Jesus himself appeared among them, uttering the familiar greeting, "Peace unto you," and showed them his wounded side and hands, that the general body of disciples were convinced that he had really risen from the dead. Subsequently he appeared in Galilee, where his followers were more numerous and there he was seen and recognized, as Paul tells us (I. Cor. 15: 6), by above five hundred at once. These witnesses who, as they show, were slow to believe, became most positive in their attestation. The disciples made the resurrection of Jesus the central fact in their teaching, regarding it, as they had a right to do, as conclusive proof of his divinity. And this, too, not at a period long subsequent to its occurrence, but while the people were alive who could have disproved it, if it had been false, and in the very city where it took place. In these days, when it is the fashion to explain away miracles, and account on natural grounds for supernatural events, it is most important to give such testimony, as this of the apostles, its proper weight; for as Paul says: "If Christ did not rise our faith is vain."

Mary stood without at the sepulchre. She could not be comforted. She had brought Peter and John, but they had looked and had gone away. Mary remained. She loved him intensely, and now she was denied the privilege of weeping over his dead body. She must have been very desolate when she broke down in a fit of weeping at the entrance to that empty tomb. In one of Tennyson's poems a beautiful story is told of a husband who, after his wife had been laid in the vault, went away to another land, being unable to bear the sight of his desolate home and the scenes that spoke to him of the departed. But a man who had loved her dearly, begged permission to go into the vault that he might kiss her dead face. While there, he detected signs of life in her form, and he carried her out of the vault to his mother's house, where, under skilful and loving care, she was nursed back again into vigorous life. The husband was still away wandering no one knew whither, striving vainly in changed scenes to forget his lost wife. After a year or two he returned to visit the grave and weep there. The poet gives a thrilling description of the scene when his friend took him to his home and there gave him back, living and well, the wife he had mourned as dead. Like this was Mary's joy; and like this will be the reunion of souls that have loved on earth when they meet beyond the grave.

Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended. Precisely what Christ meant is not clear. It could not be that he shrank from the touch of humanity, for later, in the case of Thomas (John 20: 27), he invited it. Probably he wished Mary to understand that the old familiar relations were come to an end. Death had severed them, and he who had passed through death into resurrection life was now a being to be reverenced and worshiped. It is related that a number of literary men were talking of how they would act if the great dead writers of the past came among them. One spoke of the welcome that would be given to Homer; another said how he would hail Shakespeare, and others mentioned other mighty men of the pen whose coming they would greet with joy. One of them said: "How if Jesus of Nazareth entered the room?" "Ah," said Carlyle, "if he came, it would not be greeting: we should bend before him and say: 'My Lord and my God.'"

My Father and your Father. That was the key of all Christ's teaching. His Father was the Father of all men. Not a being far off and remote, an austere ruler indifferent to the welfare of his creatures, but a being with the loving sympathetic heart of a father. The story is told of a young man who disgraced his father's name and committed a crime which he believed naturally would turn his father against him forever. The son went away to a distant land, and despairing of ever being forgiven, held no communication with his family. But the father made good his son's defalcation and in his heart forgave him. The son one day heard that his father was ill, and he returned that he might see him and ask his forgiveness before he died. But he was too late. He arrived on the day of the funeral. He sat with the others to hear the will read, expecting that his misconduct had cut him off from any share in the estate. To his amazement he heard that he was to share equally with his brothers. Later he received a loving message that his father had uttered when he was dying. His heart was filled with love for such a father, and from that day he became a new and better man.

Concerning Recreation

IN many minds the ideas of duty and pleasure are antagonistic to each other; and there was a time in our social evolution when this opinion was of worth. But it has now lost all its utility, and been displaced by a view of life which sets a postive value on enjoyment. Indeed, Mr. Herbert Spencer, in his Data of Ethics, contends that the cultivation of pleasurable consciousness is a prime duty of life, and a valuable guide to sound living. For pleasure creates a direct increase of bodily and mental energy, and thus raises the "tide of life."

Looking at pleasure and recreation from a religious point, is it not almost wicked to think the good God organized us so diabolically that pleasures are injurious and pains beneficial? Consider the whole run and tenor of the Old Testament. Does it not couple feasting, enjoyment, leisure, rest, with all its spiritual blessings? The Land of Promise was a land of good things. Its corn and wine and oil were types, but they were facts, too. And whenever a special solemnity, a holy time, a dedication, was to be celebrated, it was with unstinted cheer and rejoicing. As in the law, so in the Gospel. Christ inaugurated his mission at a marriage, and took part in its feasting and rejoicing. He permitted his first called apostle to celebrate his conversion by a feast, at which He was himself present.

* * *

NO MAN or woman can live happily without some recreation, and its study is a duty to ourselves and to others. For few of us are naturally any more capable of amusing ourselves than we are of fencing or of playing the fiddle. In order then to get the most enjoyment from the world we live in, we should train the faculties most pleasant to ourselves, and most profitable to the race. We should study the art of pleasure-taking. As a preliminary, we may acknowledge that the opposition of religious sects to what is usually called "pleasure" is a just and healthy opposition. The pleasures they disparage are very questionable ones. It cannot be either mentally or morally healthy to be dancing in a hot room until long after midnight; and a crowded theatre is equally objectionable.

Too often, however, it is a personal rather than a religious disinclination that has to be overcome. People fall into the rut of every-day life and every-day opinions. They contribute their relay of work, and as soon as they have done it, they do it again. They are always on the same road; always under weight. Then if trial comes, it finds them below its requirements. Happiness finds them still more below. For this non-satisfaction of a natural love for enjoyment brings a sense of something wanting—a dreary feeling that depresses the moral and mental tone, and throws a gloom over life. Health suffers, temper suffers, annoyances multiply; they begin to take morose views of life; injuries and offences are nursed; and they feel a constantly increasing disinclination to enjoyment.

* * *

THEN what God demands, they feel it hard to give. The faith, sympathy, and refreshing cheerfulness their families require, they have not got. They can see their loved ones come home, and look, and then turn from them disappointed just as they would turn from a spring dried up. They fail to render, even those they love, happy: for their lassitude depresses; and their weakness, exhausts. And as for the outside world, it finds them disagreeable, troublesome, useless. Now this is not a condition God ever wills. On the contrary, he wills us to be alive and happy. Air! Room! Recreation! These are what we all want; and if they are refused, we must take them by force. We need vigor of body as well as soul, to conquer ourselves; and we must insist upon rest and pleasure as well as on work and duty. To do this, is not to be cruel to others, it is far otherwise. Woe to those households where there is no time to be kind! no time to be human! no time for innocent recreation! For if we would have sympathies to share, we must have lawful leisure to cultivate them. They who work like an engine, will become hard as iron.

Such a condition of depression and gloom is not only an unhappy one, it is also an immoral one. It leads in numberless ways to inflicting suffering on the weak, the guiltless, and the dependent—on those who would gladly live joyfully, if they were permitted. All of us must have experienced, at some time, the calamity of living with a gloomy, irritable person; and we know it is as great an affliction as a painful illness. Indeed, it may be reasonably asserted that where a man or woman deliberately refuse to cultivate, through rest and recreation, the conditions of a happy mind, they can, and generally do produce, in a family, as much suffering as a criminal. They will probably assert that they are sacrificing themselves by their unceasing labor for the good of others. Not so! They are deceiving themselves, and cruelly depriving and injuring others. If they would be real benefactors, let them take recreation enough to make them cheerful and good-natured; so that in the light of their countenances the faces around them may catch light, and dare to wear smiles and speak hopefully. I declare that this is by no means an easy thing to do. It is a result only to be reached at a high point of moral culture.

* * *

TO MANIFEST and foster a gladsome spirit—when naturally prone to a gloomy one—involves considerable self-restraint. For there is a moral sluggishness to be overcome, before pleasurable and emotional feelings are created. Yet how often have we dissipated a dark, mental depression, by vigorous bodily exercise, to which the mind was at the moment strongly opposed. The creating and sustaining then, of that bright and joyous temper, which accepts recreation as a duty and a pleasure, is often a matter of real difficulty, and deserves to be extolled as a moral triumph over a physical infirmity.

The pursuit of healthy recreation being then a conscious pursuit, demands self-assertion; and that often in the face of social custom. For if a man or woman is to be the radiant centre of happiness, it is evident they must seek happiness for themselves in their own way. It must also be sought for itself, and not for an end to something else. Whether it be a fashionable recreation or not is of little matter; the great point is that it should appeal to the individual taste. And yet it would be well to recognize that the simplest pleasures are the best. As a rule, the pleasures that cost us the least are generally those that are the most thoroughly enjoyed.

To mix reason with pleasure, and wisdom with mirth, is one rule for true re creation; and another is > Never to blend our pleasure, or our pride,

> With sorrow of the meanest thing that feels.

Also let us never forget the wise advice of Ecclesiasticus 14:14—"Defraud not thyself of the good day, and let not the part of a good desire overpass thee."

> For other things mild Heaven a time ordains,
> And disapproves that care, though wise in show,
> That with superfluous burden loads the day,
> And, when God sends a cheerful hour, refrains.

Amelia E. Barr

Christian Policemen

ONE of the most unique religious organizations in Philadelphia is the "Christian Police Association." In the fall of 1894, a few women met weekly for prayer in the interests of the work, and, as a result, there were twelve meetings in as many police stations. The association was organized May 29, 1895, and during the four years of its existence it has proved a great influence for good. The service consists of Bible reading, prayers, singing hymns and a short talk by a clergyman or layman invited for the afternoon. The song service is a special feature. The men in several of the stations have collected money to purchase organs and hymn books. In other stations, books and organs have been presented by friends specially interested in the policemen.

SERGEANT B. C. MCMANES
An Active Christian Worker

This admirable work is wholly unsectarian. The godly women in inaugurating it built better than they knew, and the results already attained have well repaid their efforts. Several conversions of policemen and their families have taken place. Efforts are also made to benefit the "temporal" man, and a home for convalescent and aged policemen and an orphanage for policemens' children are among the projects now looked forward to. Sergeants McManes and Elliott are actively interested in the work and are doing all in their power to spread the Gospel among their fellow policemen.

Rev. Charles M. Boswell, who has charge of the Philadelphia "Forward Movement," was elected president of the association, and it is expected that the work will progress even more favorably in the future than it has done in the past. This special work among policemen is international in its scope; Miss Catharine Gurney, of London, England, being the secretary of the international association.

GOSPEL MEETING IN A PHILADELPHIA POLICE STATION

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

Death of a Christian Soldier

CAPT. ALFRED E. HUNT, of Pittsburg, Pa., a chemist and metallurgist of national fame, passed away in that city a few days ago. He was the son of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, the author and leader of the world movement for scientific temperance education in public schools. For his discoveries and his valuable work, Captain Hunt was made a Fellow of the American Society for the Advancement of Science the youngest man who ever received that distinction. In addition to his crowded life of study and business as a metallurgical engineer, he organized and commanded for nearly fifteen years a division of the National Guards of light artillery in Pennsylvania. When war with Spain was declared, he with his men, was among the first in the field. While in service in the field the poisonous seeds of the malarial disease were sown which finally caused his death.

A Comrade in Service writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "A few days before he died, in answer to the question raised in his presence, 'Were the Cubans, Porto Ricans and Philipinos worth the sacrifice of our noble American soldiers?' Captain Hunt replied, 'I do not look at the question from that standpoint. The verdict of history will show that the Spanish-American war was for the advancement of the principles of human freedom for which our nation stands. For such principles, every true American should be willing to sacrifice, if need be, life itself.' That nation is not in its decadence which can produce such men as Captain Alfred E. Hunt and a citizenship capable of appreciating his noble qualities and service."

An Industrial School for Zulus

AN interesting mission work is being done at Incwadi, Unkomas Valley, Natal, South Africa, by Rev. John L. Dube and his wife, native Zuluans, who have lately sailed from New York City to his country. Mr. Dube came to America in 1887, with the the Rev. W. C. Wilcox, a returning missionary, and took a course at Oberlin, O., where he worked his way. He went back to Incwadi, and organized a mission centre there with two churches and two day schools. In 1896 he returned to America, leaving the work at Incwadi in charge of his associate and helpers there, and bringing Mrs. Dube with him; their intention being to better equip themselves for labors among their people. Last May, after graduating from the Union Missionary Training School in Brooklyn, Mr. Dube and his wife have been traveling among the churches of different denominations, soliciting funds for the establishment of a Zulu Industrial School in connection with his mission, and studying methods of mission work among the negroes of the South. He has secured about $10,000 to devote to the industrial school, and many gifts of material for carrying on the work, such as agricultural implements, carpenters' tools, etc. His uncle, Chief Umqawe, has given 500 acres as the foundation of the plant. This chief, persuaded of the benefit to his people of industrial training and Christian teaching, has sent his heir and another son to this country to be instructed in law and the manual arts.

The Nebraska Prairie Church Fund

The following additional contributions to the Nebraska Prairie Church Fund have been received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Previously acknowledged	$281 [illegible]
(Mrs E P, Chanute, acknowledged in issue of May 24 as $5, should have been $1 00.)
Frank Sawyer	[illegible]
Collection from Summerfield M. E. Church, Mariner's Harbor	[illegible]
M S R, Brooklyn	1 00
Linden Ave M. E. Church, Jersey City	14 2[illegible]
Total	$289 [illegible]

Children's Day

The Little Folk's Anniversary—Happy Occasions East, West, North and South

CHILDREN'S DAY is now generally recognized by churches, Sabbath schools and secular schools as an anniversary in the undisputed right of little folks. On that day, the public schools in many cities and states let the scholars out early, or do not demand their attendance at all; and mothers and teachers, pastors and friends lend themselves to making the occasion a happy one for small people.

In different States, the date is not the same; nor are the observances uniform; the name by which it is known varies, but in the essential feature of being set apart as a time for the special entertainment and activities of children, the anniversary is the same. In many sections, for instance, Sunday School Celebration Day is the children's day of days. In some of the Southern States it usually occurs in watermelon time, and the gathering takes place in country churches or out in a beautiful forest. Sunday Schools of all denominations gather from far and near; speeches are delivered, and choruses and solos, for which the children have been practicing for weeks, are sung. Farmers have brought dinners along in their wagons—fried chicken, ham, biscuit, "light bread," corn-bread, cakes, pies, and freezers of ice-cream; villagers also keep open house, and the occasion is one for the exercise of hospitality and neighborly kindness. In the Western States, the date and the fare would be different, but the spirit would be the same. Every congregation in all sections would be sure to sing "America," and to have the Stars and Stripes in abundant evidence.

Perhaps, of all towns in the world, Brooklyn makes the most of Children's Day, or Anniversary Day, as Brooklynites interchangeably call it. It would almost seem as if no other city had so many children to parade as Brooklyn. As the "City of Churches," Brooklyn Borough, can logically claim more Sunday School children than any other town of equal importance. Think of eighty to one hundred thousand children on the streets at one time! They are not all in one unbroken line, but detachments march here, there and everywhere, with colors flying and bands playing. The Stars and Stripes hang from every window on prominent streets and float bravely over Prospect Park, where the festival culminates in parade review before distinguished personages. The children are roped together, and little companies of men and women, many of them no "taller than the tongs"—the girls in fleecy gala dress, the boys in cutest military uniforms—march out of the woods and across the velvet green and pass before the reviewing stand. Over them float countless banners; in front of some companies, the dearest little drum-majors in the world wave authoritative batons. A May-pole, gay with ribbons, is borne along. From the size and number of flags in evidence everywhere, and from the magnitude of the celebration, a stranger in Brooklyn might suppose he was witnessing a national instead of a local festival. Parades, songs and speeches over, children return with their teachers to their respective churches and mission halls, and feast on strawberries and cream.

CHILDREN'S DAY IN PROSPECT PARK, BROOKLYN.

The subject of Children's Day would be incompletely treated without reference to that anniversary, which occurs on a fixed date—the second Sunday in June—in many churches. It is the evolution of "Flower Sunday," and of a special day for the baptism of children. In the M. E. Church, it followed the founding of the "Children's Fund," and dates back to the Centenary celebration in 1864, when it was arranged that on some particular Sunday, services should be held for children and the contributions made by them be devoted to educational purposes. The M. E. Church was the first to incorporate a "Children's Day" for such a purpose into church law, and in this sense the institution owes its origin to that denomination.

♦

The Tombs Gospel Mission

In its latest annual report, the Gospel Mission to the Tombs (the New York City Prison) presents a record of much excellent spiritual work accomplished. This work includes visits, religious services, letter writing and personal counseling in the Ten-day prison, the Woman's Prison, the old Prison and Boy's Prison. In the latter a Christian Endeavor Society has lately been organized, and as nearly 1,700 boys pass through every year, it is felt that there is a great and promising field for spiritual effort. Our readers are already familiar with the work done by the Gospel Mission to the Tombs, which aims at the salvation and reclamation of the men women and boys in that great criminal barracks. From time to time articles from the [illegible] plished by preaching the old Gospel, visiting these unfortunates in their cells, and pointing [illegible] the sin of the world." As this Mission is unsectarian and undenominational, it should commend itself to all who love Christian work. It is wholly dependent on voluntary contribu[illegible] supply all information regarding the work, or [illegible]

♦

"The King's Children"

"Each one resembled the Children of a King."

FRANCES HILEY HAVEN ALLEN said: "If the King is indeed near of kin to us, the royal likeness will be surely recognizable." These little ones of this Order are the King's Children, and the [illegible] in the lines of the face, as the gentle chiselings of "line upon line, precept upon precept," and the joy of Christ's love leave their impress.

Do you expect to see a palace when you come to see these children? This Home is not palatial in size or equipment, but a large, airy dwelling house, with a scrap of garden in the back yard. Jesus was not born in a palace. He experienced the frugality of life, but the kingly life left a glory that shines down all the ages, to illumine every life that acknowledges him the Christ, the Saviour of the world. Yesterday, nearly a hundred small children marched around our little square of grass, singing:

[illegible] King's dear little children,
We are walking in his garden.

[illegible] farther than the four walls; people came out on the fire-escapes of the surrounding tenements, and every window framed many faces, of those who, perhaps, would catch the bit of joy that would set the echo ringing through a lifetime.

A beautiful ivy vine is trying to hide with its clinging leaves the brick wall of the prison at the end of our King's Garden, where are sheltered those who have transgressed the higher and the civil law. What a contrast! This side of that wall, childhood, with merry voices and eyes (windows of the soul), eagerly pleading for the love which is the one great cry of the human! Within those walls, the hideous wail of those grown old in sin! God grant that our little ones may be kept so close to the guiding Hand that they cannot wander away.

The Constitution of the Order of the King's Children is as follows:

[illegible] Children.

Article II. Object: To plant [illegible] the heart of each child that the spreading of Christ's Kingdom in the home will follow.

[illegible] Irwin; secretary, Mrs. Sarah J. Bird. The Gospel [illegible]

There are many circles of twenty being formed, and the officers ask all who have formed or are now forming bands to kindly notify them, giving full name of Circle, as they are making up a list, and are ready to furnish with the covenant cards, the manual of exercises for the meetings. Address all letters to Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, 211 Clinton Street, New York.

♦

Germany and Total Abstinence

Medical professors in the Universities, and practising physicians in Germany are pushing the study of alcohol problems with a determined hand. They are thoroughly aroused on the subject, are organizing societies, instituting courses of lectures and public discussions of the subject, and giving addresses in the interest of total abstinence.

"He That is Warm Thinks All So."

Thousands are "cold" in that they do not understand the glow of health. This implies disordered kidneys, liver, bowels, blood or brain. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes "warm" because it gives all who take it perfect health.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla

This Reclining Go-Cart
Baby Carriage

Go-Carts $2.50 to $20

This Style, $14.00
Baby Carriages $3.75 to $50

Invalid Chairs

PHILADELPHIA BABY CARRIAGE FACTORY
713 and 715 Spring Garden Street . . . . PHILADELPHIA

Swift's
Silver Leaf Lard
Premium Hams
Premium Breakfast Bacon
Beef Extract
Jersey Butterine
Cotosuet

The choicest products of experience, expert care and skillful handling—[illegible] there's a certainty of their purity

Swift and Company, Chicago
Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, St. Joseph, St. Paul.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
[illegible]
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,
[illegible] and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Dealers supplied. Catalogue illustrated [illegible] free.

Chambard's Tea, the most popular family medicine in France for [illegible] and best purgative. Box 25 cents by mail. Legoll's Pharmacy 260 7th Ave. N Y [illegible]

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP for children teething should always be used for [illegible] It [illegible] the child softens the gums, allays all pain cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa.

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit [illegible] 10 to 20 days. No pay required. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

Beyond Comparison the value of Electric Steel Wheels and Wagons. All about them in free catalogue. Electric Wheel Co., Quincy, Ill.

BICYCLE FREE OR CASH TO ANY ONE distributing my soaps etc I trust you. F. Parker, 277 E. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

ROYAL
BAKING POWDER
IS THE BEST.
A pure, cream of tartar powder.
Greatest in Leavening Strength.
It makes lightest, sweetest, most wholesome food.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Our Children's Home

On the Beautiful Hudson Still—Soon to Open—Many Little Ones to be Helped

AFTER five years' occupancy of the premises at Mont-Lawn—five happy summers, during which nearly ten thousand tenement children have enjoyed delightful outings there during the torrid months—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is about to make a new departure. Rev. Dr. A. D. Lawrence

A TENEMENT DOORWAY

Jewett, our "Children's Friend," and the owner of Mont-Lawn (through whose generosity it was granted us for our fresh-air work until last season), having passed away, the estate went into the possession of his heirs. Permission was kindly accorded us to continue our fresh-air work at Mont-Lawn last summer, with the understanding that thereafter the property was to be restored to the heirs for other uses. It therefore became necessary to find another location for our Children's Home, and this has been done.

By an arrangement with Mr. S. R. Bradley, owner of the Prospect House property on the hillside overlooking Nyack, that property will be occupied by our children this season. The situation is as lovely as Mont-Lawn, and in some respects is more convenient for our purpose. There are twelve acres of land surrounding the cottages; part in woodland, part in flowery fields. The view of the Hudson and of the surrounding country is superb; the scenery is almost Alpine in loveliness and grandeur. Matron Collins and her assistants are busily engaged making everything ready for our little guests.

Our picture, which tells the truth about tenement homes as words cannot, is argument enough for the encouragement of this work for city children. The efforts at tidiness in the dress of members of this group show how worthy they are of help. Think of this dwelling when the mercury goes up above the hundred mark! Observe how some children on the steps have other children in their arms. From such dwellings as these come the "little fathers and mothers," who, through the loving-kindness of Christian friends, find a sweet respite from cares each summer at our Children's Home on the beautiful Hudson. There, free from their burdens, they play and make merry and gather strength for renewed duties—duties that it is at once beautiful and sad that they should carry. The patient mothers, who are relieved of the expense of two, three or more children during the heated term, are helped beyond what words describe. Readers who are co-operating with us in this good work are doing more for struggling mothers and children than they can well realize.

IAN MACLAREN

The first of four stories picturing new and peculiarly interesting phases of Scottish life with all the sweet pathos and humor of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush."

—on their way home from school they loitered to study him, standing in the gateway of his stables, straddling his legs

JOSIAH QUINCY

MAYOR OF BOSTON

Gives an interesting account of "The Work of a Modern City."

JULIAN RALPH

Contributes a strong Russian story—"In the Grip of the Tsar."

HARLOW N. HIGINBOTHAM.

The Making of a Merchant

The first of three practical papers by HARLOW N. HIGINBOTHAM, of Marshall Field & Co., full of sound common sense for young business men.

ROBERT BARR

Tells of his troubles as a prisoner of the Sultan.

The Woman Who Disliked Snobs

By G. S. STREET

A finely satirical sketch in the "People I Admire in Society" series.

ALL IN THIS WEEK'S NUMBER

Date of June 3.

To be had of All Newsmen at

5 Cents the Copy

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Founded A.D. 1728 by Benj. Franklin

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

This entire building, and two annexes, are devoted exclusively to the work of the

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Accessible to musical events of every nature. The best masters in music, elocution and languages that money can command. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Prospectus free.

FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

$20.00 A Week Salary. Agents wanted. We give credit; allow 50 per cent. and 20 per cent. discount; prepay expressage. High grade and guaranteed jewelry, watches, topaz diamonds; plated and solid Colorado Silver tableware. Mutual Manufacturing Co., 126 Chambers St., Dept. 1, N.Y. City

$3.00 to $10.00 a day can be easily made working for me. People preferred who can furnish their own team. Applicants must furnish satisfactory reference as to character and standing. B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

Do You Want to Go to School?

....We have arranged the grandest scholarship offer ever dreamed of.

....We will make it possible for you to attend ANY school or college in America next year without it costing you one cent, if you can devote a few hours a day for the next month or so advertising and introducing the best weekly journal printed in the English Language—"SUCCESS"—into the homes of your friends and neighbors. Full particulars sent free.

Write at once. Address

THE SUCCESS CO...Cooper Union, New York

"Don't hide your light under a bushel." That's just why we talk about SAPOLIO

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Divine Life in Man *

IN thinking of that sanctification through which the divine life advances toward perfection, we need to pay due attention on the one hand to its nature as a process, and on the other to the events or crises that mark its course and the various stages through which it proceeds. Yet these two aspects can scarcely be treated separately or in succession, for each is essential to the meaning of the other.

Plainly sanctification is not an event, but a process. Being the progress of the divine life toward perfection, it is a movement, an advancing. It is a double process—or rather it may be viewed from the negative side or the positive. Negatively it is progressive deliverance from sin in action and in character. Positively, it is progressive training of the powers and development of the possibilities of the soul in its divine life. These two processes are but one; for the development of the divine life gradually banishes sin, and deliverance from sin is the way to fresh development of the divine life. Of these two aspects the positive is the primary one, though it is not often so regarded. Popularly sanctification is spoken of as consisting mainly in deliverance from sin. But in fact it consists mainly in the development of a divine life that conquers sin and grows the more freely in proportion as sin is gone. And in either aspect, the negative or positive, sanctification is a process, not an event. Never at a stroke is sin entirely conquered, and never by a step is perfection in the divine life reached.

Plainly the process of sanctification must pass through unnumbered stages. It is often asked whether there is a higher Christian life. The answer is, yes, and a higher life beyond it, and a higher still beyond. The Christian life is ever higher and higher. It must pass through all stages between its beginning and its perfection.

Plainly also the process includes innumerable events. Many of these are ordinary and simple, but some are profoundly significant, decisive of large issues, immensely helpful to the progress. Sometimes a single experience or crisis in life will bring a great advance in sanctification, releasing the soul from some old bondage, or adding new power to some godlike quality, or opening the way for mightier operation of divine influences. God uses experiences of every kind as elements in this holy progress, and the best progress is made only by loyally accepting the benefit of the experiences through which he leads. Every day's life should be in some way significant for sanctification, for every inch of the road to perfection has to be traveled—whether slowly or rapidly, still traveled.

We are often asked how soon sanctification is to be completed. That depends upon two considerations—how much there is yet to be done, and how rapidly men are able to receive the gifts of the Holy Spirit. The end, we should remember, is moral likeness to God in a human being. When we fairly consider how much there is yet to be done, we learn that it is vain to look for perfection soon. A man is not a thing, to be acted upon, but a free spirit, to be transformed from within; and to say this, remembering what the end is, is to say that the end is not in sight. Perfection in the divine life is far remote, even from the best men, and even the higher stages of imperfection are far away. Nor does the end seem nearer when we ask how well able men are to make full use of the Holy Spirit's sanctifying influences. The best men are able to learn the divine lessons but slowly, and there is no man who can receive the fulness that the sanctifying Spirit might impart. God cannot sanctify men through anything but experience. Even to the end, sanctification will be a process of experience; and if once we see what perfection in the divine life means, we shall never think that the present life, at the longest, is long enough to bring a beginner up to it. Sanctification is growth up to such likeness to God in character as a human spirit is capable of attaining; not merely toward it, but up to it in its full moral glory; and by no process of growing can that result be attained in a human lifetime. Even negative sanctification, or deliverance from sin, is so great a work that he who best knows himself will not be the one to think it near.

Expectations of a speedy completion, and claims of completion already attained, are founded upon insufficient sense of the greatness of the work. Usually there is an inadequate definition of sin, according to which sin can easily be made to seem a thing of the past. Often, there is a shallow sense of sin, and often there is a quick and enthusiastic but undiscriminating appreciation of divine grace. Usually it is assumed that sinlessness is perfection. But sinlessness is not perfection; it is the indispensable condition for the attainment of perfection. When a soul has become sinless, then the movement toward the full perfection of a soul may go on more freely. A truer knowledge of divine realities not only tempers rash claims, but postpones our hopes. Doubtless God will sanctify his children as rapidly as he can, but even God cannot accomplish it without long time. It is a great work to sanctify the soul.

In fact, not even with death can sanctification end. Death is undoubtedly the most significant of all the crises in the soul's history, with the exception of regeneration, and it certainly brings in new elements that must be highly influential in the progress of the divine life. The new vision of God and of Christ must be mighty for good, and other strong helps may doubtless then be brought to bear upon the soul. Yet there is no evidence in Scripture, and no assurance elsewhere that death has power of cleansing upon the soul, or that then, in a moment, by special act of God, sanctification is completed. Still must sanctification be accomplished through experience. The sanctifying process is one to which an immortal soul is introduced, and it is a process of the soul's immortality. Death can only be a step in it, though an important step, and the process must continue in another world. The heavenly life is progressive. If the divine life ever comes to perfection, it will be in the ages to come.

But probably there is no such thing as bringing the divine life to such completion that no further progress shall be possible to it. The goal of sanctification is perfect goodness like that of God, and that goal lies far beyond deliverance from sin. Even if perfect goodness were reached, there would still open before the soul the living of the perfect life that then first is possible.

* From An Outline of Christian Theology, by William Newton Clark, D.D., Professor of Christian Theology in Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y. A concise and popular statement, in untechnical language, of the essential truths of Christianity. One of the most useful books of modern times for the unprofessional as well as the professional student of God's truth. Pp. 488; price $2.50; published by Charles Scribner's Sons, Fifth Avenue, New York.

A NEW SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOOK.

ROYAL HYMNAL

By Rev. ROBERT LOWRY and IRA D. SANKEY.

"We have never had such enthusiastic singing in our Sunday-school as we have had since its adoption."

Rev. CHAS. H. ALLEN, Pastor,

"Bethesda" Con'l Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

$30 per 100. Sample copy, post free, 25 cts.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs, S. S. and every good purpose. Books, Sheet Music, Octavos, Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments. New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free. FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

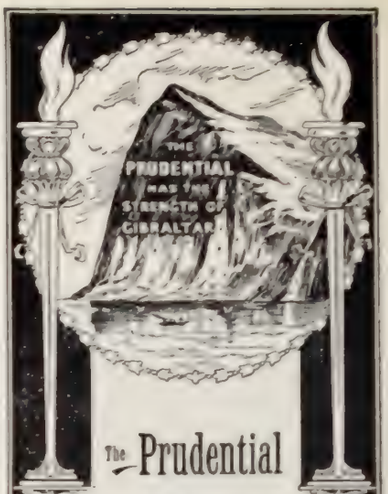
$18.00 a Week and expenses (and steady advance) to good hardworking men and women as salesmen. No canvassing. Permanent position. Also local workers and managers can make profitable engagement for part time. Give references. E. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

Alcolia Stove Free

Armour's Beef Extract and Vegetable Tablets.

Each Tablet a Meal.

Armour & Company, Chicago



The Prudential

issues an attractive form of Life Insurance, known as the participating policy on which the number of Annual Premiums to be paid are limited (as Five, Ten, Fifteen, or Twenty) while the Insurance continues for life.

"LIMITED PAYMENT LIFE"

This policy is profit-sharing, the cost is moderate, and all the rights of the policy-holder under it are absolutely protected both during life and after death.

Write to us, stating your age nearest birthday, and we will send specimen policy and full information free.

AMOUNTS $500 to $50,000.

THE PRUDENTIAL Insurance Co. of America

JOHN F. DRYDEN, Pres't. Home Office, NEWARK, N.J.

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES guaranteed to parties to introduce our goods. Permanent position. Address Mfg. Co., P.O. Box A, Cincinnati, O.

Exercise

fails of its purpose when respiration is retarded by a stiff and rigid corset. The benefits that accrue from healthful activity is enhanced many fold by a Ferris Good Sense Corset Waist. For the woman who plays golf, tennis, or rides a wheel, for the woman who loves good health and takes pride in her personal appearance there is no garment equal to

FERRIS' Good Sense Waists

If you would like to see how the Ferris Waist looks in all its forms, we will send you a book free, illustrated from life.

Ferris' Good Sense Corset Waists are sold by all leading retailers. Do not take substitutes. Ladies', $1.00 to $2.75; Misses', 50c. to $1; Children's, 25c. to 50c.

Made by THE FERRIS BROS. CO., 341 Broadway, New York.

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only Truss in existence that is worn with ease and comfort, night and day, and retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Comfortable Belts accommodate. They can be used after any operations. Our goods are not sold by agents or druggists. Send for free pamphlets to the Improved Elastic Truss Co., 768 Broadway, N. Y. (Established 17 years.)

Double Entry Book-Keeping

Approved System. Taught Thoroughly by Mail. Send for particulars.

HENRY VON DEYLEN, 314 Clifton Place BROOKLYN N. Y.

It Is a Certainty That Catarrh can be cured. You will believe it after using a sample of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Mailed free. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Blosser Building, Atlanta, Ga.

After-Supper Chats

A Word About Wife-Beaters—The Danger of Fire—Rich and Poor Brides, etc.

A ST. LOUIS judge who seems to be a survival of the Dark Ages, has just given a decision in wife-beating. Not content with excusing from punishment the particular specimen of unmanly brutality in his presence, the judge went a step farther, in effect, applauding the husband before him, and saying in plain words that some wives were so irritating and so given to nagging that a man could not restrain himself from giving them a blow of his hand or fist. "And," summed up the remarkable judge, "If no particular damage is done, I see no reason for punishment.

. . .

I HAD the curiosity to look up the report of this matter in a St. Louis daily paper, and found that the occasion which excited the husband to a personal act of violence toward his wife was her determination to send their three children to Sunday School. The father wished one child to go on an errand; the mother interfered, and desired the child to go to his Sunday School class. The resolution of both parties was firm, and neither would yield, but the man, by right of superior strength, prevailed, and struck his wife in the face; how often is not stated. The judge held that a man is the ruler of his family, and that when a woman marries she understands that her husband is to be the head of the house; he said he "knew a high-binder as soon as he saw her." I never heard that word before and do not know just what it may mean; but apparently it applies to a woman who dares to resist the will of her good man, whether he be good or bad in reality. The poor high-binder in the instance which has been reported in all the daily papers from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf, did not receive comfort from the court to which she applied for relief. Her children will scarcely respect her hereafter, and her husband will probably wax bolder than ever, now that a learned judge has proclaimed himself on his side. There is an old rhyme which says:

A woman, a dog, and a walnut tree,
The more you beat them, the better they be.

Wife-beaters in St. Louis may with impunity put that bit of nonsense to the test.

. . .

IN ALL soberness, let it be said that a decision of this sort, in any court of Christendom, turns back the hands on the clock of civilization. It is a very perilous thing to give license to the anger of rough and ill-taught men, and to allow them, without fear of subsequent penalty, to raise their hands against women; strength against weakness; force used to hurt and not to protect. For the class of husbands among which this thing is possible, belongs to that class which drinks the wages of the week on Saturday night and on Sunday morning transforms the home into a hell. Not the Christian gentleman, refined, tender, loving and unselfish, attacks his wife with fist or weapon, but the man already a brute, and worse than the primitive savage, by all that the nineteenth century saloon and beer shop can do to make savagery intenser.

. . .

WE SIT in our sweet-sheltered homes, with everything lovely around us, voices soft, tempers held in leash, gentleness regnant, and what do we know about the rough winds of sorrow which blow through the households of poverty and the misnamed home of the drunkard? If we would go, not in the spirit of criticism but in that of true sisterly friendship into such homes, we should learn something of the need which exists of Christ's own uplifting hand among the masses.

. . .

I, FOR ONE, hope to see the dawning of a day when there will be an end to all cruelty on the earth. When little defenceless children shall not be beaten at the caprice of their angry parents or teachers, when dumb animals shall not be put to pain and anguish either by heedless and wicked owners, or needlessly in the name of science. The sum of unnecessary suffering in this world cries to heaven, and the agonized strain of human plaint, or of tortured beast calls for mercy in the ear of God. When the better day breaks and shadows flee away, then shall there be surcease of needless suffering.

. . .

TOO MUCH power in the hands of the irresponsible and ignorant is always a source of misery. Only as people are well-taught and only as they are in sympathy with Christ, can they safely hold the reins of power.

. . .

WE HAVE had several dreadful fires lately in this great city, one of them in broad day burning down a great hotel, and causing a fearful loss of life, another occurring in the middle of the night, and resulting fatally to fourteen persons: the old, the middle-aged, the young together swept away by a frightful death.

Few of us, overtaken in sleep by the onslaught of the leaping flames and the pressure of the suffocating smoke, would remember what we would best do. Such precautions as the cool-headed and the stout-hearted and brave-handed take, some of us might be able to put in practice, but for the great majority, the dizzy way of the fire-escape, the going hand over hand down a rope, the stepping from sill to sill, even the descent, yielding to those who were bent on saving us, would be hard enough. Therefore, it behooves us to exercise great care that our homes do not take fire. Matches should be kept in fire-proof boxes. A lighted match should be guarded from loose papers and kindlings. People are amazingly careless about the disposition of half-burnt matches. Smokers should be incessantly watched and warned. Children should not be suffered to play with fire. Maids should be enjoined to use no kerosene in lighting their ranges. Everybody should be careful for the sake of everybody else.

. . .

THE pretty Vanderbilt bride, wrapped in furs and seated in a chair on the lawn watching the destruction of the stately country house, where she was spending her happy honeymoon, awakened our sympathy. But our compassion is aroused much more for the poor wife of the tenement who sees the devouring flames destroying her poor sticks of furniture and the children's clothes, not knowing where she is ever to get another chair or table, or a frock or jacket for her boy or girl. The contrast between the rich and the poor is very great in our period. It is a pleasant sign that the former are not indifferent to the latter. Flowers from the stately avenue weddings are sent downtown next day to sick beds, to hospitals, to asylums, to the cheer and the blessing of many lives. And our rich girls are our most earnest and self-denying and intelligent workers among the lowly.

. . .

HAZEL'S MOTHER. I am sure your little daughter will prove the very light of your life, and be the sweetest gift you ever had. Take a farm for her! Why, of course, you wouldn't, nor would her father.

. . .

KATHARINE W. I send my congratulations. But don't wait too long, if you can help it, you and your friend. Long engagements are perilous.

. . .

MARTIN S. Latin and Greek are less in vogue than once for educated men, and if you prefer to give your time to modern languages, nobody need criticize you. But a classical education has some advantages. For a business man's use, German, however, is likely to be of greater value than Greek.

Margaret E. Sangster

Gospel Work in Liberia

MISS MARY A. SHARP, the well-known American missionary at Monrovia, the capital of the Liberian Republic, writes acknowledging recent remittances sent to her through this paper for her work, and adds:

Not are these sums the only way you have helped, as a lady in Maysville, N. Y., through reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has taken the support of a boy in my school. Others have sent papers and periodicals that have been very acceptable. My hours are so occupied, that only after the children are all abed can I get time for reading and writing. "Many hands make light work;" but alas for the multitude of heathen hereabouts the hands are few. Mine is the only school for natives within many miles. In my church in Krootown (among the Kroo tribe) we have a continuous revival. The converts seem wonderfully taught and illuminated by the Holy Spirit. Their testimonies are clear and striking, and their lives show the Divine transformation. For "family prayers," they gather before light in the church and have a prayer-meeting, and the same at the close of the day. An evangelist who came here said that, in all her meeting, in the homeland among various classes, she never met with any who manifested so great an eagerness to hear the Word of God as do these Kroo converts.

Many are very anxious to have their children taught. The only successful way to accomplish much in this direction is to take them into mission homes, where they are not only free from the degrading influence and the gross superstition of heathenism, but where they learn English—which they do with astonishing rapidity. English school books (principally second-hand books from a school in Brooklyn), are used. After all, this is an era of "Good will to men."

In one Bible class are those who cannot read, nor do they know English. That is taught through an interpreter. Gray-haired men and women can be seen poring over A, B, C's, stopping now and then to ask of a letter, "What him name?"

I am grateful for the help you have given and the interest you have taken. So many could enter these fields, white for the harvest, and be so cordially welcomed by these asking for the light, but so very few do enter.

Yours sincerely and gratefully,

MARY A. SHARP.

Daybreak

BEYOND the far
Horizon bar
Lie realms of unknown story:
Where distant gleam
With mystic beam
Day-stars in chastened glory;
Their paling light
Fails on the sight,
No rays our pathways showing;
Yet signals are
From skies afar
Of lands with radiance glowing.

. . .

Beyond the ken
Of mortal men
Lie realms with time co-eval;
Though signals burn
We scarce discern
Those shadowed lights primeval;
'Twixt Doubt and Hope
We blindly grope,
Our day-stars yet revealing
Beyond the ken,
Beyond the bar,
Unseen of men,
Bright regions are Within God's own concealing.

—L. C. S.

Trial Package Free!

If any reader, suffering from rheumatism, will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 219 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

Nothing injurious in BROWN'S
Bronchial Troches
A great relief for coughs, hoarseness, throat and lung troubles.
John I. Brown & Son, Boston.

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 1 cents. forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 50 Spruce St., New York

Right Royal Endorsement

Meeting to Discuss Subject of Consumption Held in Historic Marlborough House, at Suggestion of Lord Salisbury

PRINCE OF WALES PRESIDED

Principles of the Famous Slocum System of Treatment, Upheld by Sir William Broadbent, Physician to the Royal Family

Never before, in the history of medical science, has a discovery received such emphatic and cordial endorsement, as has been accorded to Doctor T. A. Slocum, who has had the honor to give to the world the first and only cure for the curse of countless centuries,—Consumption, and which science has named in his honor, the Slocum System of Treatment.

America was first to honor her gifted son with endorsements from medical and scientific men, statesmen, the heads of universities, learned doctors of law and letters, the clergy, in fact from all the higher walks of life, came homage in the shape of grateful endorsement, and now, from across the sea, comes the cordial upholding of the principles of the Slocum System.

In historic Marlborough House, London, at a meeting recently held to discuss the subject of Consumption, the active principles, which are the underlying strength of the Slocum System, were emphatically endorsed by Sir William Broadbent, the Royal Physician, who further stated, what Doctor Slocum has contended from the very beginning of his observations and researches, that consumption is contagious and not necessarily hereditary. This meeting, of vital importance to the whole civilized world, was called at the suggestion of Lord Salisbury, and presided over by the Prince of Wales, and simply resolved itself into a ratification of the principles of a discovery American to the very core.—the well-known Slocum System of Treatment for Consumption and tenacious tendencies.

It has been a known fact among medical men for many years, that no one remedy on earth ever could cope with consumption and cure it. For centuries, efforts have been made to form a combination of remedies which would meet this enemy of life and health at every vulnerable point, and vanquish it, and not until Doctor Slocum crowned his years of study with success was this accomplished.

In the Slocum System of Treatment, Doctor Slocum has prepared a system that never fails. It furnishes a powerful antiseptic, that at once kills the germs and drives them forever from the lungs, throat and body; it stops the cough, does away with that fearful strain on lungs and heart, and eradicates the evil of mucous and catarrhal discharges; it introduces a fattening, strengthening food, and tissue-builder, which makes the wasted, tired lungs new, normal and perfect in every part, and it sends over the entire body a tonic influence which enriches the blood, perfects the circulation, stimulates the heart, vitalizes every weak spot, puts color in the cheeks, snap and sparkle in the eyes, and imparts courage, hope and vigorous vitality.

The Slocum System practically re-creates and makes anew, men, women and children debilitated and run down by Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Laryngitis, Grippe and after-effects, Pneumonia, Catarrh, Colds, Coughs, and all other consumptive and semi-consumptive conditions. In order that all humanity may benefit by his discovery, Doctor Slocum has agreed to send FREE to all readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the Four Preparations making up the Slocum System, who will send name and postoffice and express address to the Slocum Laboratories, 98 Pine Street, New York.

Write to the Doctor.

Write fully and freely to Doctor T. A. Slocum, 98 Pine Street, New York, and he will gladly give you the benefit of his years of experience and send you free, with full and complete directions for use, the Four Preparations of the Slocum System. Be sure to give full address and name, and say that you saw this offer in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The Slocum System is dispensed by chemists everywhere, in large, original packages, with full directions for treatment in any case.

RUBIFOAM

THE Delicious Dentifrice.

FREE SAMPLE consisting of two bottles—enough of "OUR FAVORITE" GOLD ENAMEL (Washable)

As brilliant and smooth as gold-leaf. Ready for use. A child can apply it. Shows no brushmarks. Can be washed without tarnishing. Gilds everything.

Also made in ALUMINUM SILVER.

Cerstendorfer Bros.,
NEW YORK, 42d Park Place. CHICAGO, 175d Randolph St.

The Hann Hammock

Hammock and swinging arm for in-door Rest and shade. Changed to any swinging or reclining position instantly. Arms adjust to any desired angle. Arms extended from walls. Side rails, made of heavy, fancy striped awning cloth, reinforced hand-engraved Pressed Brass Nos. 1 and 2, $2.50; No. 3, $2.75; No. 4, $3.00; No. 5, $3.25; No. 6, $3.50. Send measure of room we may suggest size. Send for booklet. Your money refunded if not satisfactory.

THE HANN MFG. CO.,
1311-1313 E. Long St.
Columbus, Ohio.

HARTMAN'S STEEL PICKET FENCE

Makes the Lawn Beautiful and adds to the attractiveness and value of the home. It's strong and durable. Will turn anything from the smallest to the largest animal. Ornamental Steel Posts without extra charge. 24 to 58 inches high, as you wish. Unequaled for Orchard, Lawns, Church, Cemetery, Farm, Poultry Fences. Private Lawn Gates. Catalogue FREE.

HARTMAN MFG. CO., Box 51, Ellwood City, Pa.
Room 71, 66 Broadway, New York City.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

are perfect in action. Over 40 years' experience counts the manufacturer. Get the genuine. No tacks required. To avoid imitations notice script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label.

$13.25 BUYS A $25.00 BICYCLE

Don't buy a bicycle before you write for our 1899 catalogue and read wheels for sale at one-half to one-third usual prices. VICTOR MANF'G CO. Dept. G 42, 205 and 207 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

O'Neill's

SIXTH AVENUE, . . .
20th to 21st Street, . .
. . . . . NEW YORK

Importers and Retailers

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Cloaks, Costumes, House-Furnishing Goods, Etc

SOME SPECIALLY ATTRACTIVE BARGAINS
Reserved for Our Mail-Order Customers!

WOMEN'S CHEVIOT SERGE SUITS with Fly Front, Walking Coat lined throughout with black Taffeta. The Skirt is Percaline-lined, full circular shape. These Suits are made and finished entirely by men tailors $9.98

WOMEN'S WASH SKIRTS. Linen Skirts, four yards wide and finished with deep hem. A great bargain at . . . $1.98

WHITE PIQUE SKIRTS, full circular shape, finished with three rows of insertion and deep hem $4.98

SUMMER SILKS. Black Satin Duchesse, 27 inches wide. Regular $2.50 quality $1.50

Black Peau de Soie, 22 inches wide. Regular $1.40 quality, $1.00

Samples of these or any other silks that you may require may be had upon application.

When you write mention "The Christian Herald."

H. O'NEILL & CO., Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK

ONE YEAR'S FREE TRIAL

WE WILL SHIP A CORNISH PIANO OR A CORNISH ORGAN ANYWHERE UPON THE DISTINCT UNDERSTANDING THAT IF IT IS NOT SATISFACTORY TO PURCHASER AFTER 12 MONTHS' USE WE WILL TAKE IT BACK AND REFUND PURCHASE MONEY AND FREIGHT CHARGES WITH 6% INTEREST ADDED.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS OF THE WORLD FAMOUS CORNISH PLAN

and for a complete description of the instruments made by us see our new Souvenir Catalogue for 1899, handsomely illustrated in colors. The most comprehensive musical catalogue in the trade. The frontispiece is a masterly reproduction in fac-simile of an interesting oil painting, designed and executed for us by an eminent artist, representing Saint Cecelia and the Angelic Choir." This beautiful catalogue is sent charges prepaid, and we also include our novel reference book, "The Heart of the People." Catalogue, Book and our latest Special Offers FREE.

PIANOS FROM $155

ORGANS FROM $25

FREE

SPECIAL a prompt response to this advertisement will entitle you to a discount of $1[illegible] on the list prices as named in our Catalogue, on any Cornish Piano or Organ. Please reply at once if you intend purchasing, as this discount applies only to a limited number.

REFERENCES: Any bank in Washington, N. J., and many thousand patrons in every part of the country. Mention this paper and write to-day.

CORNISH & CO., (Established nearly 30 years) WASHINGTON, NEW JERSEY.

PROFIT FOR MAKER ONLY.

No. 217—Canopy-Top Surrey, with double fenders. Price, complete, with curtains all around, storm apron, cushions, seats and pole or shafts, $65. Just as good as sells for $90.

We manufacture 110 styles of vehicles and 60 styles of harness and sell them to you direct. No matter where you live, we can please you and save you money. We can and will refer you to thousands of customers in every State in the Union. We manufacture everything we sell. We manufacture everything we sell, from the cheapest grade of work to the finest grade of work, guaranteeing every vehicle and every set of harness we sell. Our vehicles are made of the best selected materials throughout, by the most skilled workmen, and finished in the most elegant manner. Our harness are made of the best oak tanned leather, hand-stitched throughout, and are the most substantial harness made. We ship anywhere for examination before purchase is made. We allow 360 days' time on all work we sell. We are the only manufacturers who do this. We are the only manufacturers who sell to the consumer exclusively. When you buy a vehicle or harness from us you pay only the profit of the manufacturer.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS,

preferring to deal with you direct. No matter where you live, we can please you and save you money. We can and will refer you to thousands of customers in every State in the Union. We manufacture everything we sell. We manufacture everything we sell, from the cheapest grade of work to the finest grade of work, guaranteeing every vehicle and every set of harness we sell. Our vehicles are made of the best selected materials throughout, by the most skilled workmen, and finished in the most elegant manner. Our harness are made of the best oak tanned leather, hand-stitched throughout, and are the most substantial harness made. We ship anywhere for examination before purchase is made. We allow 360 days' time on all work we sell. We are the only manufacturers who do this. We are the only manufacturers who sell to the consumer exclusively. When you buy a vehicle or harness from us you pay only the profit of the manufacturer.

No. 130—Canopy-Top Surrey, with double fenders, full length curtains, storm apron, cushions, seats and pole or shafts, $65. Just as good as sells for $90.

style and the largest selection in the land. Large illustrated catalogue FREE.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MANFG. CO., W. B. Pratt, Secy, ELKHART, INDIANA.

BEAUTY PINS

Made from one piece GOLD plate wire. Handsomely engraved and beautifully finished. Used as Cuff, Ribbon or Waist Pins. The most attractive Spring Catch pin ever made. We will send a sample pin by mail, postage prepaid, at 10 cts. A set of three Pins for 25 cents. Money or stamps. Money back if not delighted with them. Send to-day.

Latest Popular Fad. A Perfect Safety Pin.

The Randolph Co., Jewelers, Dept. C. Providence, R. I.

LARKIN SOAPS AND PREMIUMS.—FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.

Morning Headache

is usually caused by retention of uric acid in the system. It can be traced to results of rheumatic, catarrhal or kidney troubles.

Tartarlithine...

gives immediate relief in these cases.

Dr. J. M. Walsh, St. Paul, Minn., says: "I gave Tartarlithine to a lady who had been suffering for two days with a severe headache caused by retention of uric acid, having been a sufferer from that complaint for several years. For the past two days her physician could not relieve her headache, and the Tartarlithine helped her very materially—at once."

Regular package $1.00.
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

Boys and Girls

SOLID GOLD PENS FREE.

Royal English Ink Powder

Imperial Ink Concern, 45 Adams St, Oak Park, Ill.

8000 BICYCLES

MODELS $8 to $10. Shopworn and second hand wheels good as new $3 to $10. 1899 Models $11 to $30. Great factory clearing sale. We want to appoint an agent, and will allow a liberal commission.

EARN A BICYCLE by securing us advance orders for 1899 models. We give one rider agent in each town FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.

E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO., CHICAGO, ILLS.

ASTIGMATISM POSITIVELY CURED OR MONEY REFUNDED

THE INESTIMABLE BLESSING OF SIGHT

AVOID SPECTACLES & EYEGLASSES, HEADACHE & SURGICAL OPERATION. ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ON THE EYE, MAILED FREE.

PAT. FEB 7, 1899.

THE IDEAL COMPANY, 239 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite WHITE BRONZE

NO MOSS GROWING. NO CRUMBLING. NO CRACKING.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

INGERSOLL PRINTERS, 10c.

10c. 15c. 25c. 25c.

ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BROTHER, Dept. 61, 67 Cortlandt St., N. Y. C.

HOW ABOUT THAT FENCE

you were going to build? Why, a fence that is equal in quality to the best on the market, direct to the farmer at wholesale rates. All intervenors—jobbers and middlemen or otherwise. Close wires can't sag. Prices low. Special prices and extra discounts to farmers.

ADVANCE FENCE CO., 1905 Old St., Peoria, Ill.

MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE

Sash Locks and Door Holders. Sample Sash Lock free for time stamp. Another good invention. Sells on sight. $10 a day. Write for terms.

BROHARD & CO., Dept. 11, Philadelphia, Pa.

COSTS AGENTS NOTHING

to start in business handling our new fast selling specialties and make big profits. Catalogue free.

G. VINING NOVELTY CO., 60 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

STARK BROS PAY CASH every WEEK if you sell STARK TREES. Outfit free. STARK NURSERY, LOUISIANA, MO., Rochport, Ill., Dansville, N.Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

VOLUME 22—NUMBER 23

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, JUNE 7, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

BARON DE STAAL EXPLAINING THE CZAR'S PROGRAMME TO THE PEACE CONGRESS

This photograph was taken expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by permission of the Netherlands Government and with consent of the Conference. It represents the opening session of the world's first great assemblage in the interest of Peace and Arbitration. The delegates are seated in the beautiful "Orange Hall" of the House in the Wood, at The Hague. It is the only picture taken of this particular episode, no other camera save that of our correspondent being allowed to pass the doors. The picture should become historical.

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

R. T. L., Tallassee, Ala. Where can I get one of the Russian Bibles?

Write to Agricultural Department, Washington, D. C.

M. T. W., Unionlevel, Va. In the Bible we are taught to "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Is the seed of the [illegible] the best method of children

Unquestionably. The child who receives, from a Christian parent or teacher, its first spiritual impressions, and grows [illegible] the successive stages of Christian development unconsciously. There are countless thousands who have grown to manhood and womanhood as true and devoted Christians, having become such at so early an age that they have no recollection of the event of their conversion. Characters developed on these spiritual lines are the sweetest of all and are living evangels of the truth throughout their lives, doing good to all who come into contact with them

N. L. T., Rockford, Va. 1. Will we know each other in heaven? 2. If we do not see a very dear friend there and know he is lost, will it not make us unhappy? 3. Will THE CHRISTIAN HERALD send sample copies on request? 4. Is it wrong to pray to be made happy?

1. All the evidences in Scripture lead to the conclusion that Christians will recognize their dear ones in the future life (see II. Sam. 12:23; Mark 9:4; Luke 16:23; I. Thes. 4:13-18, also 5:10). 2. It is a difficult question to answer. Dives, in torment, was concerned about the fate of his living brethren; but, on the other hand, we are distinctly assured that no sorrow shall enter heaven (Rev. 7:17). Our earthly views of happiness and those entertained in the next world will no doubt be radically different, so there is no proper basis of comparison. 3. Yes; send us the addresses to which you wish them mailed. 4. No, if it be the right sort of happiness that is meant—the happiness of serving God and [illegible] and of having loving and helpful relations toward our fellow men.

Old Subscriber, Ukiah, Calif. While traveling in northern California in the remote little Round Valley, I was pleased to find THE CHRISTIAN HERALD taken and appreciated by families there. An Indian reservation is located in the northern part of the valley. It has a boarding-school building with many modern improvements, and some teachers from Carlisle. A resident minister preaches to them, and sustains an interesting Sabbath School. The Indians seemed quiet and are peaceably tilling the lands which have been allotted them. The little village of Covelo is the centre of a prosperous settlement of white people. It has two churches. The Presbyterian was the pioneer church and has been mostly built and sustained by a persevering ladies' aid society, which recently celebrated its sixteenth anniversary. With the aid of the Home Missionary Board loaning them money without interest, they have built and sustained a church and a modest parsonage, and now have a church property free of debt. The present pastor, Rev. A. I. Compton and wife are doing a good work there.

From distant Armenia—the land of massacre, persecution and famine—comes this letter, written by a native pastor:

KHENOUR, Erzroom, Turkey, April 25, 1899.

Dr. Louis Klopsch, New York.

MY DEAR SIR:—More than two months have passed since I have not received the most lovely paper of mine, that is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I can be without bread; but I cannot be without THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Dr. Talmage's writings are my inspirations. I cannot part with the paper; it is my close partner here in time and eternity. Please continue your compliments. You cannot know what I do, but afterwards you shall know.

MATTIOS HOVINIAN.

Pastor Hovinian's name has been placed on our subscription list and he will receive the paper for another year.

J. P. J., New Gloucester, Me. Some fifty years ago or more, as near as I can recollect, while down upon one of the wharves of Boston, I picked up a scrap of paper that was flying about my feet. The enclosed lines attracted my attention, and thinking them very beautiful, I committed them to memory and threw the scrap of paper away. I have penned them from memory after all these years, but I believe that they are correct. Can you, or some of the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD tell me the poem? How I should like to have it!

You [illegible]
A pale-browed band of Jewish matrons stood
Is [illegible]
Yet one amid that throng appeared of noble mein,
A being strangely bright and fair,
[illegible]
And the warm flush of maiden beauty gone.

I. S. S. Are professors [illegible] of religion who strenuously oppose baptism by water, living up to their privileges? 2. Was Peter's denial of his Lord typical of Christian conduct in the present day?

1. We suppose that such professors honestly believe that Christ did not intend the ordinance to be perpetual. We think they are mistaken; but if they really believe it they are bound to act on their belief. There is no privilege about it that we can see. People usually regard it as a duty. Those who practice infant baptism do it as an act of consecration; those who practice adult baptism do it as a mode of public confession of Christ, which typifies the cleansing and the new birth wrought by the Holy Spirit. 2. Peter's denial was simply due to a lack of courage on his part. It was not intended as a type of anything. Every Christian, in all times, who hides his connection with Christ, resembles him to a greater or less extent.

Subscriber, Coatesville, Mo. 1. Did Jesus baptize as stated in John 3:22, or was it his disciples, as stated in John 4:2? 2. Did Paul ever go to Spain? 3. Does the declaration in I. John 1:8 imply that there are none who lead sinless lives?

1. As the latter passage is a definite statement, we must conclude that Jesus did not baptize. The former passage must be under-

[illegible] orders, the baptism would be considered as [illegible] appears to contradict it. He held the same [illegible] one that Christ imparted could not sin, but the fleshly nature resisted it and did sin.

Subscriber, Summit, N. J. 1. What proof have we that our prayers will be answered, when it is obvious that some are absolutely ignored? 2. [illegible] should they be lost, and, if saved, why do we [illegible] or spiritual? 5. Will the future punishment be natural or spiritual? 6. Is God self-created or [illegible] in that of which we cannot conceive? I sent these questions more than a month ago, but no answer was published.

[illegible] answer or withhold the answer to our prayers, just as a human father, howsoever much he [illegible] prayers are ignored. 2. We know nothing more than the Bible states. 3. We "bother" about them because the [illegible] the best help any man can have. It lifts him out of sin and fits him for this life and for heaven. In short, it brings him eternal life, and we are anxious that he should have it. 4. We [illegible]

John T. B., Newburg, N. Y. I wish to avail [illegible] By all means sign the names yourself. Many of our subscribers are availing themselves of this exceptional opportunity to introduce "The Christian Herald" to their friends, and are thus helping us to carry out our object to give "The Christian Herald" the widest possible circulation. Remember that we shall be glad to supply you free of charge with as many coupons as you may require. One subscriber has undertaken to send us two hundred subscriptions under this unprecedented proposition.

H. W. K., Kewashum, Wis. In what sense can it be said that Christ learned obedience by suffering (Heb. 2:10)?

[illegible] sense as in Heb. 2:18 he is said to have been qualified for succoring the tempted [illegible]

J. M., Birdsboro, Pa. 1. Who was that [illegible] when he spoke (John 10:16) of "other sheep not of this fold?" 3. Would it be in accord with the divine plan for [illegible]

1. We [illegible] himself. If you turn to John 21:20, 24, you will see that he was accustomed to speak of himself in the third per[illegible] "The [illegible] ed" of the twentieth verse is plainly stated in the twenty-fourth verse to be [illegible] things." 2. Various suggestions have been made. One is that he referred to the Gentiles, and that appears most probable. Another, somewhat fanciful, is that he meant inhabitants of other worlds. 3. It would be rather in accord with the human than the divine plan. Such methods of raising money are unsatisfactory and ought not to be needed. Perhaps they are better than the burden of debt, but that is not saying much in their favor.

[illegible] ble that a Christian would open a letter entrusted to him and addressed to another person? If such a person should be converted, should he or she not confess this act? Is there not a penalty for opening other people's [illegible]

To tamper with the mails in transit, or to open a letter addressed to another before it has been delivered to the proper owner, is an offence punishable by statute. Apart from its illegality, it is certainly an unchristian thing to do, and would only be excusable if done in a great exigency, where a matter of life and death depended upon the act. No honorable person would knowingly tamper with another's mail, and if he did so even accidentally, would hasten to apologize.

New Reader, Chelsea, Ind. Ter. We see nothing wrong in what you have stated in your letter.

A Subscriber, Edgerton, Mo. We know nothing about it, but would warn you against humbugs.

H. A. R. F., Keesville, N. Y. All the letters are pronounced as written except "c," which is silent.

F. G., Gravity, Ia. The book can be gotten from Hunt & Eaton, New York, publishers, or Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati.

D. S., Highpoint, Ga. We know nothing about the concern and would advise you to be careful in dealing with strangers.

Subscriber, Warren, Vt. Queen Victoria's name under such circumstances would be Mrs. Wettin, and Emperor William's would be Hohenzollern.

Anxious wife, Plymouth, Mass. We cannot advise you in the matter. You should consult your pastor, and if that is not satisfactory, see a reputable lawyer.

L. J. P., Hyland, N. Y. We never heard of any volunteers being rejected for the reason mentioned in your letter although there may have been instances outside of our knowledge.

Gertrude De F., Sandy Lake, Pa. The man is eulogized for his good qualities. There are none, unfortunately, who are wholly free from blemish of some sort, but patriotism overlooks minor faults.

"One of His Own," Massillon, O. Christian work at home, in Sunday School and missions. The further development will come through your church, and your pastor can best advise as to that.

E. T. H., Lakeport, Ia. He was the head of a committee of public safety in 1774—a patriotic body appointed for devising ways and means for the preservation of the lives and property of the people.

TRANSFERRING THE AMERICAN SITE AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION

This photograph, taken specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, deals with an interesting incident. On May 3, M. Picard, Commissioner General of the Exposition, transferred to the American representatives the site on the Quai D'Orsay, upon which the United States National Building will be erected. Both M. Picard and Commissioner Peck made informal speeches, after which the American flag was hoisted amid cheers. The figures in the group are: 1. M. Picard; 2. Mr. Ferdinand W. Peck, U. S. Commissioner; surrounding them are Associate Commissioner Gen. Woodward; Architect Coolidge; Col. Kerr, Military Attache; Mr. McGibbon; Arthur Lynch, and French Exposition officials. The designs for the American buildings, it is announced, have been drawn up by M. Morin-Goustraux and Mr. Coolidge, and approved by Mr. Peck. The principal U. S. building will be eighty-two feet front, ninety-four feet deep, surmounted by a dome at an altitude of 130 feet, with an eagle at its apex. The entrance will be a triumphal arch with the U. S. Coat-of-Arms, and above it a figure of "Liberty in the Chariot of Progress." On the walls will be figures representing all the States of the Union. The dome will be a net-work of electrical stars lighted at night in red, white and blue. In front of the entrance there will be a heroic figure of Washington.

Subscribers and others continue to write to us with information of the ownership of some very rare, old Bibles. Mrs. Susan R. Glazier, North Leverett, Mass., writes that she is the possessor of a metrical version of "the Psalms of David," compiled in 1709, and printed by David Niven in 1785.

Mr. J. D. Miller, Newton Hamilton, Pa. writes:

I have in my possession a German Bible (which I inherited from my father), printed in Lubigen, Germany, in 1730. Its weight is twenty-six and

: : : Pioneer Missionary Work in South-Eastern Africa : : :

Dr. and Mrs. William L. Thompson's Labors for the Salvation of the Souls and the Health of the Bodies of the Rhodesian Natives

AN AWKWARD OBSTACLE ON THE NEW RAILROAD

DR. AND MRS. WILLIAM L. THOMPSON

CAUGHT IN A SOUTH AFRICAN FLOOD

GRAPHIC stories of missionary work in South-eastern Africa are told by Dr. Wm. L. Thompson and his devoted wife, who have just arrived in their native land for a brief period of rest and recuperation. Dr. Thompson is a Medical Missionary who has been laboring under the auspices of the American Board in Rhodesia. He is a native of Oberlin, O., where he graduated in 1886, and then came to New York for a medical education. Under the guidance of that devoted helper of medical missionaries, Dr. Geo. D. Dowkontt, the young man successfully pursued his studies and graduated with honor in 1889. From that time until 1890, when he sailed for Africa, he worked in the dispensaries in New York and Newark, N. J., gaining experience in the art of healing and administering to the needs of the sick poor.

On his arrival at Beira, on the South-eastern coast of the Dark Continent, Dr. Thompson and Mr. Wilder, with a number of Zulu helpers, traveled inland about 250 miles to a point within British territory, just beyond the Portuguese frontier, where land was found suitable for a mission station. Their selection was approved, and as soon as the necessary arrangements were completed, Dr. Thompson settled there. Happily he did not go out alone. During the time that he spent in Natal while the preparations for his settlement were in progress he made the acquaintance of Miss Mary McCormack, of Elgin, Ill., who had been laboring for two years in that part of Africa, under the auspices of the American Board. Their common devotion to the great work of evangelizing the heathen drew the young people together, and when Dr. Thompson set out for his pioneer station he had the happiness of taking with him a wife who was in full sympathy with his work and specially qualified to help him in it.

The people among whom the station was planted were veritable heathen. Their dialect was part of the great Bantu tongue, but most of them understood Zulu, their country having been overrun by that warlike people before the British forced them to remain within their own borders. Both Dr. and Mrs. Thompson were thus able to make themselves understood. They were, however, some time in making friends with their new neighbors. The women especially were shy and reserved, but the uniform kindness and friendliness of the newcomers eventually won their way and Mrs. Thompson was allowed to visit them in their kraals. They found, as other missionaries in Africa have learned, that it is less by preaching and teaching that the first steps in gaining the confidence of the natives are won, than by the kindly Christian life and ready helpfulness that comes from the spirit of Christ in the consecrated heart. Before the missionaries left their station for their visit to America they had a church of thirty members and a regular congregation, in which there were many others ready and eager to make profession of faith in Christ, but were restrained by the missionaries until they give proof of their steadfastness and clear apprehension of the truths of the Gospel. Besides this, they have a school in which there are over one hundred pupils, many of whom show marked intelligence.

THE BEGINNING OF A CHURCH BUILDING

PRIMITIVE TRAVELING

Dr. Thompson has found that his medical skill has been of great service to his work as a missionary. Until recently there was no other physician within one hundred and fifty miles of this station. The only resource of a native who fell sick, was the witch-doctors, with their hideous and ghastly enchantments. It is astonishing that these men, in spite of their impotency in case of sickness, have gained the confidence of the superstitious people. So firmly have they done so that Dr. Thompson has learned that, in more than one instance, men who have been persuaded by their friends to become his patients, have neglected to take his remedies and have gone secretly to consult the witch-doctor. But with the increase of education and the manifest good results of the American doctor's treatment, this distrust in him is vanishing and he finds his practice rapidly increasing. He badly needs, however, a suitable building in which to house his patients. The temporary hospital he has built is neither wind nor rain-proof and thus his treatment does not have a fair chance of effecting a cure. Beside this he badly needs a horse. There have been calls for his services from places sixty miles from his station, and when he is unable to borrow a horse from some friendly Boer he is obliged to walk, thus losing precious time.

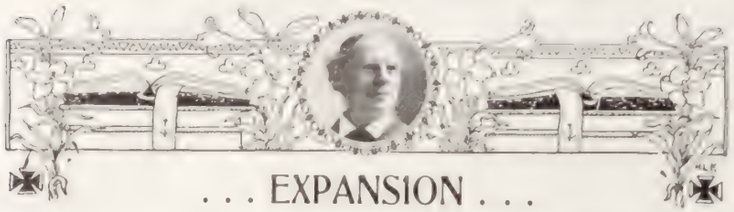
Among the patients the doctor has treated, one case is especially interesting. It was that of a woman who was brought to the station by her brother. Her husband was dead, her only son had gone to Johannesburg and had held no communication with his mother since his departure and she was alone in the world, save for this brother whose fraternal affection was pathetic. They had walked twenty miles to consult the doctor about a painful swelling from which the woman suffered which incapacitated her for work. Dr. Thompson speedily diagnosed the case as one of tumor. It was early in his settlement, before the shed which now does duty as a hospital was erected. The necessary operation had consequently to be performed in the open air. The only semblance of privacy was the shadow of the hut which fell on the patient as she lay on the ground. The operation, however, was successful. The woman's brother stayed with her and waited upon her, after she recovered consciousness. They remained a few days while the wound healed and then together set out to walk the long journey back to their home. Dr. Thompson was concerned about the woman taking the journey so soon after her suffering, but the brother said they had left his children alone in the kraal and they might starve if no one was there to attend to them. To Dr. Thompson's delight, the man returned to the station in a few weeks reporting that his sister was quite well. He brought a goat as a thanks-offering for the cure. The missionary was still more pleased some months afterward when on one of his journeys,, he saw his patient and her brother come into a meeting that he was holding, which happened to be within a few miles of her home. She listened intently to the preaching and after the service, she went to the missionary to express her obligation to him.

As in other lands, the missionaries have learned the value of native help. Two natives who have become teachers have proved remarkably useful. Nganggeni, the elder of the two, first heard the Gospel from some of the missionary party while on the way to the station, but he knew that his relatives would be very angry with him if he deserted the old religion, so he resolved to have nothing to do with the white man's faith. Still, the story of Christ seemed very wonderful and beautiful to him. After a time he came to the station and asked for work. In reality he wanted to hear more but thought that by simply working for money he could learn all about the new religion without committing himself. It was not long, however, before he became an earnest believer and has proved, like his comrade Zeita, a successful teacher.

THE NATIVE PALANQUIN AND BEARERS

SCENE IN A NATIVE VILLAGE IN RHODESIA

· THE · METROPOLITAN · PULPIT ·



. . . EXPANSION . . .

A Sermon by The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Genesis 28: 14, ...

Thou shalt spread abroad to the east and to the west

SINCE the Americano-Hispanic war is concluded, and the United States ambassador is on the way to Madrid, and the Spanish ambassador is on the way to Washington, the people of our country are divided into expansionists and anti-expansionists. From a different standpoint than that usually taken, I discuss this all-absorbing theme. I leave the political aspect of this subject to statesmen and warriors, and pray Almighty God that they may be enabled rightly to settle the question whether the islands in controversy shall be finally annexed, or held under protectorate, or resigned to themselves, while I call attention to the fact that a campaign of moral and religious expansion ought to be immediately opened on widest and grandest scale.

At the close of this war God has put into the hands of this country the key to the world's redemption. Heretofore the religious movement in pagan lands had to precede the educational. After in China and India and the islands of the sea the missionaries have labored over fifty or seventy-five years the printing-press and the secular school came in. Now, to better advantage than ever before, religious and secular enlightenment may go side by side, and so the work be accomplished in short time and more thoroughly. Starting with the fact that in Cuba and Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands at least three-fourths of the people can neither read nor write, what an opportunity for school and printing-press! Within five years every man in those islands may be taught to read not only the Bible but the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States and the biography of George Washington and of Abraham Lincoln.

It seems to me that the Government of the United States ought by vote of Congress afford common schools and printing-presses to those benighted regions. Our national legislature by one vote appropriated fifty million dollars to give bread and medicine to Cuba. Why not by a similar generosity give fifty million dollars for feeding and healing the minds and souls of those ignorant and besotted archipelagoes. In the name of God, I nominate a school for every neighborhood of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. As soon as the gavel falls at twelve o'clock of next December 4th on the table of Senate and House of Representatives, and the roll has been called and the preliminaries observed, let some member of our national legislature, with mind and soul and voice strong enough to be heard not only through those halls, but through Christendom, propose a measure for the mental and moral disenthrailment of the islands in controversy.

What has made American civilization the highest civilization the world has ever seen? Next to the Bible and the church, schools, common schools, schools reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from British America to Gulf of Mexico. Five years under such educational advantage and this whole subject that keeps our public men agitated, some of them to frothing at the mouth, will settle itself. Give those islands readers, spellers, arithmetics, histories, blackboards, maps, geographies, globes. Let the State Legislatures at their next meeting, some of them assembling in early autumn, take parts of those islands under their especial educational patronage. What is needed is State and national action in this matter of schools.

Then let the editorial associations of the United States, as many of such organizations as there are States, resolve at the next convocation to establish in every region of those islands a printing-press, to be supported by people of this country until it can become self-supporting. Each of these State editorial associations sending out to those islands at least one editor and two reporters and enough typesetters, down will go the ignorance and superstition of those islands as certainly as the Spanish fleet under Cervera sank under the pounding of our American battleships, and into their every port will go intelligence and love of free institutions as certainly as into the harbor of Manila went Admiral Dewey on that famous night when he was not expected. Hoe's printing-press! Nothing can stand before its bombardment. Editors of American newspapers and publishers of American books! Take the ordination for such a magnificent service. Eloquence on yonder Capitol Hill cannot meet the exigency. Epigrams of political platforms or in State Legislatures will not hasten the desired consummation one week or one hour or one moment.

When Cubans and Porto Ricans and Filipinos see the morning and evening newspapers thrown into the doorways and hawked along the streets of Havana and Santiago and Manila, those who cannot read by the force of curiosity will learn to read, so that they may know what information is being scattered; and that which may be missionary effort at the start, and carried on by Americans sent forth to do the work, will soon be done by educated natives. Porto Rican editors! Porto Rican reporters! Porto Rican typesetters! Porto Rican publishers! It was a great mercy to take those islands from under the heels of despotism, but it will be a mightier mercy to emancipate them from ignorance and degradation. The expansion of the knowledge and intellectual qualification of all those islandy regions is the desire of all intelligent Americans. Awake all you schools and colleges and universities and printing-presses to your opportunity!

Still further here is a wide-open door for Christianity. First of all, we have the attention of those people. The heathen nations are for the most part soporific. The American missionaries heretofore had great difficulty in getting heathendom to listen. They excited some comment by their attire, so different was the parting of the hair and the shape of the hat and the cut of the coat and the formation of the shoe of the evangelizers; but the questions constantly arose in regard to the missionary: "Who is he?" "What is he here for?" And then the interrogator would relax into the previous stupid indifference. But that condition of things [illegible] The guns of our American navy have awakened those populations. They do not ask who we are. They have found out. They are now listening to what American civilization and our Christian religion have to say on any subject. Now is the time while their ears and eyes are wide open, to tell them of the rescuing and salvable and inspiriting power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world. The steam printing-press which secular education plants there may be used and will be used to print religious newspapers and tracts and sermons and mighty discussions of questions temporal and eternal.

The comfortable homes of those populations, when Christianized, standing side by side with the degraded huts of those who remain pagans, will be revolutionary for good. The Porto Rican and the Filipino will come out from his uncleansed, and low-roofed, and uninviting kennel, and say to his neighbor of beautiful household: "Why cannot I have things as you have them?" And when he finds that it is the Bible, with its teachings on family life and personal purity and exalted principle, and the church of God that proposes the rectification of all evil and the implantation of all good, he will cry out: "Give me the Bible, and the church, and the earthly alleviations, and the eternal hope which have wrought for you such transfiguration."

Now, church of God; now, all Christian philanthropists, is your opportunity! Nothing like it has occurred since Christ came. Perhaps there may be nothing like it till his Second Coming. Here is a definiteness of aim that is most helpful and inspiring. The millions of dollars given for the redemption of the world and the thousands of glorious missionaries who have as volunteers gone forth among barbaric nations, were given and enlisted under a great and immeasurable idea; but when they come to add to the great and immeasurable idea the idea of definiteness we will infinitely augment the work. More than three hundred million of heathen in India, more than three hundred million of people in China, and more millions of heathen than can be guessed outside of those countries, sometimes stagger and confound and defeat our faith; but here in these islands of present controversy we can farm out the work among the churches, and in five years, under the blessing of God, not only fit the people for the right of suffrage, but prepare them for usefulness and heaven. The difference between the general idea of the world's evangelization and some particularized field of evangelization is the difference between the improvement of agriculture among all nations and the improvement of seventy-five acres put under one's especial care and industry. By all means let the general work go on; but here is the specific field for religious concentration and development. This is not chimerical or impractical. I read this morning that the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Church has already begun the work at San Juan, Utuado and Albonito, and all denominations of Christians, in six months, will be in those islandy fields, and we all need with our prayers and contributions to cheer them on to take for God and righteousness those regions which our navy has captured from Spanish perfidy.

At last [illegible] the Americo-Spanish war cost us three hundred million dollars. It would not cost half of that to proclaim and carry on and consummate a holy war that will rescue those [illegible] When [illegible] will [illegible] der the one-starred, blood-striped banner of Immanuel? Cuba and Porto Rico and the Philippines [illegible] and take the round world for God. We need a new evangelical alliance organized for this one purpose. In all denominations [illegible] hearts and who have been thoroughly enough converted to join in such an advanced movement; men who, putting aside all minor differences of opinion, "believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son," and who would march shoulder to shoulder in such a Gospel campaign. The result would be that those islands, after such a scene of gospelization, would assort themselves into denominations to suit themselves, and some would be sprinkled in holy baptism, and others would be immersed in those warm rivers, and some would worship in religious assemblage silent as the Quaker meeting-house, and others would have as many jubilant ejaculations as a [illegible] those who preached would be gowned and surpliced for the work, and others would stand in citizen's apparel or in their shirt-sleeves preaching that Gospel which is to save the world.

Mark you well that statesmanship, however grand it is, and wise men of the world, however noble, cannot do this work. Mere secular education does not moralize. Some of the most thoroughly educated men in all the world have been the worst men. Quicken a man's intellect, while at the same time you do not make his morals good, and you only augment his power for evil. Geography and mathematics and metaphysics and philosophy will never qualify a people to govern themselves. A corrupt printing-press is worse than no printing-press at all, but let loose an open Bible upon those islands, and let the apocalyptic angel once fly over them, and you will prepare them to become either colonies of the United States government, or, as I hope will be the case, independent republics.

God did not exhaust himself when he built this nation. Those islands will yet have their Thomas Jeffersons, qualified to write for them Declarations of Independence; and George Washingtons, capable of achieving their liberties; and Abraham Lincolns, strong enough to emancipate their serfdoms; and Longfellows and Bryants, capable of putting their hills and their rivers and their landscapes into poems; and their Bancrofts and Prescotts, to make their histories; and their Irvings, to write their Sketch Books; and their Charles O'Connells and Rufus Choates, to plead in their court rooms; and their Daniel Websters and John J. Crittendens, to move their senates.

The day cometh—hear it all ye who have no hope for those islands of bedwarfed and diseased illiterates—the day cometh when those regions will have a Christian civilization equal to that which this country now enjoys, while I hope by that time this country will be as superior to what it now is, as to-day Washington and New York are better than Manila and Santiago. Do you see by this process of Gospelized intelligence, those archipelagoes will as a nation be protected from the two woes prophesied in regard to this country, the one woe prophesied by the expansionists, and the other woe prophesied by the anti-expansionists? It is said by those who would have us take all we can lay our hands on as a nation, that unless we enter the door now open for the enlargement of our national domain, we will decline the mission which God, in his providence, has assigned us. But surely no woe will come upon us, or upon them, if we Christianize them as we now have the opportunity of doing. The political technicalities are nothing as compared with the importance of this movement. I implore all political expansionists to augment us in this work of moral and religious expansion, for unless those islands are moralized and elevated in intelligence and habits, we do not want them, and their annexation would be

... What Think Ye of Christ? ...

A FEW months ago, at a Public Meeting held in New York City, it was intimated that the leading men in our National Government, and in Army and Navy Circles, were either unbelievers in Christianity, or at least not in cordial sympathy with the faith and hope that inspire Christian hearts. This naturally seemed incredible, and in order to ascertain accurately to what extent the assertion was founded on fact, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD caused a careful canvass to be made among the Leading Men of the Nation, and we are now ready to submit the result to our readers and to the world.

IN OUR NEXT ISSUE we shall publish a large number of signed articles, from the Foremost Americans of this Age, the whole constituting one of the Most Notable contributions to Christian Testimony ever published. Soon after its appearance in these pages, we shall republish it in its entirety in pamphlet form, and a Million Copies will be issued at such a nominal figure as to insure for them practically gratuitous distribution. Every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and all who are interested in the Great Battle between Faith and Infidelity, should without fail secure and preserve a copy of this very remarkable collection of Christian Testimony, which has been gathered with the greatest care and only after extraordinary labor. It is a presentation of this absorbing subject which will be read with the keenest interest and universally appreciated.

political damnation. On the other hand, I implore all anti-expansionists to take a hand in the Gospelization of Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. The only way to prepare them to take care of themselves is to give them the Ten Commandments that were published on Mount Sinai, and let them hear the groan of sacrifice that was breathed out on the heights of Golgotha. What they most want is the Gospel, the pure Gospel, the omnipotent Gospel, the Gospel that helps heal the wounds of the body, and irradiates the darkness of the mind, and achieves the ransom of the soul.

But on this platform the so-called expansionists and so-called anti-expansionists will yet stand side by side. Though I am not a prophet, or the son of a prophet, within five years, if this religio-educational work is properly attended to, there will be a Cuban republic, a Porto Rican republic and a Philippine republic, none of them on a large scale; but they will all have their schools and printing-presses and evangelical churches, their presidents, their senates and house of representatives, their mayors and their constabularies; and as good order will be observed in their cities as now reigns on Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, or Broadway, New York.

Christ has started for the conquest of the nations, and nothing on earth or in hell can stop it. The continents are rapidly rolling into his dominion, and why not these islands, which for the most part are only fragments broken off from continents, the interval lands, having been sunk by earthquakes, allowing the ocean to take mastery over them? Each mother-continent has around it a whole family of little continents. If the continents are being so rapidly evangelized, why not the islands? If America, why not Cuba and the Bahamas? If Asia, why not the Philippines and the Moluccas? If Europe, why not the Azores and the Orkneys? If Africa, why not Madagascar and St. Helena? The same power that broke them off the mainland, can lift them into evangelization.

In the old Book, which has become a new Book by reason of modern discoveries, especial attention is called to the Islands. "Declare the Lord's praise in the islands," commands Isaiah. "Let the multitudes of the islands be glad thereof," says the Psalmist. "Hear it, and declare it to the islands afar off," exclaims Jeremiah. You see from this the islands are not to be neglected. Perhaps they are the Lord's favorites, as in households if there is any favoritism at all it is for the weakest. They may not be able to marshall large armies, or to send out navies to sweep the sea, but better than that, they have the chariots of heaven on their side and the drawn swords of the Almighty. I have as much faith in the salvation of the smallest island of the Falklands, of the Canaries, of the Ladrones, of the Carolines, of the Fijis, of the Barbadoes, of the Cape Verdes, of the Society Islands, as I have in the salvation of America.

I believe the United States Government will last as long as the world lasts. I believe the fires of the judgment day will leap on the domes of our State and national capitals while yet they are in their full power. I believe the last earthquake will put its explosion under our national foundations while yet they stand firm. I believe that republican and democratic form of government will be the universal form of government for all nations when they have been evangelized, for then the nations will be capable of self-government and will have demanded and secured that right. It will be either that or a theocracy, which will be the direct government of Christ in his personal reign on earth, as many Bible students believe. Yet that jubilant expectation is founded not on the skill of human statesmanship or human legislation, but upon the belief that this nation will submit to divine guidance, and obey the divine law, and carry out its divinely-imposed mission. But if we defy the God of nations, our doom is fixed.

It required the pen of an Edward Gibbon, through four great volumes of more than five hundred pages each, to tell the story of The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, concluding his monumental work with the words: "It was among the ruins of the capitol that I first conceived the idea of a work which has amused and exercised near twenty years of my life, and which, however inadequate to my own wishes, I finally deliver to the curiosity and candor of the public." What! the Roman empire dead. Did she lack warriors? No. Behold her Pompey and her Julius Cæsar. Did she lack lawmakers and law-givers? No. Think of the masters of Roman jurisprudence, our American attorneys to-day quoting those laws in our court rooms more than fifteen centuries after they were enacted. In poetry did she not have her Virgil and Ovid? In history did she not have her Sallust and her Livy? In eloquence did she not have her Scipio and Cicero? In satire did she not have a Juvenal and a Horace? What pens were wielded by her Cato, and her Terence, and her Pliny! All nations heard the cry of her war eagles, the voices of her oratory, and the chime of her cantos. But the day of judgment came for that nation, and Hannibal crossed the Apennines, and the Goths and Vandals swooped, and the Carthegenian fleet assailed, and Numidian horsemen galloped, and nations combined, and Rome sank. The tourist now on the banks of the Tiber sees the ruins of her Forum, the ruins of her Coliseum, the ruins of her Art, the ruins of her Aqueducts, the ruins of her Catacombs, the ruins of her palaces.

If our nation forgets its duty to other nations and practices injustice against other people, however insignificant, it will not take another Edward Gibbon twenty years, and through four great volumes, to tell the story of the Decline and Fall of American Institutions.

A EUROPEAN FRONTIER WHERE FOUR COUNTRIES MEET

By so much as our opportunities have been greater than any nation that ever lived, and the mission to which she has been ordained is more stupendous than any bestowed by the Almighty upon any people, if we forget our God and enact wickedness our overthrow will be quicker and more tremendous, and yonder Capitoline hill with its architectural magnificence will become a heap of gigantic ruins, to be visited by the people of other times and other nations, who will read in letters of crushed and crumbled marble that which David wrote many hundred years ago upon parchment: "The way of the wicked he turneth upside down."

We concluded a few days ago the annual decoration of Northern and Southern graves. Three years ago, at this season, in memorial sermon I proposed the twisting of two garlands, one to be put upon the grave of the Northern soldier, and the other to be put on the grave of the Southern soldier; but this year we need three garlands, the third to be put upon the graves of those who fell in this Americo-Hispanic conflict. The third garland needs to be quite as fragrant and as radiant as the other two. These last heroes braved more than bayonets and bombshell; they braved the pestiferous breath of the tropics—whole battalions, whole regiments, whole brigades, whole armies of deathful malaria. They confronted those oppositions of the torrid climes which no sword can pierce, no agility climb, no stratagem flank, no torpedo explode, no courage conquer. Under the awful charge of visible and invisible hosts about six thousand men went down, some to instant death, and others through lingering pangs in hospital.

If in this third wreath you twist the crimson rose, suggestive of sanguinary sacrifice, and the white calla lily, suggestive of glorious resurrection, put in also a few forget-me-nots, suggestive of remembrance, and a few passion flowers, suggestive of the love that mourns the slain, and a few heliotropes, suggestive of the fragrance of their memory. Then let the night's dew put the tears into the blue eyes of the violets, and all the soldiers' cemeteries be so many censers burning incense before the throne of that God who has been the friend of this nation from the time of Lexington to the time of San Juan Hill, from the guns of the United States warships Constitution and Constellation, at the beginning of this century, to the guns of the United States warships Olympia, Oregon, Brooklyn, and other loaded thunders at the close of the nineteenth century.

Remember here and now that those brave boys opened up the way for a kind of expansion we all believe in. They swung open the gates for the speedy Gospelization of islands stupid with the superstition of ages. They cleared the way for missionaries, and Bibles. They set those islands free. Leaving to the United States Government to decide what shall be the political destiny of those peoples, let us all join in a campaign of religious expansion—expansion of affection that can take all the world in, expansion of our theologies until none shall reject their broad invitation, expansion of hope that embraces eternity as well as well as time, expansion of effort that will not cease till the whole earth is saved, and the time arrives when the prophecy shall be fulfilled, and "they shall come from the north and the south and the east and the west and sit down in the kingdom of God, and the last shall be first and the first last."

Week before last, in this capital of the nation, we set three nights on fire in celebration of naval and soldiery heroics, and there were rockets of fire, and wheels of fire, and sheaves of fire, and spouting fountains of fire, and bombardments of fire, and ships of fire sank in billows of fire, and those three nights were three garlands of fire; but now we are in softer and quieter mood, and the three garlands of to-day are woven of blossoms and corollas of all colors and all pungencies of aroma, and we bethink ourselves that this third garland was needed to chain together the northern garland of other decorative times to the southern garland of other decorative times. Floral chain of three links! For the first time in sixty years the North and South stand in complete brotherhood. Heroes of Vermont and Alabama, of Massachusetts and South Carolina, of Maine and Louisiana, shoulder to shoulder! May that alliance remain until the last oppression is extirpated from the earth and all nations stand in the liberty with which Christ would make all people free!

Recreations at Camp Northfield

The Famous Religious Gathering-Ground Ready for the Summer Campaign

OF the many successful enterprises inaugurated by Mr. D. L. Moody, none is more successful from every point of view, or by the breadth and timeliness of its purpose, its wise and genial management, and the character of its results, appeals more forcibly to a wider circle than does "Camp Northfield." Dr. Gregg, of Brooklyn, recently said: "The summer is the season of relaxation. Everything takes a vacation, even conscience . . . . Thoughtful and wise-hearted men have seen the menace which the summer as spent in our age carries in it, and it has awakened them to search for a defence. They have seen idle time going to waste; they have seen the sleep of conscience; the frivolous and hurtful dissipation . . . the people returning to their homes morally unkeyed and spiritually paralyzed."

A burning sense of the truth expressed led Mr. Moody, five years ago, to the determination that to the Northfield program should be added some feature which should prove a "defence against this waste and wrong," by offering to young men a vacation-place attractive with comfort and recreation, pure in surrounding and association. And this not for the student class alone, which is already so largely represented at the World's Student Conference, but for young men, in offices, in business houses—those whose vacations are limited by time, and their choice of an outing place governed by considerations of expense.

Northfield is to a remarkable degree adapted to just such an undertaking. Its natural beauty in all the variations of mountain and valley and river scenery, is spread before one whether he rests beneath the peaceful pine trees, climbs to mountain tops, or wheels along the miles of splendid road through Northfield and surrounding regions.

The pines, among which stand Camp Northfield's tents are well up on one of the mountains, which rise as a background to the village. This situation combines the desired retirement with nearness to the many interests of Northfield. Not far distant is abundant recreation in form of base-ball fields, tennis courts and golf-links. A swimming float on the Connecticut secures safe and pleasant bathing. Boats await the camper's use. Camp-fires, corn-roasts, clambakes, each with musical accompaniment are some of the features of the "evenings at home." A number of delegates to the World's Student Conference, regularly stay in camp and form a connecting link between it and the Auditorium. All the platform meetings of this as well as the other Conferences are open, and the privilege of hearing such eminent speakers and teachers as Dr. Schauffler, Dr. Faunce, Dean Hodges, Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, Mr. Robert Speer, as well as Mr. Moody himself, and the English preacher, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. G. Campbell-Morgan, and Rev. S. A. Selwyn, with many others, is one gladly appropriated by many of the campers.

This, with the strong, clear life of many of the leaders of work by and among young men who are in the camp, often throughout the entire season, has been the means of transforming many who have come to Northfield careless, if not more, into men who, having come face to face with God, go out into a new life of service and obedience.

A Strangely-Marked Frontier

If one searched the whole world, it would be difficult to find a frontier boundary division as remarkable, in many respects as that which is shown in the accompanying illustration, which appears in the London Illustrated News. Here converge the boundaries of Germany, Belgium, Holland and the Neutral Territory. The latter has been independent since 1814, a self-governing country of about five square miles in extent, with no army and no import duties. The German policeman on horseback is flanked by the Hollander, the Belgian constable and a German Customs officer standing in that order; and the representative of the Neutral Territory on a rock which is the highest part of the Netherlands.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

New Life in Christ

S. S. Lesson for June 18. Col. 3: 1-15
Golden Text, Col. 3: 15

BY MRS. M. E. BAXTER

JESUS CHRIST, our Lord, has brought life and immortality [or incorruption] to light through the Gospel (II. Tim. 1: 10). The same Apostle Paul, who wrote this Epistle to the Colossians, says in writing to the Corinthians (I. Cor. 15: 1), that the Gospel (which brings life and immortality to light), is that which he preached, which they received, whereby they stand, and by which they are saved. And he thus expresses it (verses 3, 4). "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins" (i. e., according to Isa. 53), and that he was buried, and that he hath been raised on the third day according to the Scriptures. The death and resurrection of Christ, which the twelve disciples could not understand when he was with them upon earth, and not his power to work miracles, is the Gospel which saves men, and by which believers can stand. This is the Gospel by which life and incorruption are brought to light. It was Christ's decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem, and not his healing power or miracles which occupied Moses and Elijah on the Mount of Transfiguration.

But there is more than the death of Christ for our sins in this Gospel. Life and incorruption come to us through our being identified with the dead and risen One. Not only did he die in my stead, but I also virtually died in him. As really as one can expect nothing from a lifeless corpse—it is put away in the ground out of sight, no more to be cared for or considered — so if in very deed we by faith are crucified with Christ, we cease to consult ourselves, to care for ourselves, or to consider ourselves; we learn instead to deny ourselves, and to put him who died for us in the place which ourselves have occupied; giving over ourselves to him, and taking himself in the stead. Thus doing, we do not expect the new life in Christ from anything we are, or anything which we can do; but only from Christ dwelling in us by the Holy Ghost. The apostle writes to the Colossians as "having been buried with him in baptism" (but burial is not life). "Wherein we were raised with him through faith in the operation of God, who raised him from the dead (Col. 11: 12).

Where there is no death, there can be no resurrection; the new life in Christ is a life which has passed through death. There is no such thing as living the life of Christ by imitation; our nature cannot be Christ-like, our nature must come to an end and die to itself, that another and quite contrary nature may be "formed in us" (Gal. 4: 19). But the apostle, having thus laid the foundation, goes on to show the practical outcome of really taking such a position: If then ye were raised together with Christ, seek the things which are above, where Christ is at the right hand of God (R.V.) It is not by logical reasoning that we can take the place which being risen with Christ gives us, i. e., "made to sit with Christ in heavenly places" (Eph. 2: 6); it is by "faith in the working of God," faith which sees him, and is not occupied with our own experiences or our own doings. Faith looks "not at the things which are seen"—i. e., what we are and what we can do—but at "the things which are not seen" (II. Cor. 4: 18), at what he is, and what Scripture says he has done. If his word tells us that he has raised us up, and made us to sit with him, let us take our place practically there, and he will make us heavenly.

It is beneath the position of one whose place and whose citizenship is in heaven (Phil. 3: 20), to be taken up with, or immersed in the cares, the humors, or the pleasures of this earth. All the earthly things which we must have to do with in our daily life, may be a precious discipline, just so far as they serve God's purpose as tests of our faith and patience; in these duties serving God (Rom. 14: 18). "Set your mind on the things that are above, not on the things that are upon the earth, for ye died and your life is hid with Christ in God" (R. V.). No past experience can be a substitute for present faithfulness; day by day, and hour by hour, ruling things on earth which would absorb us by the heavenly considerations which we learn in fellowship with him with whom we sit in heavenly places, in the place of rule. It is blessedly possible to look upon all things, however trivial, from above, i. e., from how they touch God, instead of from the earth side, how they touch us. If we are true to him, we are dead to personal considerations.

"When Christ, who is our Life, shall be manifested, then shall ye also be manifested with him in glory." But it is those whose life is hid with Christ now, that shall be manifested with him in glory then. If we will be manifested now: if we cannot rest unless we are understood and appreciated now; if we cannot consent to take the lowest place with the meek and lowly One now; if we want to be "seen of men" now, we shall have received our reward (Matt. 6: 2, R. V.); just what we have sought and no more, and we cannot be manifested with him in glory then. Let us not forestall God's promises by our carnal anticipation. When he shall be manifested, and all his saints with him, the fulness of him that filleth all in all (Eph. 1: 23), then he shall have the glory due to him as the Head of his body, the church, and we, if we are indeed instinct with his life, shall be glorified with him.

"Mortify, therefore (make dead for) your members which are upon the earth," not only the vile, gross, outward sins which belong to the unsaved, "the sins of disobedience," but also "members" which are terribly common among those who look upon themselves as Christians, "anger, wrath, malice, railing, evil speaking out of your mouth," and lying. Of the former things Paul says, "In the which ye walked afore time when ye lived in them." A drunkard lives in his sin; it is his life. But also a malicious believer, an evil-speaking believer, lives in his sin and walks in it. How then can he live and walk in Christ? His life is death to the Spirit of Christ, and the Spirit of Christ is death to anger, malice, evil speaking, etc., all of which proceed from self-assertion, and are contrary to the Spirit of "the Lamb, which openeth not her mouth" (Isa. 53: 7). Make dead these things; starve them to death by giving them no food to nourish them, no room to develop. Take them to Christ the moment they appear, and thus make them dead. This is the instinct of the Christ life.

A SCENE IN ANCIENT COLOSSÆ

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

PAUL'S letter to the Colossians was written while he was in prison in Rome. It was apparently called forth by certain reports he had received from Epaphras, the pastor of the church at Colossæ, and probably its founder. Paul did not personally know the members, but he appears to have learned from Epaphras a great deal about them, and he was concerned about their welfare. The errors on which the Roman Catholic Church of our time is based, were beginning to work at Colossæ, and Paul sets himself in this letter to the task of extirpating them. They had begun to make too much of the observance of holy days, to depend on rites and ceremonies, and to seek the intercession of angels or saints. For these tendencies and other evils, growing out of them, Paul prescribes a remedy. It is the same remedy that, under another form, he prescribed to the Romans, to the Corinthians, the Galatians, and all persons with whom he came in contact, by word or letter. He had found it effectual in his own case, and he recommended it to others. In effect, he says, this observance of days, of rites and ceremonies, this hope of the intercession of saints, will not help you at all in achieving your desire. You want to be better, stronger men, free from the power of sin—men who do not yield to temptation, but are getting holier every day. The way to that end is by identifying yourselves with Christ, coming under his influence, submitting yourselves to his power. That is the general principle. Then, proceeding to details, he tells them how people who thus identify themselves with Christ, will live. There are certain things to avoid. Men who are sincerely desirous of being like Christ—that is being Christians—will take care to avoid things which would hinder Christ's influence working on them. They are common sins, practices that ordinary people do not consider serious faults, but people who want to be like Christ must have nothing to do with them. They must be dead to them. Just as a man who in his lifetime was fond of music, and at the [illegible] was, a few years ago, noted for his business knowledge and shrewdness. He did not know much about art, very little about religion and not a great deal about even his family affairs. His wife managed the home and if she introduced a new picture or a new piece of furniture into the house, he scarcely noticed it, took no interest in it. He [illegible] except his business, and that he knew thoroughly. If any one told him of a new process or a new product that affected his business, he was alert in a moment. He had one interest, however, besides his business, and that was a little daughter of whom he was very fond. But she died, and her death changed the man. He began to take an interest in Christian work and a special kind of work which seemed a memorial of her. Gradually the work grew upon him until it absorbed all his time and his energies. In a few years he became dead to everything else, just as in the old time he had been dead to everything but his business. He had [illegible] matters, but he had not lost interest; he had transferred it to something else. That is what Paul means by saying to the Colossians that they are dead.

Mortify [illegible]. A great [illegible] remarkable instance of personal influence. A young man of ungovernable temper and unrestrained passions was placed under the care of a certain clergyman. He had been reproved, scolded, punished, until he was almost desperate. He was capable of committing murder or doing anything violent. But when he came to the clergyman's house and lived with him, he saw a noble, manly, earnest, beneficent life, and he admired it. He grew to love his tutor, and wished to be like him. The clergyman rejoiced in having won his esteem, and proceeded to show him how to gain control over his unruly temper. "Unclench your hands," he said to him one day when the young man, under provocation, was standing with his fists clenched and stamping his feet. "I cannot discuss the thing with you while you stand so. Open your hands and let us sit down and talk the matter over." It was taking the impulse at the beginning and correcting it there. Gradually there were other gestures and motions which were subdued until, under the clergyman's influence, the young man learned to restrain himself, and to not only act gently, but to feel kindly to others.

Where there is neither Greek nor Jew. The crudest idea of life is where a man cares only for himself. But when he is a Christian, his sympathies go out to the whole world. To him then it is not a question whether a man is a fellow-countryman. He does not ask his nationality. If he can help him, or do him a service, he is ready. A Japanese young man went to England to learn a special kind of business, which he believed he could turn to account in his own country. He was ridiculed, snubbed, deceived. But one day he met a man who listened to his story, took time to understand his purpose and told him how to go about it. He left his business to take the foreigner to another part of the city, and personally introduced him to a firm who could help him. He used his influence for him and took a great deal of trouble for him. "Why do you do all this for me?" the Japanese asked one day. "It is a Christian duty," was the reply. "I thought you were all Christians here," said the Japanese, "but I begin to see that there are two kinds of Christians—one who does his duty and one who does not."

The Peace Conference at Work

Strongly in Favor of Arbitration for Adjusting International Disputes — The Quaint Old Palace Where the Sessions are Held

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE HAGUE, May 15. It is now several months since the Emperor Nicholas of Russia launched his famous rescript convening the nations of the earth to a general conference for the discussion of a means of lessening the burdens of militarism. To judge by the condition of things now prevailing at The Hague, this rescript might just as well have been issued a week ago. The conference begins on Thursday next, and to-day (Monday) not only are four-fifths of the delegates still to appear, but there reigns the greatest uncertainty as to a hundred matters that one would naturally suppose to have been settled long ago.

Among these is the question of admitting journalists to the sessions. It is generally assumed that this will be decided in the negative, but as no definite reply can as yet be obtained from the Dutch officials in charge of the arrangements, a flickering hope still remains with some of the more sanguine of the newspaper fraternity that the proceedings may after all be carried on in the "full blaze of publicity."

Not less uncertainty exists as regards the mode of procedure to be followed during the debates, the time limit for speeches, the status and role of technical advisers, the nature of the questions to be discussed, etc., etc. It is in vain that one turns from M. de Beaufort, Minister of Foreign Affairs, to the Director of the Protocol of the Conference, and from the latter to one or the other of the foreign delegates already here. None could be more courteous or obliging than the two former gentlemen. They admit the inquirer to their sanctums without obstacle or delay, and endeavor to answer his questions to the best of their ability. But it is apparent so far that they have no definite plans, and are as much in the dark as to the final dispositions as the swallow-tailed attendant at the door. Such of the foreign delegates on the other hand as are met in the corridors of the various hotels being, if possible, still more ignorant of the whole subject, one can only fall back on the stereotyped answer that the decision rests in the end with Baron de Staal, while this gentleman remains—for all journalistic purposes—as dumb as the proverbial oyster. We learn that he is holding conferences with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, to whom he presented the order of Alexander Nevsky yesterday morning, and that is all.

As regards the material preparations for the Conference, the accompanying set of photographs made last Saturday, show that at least in this one particular no attempt has been made to follow the general rule. My application to Yonkheer Heuff von Hulsen, Inten dant of the Royal Palaces, to be permitted to take pictures of the Conference Chambers for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was readily granted, and the readers of this paper will therefore obtain an idea of their appearance at this moment. One picture shows the arrangement of the benches in the Conference (Orange) hall. In this sextagon, of about thirty-five feet in diameter, over a hundred persons will be crowded, and, as the hot season is approaching, I imagine it will prove a pretty hard matter for them to remain cool. Various other departments decorated with Chinese and Japanese designs have been set apart for the committees and sub-committees, and excellent arrangements have also been made for providing refreshments. The grounds around the chateau are beautiful, and have been still further embellished with exotic plants and statuary.

On the whole, the delegates can congratulate themselves that they have been well taken care of by the Dutch government. The latter has certainty been most generous in all its preparations for entertaining the delegates. It remains for the delegates themselves to "do the rest," and agree on a plan by which some of the miseries of war will be abated or diminished, and Christ's kingdom on earth brought nearer to suffering humanity.

V. GRIBAYEDOFF.

* * *

By the 18th, all the delegates to the International Peace Conference were at The Hague, and a little past two o'clock on the balmy afternoon of that day Dr. de Beaufort, Vice-Chairman, opened the meeting at the House in the Woods with an address in which he welcomed the assembled delegates in the name of his sovereign, Queen Wilhelmina, and paid tribute to the Czar of Russia, initiator of the Conference. Baron de Staal, who, on motion of Dr. de Beaufort, was unanimously elected President of the Conference, responded on behalf of Russia, whose representative he is. The session, though brief and informal, was impressive, although the delegates, when viewed at a glance, formed no more than an ordinary gathering of black-coated legislators, unrelieved with color except for some naval uniforms and the barbaric splendor of the Chinamen's costumes and the gorgeous livery of Dutch attendants. The various powers represented were as follows: Austria-Hungary, Belgium, China, Denmark, France, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, Italy, Japan, Norway and Sweden, Persia, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Siam, Servia, Spain, Switzerland, Turkey, and the United States.

As the first Peace Conference of the world, this body had no precedents to follow, and business moved slowly. The Conference was divided into three general sections. One to consider questions relating to disarmament, another the laws of war and mediation, and the third, all matters relating to arbitration. The third section was to consider, among other things, the late David Dudley Field's plan for the establishment of an arbitration tribunal, the Washington treaty of 1871, the proposal for an arbitration tribunal for Northern, Central and Southern America signed in Washington in April, 1890, and also Lord Salisbury's letters to Sir Julian Pauncefote in 1896, relating to the arbitration treaty and the terms of the unratified treaty.

These sections were sub-divided into committees, and much work was done during recesses between sessions. Early in the Conference it was shown that the time is not yet ripe for disarmament of the powers. The laws of War Committees leaving alone what it could not at this juncture accomplish, limited discussion and action to sections 5, 6 and 7 of Count Muravieff's circular which read:

To apply to naval warfare the stipulations of the Geneva Convention of 1864, on the basis of the articles added to the convention in 1868.

To neutralize ships and boats employed in saving those overboard during or after an engagement.

To revise the declaration concerning the laws and customs of war elaborated in 1874 by the Conference of Brussels, which has remained unratified to the present day.

The important work to be done, therefore, is on arbitration, to which from the first session, England and America, in the persons of their representatives, gave their concentrated attention as the most practical scheme for accomplishment of the objects of the Peace Congress. The United States has also made a special point of securing international law against the seizure of private property at sea by contending powers. The latest news from The Hague is that the Conference, as a whole, is strongly in favor of arbitration, and a permanent International Board of Arbitration will probably result.

GROUNDS IN REAR OF THE PALACE WHERE THE CONFERENCE IS HELD

DELEGATES' SEATS IN ORANGE HALL

CHINESE ROOM

IN THE GREAT DINING HALL

WHERE THE DELEGATES TAKE THEIR LUNCH

THE
CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR
T. DeWitt Talmage
EDITOR.
B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald

Subscriptions may commence

Remittances manner available to the remitter. Post-office and be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed

Renewals.
before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.
back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date.
the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper is promptly renewed.

Change of Address.
your address.

The Name
writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald
the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded

Letters

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Issue Office, New York City.

A Queenly American

THE most striking figure in India, to-day, is Lady Curzon, by marriage the queen of more people than are embraced in all the nations of Europe, excluding Russia; that is two hundred and forty millions. Her proper title is Vicereine of India. Lady Curzon has been received in her new position with the greatest pride and affection. The favorable impression she made in Bombay and Calcutta has been repeated even in the small cities of the interior, and praises and compliments are showered upon her from every side. Even London itself has accepted this judgment of India; so that it is certain her position is secure.

What an opportunity for a lady of American origin and American tastes and predilections, to display what American ladyship is! Queen over scores of native queens, the representative of Victoria herself; in official standing, the next woman to Victoria; if she can exert her charms and prestige, less toward pomp and ceremony and parade, than toward true Christian womanliness, then, the swarming millions of India will have cause to bless the day when the noble Viceroy turned to one of the daughters of this Republic, and invited her to become the companion of his vast responsibilities in India. In such a role this whole nation will rise up and call her blessed; applying to her the passage: "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all."

The Stars Fighting for America

THE stars seem to be fighting for the United States. A war of moral necessity had to be fought for the sake of humanity and the future. We fought the war on land and sea, and conquered a peace. Meantime, United States exports have been plunging ahead. The British and South African Gazette publishes a recent article on the comparative imports of the United Kingdom and the United States to South Africa for February, 1899. The exports from the United Kingdom in February, 1899, show an increase of $32,500 over the exports of the same month 1898; while the exports from the United States for the same month show an increase of $362,941; or an increase in our favor of $330,441. Ten years ago the total exports from the United States to Africa amounted to $3,496,505; in 1898, they were $17,515,730. These exports are books, bicycles, builders' hardware, typewriters, and especially boots and shoes. American cotton-seed oil is very popular; so, also, American lard and lumber. We close this editorial with the following summary of figures, which surely do not lie:

Shooting the Orchestra

THE French actresses, a precious group, some of them divorced two or three times, and with a system of morals independent of the Ten Commandments, have reinforced a fashion which it was hoped was dying out. I refer to the bird millinery, or the adornment of the hats with the winged denizens of the sky. The taxidermists are, in the destruction of birds for the purpose of fashion, not only silencing the songs of our forests, but surrendering the agriculture of the land to the worst insectile devastation that the world ever saw since the locusts and the flies came down to plague Egypt. Those who are unaware of the facts have no idea of the threatened peril. Birds have been ordained of God chiefly as the friends of man and the enemies of harmful insects. While hawks, once in awhile dissected have been found to have despoiled the barnyard of a chicken, the most of their crops are filled with vermin and insects. But we are not appealing for the hawks. If we had a gun on our shoulder and we were a good marksman, and we saw a hawk wheeling about a hen house or a chicken coop, we would not pledge ourselves to abstinence. But we do plead for the whole kingdom of birds, either distinguished by gorgeous plumage or sweet cadence: the orioles, the grosbeaks, the robins, the quail, the meadowlarks, the bluebirds, the cuckoos, the finches, the ptarmigans, the hummingbirds, the swallows, the kingfishers, the jays, the turtle doves, the starlings, which are by the skyful being swept into the millinery establishments.

The groves, the orchards, the forests of America are being exterminated of all winged life. Seventy thousand birds from one village were sent to New York, not for food—for that would be legitimate—but for human beautification. A three months' trip in South Carolina furnished for the market 11,000 bird's skins. One sportsman furnished 10,000 white egrets, and at Cape Cod in one season 40,000 terns were slain for the same purpose. An establishment of New York bargained to furnish a Parisian firm with 40,000 of these dead musicians. A million bobolinks near Philadelphia were killed in one month! Whole species of birds have become extinct through persistent springing of the trap and flashing of the gun. One February one commercial house in New York had on hand 200,000 bird's skins. One auction-house in London, in three months, sold 356,000 East India bird's skins, and 404,000 West India and Brazilian bird's skins. If they were taken for scientific museums or for human diet, that would have been different, but this universal war is now mostly waged either for fun or fashion. What a state of things when a daily paper says of a lady's head dress: "She had a whole nest of sparkling, scintillating birds in her hair which it would have puzzled an ornithologist to classify."

If it were a matter of whim or sentiment, I would not treat of it, but we are slaying whole armies of our natural defenders. Once in awhile, as when years ago, all the streets of most of our cities were so loathsome with caterpillars, we sometimes took the middle of the street in preference to the sidewalk, and we were all much of the time engaged in the philanthropic effort of removing from each other's hats and coats and shawls these crawling invaders, and as the grasshopper scourge swept Kansas and Iowa into suffering, we get some idea of what an all-destructive force of insectile life might in a season move up, and would move up, did not the sharp beaks of innumerable birds hinder them. A scientist tells us that these insects multiply so rapidly that in one season one pair of insects may have a progeny of six billions. We want more birds, millions of them, multiplied by other millions that shall sing in every tree-top and flutter out of every grove and nest—under the eaves of every house. We are baring the orchards and gardens and the harvest-fields of America to an exposure that is awful beyond calculation. So the ornithologists tell us; so the Agricultural Department at Washington tells us; so legislative committees tell us; so our common-sense tells us. The laws on the subject are insufficient. Those we have already upon our books are not executed. What is most needed and what will be most effective will be the establishment of a public sentiment in American womanhood that shall be opposed to bird-slaughter. If once they realize the wrong they will extinguish it. The kindly and songful birds have enough enemies without human antagonism. No creatures of God have a harder time to live than they have. First, they have enemies in the animal kingdom, as man has in his. The cruel eagles, the crows, the squirrels, the weasles, are their assailants. Then the hurricanes dash them against the rocks and hurl them against lighthouses and tangle them in the telegraphic wires and toss them into the sea and drive them back in their semi-annual migration. And they have their own distempers to contend against, and what a gauntlet of earth and sky they run before they come within range of sportsmen or taxidermists. For God's sake and for the harvests' and the orchards' and the gardens', of which they are the natural defenders, let them live, and remember that while you have navies and armies to keep off other enemies, against whole kingdoms of stinging, besoiling and deathful animalculæ there is only one weapon that has ever been formed, or ever will be formed, and that is a bird's beak. Do not pull down your own fortress. Do not spike your own guns. Do not carbine your own cavalry.

Instead of this perpetual shooting and stoning of your feathered friends, feed the snow-bird from your window and listen quietly to the song in the forest, and coax the advances of these bright creatures of God. Do not shoot the orchestra. Do not assassinate these prima donnas of roundelay. Enough sighs, but not enough carol, enough dirges, but not enough anthems.

♦

Shepherds of the Orient.

Among the pastoral pursuits of the East that of the shepherd has always been highly honored. Abel, Abram, Lot, Moses, Jacob, David, Amos of Tekoa and many others might be named as among the illustrious shepherds of Bible times. In a nomad state of society such as even yet prevails in many parts of the East "every man, from the shiek down to the slave, is more or less of a shepherd," observes a recent traveler. As the patriarchal progenitors of the Jewish nation were nomads, their literature and history are rich in the experiences of pastoral life. Even at the present day a very large proportion of their descendants who remain in Palestine retain the inherited love of the same life their forefathers led, and their flocks may be found scattered all up and down through the Holy Land.

In Palestine and throughout Syria today, the duties of a shepherd are frequently full of hardship and not without danger. Exposed alternately to intense heat and severe cold; fed on rough diet and often compelled to depend upon the supplies afforded by nature, such as fruits, berries, carob-husks and wild honey, the shepherd, as the defender of his flock, has sometimes to face the peril of attacks by wolves and lions, or other wild animals, and to encounter robber bands who would not scrupie to take human life, if opposed in their predatory designs. He must, therefore, be courageous and faithful, and his lusty staff or cudgel—his only weapon—must ever be ready in the defense of his charge. His equipment usually consists of a heavy, hairy coat of goat or sheepskin, a scarf or wallet for food, a water-bottle, and, occasionally, but not often, a shelter tent. In his frequent marches, as he changes his pasturage, looking for fresh forage for his flock, the tent would simply be an incumbrance.

The term "shepherd" has a peculiar signification in the Gospels. Christ describes himself as the "Good Shepherd" who gave his life for the sheep, and his illustrations contain frequent allusions to the pastoral calling. There is no more beautiful picture within the pages of the Sacred Book than that which shows us the loving Saviour in the character of a tender Shepherd searching for the lost sheep which had strayed from the fold and whose rescue and return brought joy to the Master's heart.

♦

BRIEF NOTES

There are in China 2,461 missionaries, 5,071

were added to the Jesus." It has been published in guages and has reached a circulation clergy to refuse to celebrate a marriage in which either of the parties has been divorced, if the partner from whom he or she was divorced is still living.

cently began the issue of a Sunday edition have both discontinued it in deference to the protests of the religious public. No English daily, now, has a Sunday issue.

The International Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations at Grand Rapids, Mich., was largely attended. Dr. J. M. Buckley, Rev. Charles Erdman, Mr. Anthony Comstock, and other well-known men took part in the proceedings.

has concluded his services at Gaffney and Summerville, S. C., and Pocahontas, Va. All the churches are receiving large additions. Mr. Crane has promised to return to South Carolina next month to fulfil appointments.

All the Methodist churches of New Zealand have excluded intoxicating wine from the com-ence they passed a resolution making total abstinence a condition of church membership.

A New Jersey journal notifies worshipers at the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Jersey City, that the doors are closed at the beginning of the service and are opened again once during the service to admit late comers. This is done to correct the growing habit of tardy attendance.

At the eighty-third annual meeting of the American Bible Society, held recently, it was stated that $3,770 was added last year to the invested funds, which now aggregate $416,652; that the receipts were $370,664, and the expenditure $366,529, that the total issues were 1,382,892 copies.

A novel libel suit has been instituted by the white residents of Lagos, in Western Africa. They have combined to sue Bishop Tugwell because he made the public statement that of the Europeans who died on the West Coast of Africa, three out of every four came to their death through excessive drinking.

A visitor to the offices of the American Board of Foreign Missions in Boston recently asked to see one of the Secretaries. As he was out at the moment, he left a letter for him which, thousand dollar bills. The letter accompanying them was unsigned.

and elsewhere, been enabled to take a three months' tour in Europe. They were reluctant to leave Tuskegee for so long a time, but, as Mr. Washington has had no vacation in eighteen years, his friends urged this trip upon him. He expects to deliver a series of addresses on negro education while in England.

Rev. H. M. Wharton, D. D., of Baltimore, Md., has decided to enter the evangelistic field as an exclusive sphere of labor. The many calls he has received from all parts of the country for service, combined with the need of raising money for the benevolent institutions depending on him for support, have made this course necessary. Dr. Wharton is beginning with a series of meetings in the Auditorium, Richmond, Va.

A City in Miniature

PROBABLY the smallest walled city in the world was recently leased by China to Great Britain. Its name is Kow-Loon and it stands picturesquely at the head of a shallow bay near Hung-Ham. It is part of the section of a peninsula about four square miles in extent, known to diplomatists as the Kow-Loon Extension, which Great Britain is permitted to hold for a period of ninety-nine years, or as long as Russia holds Port Arthur. The city itself is so extremely small that it is possible to walk around it in ten minutes. It is oblong in shape. Its walls are of granite, twenty feet high. In the embrasures a few dismantled and antiquated cannon are lying, as a mere mockery of defensive armament. People have built houses outside the walls, until now there is a larger population outside than inside. In all there are not more than five thousand persons within the city limits. Like most Chinese cities its streets are narrow and dirty. It cannot be said to be without a sewerage system, for an open sewer runs down the middle of the chief streets, exhaling a horrible stench. Pigs roam at will through the streets and have free access to the dwelling houses. Kow-Loon has long been notorious for its criminal classes. Several famous pirates made it their headquarters and criminals of other kinds who operate chiefly in Hong Kong, but prefer to live at a convenient distance from the jurisdiction of the Hong Kong police, have fixed their homes at Kow-Loon. These people are inveterate gamblers. There are numerous buildings devoted to their passion for hazard, but even those do not meet the demand and it is common to see them playing for large stakes publicly in the open streets. Outside the city runs the curious bamboo fence which marks the boundary of the British concession. It passes through cultivated lands, with gardens on each side of it. Its light, flimsy character is in striking contrast with the solidly-built granite walls of Kow-Loon. But the bamboo fence is a more formidable obstacle to those who understand its significance than are the granite walls. They might be battered down with comparative impunity, but to remove the bamboo fence would be to incur the vengeance of England. The real strength of a thing is in that which it represents. People who injure God's humble people in their business dealings sometimes forget this in spite of the warning Remove not the old landmark and enter not into the fields of the fatherless; for their Redeemer is mighty; he shall plead their cause with thee (Prov. 23. 10, 11).

GAMBLERS IN KOW-LOON

BAMBOO FENCE MARKING THE BRITISH BOUNDARY OF KOW-LOON, CHINA

Sentenced to Sunday School

The Mayor of Bowling Green, O., sitting as a police justice, passed a peculiar sentence on an offender a few days ago. The prisoner is a boy who is a terror to the town. He has been arrested before, for malicious mischief, but escaped punishment on a technicality. When he was arraigned this time the case was proved. The mayor gave him a severe lecture on his misconduct. He said that the law empowered him to send the youth to jail for twenty days. But he doubted whether that was the best way to reform him. On consideration, he had decided on a different sentence. The boy must attend the Sunday School of the Church of the Disciples regularly for eight weeks. If at the end of that time he presents a certificate from a Sunday School teacher showing that he has been punctual in his attendance and has behaved himself well he will be released, otherwise he must serve his term of twenty days in jail. The boy gladly accepted the alternative of the Sunday School, and as there is in it a better prospect of his reformation, the community may yet be glad that it was offered him. When the reclamation of the wrongdoer rather than his punishment is made the chief object in dealing with him, there will be more hope of social improvement, because it will be following God's plan.

I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live (Ezek. 33: 11).

A Strange Kidnapping Case

The whole police force of New York have been put on their mettle to discover the perpetrator of a dastardly crime which was committed on May 21. On that day a nurse girl in the employ of a family named Clark took her charge, a little girl named Marion, twenty months old, for an airing in Central Park. Shortly afterwards, the child's father followed her and saw the empty baby carriage standing outside one of the Park offices. He waited half an hour, supposing that the nurse had gone inside and would soon return. As she did not come, he asked the attendant if she had seen her. The attendant said that the nurse had asked her to watch the carriage, as she was going to take the child to see the bears. The father went to the bears' cage, but not finding the nurse or the child, informed the police, who at once commenced a search for them. When the father returned to his home with the disquieting news, he learned that a note had been delivered there by a boy, stating that the nurse and child were in safekeeping by persons who were in need of money. The parents were warned in the same letter that if the police were set to work, or the case was published in the newspapers, the parents would never see their child again. The letter caused the parents agonizing distress, and the mother became critically ill from the shock. The police redoubled their efforts to find the child, but although every policeman in the city has been furnished with a description and instructed to look out for such a child, a week has passed without any trace of her being found. The whole city is interested in the mystery, and rewards, aggregating over four thousand dollars, have been offered by newspapers and private citizens for the recovery of the child. The case is likely to make all parents anxious about the safety of their children. It is much to be wished that they may also be on their guard against the enemy of souls who is infinitely more to be dreaded than even the kidnappers.

Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour (1. Peter 5: 8).

Ocean Miners

A scientific journal publishes in its current number an interesting description of the strange creatures of the sea who have the power of boring into wood and rock. One of them, called the "pholas," inhabits a richly chased shell about two inches long, in which there is a light by which the creature works. It bores the hardest rock, and after it has made a tunnel of a few inches, it proceeds to enlarge its resting place, making a large chamber. It stays there, and as it grows, it is often unable to make its way out of the narrow tunnel by which it entered, and remains a prisoner till it dies. In tropical waters a destructive ocean miner is found in the "teredo" that penetrates the hulls of vessels and woodwork of all kinds. A wreck stranded on a coral reef, has been so mined that the hand could be thrust through the apparently solid planking. There are some men like this wreck. Though to outward appearances they are morally intact, yet sin has wholly permeated their nature until in some stress they collapse and people wonder at their fall.

From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds and bruises and festering sores (Isa. 1: 6).

The Greatest of Feminine Painters

News comes from France of the death of Marie Rosalie Bonheur, better known as Rosa Bonheur, who is held to be the greatest of her sex in the realm of art. She was seventy-seven years of age and was a native of Bordeaux, in France. Her father was a painter who eked out his slender income by giving lessons. He began to teach her, and she made wonderful progress. After a time the family removed to Paris, where the young girl studied sedulously. It was some time before she took up the line of subjects in which she attained eminence. She was nineteen when she exhibited two small pictures in the Salon.

THE LATE ROSA BONHEUR

One of them was of goats and sheep and the other of two rabbits. The talent they displayed was so marked that it was felt she had found her true sphere. During the next two years she tramped through the country sketching horses and cattle on the farms and spending whole days in the public slaughter-houses. On this excursion she assumed masculine garb, and in coat, trousers and soft felt hat mixed affably with drovers and cattle-dealers, who never suspected her sex. On her return she produced several cattle pictures, which attracted general attention and brought prices which surprised her. She was able, then, to build the studio at Fontainebleau, where most of her great works were afterwards produced. In her own studio, she clung to her masculine attire, though dressing in feminine garb to go into society or to meet her friends. Her best-known picture is the Horse-fair, for which she received $10,000. It was afterward sold to Mr. A. T. Stewart, the famous dry-goods merchant of New York, for double that sum, and when his collection of pictures was sold, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt bought that picture for $55,500, and presented it to the Metropolitan Museum of Art, where it now hangs. Though intensely patriotic and always reluctant to allow her pictures to go out of France, the French people never showed the appreciation of them that the Americans and English did. An unexpected tribute to her greatness was paid by the Crown Prince of Prussia, afterward the Emperor Frederick, during the Franco-Prussian war, when he forbade his soldiers to touch her property, and not even to take so much as a cabbage from her garden. The property of other French citizens in the same neighborhood was ruthlessly destroyed, but the great artist, by her services to the world at large, had a claim on the consideration of her country's foes, which they respected. It proved a better protection to her than a fortress. In times of trouble, safety is sometimes insured by means that seem to practical people mere sentiment, as those have found who put their trust in the Lord:

He that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about (Ps. 32:10).

A Tour in Southern China

Mrs. Baldwin Writes of Her Travels Among the Celestials—Progress of Mission Work—Magnificent Chinese Scenery

HAVING completed our tour in Central China, we returned to Shanghai, and there, on November 7, took the fine Peninsula and Oriental—known as P. & O. steamer Sunda—for our old home, Foo Chow, in Southern China. This mission is really the mother of all our mission work in Eastern Asia, and it is the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of this mission that brings us east at this time. With us were delegates to our jubilee, not only from our North and Central China missions, but from missions of other denominations also. An exceptionally delightful voyage of two days and nights on the China Sea brought us to the entrance of the Min River, where we anchored and waited for the tide to enable us to go to our anchorage twenty miles up the river. All of our company were charmed by the fine scenery, not surpassed by that of our Hudson, while to us, to whom it was so familiar, it seemed more beautiful than ever. The mountains, terraced and cultivated well up the side and beautifully green, a perfect, mild day and rich scenery, made the twenty miles up the river a great delight to our visitors, and to us a joyful home coming. Our steamer lies at Pagoda Anchorage—a lofty pagoda marking the spot—twelve miles below the city of Foo Chow, as the river, though broad as our Hudson, is too shallow here in places to admit steamers of heavy burden, but steam launches and house-boats connect with the city. We had no sooner anchored than a delegation of friends from both our general and woman's missions were on hand to give us such a welcome as only missionaries can give to missionaries who "come back home" after a long absence. We were soon on the launch steaming over the remaining twelve miles of this, one of the two most beautiful rivers of the world, on one of the most perfect of days, our hearts too full for utterance of joy and gratitude that we were once more permitted to greet our friends and co-workers, and to see these familiar scenes to which we had come in our young days, and where we had seen almost the beginnings of God's kingdom being built up in all this great empire.

The moments flew, and sooner than we could believe we were at dear old Foo Chow. There were the same grand old mountains, the same great 900-year-old stone bridge spanning the broad river from our island to the city—yes, and there stands, in full view on the hill, our mission compound and our old home, in which we spent so many busy, happy years, to which came our children, and from which the precious remains of two were carried to our mission cemetery. How fast crowd the memories of the past! I look for the dear old Tieng ang tong ("Heavenly Peace" Church), but am more than resigned to see in its place the spacious new structure bearing the same good name and nearly ready for dedication. Soon we are at the dock and in our sedan chairs, and over the beautiful hills to our mission compound, and are receiving such a welcome to the pleasant home of our old friends, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. N. J. Plumb, the only workers now in our mission who were here with us. Welcomes from our missionaries and native friends multiply, and lo! the old language comes back, and we chatter away to our native friends in the old tongue as if we had not been on the other side of the world for eighteen years talking English! As I look about me with friends of our earlier years—native and foreign—the mild winter sun so bright, the flowers blooming as they only bloom in Foo Chow in winter, and the talk in Chinese went on, I felt more at home than I have in eighteen years.

Every moment of our stay in this our oldest mission was brimful of interest. Having been connected with our Mission Boards at home, we had kept in nearest possible touch with our missions abroad, and of necessity with our China work, of which we had personal knowledge. Foo Chow is one of the original five great treaty ports and was one of the greatest tea posts, but India and Japan teas have injured the trade throughout China. I think it is conceded that this place, in beauty of scenery, is not surpassed, if equalled, by any port in China now opened to trade. The great city of a million people is located on the Min River. It is a walled city and the capital of the fine province of Fuh-Kien, and to it come the scholars of the province for their triennial examinations in the "Literary Hall," of 12,000 rooms. Foreigners chiefly reside on a large, beautiful island opposite the city, with which it is connected by the "bridge of ten thousand ages," a solid stone structure of forty piers, 900 years old. On the island are the fine residences of the merchants of almost every nationality, of the customs officials (largely foreign), of representatives of different governments, and the compounds of our own and the Church of England missions. The only other Protestant mission here, the American Board, is located in the suburbs and city proper. While these three missions have large centres of work in cities in the interior of the province, Foo Chow of necessity remains the business and distributing centre for all, and each has a great work here. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so do they surround Foo Chow, and the broad, beautiful river adds not only to the charm of the scene, but is a highway to the innumerable villages and towns at the base of the mountains. Temples and shrines are found in the most picturesque places. The climate is exceedingly hot in the long summer, and frost is rarely seen in the winter, as the latitude is that of extreme southern Florida. The mountain and seaside resorts which have been secured these later years have greatly lessened the death rate among foreign residents. The American Board and our own Methodist missions have a cemetery together. It is now so full that an enlargement is imperative, and now being considered, yet there has been but one burial from our mission in more than twenty years, a great testimony to the value and economy of the sanitariums, as the filling of the cemetery took place before we had these refuges from the intense heat. For twenty-five years our workers had no place to go from the severe heat in their direst need, save a Buddhist monastery, 1,800 feet up a mountain, where we only had little windowless rooms and lacked every comfort, were surrounded by seventy priests and 500 idols, and worship is heard every moment, night and day, for should it cease the gods might fall asleep and wreck and ruin would follow! To this place we resorted only when ill and to save life, because there we could have the air which had life in it, although all the influences about us were most depressing, in spite of the incomparable beauty of the place. It was during these needy years that the large houses were built that are so often criticized by the tourist, and alas! sometimes by the mission visitor. All of these are careful to time their visits, and the acceptance of the hospitality of the missionaries, whom they criticize, for the winter season, when the climate is so delightful, and wholly ignorant of the rest of the year here, hesitate not to charge the missionary with extravagance. Every large house in our mission, [illegible] verandas, was built before we had a sanitarium, and was constructed with reference to securing as perfect ventilation and as much air as possible. With every effort and following the custom of building here induced by experience, not of a winter, but of years, we who lived in these great barns of rooms knew often what it was to wander through our verandas at night trying to find a breath of air and rest from the heat. Not one summer is enough to test one's power of endurance, but a series, each lessening strength, after the strains of mission work, than which none is greater, while the joy of its blessed results, it seems to me, alone makes life less possible.

A GREAT HEATHEN SHRINE IN CHINA

The mission home is all that a missionary in heathen lands has of Christianity about him, and all that his children have of home life in a heathen land. It is his little heaven, in the midst of what one tourist called a hell: then let no one criticise, but thank God that through the efforts of missionaries and the example of their homes heaven is being brought unto the heathen. The Fuh-Kien province has its great centres of Protestant work at Foo Chow, the capital, and at Amoy. Without doubt it is the nearest Christianized province in the empire. Years ago we could travel overland from Foo Chow to Amoy and stop with a native Christian every night. Our own Foo Chow mission has a membership of more than 13,000, with a constituency favorable to and connected with our Christians, of more than five times that number. The same is true of the Church of England, while the American Board follows with a membership of more than 5,000 and a proportioned constituency. Our own work has had a marvelous growth.

When I came to Foo Chow in 1862 we had perhaps a dozen or twenty members, and this one central station in the entire Empire. What have we to-day? Thirteen thousand members, with a corresponding Christian connection of five times the number, with a great work in the outlying districts of Ku Cheng, Ning Cheng, Hok Chiang, and Hing Huea, the last just constituted a separate Mission Conference.

The annual conference was followed immediately by the jubilee services, when the work of fifty years was reviewed. Dr. H. H. Lewry came back to congratulate the mother who sent him to Pekin to do pioneer work with the late Dr. Wheeler. Dr. and Mrs. Beebee, of our General Board, and Miss Gertrude Howe, in this her twenty-fifth year of service for our woman's society, were the foreign delegates from Central China, and Mrs. Hu, the native, while the Southern Methodists sent Rev. Mr. Hendry, of Shanghai, and the Amoy friends, Rev. Mr. Studley, of the Reformed Mission, and our Japan mission was ably represented by Rev. Mr. Draper and his devoted mother, and Miss Hampton. The local missions—American Board and Church of England—were present at many meetings.

A BUDDHIST TEMPLE

It was a great week for our native Christians. Men, women and children were in gala dress and carried shining faces. The very spirit of the occasion, the jubilee, was in the face and whole personelle. The papers reviewing the work were most valuable and encouraging to faith. I wished that all the workers of the past, who had toiled amid such difficulties with so little return, but who never lost their faith and courage, and that those of the future, who cannot know by experience what it costs to found such a work, could have been present to hear the review of years, and then to have shared with us that Jubilee Sunday, when the new church was crowded by eager listeners, and seen the fine intelligent faces of men and women and children—even to the fourth generation of Christians, fully half of them women and girls—all ready to hear Po' Ling Sing Sang (Baldwin Teacher), who had come to them thirty-nine years before, and now after eighteen years absence, was to preach the jubilee sermon in their own tongue with no interpreter. Two great Sabbaths we had: Conference Sunday, when our Bishop Joyce gave us a great sermon, Dr. Wosley, interpreting the spirit as well as the meaning, and Jubilee Sunday, when their old comrade went back in the history of the mission where no one in all our work in China could go, and told them of the foundation work sought out through tribulations, through illness, death and sorrow, and came on to their own fathers and mothers who had such a glorious part in the work. Some went back and returned to the present with memories most precious. Dr. Gilym and Sites, and many others, and Dr. McClay, still with us, but so far away, and the devoted women and the dear little children lying in our mission cemetery—did not they all have a part in this victory? Over the hill, within sight of our own little cemetery, is another, that of the English community. In it—in a long row—are the graves of the eleven martyrs of the Hwasang massacre of three years ago. All of them workers of the Church of England Mission, with which we have been pleasantly associated these many years. Mr. Baldwin proposed that after our Sunday morning jubilee service we should all, foreign and native, go in quiet procession with flowers to the graves of these friends who had given their lives for this people. Bishop Joyce and Mr. Baldwin leading, we made a great procession to our own cemetery, where we placed flowers upon the graves of those most dear to us.

MRS. S. L. BALDWIN.

. . . Three Great Christian Charities . . .

OUR Saviour said: "Be ye merciful even as your Father in heaven is merciful," "Give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven," "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, . . . ye have done it unto Me." Providentially THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was called to identify itself with the three great charities described in these pages, and during the years that have passed, God has been pleased to so abundantly own and bless the work, that to-day thousands are ministered unto, the fallen are raised, the poor relieved, the destitute clothed and fed, the sick cared for, the repentant encouraged, the backslider reclaimed, and all who are willing, helped onward and upward to higher, better, nobler things, and to a purer, cleaner and holier life.

The following pages reveal Christian activity of the widest and most effective kind—practical and helpful, earnest and consecrated, engaged in with loving hearts, open hands, willing feet, and over and above all, in the name and strength of Him who, while on earth, went about doing good as he had opportunity. Glorious work this work for the Master—beneficent in its influence, blessed in its results, uplifting, strengthening, soul-saving and life-redeeming! Doing good to the body, doing good to the soul; helping some poor prodigal son, some wayward daughter, some unfortunate child. Read the story, ponder it, and then rejoice with us in the great things that God hath wrought, and according to your means, contribute freely, that the work may expand and develop, and that you may share with us the blessing of Him who "came to seek and to save the lost," and who for our sake became poor that we through his poverty might be rich.

A Light-House for Lost Men

The Wondrous Story of Twenty Years of Rescue Work in the Old Bowery Mission, New York City

THERE is probably not a country under the sun to which the Gospel of Jesus Christ has come, where the name of the Bowery Mission of New York is unknown. It stands for years of earnest consecrated Gospel work, and its converts are scattered all over the world. One meets them in Europe, in India, in Asia, in Australia; and in our own land they are to be found in every State, holding steadfastly to the truth as they accepted it in the grand old Mission, that has stood these two decades like a Christian Gibraltar amid the swelling tides of sin that dash against it. To the living army of men who have there been brought to the Saviour, it shines like a blessed beacon-light amid the darkness of sin. To others, who have passed all earthly struggle, it was a gateway to heaven.

WAYFARERS AT THE DOOR OF THE BOWERY MISSION

A Humble Beginning

Twenty years ago, two life-long Christian workers, Rev. A. G. Ruliffson and Mrs. Ruliffson, decided to open a Mission on the East-side of New York. They took counsel with Jerry McAuley, of the Water Street Mission on the matter, and the first suggestion of a Mission on the Bowery was the outcome of those talks. "If I could be the means, under God," said Mr. McAuley, "of establishing a mission on the Bowery, that is all I would ask on earth." His desire was gratified. Soon a preliminary Mission was started in a small room at No. 14 Bowery. Mr. Ruliffson and his good wife were almost alone at first; but soon a band of earnest men assembled to help them, by personal effort, gifts and prayers. In a short time it became necessary to seek more commodious quarters. With the financial assistance of Mr. Tibbals, No. 36 Bowery was rented, and there the Bowery Mission and Young Men's Home was established, with Mr. J. Ward Childs as Superintendent. For a number of years, the blessed work of rescue was carried on in that neighborhood, and the labors of the workers were attended with much blessing.

Its Later Development

With the death of the head of the Mission, in 1894, there was a disposition on the part of some who had supported the work, to abandon it, and at this crisis in its affairs, the friends of the Mission made appeal to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in its behalf. Four years before, as Dr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, returning from his tour of Palestine, was about to visit the site of the church at Ephesus, he stopped a day at Smyrna. In the evening he attended a Mission service there, conducted by an English sailor, who in the course of his testimony stated that for six years he had walked the Bowery of New York, a confirmed drunkard. One night, while under the influence of liquor, "he walked into the Bowery Mission, and there found the Saviour, whom ever since he had been holding up as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." So deeply impressed was Dr. Klopsch by this testimony that five years afterward, when he heard of the decision to close the Bowery Mission, he determined that, cost what it might, the old Gospel Lighthouse on the Bowery should continue to shed its light abroad, and its ever open doors should never be closed against any soul that desired to be restored and to flee from the wrath to come. In 1895, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD assumed charge of the Mission, and shortly after it was incorporated, when the following persons cheerfully consented to act as a Board:

THE MISSION ENTRANCE

INCORPORATORS:

REV. JOHN HALL, D.D.,
REV. T. DEWITT TALMAGE, D. D.,
MRS. SARAH J. BIRD,
REV. DAVID JAS. BURRELL, D. D.,
REV. C. H. MEAD, D. D.,
REV. JOSIAH STRONG, D. D.,
MRS. AMELIA E. BARR,
REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D. D.,
HENRY EDWARDS ROWLAND, ESQ.,
B. FAY MILLS,
REV. A. C. DIXON, D. D.
REV. STEPHEN MERRITT,
REV. R. S. MCARTHUR, D. D.,
REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D. D.
REV. JAMES M. KING, D. D.,

LOUIS KLOPSCH,	President
B. J. FERNIE,	Vice-President
G. H. SANDISON,	Secretary
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,	Treasurer
JOHN H. WYBURN,	Superintendent

Many friends of the work wrote their hearty approval of the undertaking and pastors, evangelists, business men and all who were interested in the moral purification of the East-side, gave unqualified commendation. Since then, every successive year has brought increase of spiritual blessing. The Mission has become a very focus of Christian activities and many of its converts have become workers in their turn and gone out into various fields to labor for Christ. Some are preachers, in charge of congregations in distant states; others are evangelists, telling to audiences the story of that full and free salvation which brightened their own lives and brought them enduring happiness, and still others are active soul-winners in their various church organizations. Since the Mission was first established, some Seventy Thousand of those who attended its services have become inquirers of the way of salvation, and the multitude of converts that go out to scatter the Gospel abroad is being constantly augmented. These converts are of almost every faith and nationality under the sun:—Jew, Gentile Mohammedan, Catholic and Protestant. Their changed lives and earnest, efficient service are the best testimonials to the reality of their conversion. Drunkards, wanderers, criminals, helpless men who had lost their moorings and were drifting to perdition, men and lads estranged from home and friends, and thousands of others in various stages of the downward career, have found in the Bowery Mission a blessed haven of peace and the entrance to a new and better life.

"HANDS UP FOR PRAYER," AT THE BOWERY MISSION

THE GREAT ORGAN IN THE MISSION HALL

"Waifs and Strays" of the Bowery

There is no depth of human misery and degradation so low that it cannot be reached by the love of Christ. In the carrying out of His work, those of His servants who are faithful do not hesitate at personal sacrifice, peril or discomfort. In every city of large population there are many men who, having gone down step by step in the paths of sin, have at last reached a depth beyond which it would seem impossible to go. They are the moral shipwrecks who have been swallowed up in the maelstrom on whose edge they dallied until hopelessly engulfed. At last, ruined and forsaken, they are cast up, like wreckage, upon the outer coasts of society, to be turned from with loathing by their fellowmen, as something too vile for recognition. They have well-nigh reaped the harvest of their sins, and it would seem that nothing remained but a wretched close to a career so miserable and forlorn. But

"There's a wideness in God's mercy
Like the wideness of the sea," and many of those poor, forsaken, miserable, stranded waifs have, through that mercy, been cast up at the doors of the Bowery Mission. Rejected elsewhere, they have found there a welcome. Their poor clothing and filthy condition have been the cause of other doors being shut in their faces; for even in mission work, it is customary to draw the line at those who have fallen so very low as to make their very touch contamination. But the Bowery Mission, like a lifeboat on its merciful errand, plunges down into the lowest depths, if by so doing it may bring up some poor, sinking fellow-mortal into the light of God's love. Are they sick and penniless? It cares for them as tenderly as if they were brothers. Ragged? It is never without a garment for those who need one

CLEANSING AND FUMIGATING CLOTHING

AN EVENING GOSPEL MEETING AT THE OLD MISSION

IN THE READING ROOM OF THE OLD MISSION to shut out the piercing winds of winter. Are they even foul and verminous? It sends them to a place where they are thoroughly cleaned, and where their clothing is put into a wire "cradle," inclosed in a hot-air chamber and subjected to a temperature that effectually destroys all cause of discomfort. Are they idle and despairing? It aids them in finding employment. Are they sin-sick and sore, weary of the hard battle of life? It leads them gently and kindly to the foot of the Cross, where they may lay down their burden of guilt, and begin a new and better existence.

The Gospel Services

Such, in brief, is the work of the Bowery Mission. From its hospitable doors at No. 55 Bowery it has never turned away the hungry and the penniless, although it does not forget that its chief object is to raise the fallen by assisting them to be helpful and self-supporting.

The Gospel Services every evening and all day Sunday have been the means of leading to salvation thousands who were on the verge of ruin and disgrace. A word in season, kindly spoken, has turned many a man from the commission of some contemplated crime, and thus saved many a precious soul. Some of the experiences related at those meetings are intensely interesting and may be regarded as extraordinary instances of the working of the Holy Spirit on the hearts of sinful men. The effect they produce on others, who are still living in sin, can hardly be adequately described. At these gatherings there is a genuine spiritual fervency that is rarely equaled. Writing of one of these meetings, Mr. S. H. Hadley, the well-known rescue worker, says:

"As soon as the doors are opened a great crowd, which has been moving to and fro along the sidewalk from early morning (until far past midnight), begins to come into this meeting. On these benches, with that ragged, unkempt throng, sits a man, a graduate from college, once handsome and bright, but now covered with rags and vermin, and his face broken out with disease, yet there is something about his air that shows that he has been tenderly reared, and to-day some loving mother may be wondering where her boy is. How glad she would be to know that he is in the Bowery Mission, where kind eyes are watching him, and warm hearts are trying to bring him to Christ!

"There is a man further along in crime and sin. He has come in half drunk to take a quiet sleep, but he is awakened by the singing, and is apparently interested. Each one of these men has a personal history. All over this land homes are represented there—vacant homes, sorrowing homes. How many thousands of prayers are answered that ascend from these earnest gatherings in the old Bowery Mission!

"The Superintendent takes up a hymn book and announces a hymn. The boys all find the place, and the organ peals forth its melody, and every one joins in. How they sing! They roll out the glorious rescue songs on the Bowery. The passer-by stops to listen. The poor frail girl, as she strolls along, casting furtive glances from right to left—she stops and listens to the song.

> There is a fountain filled with blood
> Drawn from Immanuel's veins.

What is this memory it must bring to her? She wipes away a tear from her eye, and then, as if ashamed of her emotion, hurries on, and is lost in the throng. After a few hymns are sung the leader says: 'Now, we are going to unite in prayer. Let every head be reverently bowed, and you who know Jesus pray to-night that the Holy Spirit may overtake some dear hearts in this room, and bring them to repentance.' A few minutes are spent, and three or four lift up their hearts—converts of the Mission, for in the Bowery the workers are the converts.

Reading the Old Book

"Then the Superintendent takes up the Book of books, opens it, and reads the Scripture lesson for the evening. Another hymn is sung, and then he says: 'Now, brethren, we are going to spend a while in testifying for Jesus. Let those who can witness for God stand up and tell what they know about Jesus.' One after another arises, and the first man says with faltering lips: 'A year and six months and two nights ago I came into this place, drunk and literally dying. I walked the streets for many nights. The singing attracted my attention, and, brethren, Jesus must have got hold of my heart. The testimonies interested me and gave me hope that I, too, could be saved, and I knelt down when the invitation was given, and, in the best way I knew how, gave God my heart. I have not wanted to drink from that day to this; the appetite has been removed that cursed my life so many years, and I do not want rum now.'

"Another man says: 'Twenty-four hours ago I gave my heart to God. Pray for me.'

"And so the testimonies go on. We could fill columns and columns with the testimonies of one night's service.

"Then Superintendent John Wyburn rises, and all the house becomes still.

"'Men, listen to me,' he says. 'We are going to pray now, and I want you men to gather around me here, as many as can; as many as feel as though they need Jesus to help them, come and He will save you. You need not be afraid to come. It is the greatest step you ever took, and Jesus will hear your prayer. I was a drunkard—He heard my prayer. Jesus met me that night, and I have not wanted a drink in over ten years. And He will save you as He saved me. Won't you come? Who will come?'"

"One after another rises and comes. Then a hymn is sung, such as your father and mother heard in the old church in the country, and it rings out with glorious inspiration and invitation. One after another comes out into the aisle, and walks up, and kneels down at the precious mercy seat of the Bowery Mission.

"Then they are asked to take their seats, and the Superintendent sits down, and, before the whole audience, asks them a few simple questions about their determination, and tries to encourage them, and quotes a verse or two of Scripture. He then asks them to stand up and tell what they intend to do." Seldom, indeed, does such a meeting close without some poor wayfarer seeking the Saviour and experiencing sound conversion.

The World's Wickedest Thoroughfare

The Bowery has been justly denominated "the wickedest thoroughfare in the world." From end to end, the great highway was, in other days, a carnival of vice and a festering sore upon the face of the greatest municipality in America. The annual tribute of lives given to the fabled Minotaur was trifling in comparison with the gluttonous demands of this monster of sin, which swallowed up its thousands every year. Young men and old, men with gray hair and tottering steps, and some, too, who were fresh from the old home and the mother's kiss, there fell victims to the fascinations and allurements of sin. Lives were blighted, characters ruined, reputations forever lost, souls loaded with sin and bodies dragged prematurely down to the grave by its accursed pleasures. It was the resort of the vicious and the degraded from all parts of the globe. Its fame was notorious, and it was a fatal magnet, which drew to itself the weak and the innocent, as well as the vicious. In its drinking dens, crimes were hatched and dark deeds plotted, and its dance halls, with their flaming lights and bewildering scenes, lured foolish victims to sure moral and physical destruction. To save both souls and bodies from such a fate, the Bowery Mission reached out hands of rescue and blessing. Set in the centre of this Pandemonium of crime and immorality, it has lifted up the Cross of Christ. Its influence upon the morals, not of the Bowery alone, but of the whole city, has been distinctly felt, and that influence is broadening and deepening year by year. Its bands of workers have gone out into the dives, the gambling places, the vile resorts, proclaiming the Gospel, and through their instrumentality many have been literally "plucked as brands from the burning," who would otherwise have gone down to their fate unrescued.

A BOWERY MISSION RESTAURANT IN 1898

Echoes of Rescue

Most of the men who come to the Bowery Mission have been truly feeding upon husks. They have come to the turning-point in their lives; they have reached the very bottom and can go no further into the depths of human degradation and misery. Hardly an evening passes in which from ten to a score such men do not profess conversion. "Do such converts remain true to their allegiance?" is a natural question for the reader to ask. It can be stated with absolute truthfulness that, while some back-slide into sin, a goodly percentage do remain steadfast. In illustration, we give below, in the briefest outline, the facts concerning a few such conversions, and their subsequent outcome, as learned from entirely reliable sources, for the Mission endeavors to keep in touch with its converts wherever they may go:

An Educated Pharmacist, an infidel, on the eve of committing suicide, entered the Mission, heard the Word from the text, "What shall I do to be saved?" became converted, accepted the Saviour and is now a redeemed man.

A Young Man, reared under Christian influences in the West, went to Chicago, secured employment with a leading dry goods firm, soon entered a life of dissipation, became a defaulter and for some years followed a sinful and dissipated life, indulging in gambling, drinking and kindred vices. Finally, homeless and friendless, he entered the Mission, was converted and redeemed, is now steadily employed, and living an upright, Christian life.

A Poor Homeless Drunkard, while wandering upon the Bowery, heard the singing within the Mission, entered, was redeemed and is now restored to his family. He has found steady employment. He induced his wife to come to the Mission, and she, too, now rejoices in the salvation which is Jesus Christ. The result is a happy, Christian home.

A Man From Philadelphia, formerly a postal clerk, but who, through participation in some election frauds, had been sent to prison and gradually drifted from bad to worse, found himself at last on the Bowery. He entered the Bowery Mission, felt the power of God to save through Jesus Christ, accepted and has since been restored to family, home and friends.

Two Men, one having spent eighteen years of his life behind prison bars and the other having been in prison six times, found their way to the Bowery Mission, heard of the Saviour and are now redeemed men. Both are respectably employed.

A Poor, Broken Wretch, with whom the world had gone all wrong, and whose hope had given way, decided to kill himself. He procured a pistol and was on the way to the docks, intending to make a sure end of himself, by shooting and drowning. As he tottered down the Bowery, deaf to almost everything, he passed the open door of the Mission, and a strain of music fell upon his ears. He stopped a moment, listened, and without thinking what he did, went in. Presently the clouded brain comprehended what was going on; he became interested and, after listening still further and being talked with kindly, he put his suicidal purpose aside. Again and again he came to the Mission, and at last found peace in believing.

Striking Testimonies

Some of the testimonies given at the meetings in the Mission are eloquent in their simple, earnest way of telling about the speaker's experience in the paths of sin and his ultimate redemption. We have space for only a few of these testimonies, though hundreds might be given.

A Converted Outcast, who became a pastor, said:

"A few years ago a man, miserable and wretched, under deep conviction, and realizing his helplessness, and that without a Saviour he was lost, wandered past that lighthouse, the Bowery Mission. Attracted by the singing, which he had often heard before unheeded, this night the Spirit of God constrained him to go in, and there he heard that 'Whosoever' meant himself personally; that the loving invitation 'Come unto Me, and there receive rest, peace and happiness,' meant himself also. Taking God at His word, he came to Jesus as he was.

"I was that poor outcast, and now by the grace of God I am pastor of the M. E. Church at Imperial, Neb. I am the only preacher up here, i. e., in Lamar, and have the western part of the county of Chase. Services are held in the court house morning and evening, and were you to see the number who come out to hear the Gospel, you would say truly the harvest is plentiful."

One Who Has Been Redeemed after a long career of sin said:

"Born in a Western State, I graduated in the law department of a flourishing Western college, finally beginning the practice of law in my native State. Business grew until it yielded a respectable income. I became a member of the Church, and up to my twenty-fifth year all was comparatively well. I then made a new departure by joining a company of young men who often sought solace in drink. Now I am the only survivor of the once gay and dissipated band. My second quarter of a century was filled with shortcomings and periodical reformations. All my efforts were void and fruitless. I was gradually wandering on the broad road that leads to destruction, and unable to stop. Coming to New York, an opportunity enabled me to attend a meeting at the Old Bowery Mission, where I heard the testimonies of men who claimed to have been even farther from our Father's loving care than I, and who were now living monuments of the wonderful salvation of our Master. With a sincere heart I sought divine assistance to strike off my yoke of sin, and received an inexplicable blessing very soon thereafter. The old desires are gone!

GIVING OUT TESTAMENTS TO THE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS AT THE BOWERY MISSION

A FORMER MISSION CHEF

MRS. SARAH J. BIRD
The "Mother of the Bowery Boys"

A DRUNKARD NOW REDEEMED said: "I believe I was the most persistent drinking man I ever saw, when I look back over my life. I had no excuse for having become a drunkard. My father was a minister, but died when I was three years old. I had a Christian mother. But her influence was apparently soon forgotten, for it was not long until I discontinued going to church and began to break the Sabbath by going to theatres and frequenting saloons, and before many months I had acquired an appetite for strong drink. Still, I was prosperous, but the saloon keepers got my money nearly as soon as I did. I married a faithful, earnest Christian girl, who made my house all that a comfortable and cheerful home should be, and when I fell into the grasp of drink for a second time she did not scold and upbraid, but pleaded with me lovingly, and knelt at my feet and prayed earnestly to God to change my course. For a time I seemed all right, and if I had then made an earnest appeal to God to give me strength I would never have become a wanderer and a tramp on the streets of New York.

MRS. BIRD'S MOTHERS' MEETING

"The day came when my employer discharged me. My faithful wife died, and when I came to myself it seemed as if I was without a hope on earth. I drifted about in Milwaukee and Chicago for a year and a half, and later came to New York. I wandered into the Bowery Mission on Sunday, September 25, looking for something to eat, which was given me, and there it was that I saw and heard men standing up and testifying to the wonderful redeeming power of God's saving and keeping them from lives of drunkenness and sin, misery and degradation. This was a wonderful revelation. I returned to the evening service, heard more testimonies, and became deeply convicted of sin. God gave me the courage to ask Him for Christ's sake to forgive my sins and take away the terrible appetite for drink. My sins were forgiven; the old desire for rum left me, and I became 'a new creature' in Christ Jesus. I now lack for no good thing which I need. I keep my eyes fixed upon Jesus, and daily ask his strength and guidance. Some day I hope to reach that promised land."

Reunited by the Bowery Mission

Among the many instances of reunited families, whose members, after long years of separation and wandering, have been brought back to home and friends through the instrumentality of the Bowery Mission, there is probably none that is more interesting and instructive than the following, which is truly the narrative of a repentant prodigal. The story is given in a letter written by Helen H. Holcomb, an American missionary at Jhansi, India. She says:

"Two years ago, while on an evangelistic tour in a native State in the heart of India, we spent several days in an 'inspection bungalow,' provided by the English Government for the use of its officers when on duty. This bungalow was a short distance outside the walled city of Dalia. One day we noticed two European gentlemen in the vicinity of the bungalow. One of the gentlemen learned that the two occupants of the bungalow were the traveling agents of a large jewelry establishment in Madras, waiting for a command to visit the palace and display their wares. One day, one of the gentlemen walked over to our bungalow, and asking to see the gentleman whose acquaintance he had made, communicated to him the contents of a letter which he held in his hand, and which had been forwarded to him from Madras. The letter was from the Bowery Mission, and told him that his son, who had been a prodigal, and had sorely grieved the hearts of those who loved him, had 'come to himself,' was ready to acknowledge his wrongdoing and longed to return to his father's house. 'His repentance seems sincere,' continued the writer of the letter. 'He feels that his Heavenly Father has forgiven him, and he hopes that in the heart of his earthly father, there is also a place for the repentant wanderer.' The letter bore the signature of the 'Mother of the Bowery Boys,' Mrs. Sarah J. Bird. 'I should like to communicate with my son,' said the stranger, 'but I do not know where to forward my reply. Where is the Bowery Mission?' he asked in an eager way. When he had received the desired information he turned back to his lodging house with a light heart. He could now tell the penitent prodigal that a father's heart and a father's house were open to receive him."

Philanthropic Work

In addition to the spiritual work, the Bowery Mission has been in recent years, since it came under the management of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a channel of vast and far-reaching philanthropic and benevolent enterprises. In seasons of suffering among the poor, during the bleak winter weather, it has fed daily hundreds of families who otherwise might have starved. It has afforded shelter, "without money and without price," to thousands of homeless and penniless men and boys, and has never turned away from its hospitable door the hungry or way-worn applicant, either by day or night. To the homeless its light has been a beacon, even through the darkest storms of winter. During a season of special severity it provided substantial means for thousands of poor families at cost, and at one period, when there were over 40,000 idle men in New York, it supplied meals to nearly 2,000 persons daily, each averaging the price of a single drink of liquor. At Thanksgiving times it has brought joy into hundreds of homes of poverty and suffering by sending a bountiful supply of food. At each recurring Christmas the poor children of the East Side tenements, thanks to the tender thoughtfulness of Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, are always remembered. Mrs. Bird has been affectionately called "The Mother of the Bowery boys," and her many years of devoted service in rescue work form one of the brightest records of Christian effort in the great metropolis. Her labors among the fallen of both sexes have made her known and beloved throughout the land. Her Christmas Tree at the old Bowery Mission, loaded with useful gifts, has for a number of years been an object of delight to those little ones whose lives are usually joyless indeed. In these and various other ways it has striven to minister to the material wants of the needy, while endeavoring also to reach their hearts with the message of God's love for all his children.

MRS. BIRD'S GIRL'S CLASS

MRS. BIRD'S MEN'S MEETING

In the last published annual statement of the Bowery Mission the following figures appear, which give the reader some idea of the vast spiritual and philanthropic agencies that have been actively at work there during many years:

Gospel meetings held	437
Aggregate attendance	80,239
Professed conversions	5,437
Men and boys sheltered in lodging house	40,943
Meals served in restaurant	628,673
Patients treated in free dispensary	2,300
Employment found for	1,200
Kindergarten attendance (3 months)	770
Attendance at Mrs. Bird's women's meetings	2,300
Professed conversion at same	250
Free meals	50,850

This is the showing of a single season; but what shall be said of the twenty years of consecrated, unceasing labor on these lines—twenty years of effort for soul-and-body reclamation? If the saved from the old Bowery Mission could be now assembled, they would constitute a mighty host; its beneficiaries, whom it has lifted up from the mire of shame and a dissolute life, and restored to respectability and usefulness, would be an army indeed. Many have passed away, but a multitude [illegible] of thousands, survive to declare, in home and distant lands, their love for the Mission and their undying gratitude for the helping hand and kindly word it extended to them in their time of sorest need. Better than all—the precious, never-dying souls that have there found peace in believing; who shall count them? Such are the trophies of the Bowery Mission in its long battle for the Gospel and humanity.

To the friends of Christian work everywhere, and especially to those who have at heart the cause of the poor, the neglected and the morally shipwrecked, we make earnest appeal in behalf of the lost men and boys of the Bowery. They are our brothers—fallen, degraded and apparently forsaken of God and man—yet still our brothers. They need our uplifting hands of love, our voices of cheer, our earnest prayers, and our material assistance to restore them to manhood and to win them to Christ. This is the work in which the Bowery Mission desires all who read this paper to cordially help. We want your consecrated co-operation, in the efforts to reclaim these lost ones, homeless, shepherdless and wandering in sin. It is a burden laid upon the hearts of God's people in all stations and conditions of life. None are so poor that they cannot help a little in this redeeming crusade. None should despise the star which may be set in His crown as the result of being the means of saving one poor wretched creature from sin and despair.

REV. A. G. RULIFFSON, FOUNDER — JOHN H. WYBURN, SUPT.

We ask you, then, to take up this burden with us, as a precious privilege and to do what lies in your power for the work. We wish you also to feel that the Bowery Mission has a special claim on your prayers, and that you may unite with us in asking for it the largest blessing and the in-bringing of many souls to the Kingdom.

Your mite may accomplish much. The gift you send may, under Divine blessing, be the means of rescuing one poor, shipwrecked fellow-man. It may prove the turning point in the life of some wayward, homeless lad, who, coming in from the comfortless street, can find shelter and friends under the shadow of the hospitable Mission Lighthouse. It may turn a man from crime, win a hopeless, friendless one from suicide, a sin-burdened one from that despair which leads to the worst of all calamities—the loss of the immortal soul. You cannot afford to be unrepresented in such a work as this. Whatever your means, you are able to do your share, and to acknowledge God's goodness and Jesus' redeeming love to you, by "passing it on" in the form of help to one who is more needy and who has not yet come into the light. Give, then, as the burden is laid upon your heart, and you may be sure that your gift will be welcomed.

AN "AFTER MEETING" AT THE CLOSE OF THE BOWERY MISSION REGULAR SERVICE

There are doubtless many who read this who may be in a position to give systematically for the support of a work so Christ-like in character. To all such we would say: Give, if you can, your pledge for one dollar a week. One dollar a week will feed a hungry man or boy; one dollar a week will give him a shelter from the street; one dollar a week will keep him clean and decently clad. But your offering, whatever it may be, will be gratefully acknowledged. For the convenience of those who desire to give systematically a pledge coupon is appended, which may be filled up and torn off and mailed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

"Throw out the Life-Line across the dark wave.
There is a brother whom some one should save:
Somebody's brother! Oh, who, then will dare
To throw out the Life-Line, his peril to share?

Throw out the Life-Line to danger-fraught men.
Sinking in anguish where you've never been.
Winds of temptation and billows of woe
Will soon hurl them out where the dark waters flow.

Soon will the season of rescue be o'er:
Soon will they drift to eternity's shore.
Haste, then, my brother; no time for delay.
But throw out the Life-Line and save them to-day."

All contributions will be duly acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which will take pleasure in forwarding to the givers, from time to time, reports of the Mission's work, if desired, and will also answer any inquiries that may be made concerning this progress.

I hereby Pledge myself to give the Sum of ..... weekly or monthly

in aid of the Gospel and Rescue Work of THE BOWERY MISSION for a term of twelve months, and enclose herewith $ ..... to apply on account.

Name .....

Street ..... Town .....

Date ..... 1899 State .....

. . . A Children's Paradise . . .

"The Christian Herald's" Fresh-Air Work for the Boys and Girls of the New York Tenement Poor

"MAY I GO, TOO?"

OUR COTTAGES: FAITH, HOPE AND CHARITY

A LONELY WAIF

A summer visitor to New York city, looking across the way from a window in Cooper Union Library, would be puzzled to note how children flock to the Bible House between the hours of eleven and one. They come in squads of five, six, fifteen, twenty, in charge of older people; or forlorn mites struggle along by themselves; they are evidently children of the poor. Other groups who enter have a prosperous appearance; they are brown, ruddy, well clad, laden with fruits and flowers, or bags evidently containing treasures. If the visitor questions a New Yorker, he will be informed that he is watching the initial operations of one of the most interesting and excellent charities of the metropolis. The children thronging the Bible House are incoming and outgoing guests of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S summer Home for children at Nyack-on-the-Hudson. The adults in charge are missionaries who bring them from tenement districts; or caretakers who conduct them back and forth between the Home and the city.

For every detachment of twenty-five children brought back from the Home, a corresponding number is returned, the population being kept at 150 to 200. Each child stays ten days. Beneficiaries must be between the ages of five and twelve. Candidates undergo a medical examination at the Bible House, which is the collecting and distributing point; those showing symptoms of contagious diseases are necessarily excluded, but are told to try again when better.

The Cry of the Children

About 7,000 children die in New York city (not Greater New York) every summer.

The conditions of life, in New York, where an immense population is congested on a narrow island, are exceptionally hard on children of the poor. Childhood's playground is the burning pavement, the sweltering alley, the narrow, ill-smelling court in the centre of the tall building where people live thick as bees in a hive. Tier on tier of fire-escapes rise above the court; laundered clothes on lines strung from window to window drip down; no bit of green grass is to be seen. Perhaps, on some fire-escape, a sickly-looking plant puts forth an adventurous blossom. Except for some poor bloom like this, hundreds of these children never know what a flower is. Many are born, live their short, troubled lives and die, without ever having seen a green field or played under the shade of a friendly tree. They are prematurely old; they lug around little brothers and sisters before they are able to carry such burdens. Many of them don't know how to play, though they may know how to drink. You see them sitting on barroom steps with babies in their arms. Some are generous in giving baby beer; they know no better.

From such environments the very frailest and neediest are gathered and taken to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Summer Home on the Hudson, where nearly 10,000 children have spent ten days each during the past four summers. Many when received were little bundles of rags. Every child went back to the city clad in good, strong garments.

In windows and fire-escapes overlooking courts people are crowded; palid, sick folks; patient, laborious mothers plying needle and thread; inside hot stuffy rooms, women bend

END VIEW OF A DORMITORY

THE MATRON'S HEADQUARTERS

OUR KINDERGARTEN QUARTER

THE SIDEWALKS OF NEW YORK

over washtubs and ironing boards, and the thermometer at 100 (or 111, as last summer) in the shade! In these stifling rooms are children too weak to go out, and children cooped up by conscientious mothers, who seek to protect them from influences of street and court.

In the efforts of Dr. Louis Klopsch, proprietor of the paper, to seek out cases representing the profoundest want, he has been ably assisted by the city pastors and missionaries. The Home's guests are principally drawn from diminutive, malodorous dwellings, in which six or more people live, eat and sleep, and in which all the cooking, washing and ironing are done. Departure of some inmates leaves more breathing space and more food to those that remain, and the relief afforded to thousands of hard-working, overburdened tenement mothers is incalculable.

The journey, consisting of a car ride to the River, a sail on the steamer Chrystenah up the noble Hudson, and a wagonette drive through flowery lanes and lovely woods, is an excursion of delight to the waifs whose "wide, wide world" has been stifling court or alley. Irrepressible Ohs! and Ahs! greet the first wild flowers sighted; the driver must needs stop his horses and let the children get out and help themselves to daisies and black-eyed Susans. One child, seeing a field of daisies, exclaimed, "Oh, teacher, may I get out and pick a daisy? I'll only take just one!" Another little girl in reply to the statement of one of the children that she never had enjoyed a carriage ride before, said: "I had a carriage ride the day mamma was buried." By the time the wagonette reaches the Home childish faces are peeping through masses of flowers, and childish voices are piping every tune they know. If among the children some have been to the Home before, the hills will echo back pretty Gospel songs, and this also is sure to be sung:

Three cheers for the Home on the Hudson,
Three cheers for the Home on the Hill,
Three cheers for the patrons who brought us,
We give with a hearty good will!

And they shout this: "Here we are! Here we are! C. H., C. H., Ha! ha ha!" The welkin rings when they drive up. A joyous company on the lawn waits their arrival; greetings are shouted; children run pell-mell to the gate; Housemother Collins stands in the door with smiling welcome. Under direction, children fall into line, and to the beat of a drum (the drummer is a very proud and important little boy) march to supper in the marquee tent overlooking the river. Around the tables little heads are bowed, little hands folded, and lead by "Teachers" children sing:

God is great, God is good,
And we thank him for this food.
By His grace must all be fed,
Give us, Lord, our daily bread.

Such a nice supper for hungry little folks who never know what it is to have enough to eat! Abundant bread and butter, all the fresh creamy milk one can drink, fruit and cookies. After supper, a little play on the velvety grass, a brief prayer and song service in the pretty chapel; and then the little lambs are folded for the night in the great dormitories abloom with snowy cots, where cool, sweet winds from river and mountain sweep through wide windows, and moonlight and starlight shine down like a benediction. Soft-voiced "Teachers" (children call every woman on the place "teacher") have helped them undress, told them pretty stories, and taught them to say "Our Father."

A MEAL [illegible]

In the morning, bird songs wake them. They look out of the window. The grass is there—just as it was last night—and one may roll over and over in it. Swings in ever so many trees! One cannot get on one's clothes fast enough! Breakfast, and plenty of it! The simple, wholesome fare is absorbed with amusing and pathetic eagerness. How big and beautiful the world is! One finds that out running before "teacher" up hill and down dale, and riding around the country with her in the wagonette. Plucking wildflowers, weaving daisy chains, bathing in the pool (which belongs to boys one day, girls the next), playing ring-a-rosy, fill the merry hours. How is it that such blessings have come to us? the children ask. Why have people

TAKING CARE OF BABY BROTHER

HAPPY TIMES UNDER THE TREES AND IN THE "SCUPS

A WEE [illegible]

MISS DELANEY ASKING, "DO YOU WANT TO GO TO THE CHILDREN'S HOME?

brought and sent us here? When teachers explain how for love's sake, kind friends who serve Jesus have remembered them, life takes on a brighter look to the tenement waif of yesterday whom nobody seemed to care for, and the little hymn they sing in the chapel every day, "Suffer the children to come to the Master" has a new meaning.

Influence of the Home

The influence of the Home in developing good citizenship is an important feature; particularly when it is considered that many nationalities are represented there, as many as fifteen being counted under the roof at one time. A number of little Cubans, orphans and children of refugees, have been guests. Running up the flag, singing "America" and other patriotic songs, is a constant exercise and delight. The Fourth of July is a red letter day. The house is decorated with flags, a feast of unheard-of dainties is provided, folks from New York, from neighboring towns and hamlets, and from all the country round, come to see the little folks have a good time. In the evening, there are fireworks. The Proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the Editors, and representatives from the business office, are all on hand to help make the children happy.

This is the fifth summer of this fresh air work. In childish parlance, it might be said that the Home "just opened and growed itself," since it was the natural and beautiful development or diversion of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Food Fund. In the terrible winter of 1893-4, when there was almost unprecedented suffering among the poor, and the paper, with the co-operation of its readers, was distributing coal, food, and clothing to thousands of destitute homes (actually supporting over 12,000 souls), the needs and hardships of the children were pressed so forcibly upon notice, that when summer came, it was determined to carry the relief work into the heated term and see what could be done by giving little unfortunates rest, food, good air, and childhood's right, play, at a country home. Rev. Dr. A. D. Lawrence Jewett, who was in hearty sympathy with the work, placed his beautiful estate, Mont Lawn, Nyack-on-the-Hudson, in New York State, at the disposition of the projectors for a nominal rental; residence, annex, lodge and chapel were fully furnished and equipped by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; trained workers put in charge, and little ones gathered from the highways and byways of the slums, and made as happy and comfortable as love and kindness could make them. Readers of the paper who had contributed to the winter relief work lent the new plan abundant sympathy and fullest approval. They wrote letters about it, contributed to it, and have wanted it continued and enlarged from year to year. Bereaved mothers remember it in yearly memorial gifts; parents with healthy, happy children around them express gratitude to God by sending one, two, three (sometimes as many as twelve and occasionally more) of these little children of the poor to the Home each summer. Junior Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues, Helping Hands, Sunday Schools and Sunday School classes and various organized bodies of children all over the country, claim the privilege of helping in this good work for children, while individual children proudly send small sums of their own earning. Givers are often put in direct communication with beneficiaries, the little ones able to scribble taking great delight in inditing wonderful scrawls to benefactors. Other givers come in personal touch with the children they are helping by visiting the Home, where friends are ever most welcome.

MISS COLLINS, MATRON

Miss Helen Collins, the Housemother, who has been in charge of the Home for four years, is a trained missionary of large experience; her assistants are consecrated young women; among them are kindergartners and public and Sunday school teachers. The children are considered too precious a charge to be confided to any but the most skillful and conscientious care. It takes intelligent, earnest and consecrated work to make a lifelong impression upon a child's nature in ten days; but earnest, intelligent and consecrated work, under God's blessing, can do it, and it is being done in this fresh air work. Many of the children are followed up: parents, Sunday and public school teachers report good things of waifs who did not promise improvement. In children coming year after year caretakers note progressive change for the better.

Little Lives Redeemed

The history of this work has many touching chapters of individual suffering relieved; full of inspiration are its true stories of little lives reclaimed, little feet that all unknowing were treading slippery paths downward, turned and set in right ways. No feet are so easily turned from evil as childhood's

One of the Home's best and most trusted assistants is a tall, brown-eyed lad, called Earnest, and sometimes "Our little preacher." On his first visit four years ago he was so wayward and gave so much trouble that it was feared he might need to be sent to some institution where sterner methods prevailed. The first thing that interested him was the opportunity, purposely made, for him to be helpful in a way he liked; the next was a Bible story book full of pictures; from study of that he first began to acquire the knowledge which won him his title. He is most helpful in influencing other boys for good.

Jennie's father is in a hospital, her mother a drunkard; that is enough to tell of her sad story to make everybody glad that she had a blessed two weeks of love and care at the Home last summer.

"Sulky Nellie" was found by a garbage barrel, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against children who would not play with her. She was always quarreling and fighting and she had no friends. Somehow, after she went to the Home, Nellie began to change; the law of the place is kindness, and Nellie, who had been

RESTING AFTER A HAPPY RAMBLE

A BOSKY DELL AT OUR CHILDREN'S HOME

MONT LAWN, FOR FOUR YEARS OUR CHILDREN'S HOME

kicked and cuffed in an abode where intemperance reigned, appreciated the beauty of the new order.

Goldie is a regular guest and helper. A prominent city missionary reported his case four years ago; a little fellow then—almost a baby—whose mother had just died; he was trying to cook and keep house for his father. A worker went down in the tenements and found him, a little bent figure bowed over pots and pans. He was carried to the Home; he wanted to work, felt ill at ease without it, they had to give him little tasks to keep him content, and they had to teach him to play. He has a nice voice and sings in the chapel for the children.

A mother, whose husband was serving a term of eight years in prison and who supported her six children during his absence by taking in washing, refused to let her daughter, a girl of eleven, go to the Home because she was so bad that she would "disgrace the family." At last she was persuaded to let us take her on trial, and the girl came with twenty others. She received no more notice than the rest and gave no trouble whatever. After she was returned to her home her mother called on Miss Delaney, the noble mother of the Catherine Mission, and said to her: "Well, Miss Delaney, I never saw anything like it. My child is a changed girl. She is obedient and polite, and says 'Yes, mother,' and 'Please' and 'Thank you.' I really can hardly believe that she is the same girl."

Sunday Services

There are special services every Sunday. These services are made so bright with pretty Bible stories and Gospel songs that the children love them. Earnest or Goldie has only to ring the chapel bell to bring the little ones flying.

Dr. Klopsch addresses the children, and it is a pleasure to listen to their bright responses to his questions and watch the rapt interest with which they follow his words.

Those who have helped in this work may congratulate themselves on the fact that in no other way could so much good be accomplished at such small cost. Three dollars covers the expense of one child's outing, including transportation both ways, caretaker's attention, medical examination (and attention, if needed), food, shelter and clothing; $6 will send two children; $9, three; $12, four; $15, five; $35, twelve. Could $35 invested in any other way make twelve people happy for ten days; feed, clothe and shelter them; probably save life, and surely make twelve children better forever thereafter for the kindness shown and the influence exerted?

The New Home

The Children's Home will continue at Nyack, although in 1898 Dr. Jewett, "The Children's Friend," passed to his reward above. Major Jewett, his son, continued his father's generous concession last summer, and this year a magnificent property of twelve acres, three large buildings and four beautiful cottages will be utilized in making between 2,000 and 3,000 children as happy as the day is long. But the Fresh Air work has enlarged and developed, and is ready to take on features of new usefulness. There have always been more applicants than room. The Divine Hand is leading and we pray that ways may so open that we may have to turn no little ones empty away. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these," said the Master, "ye have done it unto Me." To reach and help these little ones is a blessed opportunity.

How much will you contribute toward this blessed work? Three dollars for one child's vacation or six dollars for two? Perhaps, twenty-five dollars for eight or thirty-five dollars for twelve? Give whatever you can. It will be thankfully received, conscientiously administered, gratefully acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and, later on, in Heaven.

THE BED-TIME PRAYER AT THE CHILDREN'S HOME

I hereby Pledge myself to give the sum of .....weekly or monthly in aid of the Fresh-Air Fund work of "The Christian Herald's" CHILDREN'S HOME, for the months of June, July, August and September, 1899, and enclose herewith $..... to apply on account.

Name .....

Street ..... Town .....

Date ..... 1899 State .....

. . . Saving Somebody's Daughters . . .

How the Workers at the Bethesda Home in Brooklyn are Rescuing Unfortunate Girls From Sinful Lives

One of the most interesting groups of Bible students to be found in Greater New York may be seen any evening in the rooms of the Bethesda Mission, at No. 79 Fort Greene place, Brooklyn. A quiet, loving, sweet-voiced lady is the centre of the group, and around her are a number of younger women, varying from fifteen to twenty or more, whose faces and manners indicate a past over which the sacred Book they are studying has had little influence. It is not the higher criticism, nor the literature, nor the recondite doctrine of the Bible that holds their attention; they are learning how to apply its promises and power to their lives. The Apostle Paul wrote with confident assurance to people, who, in his day had the very same reason as these girls have, for such a prescription: "Walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh." This is the lesson, presented in many forms, that is being taught to these girls. It is a wonderful truth which many who know the power of those lusts are disposed to regard as an inadequate cure, but which at Bethesda, and many another mission of that kind, in this and other cities, has been proved effectual for the transformation of life?

THE COURT GIVES A PRISONER TO THE BETHESDA HOME FOR RECLAMATION

Pitiful Stories

Who are these students? If a person can gain their confidence, he will hear heart-breaking stories. Here is a girl well educated, brought up by loving parents, who has had the comforts and some of the luxuries of life, but has thoughtlessly fallen in love with some unprincipled man; and, for his sake, turned her back on home and friends, only to find after a few months that he has deceived her and cares nothing for her. She is ashamed to go back to her home, and she has become one of those women whom her sisters only too truly call "an abandoned creature," unfit for "decent society." Another girl tells how there was straitness at home, and she had to do something to earn a livelihood. She secured a position as saleswoman in a department store, where she was expected to dress well, and keep herself on a salary of four dollars a week. Driven to her wit's end in the endeavor to pay so much with so little, she listened to some vile man who made her presents of the much needed money; and finally she gave up her virtue that she might have bread to eat. She, too, after a time could not conceal her shame, and sank to the gutter. Another girl was living frugally on her small salary as a clerk in an office, until one day her employer, having no further occasion for her services, discharged her with an excellent certificate of her ability and character. During the next week she diligently sought employment; but trade was dull, and no one wanted help. At the end of the week, being unable to pay her board, she was turned out of her boarding house; and on a cold winter's night stood in the doorway of the place she had called home, without a dollar in her pocket, not knowing where to go for a refuge. A man who saw her standing there weeping, pretended to pity her, and offered her a meal. He took her to a hotel, plied her with wine, and that night she began the course the end of which is eternal death. Another girl has a story showing still greater turpitude in temptation. She, too, was working for a living and helping a sick, widowed mother with part of her small earnings. She had the woman's natural desire for decent clothing, and felt humiliated by wearing the poor patched dress and the coarse clumsy shoes which were the best she could afford. Casually meeting a girl who had been her school-fellow, she remarked her stylish, rich attire, and asked her how she managed to dress so well. Her friend said if she would meet her that evening, she would show her how she, too, might have an easy life and plenty of money. She fell into the snare. Her friend introduced her to a society where the men and women were all vicious; and in a few days her ruin was accomplished. And the tempter was one of her own sex! So in endless variety the stories run; but all have the inevitable ending of sin and degradation.

Redeemed by Love

How should such women be treated? The law provides a prison for them. Virtuous women gather up their skirts as they pass them, lest they should be contaminated. They are scorned even by men who have contributed to their ruin. They are the outcasts of society; and they repay its contempt with bold defiance and reckless bravado. But of late years Christian people have been trying more and more to make Christ himself the model of their lives, and they have asked themselves the question how that pure and sinless Being treated such women. They read what he said to the "woman who was a sinner," who wept over his feet and dried them with her hair, and what He said to the wicked woman whom the self-righteous leaders of the people dragged into His presence, that He might indorse their purpose to put her to a cruel death. Learning the lessons of His words, they came to understand that abhorrence of the sin should be combined with compassion for the sinner. Efforts were made, here and there, to reclaim the wanderers. As a rule, the women were brazen and hardened; but the result of the efforts put forth in the loving spirit of Christ was astonishing. The fallen women had been unused to disinterested kindness. They knew how to meet scorn with scorn, and reproof with contempt; but when the hand of affectionate solicitude was held out to them they were first amazed, and then broke down in shame and contrition.

Many acknowledged that they were utterly miserable in the life they were leading, and in spite of their assumed gaiety were sick and sore at heart. If it were only possible to retrace their steps there was no blessing they could conceive of that would be so great. But that door, they knew, was closed, and in sheer despair they were walking the path into which they had been lured. The Christlike compassion which had sought them out wrestled with the problem of their future, and so institutions like the Bethesda Home, in Brooklyn, have been established to grapple with the difficulty.

Origin of the Work

The Bethesda had its origin in the effort of two consecrated, self-sacrificing women—Mrs. Halvorsen and Mrs. McIntyre—to rescue three of these fallen women with whom they came in contact in their mission work. Finding that the three women were sincerely penitent, and desired to earn an honest livelihood by any kind of work, they hired an apartment in which they could live until work could be found for them. These devoted women furnished it with such articles as they could spare from their own homes, and made it as comfortable as they were able. The apartment was never empty. As soon as it was known that such an avenue for escape from a vicious life was open, applicants for help were eager to enter. The work grew beyond the limited means and capacity of the two workers. Economically as it was conducted, the resources were inadequate; and the workers were unable either to find the necessary funds, or to spare the time from their own families that was demanded. Yet the results were encouraging, and the opportunities for service were continually multiplying. An appeal for help was made to the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It seemed so clearly a call to service, and one that had already received the manifest blessing of God, that the appeal was laid before the readers of that journal, and the response was so prompt and generous that it was decided to undertake the work. A house was rented which afforded accommodation for the numbers of applicants for whom the poor apartment previously used, had no space; a matron was engaged whose soul was full of love of Christ, and compassion for the erring; and the management of the institution was vested in a committee of ladies connected with Dr. Talmage's church in Brooklyn. This was in 1894, and from that time to the present, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers have defrayed the expenses of the work. It has been marvelously blessed; and a large number of girls have been rescued through its instrumentality, who now bless God that this door of hope opened to them when they were in despair.

Industrial Help

From the first, the one reliance of the managers, in their difficult work, has been the Gospel of the grace of God. All who have labored there were profoundly convinced that in no other way could there be any reasonable hope of permanent reformation of character than by a change of heart. There are women who through pique, or misfortune, or poverty desire to quit their evil lives, who look only for material help, and are sincere in their desire, but such have been pointed to Christ as the one sure way of salvation from their sins. Until they were led to give their hearts to him, no confidence has been felt in their protestations of reform. But that point attained, there still remained the difficulty of providing for their material welfare. In some instances, the managers have been able to arrange for their return to their parents; and it has been a precious privilege to witness the joy with which the long-lost wanderer has been received by the grief-stricken father and mother. In others, a husband has been induced to forgive the wife who deserted him, and welcome her back to her home. But with the majority it has been necessary to find them some means of earning a living. This is always a difficulty, and the penitent is aware of the fact. "No one would employ such as I," she generally says. "What can I do? Where can I go?" and in truth it is hard to tell her. She is sure to find that "the way of the transgressor is hard." Much has been done through domestic service. Places have been found, in which the Christian ladies, knowing all the circumstances, have been willing to accept the penitent as a servant; and few, indeed, are the instances in which they have not proved faithful and industrious. Many of them were totally unfit for such work when they were received at Bethesda; but they were eager to learn, and were taught the duties they would have to perform. Occasionally a series of lessons on cooking has been given, so that the girls might be still more useful in their service. Others, who had not the strength, or the aptitude for such work, have displayed skill with the needle. One of the inmates proved to be an expert dressmaker; and it has been her delight, since she was reclaimed, to render service in teaching the inmates the mysteries of her art, and to aid them, when sufficiently proficient, in securing employment. Another means of support has been laundry work. The Home itself has welcomed work of this kind, which has been a source of revenue; and has at the same time been a means of training for unskilled hands. Some of the girls have become trained nurses, and have been successful in that beneficent life. One girl opened a day-nursery in which, for a small sum, poor mothers who were obliged to earn their own living could leave their children for the day while they went to work. This has prospered, and now many a mother, who was reluctant to part with her child, and yet was under the hard necessity of laboring for its support and her own, brings it to the Nursery in the morning, and calls for it again at night, assured that, while she is away, it is being well cared for. Thus, in various ways, the redeemed women find their places in society, and become useful and helpful. The aim of the managers is first to lead them to Christ, that they may be cleansed from their sin, and saved from relapsing into it; and then to give them such training as will fit them for the work to which they are best adapted.

The managers of the Home are careful to keep in touch with the inmates after they leave it, so as to give them counsel and encouragement in their effort to lead clean, virtuous lives. Some of these who live in New York or the neighborhood visit the Home as they have opportunity, and those at a distance are encouraged to write frequently. Their testimonies to the power of Christ to keep them from temptation are very pathetic, and their grateful acknowledgment of the kindness they received at the Home is beautiful. An extract from one letter may serve as a specimen of many. It is from a girl who is

A CLASS IN SEWING AT THE BETHESDA

AT WORK IN THE BETHESDA LAUNDRY

LITTLE TOTS IN THE BETHESDA DAY NURSERY

A LIBEL TALK IN THE BETHESDA HOME

now happy in domestic service, though when she entered the Bethesda Home she had come from a flat where she had every luxury, as the price of her sin. She writes:

A Pathetic Letter

"I am very happy here, and am getting on better than I expected. You know I was quite ignorant of this kind of work, except what I learned at the Home. You said Jesus would help me, and He has. Soon after I came Mrs. —— told me to do something I had never done in my life before, and I did not know how to go about it. I was sorry, for I thought she would think me stupid, and would lose patience with me. Well, I remembered what you told me, and as I went down to the kitchen I just prayed to Jesus to give me wisdom. It was all in a moment, but at once I saw how the thing might be done. I did not know if it was the right way, but I did it so, and when Mrs. —— saw it she said it was beautiful. Don't you think it was Jesus helping me? I thought so, and it has been the same several times since. He seems so real to me, and, like that woman He helped when He was here, I love much because I have been forgiven much. What a change it all is from the old life that ended a year ago! Oh! you need not have fear of my falling away. It would be impossible now. How kind you were to me! It was that that won me. I was so low down that escape seemed foolish to think of, and besides, I did not want to escape till you showed me how terrible it all was, and encouraged me to try. I thank Jesus every day, and ask Him to bless you for all your kindness. Do try to save more of us; there are so many who might be saved."

The girl's appeal is pathetic, and it is a significant fact that nearly all the letters that come from them contain a similar appeal. They want others rescued as they have been.

Watching the Police Courts

Another sphere of work in which the Bethesda Home has been useful is in connection with the Police Courts. A girl who has been arrested for immodest behavior on the streets or for being intoxicated, is in a condition when she is arraigned in court to listen to a Christian worker. If it is the first time that she has been in the hands of the police, she is usually overwhelmed with the disgrace, and her heart sinks at the prospect of being sent to the Island. If she shows signs of contrition, and Miss Emily Meury—that devoted friend of the unfortunate of her sex, who is well-known in every police court in Brooklyn—is there to plead for her, the judge will usually confide the prisoner to Miss Meury's care instead of sending her to prison. How much that means to a girl who has not lost all sense of shame can easily be understood. But Miss Meury has too many such protegees on her hands to be able to care for them personally. It has consequently been of great service to her to have a Home to which she can take girls of the class the Bethesda is specially designed to help. Many such girls have been brought there by this consecrated Christian worker, and in their humiliated, grateful mood they have heard the good news of the way of salvation from sin. In a letter recently received from Miss Meury, she thus expresses her obligation to the managers of the Bethesda Home for the help it has been to her in her work: "It is my duty to thank you for the great help the Home has been to me, especially during the past few months. What it has done for the poor unfortunate girls is fully known to God alone. It has been a comfort and blessing to me not only in being able to take the miserable girls there, but to know that they were being brought under an influence which tended to their permanent reclamation. I cannot speak too highly of the matron, dear Mrs. Bleekman, and her helper, Miss Stickney, who have been so successful in turning the girls from their lives of sin and shame to the ways of peace and virtue. May God bless them and all who have this work at heart. Let us pray for still greater prosperity, believing in His promise, who said: 'Ask and ye shall receive.' The girls are committed to my care; they are ready as at no other time to listen to the voice of wise Christian counsel; I can send you all you can care for; let us ask our Heavenly Father for the means to carry on a work so peculiarly his own, and one that is urgently needed these times." It is worthy of notice that these girls who come to the Home through Miss Meury's efforts have been those who have turned out most hopefully. That is probably because they have come to the Home under a sense of gratitude for being saved from prison, and they learn then how salvation in a deeper and wider sense is offered them.

A WANDERER AT THE BETHESDA HOME

Thus in one way or another the resources of the Home are taxed to the utmost. Frequently it has been necessary to make up beds on the floor, when every cot from garret to basement is occupied. More than once during the past few weeks, a poor wanderer from the ways of God, has heard of the Home and of the kindness shown to repentant prodigals, and has come to the door, but her heart failing her there, unable to believe after being scorned and mocked, that any soul could have compassion on one so degraded, has sat down on the stoop in despair, afraid even to apply for admittance. One such woman recently walked to and fro for hours unable to summon courage to ring the bell, until at last, weary and exhausted, she sat down on a step and almost fainted. Happily the matron saw her as she passed the window, and gave her the invitation she was too humble to ask for.

It was a great joy to see how thankfully this woman accepted the meagre accommodation which, in the crowded condition of the Home, was all that could be offered her, and how eagerly she seized the opportunity of escape from the miseries of her sinful life. Of the large number who thus come to the Home voluntarily, many are saved permanently; some fall away, but of these latter a large proportion soon return, humbly asking for another trial, and are eventually reclaimed. It would need a volume to tell the stories of those who, through God's blessing on this work, have been rescued and saved for time and eternity.

During the past few months the inmates of the Home have had the advantage of special instruction in Gospel truth from Miss Stickney, who was trained in the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago. She is an experienced worker among the class to which the inmates belong. Under her teaching, the girl desirous of quitting her evil life and returning to the path of virtue, learns how she may obtain pardon for the past and strength for the future. The latter is always urgently needed, for temptations are sure to assail her which, in her own strength, she cannot resist.

One of the most useful spheres of work that the Bethesda Home has done is in the search for missing girls. Frequently letters come from country districts, from parents whose daughters have left their homes to come to New York. Sometimes they are lured away by men who make love to them; some by offers of employment; some who honestly seek work, but failing to find it, fall into sin. There is sorrow then in the distant home. Letters do not come from the absent daughter, for she is ashamed to tell the old people what she is doing, and the father writes: "Do try to find my girl; I am afraid she is not living a right life," and he gives a description of her, and perhaps sends a photograph. In such cases a girl may be induced to go back home before she becomes habituated to the awful life. Many a one has been lost who might have been saved if someone had been able to reach her to tell her that forgiveness and welcome would be accorded to her if she would return. Thus the whole country is served by such an institution; for the great, cruel city exercises a wondrous fascination over the youthful mind, and draws, like a great maelstrom, the victims into its vortex. Many a girl who has heard descriptions of its splendors and gaieties knows no rest until, with or without the consent of her parents, she comes to New York, believing that clerkships or employment of some kind can be easily secured. When she discovers her mistake she shrinks from returning, and the tempter is at hand to lead her to destruction.

The Wide Opportunity

Opportunities for such work as the Bethesda Home is doing are manifold; and they might be indefinitely extended. But the work is restricted by the straitness of the funds available for carrying it on. In spite of the rigid economy practiced, and the vigilance over all the expenditures, the aggregate outlay is very heavy. Unavoidable expenses such as rent, gas, fuel, the board of the inmates, clothing suitable for their changed condition in life, which generally has to be supplied, traveling expenses which must be furnished, make a large total. But never did investment yield a richer return in souls won, and lives transformed. If only more money could be had the present work would be the nucleus of one far greater and more beneficent. The victims of sin who have been rescued, say that a great multitude out of the thousands of such women in New York and Brooklyn would be only too thankful for an opportunity of renouncing their sin, and quitting the sinful life, if it were offered them. But to reach them would involve still greater expense, and more commodious quarters for their reception. It is sad to think that the effort to win them cannot be made. But even for the work in its present shape the funds are insufficient. More money is urgently needed, even to accommodate applicants who seek the refuge. How much more if some bearer of the Gospel message were to go into their haunts and invite them to enter! Yet that is the duty of Christ's people. Sad is it that the duty cannot be performed through lack of means. The joy and gratitude over the success already achieved act as a stimulus to further effort. The organization is formed; the consecrated workers are ready and eager to labor; the knowledge of methods and experience in service—all these are ready—and the harvest awaits the reapers. Only the money, the indispensable prerequisite to service, is lacking. That supplied, the number of the rescued would easily be increased ten or even a hundred fold. Now, too many have reason to say: "No man careth for my soul." Surely there ought to be no ground for such a reproach in these days.

THE BETHESDA'S HELPING HAND

There must be many Christian people, among those who read these lines, who could afford to give at least one dollar once a month to help in a work so glorious as that of bringing these wanderers to Christ. Even if it could not be given without practicing self-denial, or giving up some luxury, it would be worth while. There are none who deny themselves for the sake of Christ, who do not receive in their own souls an abundant reward. He who noticed and praised the widow who gave her two mites, would see the sacrifice made in love of Him, and that dollar would be doubly blessed, for it would bring a blessing to him who sent it and to those to whom it was sent. Let everyone who loves Christ well enough to do something specially for his sake, fill up and sign the accompanying pledge and mail it to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The privilege of aiding the work of rescuing the perishing is cheaply secured by contributions to such an institution as the Bethesda. They would enable the workers to gather in a great harvest; and many a grateful soul, now steeped in sin, would be washed; and many a parent's heart would overflow with thanksgiving over a daughter restored and redeemed. To give to such a work is a sacred privilege; and its reward will be a share in that blessing that is promised to the successful laborer: "Let him know, that he who converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

I hereby Pledge myself to give the sum of ..... weekly or monthly

in aid of the Gospel and Rescue Work of THE BETHESDA HOME for the term of one year, and enclose herewith $ ..... to apply on account.

Name .....

Street ..... Town .....

Date ..... State .....

· A · Notable · Philanthropy ·

Two Novel Colonies Peopled by Epileptics, Who are Being Brought Back to Health and Happiness

A NOTABLE experiment in philanthropy, and one which promises to attract much attention, is now in progress at the town of Skillmans, near Princeton, N. J. It has for its object the amelioration of the condition of the class of sufferers known as epileptics, and is known throughout the surrounding section of Somerset County as "The Epileptic Farm."

The projectors of this benevolent project base their expectations of success on the theory that here air and sunshine will do more toward effecting a cure than medicines. If it meets with success it may have the effect of relieving households, hospitals and asylums all over the United States of their epileptic patients, and of establishing villages for their especial benefit.

When Herr Von Bodelschwind, a rich courtier of Emperor William I., abandoned his title of nobility and delegated his fortune to the cause of humanity in 1869, he announced that he felt called to the special work of healing the unfortunate sick. He purchased two thousand acres of fertile land in Hanover, Germany, on the outskirts of the little burg of Bielefeld. All the destitute sick who were not afflicted with contagious diseases were welcomed there and domiciled in cottages. The place was known as the "Bethel Colony." A great many epileptics were admitted. The trades open to them were farming, blacksmithing, boxmaking, hatting, milling, painting, and kindred industries. Those who were permanently cured were given work in villages near by as dressmakers, cooks, school-teachers, servants, carpenters, tailors, gardeners, machinists, trunkmakers, bricklayers, filecutters, harnessmakers, shoemakers, firemen, engineers, butchers, clock-makers, photographers, and even telegraph operators and merchants. Five meals were given every day, the hours being 6.30, 9.30, 12, 4.30 and 7 o'clock, the food being given in small quantities. Six per cent. were cured thoroughly; sixty per cent. were benefited, while the rest remained hopeless invalids.

A BIT OF THE CRAIG COLONY GARDEN

Three years ago the population of the colony had reached 3,200 charity patients, of whom 1,450 were epileptics. The applications numbered 204,000, coming from Germany, England, Scotland, France, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Italy, Africa, Russia, and South and North America.

The experiment on this side the Atlantic is to be made under the auspices of the State of New Jersey. "Maplewood Farm," as the property recently purchased is called, is an estate of 187 acres at Skillmans, a rural spot in Somerset county, four miles from Princeton. An additional park of 215 acres has been secured by the managers, subject to legislative approval. Professor Garrison, who is already widely known as the director of the New Jersey Training School for Feeble Minded Children, at Vineland, explains it is proposed to demonstrate that a very general amelioration in the condition of epileptics can be attained by the colony and treatment at Maplewood Farm.

It is to the energy and good judgment of the Rev. Dr. James M. Buckley that the commonwealth of New Jersey is indebted for the inception of this work. Associated with him in the work are Prof. S. Olin Garrison, of Vineland; Dr. John H. Ewing, of Flemington; Dr. John B. Ward, of Trenton; Dr. William S. Combs, of Freehold, and Dr. Thomas J. Smith, of Bridgton. There are more than 2,000 epileptics in the State, the condition of many being deplorable. They are not received in public or private schools, are shunned by playmates and practically excluded from churches and social gatherings. Very few of them can gain employment. Yet the astonishing fact remained, according to Dr. Buckley's plea, that a majority of them, if given proper attention, would be able to work and study as well as most persons. A small appropriation has been granted by the Legislature of New Jersey for the experiment. The work even in its earlier stages, gives promise of success. An old mansion is used for the reception of patients. Cottages and suitable workrooms are to be erected with a view to carrying out a policy of self-support.

Through the efforts of the late Mr. Oscar Craig, of Rochester, N. Y., a noteworthy philanthopist, and the generosity of the State of New York, a colony of the same character has been established on these lines at Sonyea, Livingston County, N. Y. Since its opening 410 epileptics have been admitted, of whom 322 remain. The colony administration building is a handsome structure of granite and brick. The main building of the women's group is also of solid construction, and the children's dormitories are smaller but fire-proof. A good system of street-making prevails, with a brigade of sweepers made up of patients in uniform, to keep everything neat and clean. There are water-works, fire-apparatus, electric light and power-house, and attractive workrooms for shoemaking, blacksmithing and carpentry. One of the novelties is a brick-making plant, employing eighteen hands. The surplus products of these industries, and of the 2,000-acre farm, are sold at a profit. The total value of the products of farm, garden and workshops was $36,889.03, with only a part of the ground in cultivation. Dr. William P. Spratling, the medical chief, has applications from over 600 patients whom he cannot take until additional quarters are provided.

COLONISTS AT WORK IN THE TOMATO FIELD

THE CRAIG COLONY BRICKYARD

The colony managers find labor an aid to recovery in most cases. None are put to work who are unfitted; yet even in the cases of the women and the little children there are opportunities. One young man (an epileptic), who had been pronounced incurable at two State hospitals, was cured last year after becoming a "villager." He learned the printer's trade and gardening, and is now supporting himself and his mother in New York City.

Recreations are provided for certain hours. The teachers take the little tots out for daily walks in good weather. A band gives open-air concerts during the warm evenings, while a military company of thirty-six boys lends a martial air to the little settlement.

Our illustrations afford some idea of the working of the new system, which other States are considering as a substitute for the present method of isolation. Massachusetts and Pennsylvania have already appropriated money for settlements, and Maryland, Virginia, Michigan, Kentucky, Missouri and California are contemplating similar action. Thus, in the near future, there is a likelihood of a great humane reformation in the treatment of a class of sufferers who till now have been regarded with universal sympathy as wholly beyond the reach of succor. In this age of Christ-like helpfulness, there are few movements more worthy of support and approbation than this in behalf of the afflicted epileptics.

Early Egyptian Tombs

IN an interesting article in the current number of The American Antiquarian, on prehistoric Egyptian tombs, the writer says: "There are some things which indicate that the Pharaonic race had its origin in Mesopotamia, and [illegible] the habit of constructing its royal tombs of brickwork, and their pattern and style also, beside the knowledge of metals, the treatment of stone for vases, jars, etc., and the introduction of cereals for cultivation and food purposes. M. Jequier points out that the square tomb of 'Dja,' at Abydos, with its encircling wall, is a transition from the older royal tombs to the Mastabas of the old empire. This is an observation helpful in the attempt to place these monarchs in rightful order of succession. He also points out that the use of Babylonian cylinders for sealing clay was superseded by the use of scarabs as early as the third and fourth dynasties. The cylinder lingered till the Middle Empire. Here again is a pregnant hint for chronologists. No scarabs are found in these early royal tombs, or in the tombs of their families or courtiers. One conclusion is important to notice, namely, that the hieroglyphics are indigenous to Egypt. The epigraphy begins with rudeness and imperfection under Menes, improves with Dja, and foreshadows its finer achievements in the relics of Ty. Two tombs were found at Negadah, and five at Abydos. Of these, no less than five show signs of a practice of cremation, which is always characteristic of the Bronze Age. One at Negadah affords no evidence, and the latest in time, that of Ty, shows no trace of fire. Is there not here proof of some great change of custom, perhaps of religious belief? Out of these seven royal tombs, not one bears any trace of mummification — of that strange reverence and care for the body shown by later dynasties.

PROF. S. OLIN GARRISON

"The mode of burial was in itself a proof of high antiquity. The tombs were never more than five feet long, showing that the bodies were not deposited at full length, but were curled up. In fact, several skeletons found were lying on their side, the knees drawn up to the head.

"The evidence in the shape of methods of burial and the objects found by Mr. Quibell (another explorer), confirm M. de Morgan's conclusion, that the predecessors of the Pharaohs were a Neolithic white race akin to the Kabyles of North Africa. The tombs are built of rude bricks, so unevenly laid that it seemed as if these early masons knew nothing of a plumb-line. The floor of the tombs of the kings was laid with heavy planks of sycamore wood, fastened together by strips of copper. The ornaments were sometimes crude, and at others well finished. One bone, carved into the shape of a hand, seemed comparable to the relics of European cave dwellers. There were also stone knives and saws of remarkable execution."

THE : : : UNEXPECTED

Or, Aunt Jane's Fresh Air Experiment, and how it Resulted

By HELEN HALL FARLEY

"Bar-tol-o-mew!" The shrill voice pierced the air like a knife, raising the ire of a freckle-face, red-headed, half-grown boy in the barn, whose old straw hat was full of fresh eggs just gathered. He would have enjoyed throwing the hat and its contents at the owner of the voice, and felt tempted to do so, but he refrained.

"Bar-tol-o-mew! Bar-tol-o-mew!" The voice was nearer and more exasperating. The barn door was flung open from within with a bang that was startling in its effect upon the frowsy-headed girl outside.

"Well, you needn't try to scare me to death!" she exclaimed, holding her hands to her ears and tittering in the most ridiculous manner.

"Who's trying to scare you to death, you big simpleton!" he observed, with the usual courtesy (?) he showed his aunt's trying maid-of-all-work, Peggy Worth. "I'll tell you one thing you needn't do any more," looking daggers at her.

"What's that?"

"Well, you needn't call me as if I was a cat—'Bar-tol-o-mew!' Bar-tol-o-mew!' Just for all the world as if my name was Bartolo and you wanted me to 'mew!' You can mew yourself if you want to."

Peggy laughed saucily.

"Well," she said, "whatever I call you, you'd better be makin' tracks fer the house. Miss Temple wants you this minute—she said so. You're to go somewhere right off fer some fresh hairs."

It was the boy's turn to laugh now, and he did so derisively.

"Ha, ha! That's a good one, that is! Go after 'fresh hairs,' indeed! Perhaps you'll be kind enough to inform me where they sell fresh hairs? I'm afraid there's great danger of your setting the North River on fire, Miss Peggy."

Peggy did not see the joke, but she tittered with evident appreciation of something, which, if it were vague, was funny.

"Bartholomew! Bartholomew!"

It was Miss Temple's voice this time, consequently there was no further delay.

"Here, Peggy," the boy said, transferring the old hat, with its contents, to the girl; empty these—will you?"

He hurried to Miss Temple, who stood on the vine-shaded porch waiting impatiently for him.

"Now," said she, with considerable nervous excitement in her voice, "I want you to hitch up and go down to the 'Corners,' and be quick about it. It won't be long before the train comes in with the 'Fresh-Air' children. Bring me two."

"I thought you said you wouldn't take any," the boy said, in surprise.

"Never mind what you thought"—grimly. "I suppose I am allowed the privilege of changing my mind if I want to. Now, you hurry up! Tell Squire Daniels that I've decided to take two children two weeks."

"Yes, ma'am; two children two weeks." He turned to go.

"Bartholomew!"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Bring nice children—do you hear?"

"Yes, ma'am."

He went on down the walk.

"Bartholomew!"

"Yes, ma'am."

"On your way back, call to old Mr. Crane and tell him he can have six of those white Wyandottes he wanted three weeks from to-day."

"Yes, ma'am."

He started barnward again.

"Bartholomew!"

The boy had a vague wish that he were a near relative of Job, but he turned about once more as patiently as he could.

"Don't forget—six of them in three weeks."

"No ma'am, I won't forget."

"Six of them—three weeks," he said to himself as he hurried to the barn.

He hitched up Billy, and after improving his personal appearance slightly at the kitchen sink, he started on his way to Cross Roads. He reached them a few moments after the train came in. Squire Daniels, a ruddy-faced, kindly man, was there to greet the bevy of "Fresh Air" children who came rushing pell mell from the train. There were several little ones who did not rush—poor things!—they could not for they were crippled.

The last children to emerge from the car was a group of six who seemed to cling to each other. They had not been dressed for their outing, as had the others, by kind friends, but wore exceedingly shabby clothes. Two of them were barefooted and one had no hat. Counting these, there were twenty-six. Squire Daniels, having only expected twenty children, was in a dilemma.

"You see it was this way," explained an attendant who had come with the children. "Miss Gilbert, one of our city missionaries, brought that party" inclining his head toward the "unexpected;" "the very last moment, and she was determined I should bring them. I told her there were only homes for twenty, but she insisted that there were plenty of homes. 'The Lord will provide,' she said."

Squire Daniels stroked his iron-grey whiskers thoughtfully.

"I surely hope he will!" he answered; "but—"

"Squire Daniels!"

It was Bartholomew speaking. He was almost out of breath from his rapid running. Swinging his hat in his hands he stammered forth: "Aunt Jane said I should tell you that she'd take six children three weeks."

"Well, now, if that ain't Providential," said the deacon, wiping the perspiration from his face, which suddenly glowed with joyful relief. "Miss Gilbert said the Lord would provide, and here you come saying Miss Temple 'll take the whole six. Lord bless you, Bartholomew!"

He extended both hands to the boy.

"But it isn't my doings," said Bartholomew, too honest to accept undeserving praise, "it's Aunt Jane's."

"Well, it's you who have come for them any way, and may the Lord bless you both! Now, let's see. Miss Temple wants six. My, but that's good of her. She'll have her reward as sure as my name's Jacob Stiles."

The children were already climbing into the big country wagon awaiting them, all but the six who stood huddled close together, with half-frightened, half-wistful faces, wondering what was to be the next move.

"Would Miss Temple like boys or girls? Or has she no choice?" asked the deacon.

"She didn't say. I don't believe she'll care. Supposing I take those six over there," waving his hand toward the forlorn half dozen. "They look as if they didn't have a friend in the world."

"All right, my boy, and I'm much obliged to you for taking the forlornest of the 'least of these.' I hope Miss Temple won't object."

A strange look came into the pale, thin faces of the "unexpected" as they climbed into the wagon and took the places that Bartholomew suggested. On the back seat were three little girls: on the front one, beside Bartholomew, a boy about eleven, and a tiny one of four; and sitting down in front of them, a little fellow of perhaps seven. The tiny boy had to be lifted in, so had one of the girls, for each of them used a crutch.

It was the largest of the boys who lifted the little boy in, for they were orphan brothers, and the elder one was a "little father" to the younger one who was the "apple of his eye."

"BARTHOLOMEW JUMPED OUT OF THE WAGON TO PLUCK A BUNCH OF FLOWERS FOR THEM"

But it was Bartholomew who lifted the youngest girl in, and he did it so gently that she smiled into his face, whispering, as if hardly daring to hear the sound of her own voice, "Thank you."

A lump seemed to come into Bartholomew's throat.

"She's as light as a feather," was his thought. "Poor little girl!"

As the boy took the reins and drove on, the forlorn little faces brightened. The three small girls in the back seat began to talk to each other in whispers of delight. The tiny crippled boy on the front seat clapped his little claw-like hands at sight of the cows and calves in a beautiful meadow. He cried out joyfully at a bird's song away up in the branches of a wayside maple. At the "littlest one's" cry of joy, tongues were suddenly loosened.

Bartholomew told himself over and over that he had never heard anything before in all his life that would compare in interest with the conversation of the "unexpected." He smiled upon them all in a fatherly way, as if he was sixty instead of sixteen, but there was a troublesome lump kept choking him now and then, and he seemed to need the services of his handkerchief quite frequently. "Perhaps I'm getting the hay-fever," he tried to make himself believe, as if there were some new kind of hay-fever that would bring lumps into one's throat. He came near forgetting to stop at old Mr. Crane's to tell him about the poultry, but the old gentleman caught sight of him and ran out of the gate.

"Helloa!" he called.

"Whoa, Billy!" said the boy.

"Seems as if you'd got a pretty big load on fer one horse."

"Maybe it looks so, but 'tisn't so, for there isn't much weight to any body in this wagon except me."

"What yer goin' to do with all them young ones?" the old man asked wonderingly.

"Going to dump them out at Aunt Jane's," laughed the boy; "and, Mr. Crane, Aunt Jane said you could have two of those young white Wyandottes two weeks from to-day."

"Two of 'em! Only two of them! Well, I don't see why she can't let me have more."

"Well, I don't either, but that's what she said—two of them in two weeks time. Git up, Billy!"

On they rolled, over the quiet country road, where dandelions and cowslips blossomed on both sides, past fields of clover and green meadows, in sight of hills where lambs frisked and young colts pranced gaily. The sparkling eyes—as Bartholomew jumped out of the wagon to pluck a great bunch of meadow flowers for them—told its own sweet, pathetic story. The eager clutch of the thin hands when the kind-hearted lad threw the flowers into the wagon with the one word, "Catch," was something to be remembered. The breath of sweet clover and new-mown hay fanned their pale faces. Their eyes sought the blue of the forget-me-nots on the edge of the pasture, and the rosy glow of the wild roses blooming close to the old stone fence brought a flush to the wan faces.

Bartholomew had tied a big handkerchief (fortunately he always had more than one in his pockets), over the head of the tiny boy who had no hat. The dear little face looked out from the handkerchief like a sweet flower that was just opening, because the sun was shining upon it for the first time.

"Me finks dis mus' be heaven, aint it, Tom?"

Tom made no reply in words. I do not think he could, for his lips quivered nervously, but he nodded his head as if he, too, thought it might be heaven, and smiled upon the tiny boy.

* * *

Miss Temple had been making biscuit for supper. She had just cut out her last one, when Peggy rushed in.

"Goodness, gracious!" she ejaculated, "Bartolomew's a drivin' up with a hull raft o' younguns, they must be a dozen."

"Shut up," said Miss Temple, as she dropped the biscuit-cutter and hurried to the window. "You needn't act like a crazy loon, even if that pig-headed boy has brought up the whole poor-house."

Her amazement was great, but her wrath was greater, as she saw her nephew lift out of the wagon three small girls, one a cripple, and a tiny crippled boy. Two other boys had jumped out. Carlo and Shep began to bark uproariously.

"It reminds me of some verses I used to say," Miss Temple observed, excitedly.

"Hark, hark! Hear the dogs bark!
The beggars are coming to town—
Some in rags and some in tags
And some in velvet gowns."

"I don't see no velvet gowns," said Peggy, maliciously.

To be Continued

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Home Minstrelsy

The Harper of Old Times—Temple Worship—Trained and Untrained Singers

IN ancient times every castle had its minstrel; around the evening fire he touched his harp and sang for the entertainment of his superiors and companions, while his lady and her maidens worked at their embroidery frames. Before books were, his simple ballads caught and recorded the history of great events and transmitted them to succeeding ages, so that in one sense he has been the world's historian. The world's greatest epics, the "Iliad" and "Odyssey," are the ballads of Homer, the blind singer of ancient Greece. The troubadours of France, the minstrel of the British Isles, and particularly of the Scottish border, have all played pleasing and valuable part in national history and domestic life.

The wandering minstrel, traveling from door to door, carried the news from neighbor to neighbor, and so, writes some one, "was the newspaper, letter-carrier, poet and historian of his day all in one." With the world's progress and advancement his art fell into disuse, and

A wandering minstrel, scorned and poor,
He begged his bread from door to door,
And tuned to please a peasant's ear
The harp a king was wont to hear.

Sir Walter Scott has given a pleasing picture of the last days of the "Last Minstrel," in the home provided by his friend, the kind Duchess of Buccleuch:

A simple hut, but there was seen
The little garden hedged with green,
The cheerful hearth and lattice clean.
There sheltered wanderers by the blaze
Oft heard the tales of other days,
For much he loved to ope his door
And give the aid he begged before.

David was a minstrel, and it was during his reign that the music of the Temple began to take on such magnificent proportions, although before his day the Temple was the school of music. Of the 38,000 Levites, 4,000 were appointed to "praise Jehovah with the instruments which David made," and for which he taught them a special chant, beginning: "O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever." That must have been a glorious choral, with all the congregation of Israel responding! Among the temple properties in Solomon's time were 200,000 gold and silver trumpets and 40,000 harps and psalteries.

Scientific music on noble themes is excellent in its way. The one harm that can come of it is in repressing the untutored singer whose timidity seals his or her lips in the presence of the skilled musician. This should not be. Among God's woodland singers it is not so. The sparrow does not forego her cheerful twitter because the lark's song is an "embodied joy" among the clouds. If the trained musician, by his proficiency, is to put a ban upon congregational singing, and the simple, spontaneous home solos, duetts and chorals, the trained musician is a public disadvantage. His duty—nay, his privilege—is to encourage others and to lead hesitating voices into songs of gladness. Let not the aged parents, longing to voice God's praises, hold timidly back, keeping silence because they "do not know how to sing;" nor the little ones, thrilling with the joy of living in God's beautiful world, be hushed because "their voices are not trained." The minstrel of the old days made homes happier. The minstrels of the new can fill this mission in a larger way. If you are a trained singer or player, use your gifts for the delight of everybody around you; but do not join the ranks of that unhappy army who care neither to hear or give anything but "scientific music."

Sing while you work, children,
Sing while you play;
Be happy as the birds
Through the livelong day.

♣

Innovation by the Chinese Empress

Recently the Empress Dowager of China received at the palace in Pekin all the ladies of the diplomatic corps. This was the first occasion on which foreign ladies have been admitted to the Imperial Court.

The wives of the seven foreign ministers assembled at the British Legation and proceeded together to the palace. Several ladies of the court escorted them to the audience chamber, where the Dowager Empress was seated on a dais, the Emperor being seated on Her Majesty's left. The ladies of the diplomatic body ranged themselves in front of the dais, and Lady Macdonald, wife of the British Minister and dean of the corps, read an address offering their congratulations to the Dowager Empress on her birthday, bowed to the Emperor and Dowager Empress, and was followed by the other ladies. The Dowager Empress presented a gold ring set with pearls to each of the ladies.

♣

"God's Representative"

A few months ago, a steamer was wrecked at sea. Boats had been lowered and passengers safely transferred; among them the captain's wife and little daughter, about four years old. She clung to her mother in fear as their little boat rode the high waves and went down into the deep hollows. "We'll tell God about it," mamma whispered to the trembling child, "and then we'll keep very quiet and let him save us." Presently a big steamer sighted the struggling craft and rescued its passengers. As the big bronzed captain of the rescuing vessel held out his arms for the little one, she nestled against him lovingly, and looking at her mamma, asked: "Mamma, is this God?" A mist gathered in the captain's eyes as mamma explained that he was God's representative. We may each be God's representative in helping a soul out of peril.

♣

The First Presidential Home

The abutment of the Brooklyn Bridge facing Franklin Sq. elevated station, New York, bears a tablet inscribed: "The first Presidential mansion, No. 1 Cherry St. Occupied by George Washington from April 23, 1789, to February 25, 1790. Erected by Mary Washington Colonial Chapter, April 30, 1899." This tablet was formally unveiled on May 2, and presented to the city by the Daughters of the American Revolution comprising this chapter. Miss Mary Van Buren Vanderpool drew back the veil and uttered the words of presentation, while President Guggenheimer of the City Council accepted the gift in behalf of the city. To the little children in the street who were watching the ceremony with interested eyes, some of the ladies told in pretty story fashion about George Washington's home that once stood on this site. At the time Washington lived here, Wall Street was a promenade for richly dressed ladies and gentlemen. Prior to that, the neighborhood was a great cherry orchard, and below it was a foot-path called T. Maadgde Paatje, or Maiden's Path, because Dutch lassies had worn it tripping to the ponds to wash clothes. We can with difficulty associate this rustic pathway with the crowded thoroughfare called Maiden Lane, but that is how this street came by its name.

AN AGED HARPER AND HIS DAUGHTER

June Roses

JUNE roses! June roses! Tell us, we pray,
Whatever are you saying?
Under the lattice you're nodding away
As if you were talking and playing.

"We say and we say we're glad that we live,
Though just for a day and a morning,
Pleasure to many so freely we give
All hours from its dewy dawning

"Till evening comes and we go to sleep,
Wrapped in our blankets of fragrance,
And the next sun shines where the bright dews were!
O'er our petals like scattered red vagrants.

"But we've done what our Father hath sent us to do,
And we'll wait in our graves till their breaking.
We know, Ah! we know that our Father is true.
June again our red blooms will be waking."

—G. H.

♣

A Private Flower Mission

ONE day, a lady coming into town from her country residence, brought a large bunch of roses for a city friend. On her way to her friend's residence she stopped at a store to make some purchases. "What beautiful flowers!" said the shopgirls across the counter, looking longingly at the fragrant blossoms. The girl who was waiting on her said nothing, but the hopeless, wistful expression of her eyes went to the lady's heart. "Would you like to have some of these, my dear?" she asked. Instantly a light leaped into the weary eyes. "O yes, madam. O, thank you," as one after another long-stemmed, leafy, dewy beauty was taken from the collection and laid in her hand. "My mother," said the girl in a low, quivering voice, and lifting eyes as dewy as the roses, "is sick. She used to have a garden, flowers and other nice things. I have not been able to buy any for her. These will cheer her." A kind look, a pressure of the hand, and the two newmade friends parted—after the rest of the bouquet had been divided among the girls. The next time the lady came to town she brought a box of berries for the sick woman's daughter. "That bouquet," says she, "has opened up for me a lot of beautiful work among shop girls, and I put to excellent use lettuce, tomatoes, apples, peaches and other things that once went to waste. So many people, whom I never knew before, love and pray for me. O, that was the blessedest bunch of flowers!"

♣

Stevenson to His Mother

The famous writer, Robert Louis Stevenson, whose words were literally "worth their weight in gold" so ready were publishers to purchase, was unsparing of letters to his mother. In The Letters of Robert Louis Stevenson, in the June issue of Scribner's Magazine, appears one that has been called "A Christmas Sermon, by Robert Louis Stevenson, to His Mother," in which he says of his religious faith:

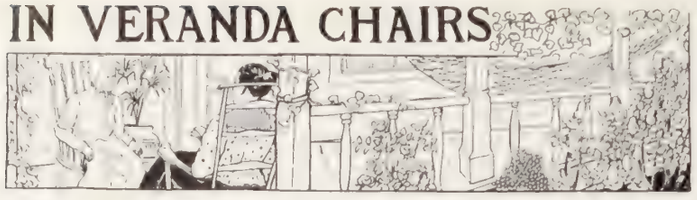
I wonder if you or my father ever thought of how Christ was continually substituting affirmations for the negative form of the law as stated in the Ten Commandments. "To love one's neighbor as one's self" is certainly much harder, but states life so much more actively and kindly that you begin to see some pleasure in it. It is much more important to do right than not to do wrong; and the faithful design to do right is accepted by God. Christ tells you to hope. The whole necessary morality is kindness, and it should spring of itself from the one fundamental doctrine—faith. If you are sure that God in the long run means kindness by you, you should be happy, and if happy, surely you should be kind. You have had a page of sermon.

♣

Women and the Peace Congress

People interested in the Peace Conference have flocked to The Hague from every corner of the globe, and the opening week saw crowded streets. The quaint town of The Hague was gay with flags of every nation represented in the Conference. An interesting incident of the first day was the presentation to Baron de Staal, by Mme. Selenka, the famous peace advocate and promoter of the Woman's Peace Crusade, of an illustrated album containing the texts of resolutions in favor of peace adopted by meetings representing several million women.

IN VERANDA CHAIRS



College Girls—Take Good Care of Mother—June Bugs and a Prayer-meeting, Etc.

WHEN summer is fairly here, and we can sit in the veranda and enjoy the cool breeze that stirs the vines, or take our fancy-work outdoors and have afternoon tea under the maples on the lawn, most of us are conscious of a great tide of joy. For that brilliant bit of gold and orange and black which flits and glances through the trees is an oriole, and he is singing a love song to his mate, and that carol of delight from the orchard comes from a robin, and a wren is busy with her pretty housekeeping in the very shadow of our eaves. And the ground is carpeted with violets and spring beauties; the hepatica is here, the dogwood is shining in starry splendor through the openings in the forests, and the exquisite pink mountain laurel is blooming on the hills. Where yesterday was white and fragrant with blossoms, to-day is affluent with the promises of fruit, and the whole wide world is lovely and fair, and God is speaking to us through the thousand tongues of Nature.

I made a little pilgrimage a few days ago to one of our most useful and honored colleges for women. Few sights are to me more impressive than that of a college chapel at morning prayers or vespers, when the girls—freshmen, sophomores, juniors, seniors—come filing in, decorously taking their seats, and joining in the services with a much more reverent air than one ordinarily observes in a men's college on a similar occasion. A hymn is given out, and the sweet, fresh voices sing with a ring which lingers in memory, so tender and full are the cadences. There are Scripture reading and prayer, and the girls are attentive and in earnest. Looking into those austere young faces, pure and virginal, one wonders what pathway lies before the eager feet. To the very ends of the earth some of those girls will go as missionaries, as travelers, as the wives of soldiers, merchants and sailors. Some will be home-staying and home-keeping. Some will become teachers, some lawyers, and editors and doctors.

. . .

THE CHIEF pearl of many a home is the daughter at college. Girls do not always know what sacrifices their parents make to keep them there; to give them the opportunities they crave. There are girls in all our colleges who have to work very hard indeed to sustain themselves and pay their way. The college world is a true democracy, and no one is more regarded and respected there than the student who is bravely and pluckily paying her own way. I know young women who have gone through college with credit and won enviable honors, and who have supported themselves through term-time by doing housework, cheerfully undertaking waiting in summer hotels, and fine laundry work for summer boarders during vacation. All praise and honor to the noble young woman or man whom difficulties do not daunt, who strives the harder when there are obstacles to overcome.

It pleases me to see that college girls can spin along on their wheels, play basket ball, row a boat, drive, do whatever athletic sport requires. Don't believe anybody who tries to make you find immorality in the bicycle, as a good preacher or two think is existent. I am sure they are mistaken, as the best of men often are. The bicycle is perilous only when it is used immoderately. A delicate young girl should be careful not to ride too fast, nor too far. As for the bicycle costume, it should be sufficiently short for safety, and sufficiently long for modesty. The outdoor dress of women, whether designed for walking, tennis, golf, or wheeling, should invariably be sensibly short. The exact length can be decided best by the wearer. Women have been handicapped for ages by their long, trailing skirts. I am glad the day has arrived when short skirts for special work, or special recreations, are considered modish and approved by the fashionable. Long skirts are graceful for ladies of leisure in the drawing-room. On street pavements and dusty roads, and in public conveyances, they are most inappropriate.

. . .

IN Blackwood's Magazine, to change the subject, there has recently appeared an autobiography of a child, which ought to be read by those parents who are inconsiderate and harsh to their little ones. Parents addicted to punishing children by beating, a usually most unnecessary and cruel proceeding, might learn something to their advantage should they see in this frank narrative how such experiences live and rankle in children's memories. An admirable volume, From the Child's Standpoint, by Florence Winterburn, is also commended to persons interested in child study. It is full of excellent and wise suggestions.

. . .

I DO not advise girls to go off on long jaunts on their wheels in parties of two, a man and a woman, unless the relationship of the two be that of brother and sister. Parties of five or six, with a married lady as chaperone, are best and most agreeable. When fathers and mothers share the amusements of their young people, as a matter of course, we shall have reached the ideal state of society.

Here comes mother! She is older than her girls, and growing stout, and she has had a busy day. Up at dawn this morning, long before the young folks had turned on their drowsy pillows; cooking, sewing, ironing, patching, comforting, advising, holding in her hands the hearts of the whole household all day long—here she comes now at eventide, our blessed darling, never-to-be-forgotten, uncanonized saint. Give her the easiest chair in the pleasantest corner, slip a footstool under her tired feet, let everybody listen when she speaks, and, by all means, let the younger ones wait on her, and show her by their thoughtfulness that they prize her presence and love every hair of her head. Mother has never in her life been selfish or exacting, and this is the reason why she so often does not receive her full measure of attention. Mother would do without a new gown or bonnet to the end of time, so that her pretty daughters could have frills and furbelows; but is it right for them to let her always be the shabby one of the family? When she sits with us in the veranda, let it be with her dear hands folded, so that she may take a full breath and rest. I wish she would ride a bicycle! I have seen grandmothers managing those magical pedals and wonderful handle bars, but I have seen them with awe and fear. Most women who have taken on years and avoirdupois together prefer a safe rocking-chair on the veranda, to a Tam O'Shanter witch-like thing on wheels.

. . .

WAS that a June bug which flew straight at Edith, attracted by her golden hair? June bugs and other flying creatures are very surprising in their demonstrations, but they are harmless. I once knew of their invading a prayer-meeting, though, and breaking it up, aided and abetted by their contemporaries, the bats. All through the devotional exercises and the addresses and the petitions of the brethren, these winged guerillas of the air disturbed the ladies, and some of the men, too, dodged their attacks and waved fans and handkerchiefs in dismay. At last the Doctor could endure no more. "Before I pronounce the benediction," he said firmly, "I give notice that I will not again hold services in this room until screens have been placed in the windows." And he was right.

. . .

THOUGH you care nothing for dress, Mr. Oldster, you should defer to the wishes of your daughter, and cease to be careless what sort of tie you have on, and you should not disdain a clean shirt, nor neglect to shave. Old persons have much more need, old men have especially great need, to be particular as to their toilet. Indeed, there is no merit in being untidy and unkempt, and nobody is excusable who does not at all periods of life endeavor to look as pleasing and comely as possible. We owe this to ourselves as well as to our friends and kindred.

Margaret E. Sangster

"The Prudent Man Setteth His House in Order."

Your human tenement should be given even more careful attention than the house you live in. Set it in order by thoroughly purifying your blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Erysipelas—"My little girl is now fat and healthy on account of Hood's Sarsaparilla curing her of erysipelas and eczema." MRS. H. O. WHEATLEY, Port Chester, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A PIANO AT A NOMINAL PRICE

Chicago's largest music house, Lyon & Healy, to sharply reduce stock is offering scores new upright, slightly used pianos and second-hand instruments, at almost nominal prices. Good, durable uprights as low as $100 warranted as represented. Square pianos $20 and upward. Grands from $200. Send for complete list just issued. Among the makers are Decker Bros., Hardman, Knabe, Steinway, Weber, Hale, Bauer, Fischer, Hazelton, and others. If you are interested in a piano, do not fail to write at once, as this opportunity may not soon occur again. Any piano not proving exactly as represented may be returned at their expense.
LYON & HEALY, 16 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

LIGHTENS LABOR

Cobwebs about a house are usually the sign that the housewife has more than she can do, the way she goes about it; that all her time and strength are utilized in doing heavy work; that she uses soap in her cleaning. If she would only use heavy work would be so lightened that the little things needn't be neglected. Gold Dust gives a woman time to rest, time to visit, time to read, and time to sew. It is much better and cheaper than soap for all cleaning. For greatest economy buy our large package.

GOLD DUST Washing Powder

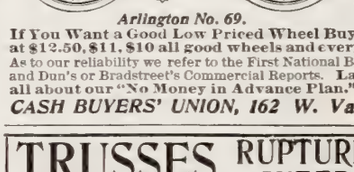
THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY
CHICAGO ST. LOUIS NEW YORK BOSTON

$16.50 NO MONEY IN ADVANCE!!
Bettter Wheels at Lower Prices than Ever Before Offered.



1899 styles shipped C. O. D., subject to examination to anyone, anywhere, in lots of one or more. Our Arlington No. 69 is a high grade, honest made wheel, as near perfection as it can be made and equal to others sold at $25 to $35. Equipped with a first class tire, two piece hanger, choice of handle bars, padded saddle, ball bearing throughout, first class in every respect, a wheel fit for a King at the exceedingly low price of $16.50. A one year written guarantee goes with it.

Arlington No. 69.

If You Want a Good Low Priced Wheel Buy the "Brunswick" at $14.50. Others at $12.50, $11, $10 all good wheels and everyone a bargain and stripped as low as $7.50
As to our reliability we refer to the First National Bank of Chicago or any Chicago Bank, Express Company and Dun's or Bradstreet's Commercial Reports. Large Illustrated Catalogue FREE, explaining all about our "No Money in Advance Plan." Write today for Special Offer and testimonials.
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. Van Buren St., Dept. 18 Chicago, Ills.

Royal is an absolutely pure grape cream of tartar baking powder, food made with which is healthful and delicious.

Baking powders made from alum and other harsh, caustic acids are lower in price, but they are injurious to the stomach.

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 1 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 50 Spruce St., New York.

It Is a Certainty That Catarrh can be cured. You will believe it after using a sample of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Mailed free. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Blosser Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Chambard's Tea, the most popular family medicine in France for biliousness, constipation, indigestion, headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, swelling of the stomach, congestions, eczema. The most agreeable and best purgative. Box 35 cents by mail. Legoll's Pharmacy, 286 7th Ave., N. Y., and leading druggists.

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED
made to reduce corpulency. The use of these belts reduces your size and leaves no room for surplus fat to accumulate. They can be used after any operations. Our goods are not sold by agents or druggists. Send for free pamphlets to the Improved Elastic Truss Co., 768 Broadway, N. Y. (Established 17 years.)

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only Truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and it retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Comfortable Belts

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

STAMMERING Cure Guaranteed. LEAST Expense. Educational Methods. For prospectus, etc., write to the VOICE SCHOOL, Salem, W. Va.

Intemperate Pleasures

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for June 18. II. Tim. 3: 1-7

ONE age, howsoever it differs from another, bears a certain resemblance to it in its real character. Looking below the surface, we see that men now are engaged in the same struggle with self-indulgence that they had to fight eighteen hundred years ago and have been fighting ever since. In some periods and in some countries it has taken one form, and in others another, but in all it is the same principle, the same old enemy, trying to assert itself and bring human nature into subjection. The Apostle, writing to his young disciple, predicted the coming of a time when men would be lovers of themselves, and urged him to be on his guard against them. Paul evidently thought that such a tendency would be a sign that the last days had arrived; but, though the sign has appeared in every generation, the end has not come. Whether we may expect such characteristics as he describes to be more marked in a future age than they have been in the past or than they are at present does not greatly concern us. We have to do with the present problem and the future as it may be influenced by the present.

While the young people's societies are expected to direct their attention mainly to the subject of the drink problem, that is only one of the forms of development of the great principle of self-indulgence. Men cannot be persuaded to make the effort needed for self-control and self-mastery. It is so much easier to yield than to resist and, at the beginning of life, so much more agreeable. It is at the end that retribution comes, and the way of the transgressor becomes hard. That is the reason why the effort should be made in the beginning of life, before the nature has become accustomed to the rule of the oppressor and his power has become firmly established. There can be no doubt that in this one matter of intoxicants, for example, it is possible in nearly all cases, by the inculcation of early habits of abstinence, to reduce the struggle for self-mastery to small proportions. In normal conditions the love and craving for stimulants is born and bred of indulgence. It is therefore an important service that one generation may render to another by setting an example of abstinence and educating the children in the same practice. Temptation may come in after life, and doubtless will come, but it will come with far less power if it comes as a stranger than if it proposes to occupy ground already familiar with its presence.

Past generations have been negligent in not making the drink question a matter of religion. We need to realize that in this, as in other forms of self-indulgence, we have a responsibility, both to ourselves and others. The habit is so insidious that the strongest are liable to fall unconsciously under its power, and to discover that its chains are firmly rivetted before there was consciousness of their being fastened. Then the struggle is severe, and many a one has been beaten in it. But, assuming that personally we are in no danger of falling, the prevalence of the evil calls for action from everyone who has taken upon him the name of Christ. His duty requires him to bear the burden of his brother. When he sees how many of his brethren are under the bondage of the habit, he perceives that anything he can do to help them to liberty it is his duty to do. Thus he may set them the example of abstinence; by his own abstinence he may do his share toward making that course respectable, so that the sufferer, who cannot bear the stigma of weakness, may have so many companions in the temperance brotherhood that abstinence ceases to be a stigma. Toward the fallen the Christian has also a clear duty. He has in his holy religion the one sure remedy which he may proclaim with confidence. The very essence of Christianity is union with Christ, the impartation of Christ's strength to the relief of human weakness. This is the drunkard's hope of deliverance, and this the Christian should proclaim.

"Great families of yesterday we show,
And lords,
Whose parents were the Lord knows who."

Mrs. Burton Harrison's
Society Story

In two parts. Old New York of one hundred years ago, and the social life of that day; a story of the ancestors of well-known New York people of to-day. Part II is entirely distinct as a story, but has to do with the descendants of the same people who figure in Part I. The descendant of the carpenter of one hundred years ago is a great financier of to-day, while the descendants of the aristocracy of one hundred years ago are now poor, but proud; and the love affairs of the young people of to-day are very much like those of their ancestors, but for the family positions being reversed.

You should read

THE CIRCLE OF A CENTURY

Begins in this week's number of

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Founded A. D. 1728 by Benj. Franklin

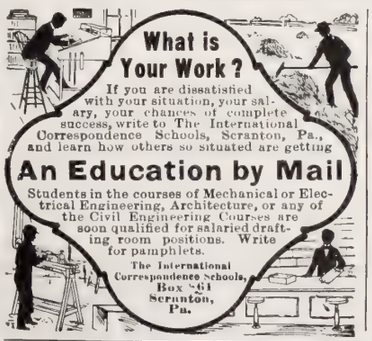
(OF PHILADELPHIA)

Dated June 10, 1899.

A SPECIAL SUMMER OFFER: We will mail The Saturday Evening Post every week, for one year only, on receipt of One Dollar. The regular price is $2.50, and it will be maintained after September 1, when this introductory offer will be withdrawn. This dollar offer is to quickly introduce a $2.50 weekly magazine. After you discover its superiority you will buy or subscribe through your newsman at the regular price. There will be no reduction after September 1.

TRY IT ONE YEAR FOR A DOLLAR

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA



What is Your Work?
If you are dissatisfied with your situation, your salary, your chances of complete success, write to The International Correspondence Schools, Scranton, Pa., and learn how others so situated are getting
An Education by Mail
Students in the courses of Mechanical or Electrical Engineering, Architecture, or any of the Civil Engineering Courses are soon qualified for salaried drafting room positions. Write for pamphlets.
The International Correspondence Schools, Box 861 Scranton, Pa.

WHY THE LARGEST?

Forty-five years of constant and healthful progress has put the

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

of Boston, Mass., at the top (both in size and standing) of musical institutions in America. Comprehensive in plan, moderate in price, thorough in practice and famous for results.

GEO. W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.

FRANK W. HALE, General Manager. Send for an illustrated catalogue.

For the home, library, sick room, studio, office, school room.
THE STANDORETTE
An Invalid's Stand, Easel, Reading Stand, Book Rest, Music Stand, Card Stand, Sewing Stand, Drawing Board, all in one handsome piece of furniture. Compactly folded; shipped in box 24x21x5¼
Thousands in use giving the best of satisfaction. Shipped on approval, freight paid. If not as represented, money refunded. Light, durable, ornamental. Made of steel tubing, enameled in black. Trimmings nickel plated. All adjustments are automatic. Our booklet mailed free
D. H. ALLEN & CO., Miamisburg, O.

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT	And on Lake Champlain $4.00 to $10.00 per week. Send 4c. postage for Illustated Book. A. W. ECCLESTONE, S.P.A., 353 Broadway, N.Y.

WALL PAPER
Send for free sample book of beautiful designs direct from manufacturers and save 25 per cent.
Agents Wanted.
KAYSER & ALLMAN,
1214-1216 Market St., Phila., Pa.

HOLDFAST HAIRPIN

Will not split, warp, or break. Stay where they are put. Never fall out, and never wear out. Made in white, black, brown and auburn. State whether hair is heavy or light. If your dealer cannot supply you, send 50 cents for a sample of six. CONSOLIDATED SAFETY PIN COMPANY, Box 129, Bloomfield, N. J.

The Master's Gift

LIKE a caller dear, and welcome, there came knocking at my door
Happiness so rare and tender all unknown to me before.
Was it a sweet strain of music that such thrilling rapture shed,
Or the sweep of angel pinions as they on some errand sped?
But I thought it was the Master show'ring blessing on my head.

Surely 'twas a moment holy; felt I more love's sacred power
When my spirit knew his presence and he brought to me a flower.
Eagerly mine arms would clasp it, but he softly answered, "No;
Far too frail its folded petals; earth would mar those leaves of snow."
Through my heart then, like an arrow, swiftly shot a pang of woe.

Mighty was the love I bore it; with a yearning wild and deep Prayed I that the loving Master would give me this flower to keep;
But he gently whispered: "Trust me; earth is full of sin and blight;
This fair flower will bloom in heaven, in the golden city's light;
There your own you yet may claim it—when faith blossoms into sight."

M[illegible]

♦

A Drunkard Who Bought a Jail

AMONG the many stories of reformed drunkards, one of the most remarkable is that of Thomas Handsford, a young workman of Derbyshire, England. Handsford had a very bad reputation; he was a notorious drunkard and poacher and had been imprisoned many times. It was said that for years he had not been sober for one whole week at a time. While drinking with a companion in a saloon adjoining the jail where the two had so often been confined, the companion, whose name was Stafford, staggered and fell dead upon the floor. Handsford rushed out of the place, vowing he would never touch the vile stuff again as long as he lived. He kept his resolution faithfully for thirty-five years—until he died. For ten years he worked industriously and soberly, and at the end of that time had saved enough from his earnings at stone-cutting to buy the old jail in which he had served many a term for his misconduct. He soon converted the building into a cheery, comfortable home for himself and his bride, whom he took there on the day of their wedding. Soon after they were settled in their new home he inserted in the front wall of the building a tablet with the following inscription:

A DRUNKARD'S REFORM

A working man, a teetotaler for ten years who was formerly a notorious drunkard and a [illegible] sober earnings in the purchase of the town's prison, which he has converted into a comfortable [illegible] the prison whilst a drunkard and a poacher, he is now owner of the whole and occupier of the premises [illegible]

The old jail is now occupied by his widow, who lives there with her only son. Its strange history and the stone tablet in the wall make it an object of general interest.

♦

The Gospel in Porto Rico

Mr. Frank L. Smith, Superintendent of the International Y. M. C. A. work at San Juan, Porto Rico, who has undertaken the work of Sunday School organization there, writes to us as follows:

SAN JUAN, P. R., May 16.

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. Banks enclosing your check for $300 to be applied for the Sunday School work here. Last Sunday I announced to our congregation at the theatre, that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had authorized me to enter upon a definite campaign for them and their readers, and that I proposed to make a success of the Sunday School in the theatre. This building is large and admirably adapted to the purpose. Already we have a nucleus for successful work, but I have purposely delayed permanent organization until you were ready to act definitely. Now I shall begin a careful and systematic work, using all the forces that can be mustered.

Last Sunday we had forty-six little ones in a class taught by Miss Ida Hayes, of the Baptist Home Missionary Society of the United States, while Mr. McKim taught a larger class of adults. For the present, I shall continue Mr. Andrew McKim as Superintendent, and shall act as Secretary of the school so as to care for the detail work. Already one or two workers are pledged to assist, and instead of employing a missionary it will be better to avail of volunteer workers at present. I shall call to my aid each month as an auditing committee Gen. John Eaton and Mr. McKim, in order that your readers may have an exact accounting of the funds which they provide. You will also remember that we labor against a united Roman Catholicism. They have forbidden the children to attend the [illegible] but we look for a great many children who will be drawn by our bright and attractive exercises. Thanking you for the interest in our Army and Navy work,

[illegible]

We hope from time to time to publish letters descriptive of the progress of the Sunday School work in San Juan and other Porto Rican cities, where Mr. Smith is now laboring. All contributions for this special work among the little children of the new colony will be acknowledged in these columns. The following sums [illegible]

[illegible]	$40 [illegible]
[illegible]	5 [illegible]
Bernice Alderman	2 00
C. O. D., Mechan[illegible]sburg	1 00
[illegible]	[illegible]
B. H. S. A., Savan[illegible]ah	2 00
[illegible]	1 00
Melissa Elberson	25
Mary Isabella Banks	5 00
[illegible]	1 00
Mrs. M. C. Bennett	1 00
A Friend of Sunday Schools, Thorn Grove	1 00
Edwin Johnson	10 00
Maggie Huffman	1 00
[illegible]	[illegible]
	$170 90

WHOLESOME ADVICE

For People Whose Stomachs are Weak and Digestion Poor.

Dr. Harlandson, whose opinion in diseases is worthy of attention, says when a man or woman comes to me complaining of indigestion, loss of appetite, sour stomach, belching, sour watery risings, headaches, sleeplessness, lack of ambition and a general run down nervous condition I advise them to take after each meal one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, allowing the tablet to dissolve in the mouth, and thus mingle with the food eaten. The result is that the food is speedily digested before it has time to sour and ferment. These tablets will digest food anyway whether the stomach wants to or not, because they contain harmless digestive principles, vegetable essences, pepsin and Golden Seal which supply just what the weak stomach lacks.

I have advised the tablets with great success, both in curing indigestion and to build up the tissues, increase flesh in the thin nervous patients, whose real trouble was dyspepsia and as soon as the stomach was put to rights they did not know what sickness was.

A fifty cent package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be bought at any drug store, and as they are not a secret patent medicine, they can be used as often as desired with full assurance that they contain nothing harmful in the slightest degree; on the contrary, anyone whose stomach is at all deranged will find great benefit from the use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They will cureany form of stomach weakness or disease except cancer of the stomach. Full size package at druggists 50 cents. Send to F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., for little book on stomach troubles, mailed free.

$60 Sewing Machines for $18.

We pay the Freight

We [illegible] Sewing Machines [illegible] Warranted [illegible] Ship on Approval [illegible] Send No Money [illegible] Sewing Machine [illegible] Guaranteed [illegible] Absolutely New [illegible] Latest Improvements [illegible] Drop Head [illegible] Handsome Oak Cabinet [illegible] Guaranteed [illegible] Years [illegible] Full Set of Attachments and Warranted for 10 Years [illegible] Write for Our Special Offer [illegible] Mention Paper [illegible] Illustrated Circular [illegible] Full particulars, and will be mailed free.

Address J. N. HOOK & CO., A 1351 Central Ave. CINCINNATI, O

Music Easily Learned

AT HOME, [illegible] Pianos, Organs, Guitar and Voice. [illegible] Tunes, Notes, Chords, Accompaniments, [illegible] Laws of Harmony [illegible] Cheapest, Easiest, most rapid and thorough way. By [illegible] Lessons. Open to the bottom of music, makes it clear to the beginner, creates a [illegible] A few days' practice and you play perfect Accompaniments in all Keys. Circulars Free. Write for them. Worth hundreds of dollars to anyone [illegible] Music. 10 Lessons, 10 Cents.

U. S. RICE MUSIC CO., B 241 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO, ILLS.

A NEW SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOOK.

ROYAL HYMNAL

By Rev. ROBERT LOWRY and IRA D. SANKEY.

[illegible] Brooklyn, N. Y.

$30 per 100. [illegible] post free, 25 cts.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

FILLMORES' MUSIC [illegible] Choruses, Choirs [illegible] purpose. Books, Sheet Music, Octavos, Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments. New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free. FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

PLAYS Dialogues, Speakers for School, Class and Parlor. Catalogue free. T. S. DENISON, Publisher, Chicago, Ill.

GRAVY—DO NOT SERVE IT ON THE DINNER-TABLE BEFORE YOU HAVE ADDED A TABLE-SPOONFUL OF

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

The Original and Genuine Worcestershire.

LEA & PERRINS' IS THE FAVORITE TABLE SAUCE THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.—SEE SIGNATURE ON WRAPPER.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, AGTS., NEW YORK

LIVED 91 YEARS

The Life of Sir Isaac Holden furnishes a lesson to those who eat bread

The Hon. T. P. O'Connor, member of Parliament [illegible] the life of his old colleague, Sir Isaac Holden, who [illegible] and four o'clock [illegible] fatigue, nor eve[illegible] did not bring [illegible] to him, and, ev[illegible] tality and bra[illegible]

[illegible] selection of food has [illegible] largely lost. This [illegible] properties of the [illegible]

The finest "whole wheat flour" is made by the Franklin Mills Co., of Lockport, N. Y., which is rich in brain and muscle making properties, and which enriches the blood and feeds the nerve tissues. It makes delicious bread of a beautiful golden color.

handsor[illegible]

IMITATIONS OF

OXYDONOR

ARE DANGEROUS TO USE

The Original is made by the Discoverer and Inventor

DR. H. SANCHE

Which is the only safe instrument.

[illegible] the Process [illegible] these Instruments.

From Rev. JOHN A. THOMPSON, D.D.,

[illegible]

PRICE NOW $10

DR. H. SANCHE & COMPANY,

[illegible] 5th Avenue, New York City.
[illegible] State Street, Chicago, Ill.
[illegible] Fifth Street, Detroit, Mich.
Canadian Office: [illegible] St. Catherine Street, Montreal, P.Q.

WOOL SOAP

is as good as any soap selling for ten times the WOOL SOAP price

NO CHAPPED OR ROUGH HANDS FROM WOOL SOAP USING

SWIFT AND COMPANY CHICAGO

Send $1.00 and this watch will be sent to you for examination.....

It is a Ladies' Size, Stem Wind, Hunting case watch [illegible] Waltham [illegible] anteed. Solid Gold with [illegible] Diamond, [illegible] to wear as a chain 18 inches long with Diamond slide. [illegible] It would sell at retail for $25. [illegible] gentleman's size, heavy gold, double stock Waltham watch [illegible] "ROYAL" grade, [illegible] Worth $15. [illegible] $8.35 [illegible] paid for, and will send one [illegible] $8.1

[illegible] Send for Catalogue [illegible]

KEENE'S TWO STORES: 140 Fulton St., New York City. 1310 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Reversible

LINENE Collars and Cuffs.

Stylish, convenient, economical. Made of fine cloth, finished in pure starch, and exactly resemble fashionable linen goods.

No Laundry Work

When soiled discard. Ten Collars or five pairs of Cuffs, 25cts. By mail, 30cts. Send 6 cts. in stamps for sample collar or pair of cuffs. Name size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. S, Boston, Mass.

RUBENS DANTE TASSO MURILLO ANGELO RAPHAEL

THE "CLEAN CUT" CAKE TIN

prevents cakes from sticking and produces a perfect crust. It is made of [illegible] tin with a [illegible] knife, [illegible] ed in center and at [illegible] sides [illegible] able. Sample sent prepaid on receipt of 15c. Agents send 6 cents postage for free sample. We are the largest manufacturers of Pure Aluminum, Scotch Granite and Tin Ware in the world. Address Dept. I

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, 25 Randolph St. Chicago, Ill.

CRAZY WORK [illegible] Embroidery Chenille, [illegible] remnants. [illegible] remnants. [illegible] Lemarie's Silk Mill, [illegible]

DO YOU WANT More than Savings Bank Interest? To Sell Land or Mortgages? If so, write FIDELITY INVESTMENT CO., TACOMA, WASH.

WORK FOR [illegible]

25,000 SCHOOLBOYS [illegible]

$300 to $10.00 a day [illegible] easily made working for me. [illegible] guaranteed [illegible] my team. Address [illegible] promptly [illegible] B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Seizure of Guam

ONE of the bloodless victories of the United States during the war with Spain was the seizure of Guam, in the Ladrone Islands, on June 21, by Captain Glass, of the cruiser Charleston. The object of seizing these Spanish possessions in the Pacific was to provide the United States with a base for coaling, and at the same time deprive Spain of some of her territory. After the destruction of the Spanish fleet in the Philippines by Rear-Admiral Dewey, and the appointment of Major-General Wesley Merritt as military governor of the islands, no less than four expeditions of the United States troops were despatched to the Philippines on transports from the port of San Francisco.

One of these expeditions, convoyed by the Charleston, seized Guam. It was on the morning of June 20 that the Charleston, with three troop-ships following, sighted the island of Guam. The transports remained off the island, while the Charleston headed up through the channel in the coral reef that makes San Luis de Apra the best harbor in the middle Pacific. The Charleston sent thirteen shells from her forward three-pounder into the fortress of Santa Cruz, shortening her range with each shot. As the fortress did not reply, it became evident that the defence had been abandoned. The Charleston opened fire on the fort at half-past nine o'clock in the morning. At half-past ten a small boat containing three Spanish officials put off to the Charleston. The officials were the captain of the port, Lieutenant Commander Jose Garcia y Gutierrez, of the Spanish navy, and Dr. Jose Romero, port surgeon. The officials came on board entirely ignorant of the fact that war had been declared between the United States and Spain, and making most profuse apologies that the lack of ammunition at Santa Cruz made it impossible for them to return the Charleston's salute. Greatly to their surprise, the Spanish officials were conducted to Captain Glass's cabin, where they were informed that they were prisoners of war. They were ordered to convey to the Governor of the Ladrones, Don Juan Marina, a demand that he come upon the Charleston. Paroled to deliver this message, the Spanish officials were sent ashore. In the afternoon Captain Duarte, the governor's secretary and an interpreter, boarded the Charleston, with a letter from the governor. Don Juan Marina, taken by surprise, was playing for delay. His letter stated that under the Spanish law it was impossible for him to come aboard a foreign man-of-war. Captain Glass next morning sent Lieutenant Braunersreuther, Ensign Evans, and half a dozen well-armed sailors to Piti, the landing of the harbor.

Lieut. Braunersreuther bore a letter from Capt. Glass to the Governor of the Ladrones, demanding the immediate surrender of the islands without conditions. Lieutenant Braunersreuther was instructed to allow only half an hour for the consideration of the demand. It was a quarter past ten when the Americans stepped ashore at the landing stage at Piti. The Spanish officials met them at the boat stairs, and, with profuse politeness, offered to escort them to the house of the captain of the port. This courtesy was refused and the letter from Captain Glass delivered. Governor Marina expressed some surprise at the peremptory character of the demand made by the men who had come ashore under the Stars and Stripes, but retired to the house of the port captain to consider the demand. Twenty-five minutes had elapsed when the Spanish governor and the three officials who had taken part in the conference, the port captain, the port surgeon, and Captain Duarte, commanding the Spanish infantry on the island, returned to the landing with a sealed letter addressed to Captain Glass. Lieutenant Braunersreuther promptly broke the seal, opened the letter, and handed it to an interpreter to read. It was a surrender in due form, without conditions, of everything in the way of troops and military supplies on the island of Guam.

*From History up to Date, a concise account of the War of 1898 between the United States and Spain, by William A. Johnston; illustrated; pp. 258; price, $1.50. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, publishers.

Books Received

Encyclopedia of Sacred Theology, Its Principles. By Abraham Kuyper, D.D., of the Free University, Amsterdam. Translated from the Dutch by Rev. J. Hendrik De Vries, M.A. With an introduction by Professor Benjamin B. Warfield, D.D., LL.D., of Princeton Theological Seminary. The English translation of this famous work will be warmly welcomed by Calvinistic scholars. Pp. 799. Price, $5. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, Fifth Avenue, New York.

Bishop Thoburn has a new book in press, entitled The Church of Pentecost. Although the volume will not be a very bulky one, running only to about 350 pages, it will treat of a wide variety of deeply interesting subjects. Among its twenty-three chapters, says the Indian Witness, are discussions of such topics as Christian Communism, The Gifts of Pentecost, The Baptism of the Spirit, New Testament Prophecy, Church Polity, Social Life and Worship, Evangelists, The Bible of Pentecost and other themes of kindred importance. The Church of Pentecost, we may state, will be issued simultaneously in Calcutta, London and New York, and will probably be in the hands of the public in two or three months.

O'Neill's

SIXTH AVENUE, . . .
. 20th to 21st Street, . .
. . . . . NEW YORK

Importers and Retailers

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Cloaks, Costumes, House-Furnishing Goods, Etc.

SOME SPECIALLY ATTRACTIVE BARGAINS
Reserved for Our Mail-Order Customers!

WOMEN'S CHEVIOT SERGE SUITS with Fly Front, Walking Coat lined throughout with black Taffeta. The Skirt is Percaline-lined, full circular shape. These Suits are made and finished entirely by men tailors $9.98

WOMEN'S WASH SKIRTS. Linen Skirts, four yards wide and finished with deep hem. A great bargain at . . . $1.98

WHITE PIQUE SKIRTS, full circular shape, finished with three rows of insertion and deep hem $4.98

SUMMER SILKS. Black Satin Duchesse, 27 inches wide. Regular $2.50 quality $1.50

Black Peau de Soie, 22 inches wide. Regular $1.40 quality, $1.00

Samples of these or any other silks that you may require may be had upon application.

When you write mention "The Christian Herald."

H. O'NEILL & CO., Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK

Trial Package Free!

If any reader, suffering from rheumatism, will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 219 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

AGENTS WANTED
FOR
DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC CORSETS.

A perfect fit and nature's own remedy for backache, nervousness, indigestion, headache, liver and kidney trouble—nine styles. A valuable book free.

No 1 Corset, $1. Post paid, $1.10. State waist size.

GEO. A. SCOTT, Room 7, 842 Broadway, New York.

DO NOT STAMMER YOU CAN BE CURED

The Philadelphia Institute is endorsed by Bishop Cyrus D. Foss and Hon. John Wanamaker, Ex-Post Master Gen. U. S., Philadelphia. Also Prof. Wm. H. Brewer, 35 yrs. with Yale University. Send for new illustrated book to the Philadelphia Institute, 1033 Spring Garden St., Phila., Pa., Established 1864.
Edwin S. Johnston, Founder and Principal.

RUPTURE
is easily curable by the use of
EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS.
Causes no inconvenience; yields to every motion, can be worn day and night. The spiral spring and graduated pressure does it. Hernia always retained; brings comfort and cure. Used by U. S. Surgeon General. If unsatisfactory return truss in good condition and money will be refunded. Circulars for stamp. Ask your druggist or send direct to EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS CO., 104 N. Fourth St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

$14.50 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL

buy direct from factory. Save agents large profits. No money in advance. WARRANTED 10 YEARS.
$45 Arlington Machine for $14.50
$35 Arlington Machine for ... $12.50
Other Machines $8.00, $9.25 and $11.50
all attachments free, over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write today for special freight offer.
CASH BUYERS' UNION,
158-164 W. Van Buren St., B-18 Chicago, Ill.

Your Dinner can be cooked all at one time on one burner of any kind of stove if you use
THE IDEAL Steam Cooker
Prevents steam and odors. Will reduce fuel bills 50 per cent. Whistle blows when cooker needs more water. Will hold 12 one-qt. glass jars in Canning Fruit. Agents wanted.
Toledo Cooker Co., Box 16, Toledo, O.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists

There are none so deaf
as those who won't buy
Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums
The only scientific sound conductors. Invisible, comfortable, efficient. They fit in the ear. Doctors recommend them. Thousands testify to their perfection and to benefit derived.
Information and book of letters from many users, free.
WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
223 Trust Bldg. Louisville, Ky.

MONUMENTS
DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate WHITE BRONZE
More artistic and enduring; less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Color greatly improved. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.
NO MOSS GROWING. NO CRUMBLING
CLEANING CRACKING.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

The Latest Improved McCREERY FOLDING VAPOR BATH CABINET. Has a Door and all the latest improvements. A home treatment that will cure la grippe, rheumatism, all blood, skin & kidney troubles, reduces superfluous flesh. Price $5. Face steamer $1.50 extra. Folds neatly in small space. Free descriptive book and testimonials. Special inducements to salesmen. MOLLENKOPF & McCREERY, 138 Summit St. Toledo, O.

NO DIRT LEFT
in clothes washed with the "BUSY BEE WASHER"
100 pieces in one hour and no hard work done. That is the record. AGENTS WANTED. Exclusive sale. Write for terms.
Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 119 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.

A NEW RHEUMATIC REMEDY.

A prominent physician writes:

SPOTSWOOD, N. J.

DEAR SIRS:—Please send me, by mail, four more bottles of TARTARLITHINE.

I will also here state, in justice, that this is the most welcome remedy that has come into my hands since my beginning of the practice of medicine. It has given me, in every case of rheumatism in which I have used it, the happiest kind of results. I have used discretion, perhaps even more than necessary, in its employment; that it be given to patients whose cases do not yield to ordinary treatment, old chronic cases of gouty diathesis, where there is a tendency to calcareous deposits, etc. These are undoubtedly the most troublesome patients to give what might fairly be termed good results. Now these have been the very kind in which I have been using Tartarlithine with the very happiest results to patients and myself. Many valuable remedies come daily to our aid, but this has been the most welcome one to me thus far.

Yours very truly,
J. G. D——, M. D.

Regular package $1.00, 100 doses.
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.
THIS NEW
ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.
C. H. EGGLESTON & CO., 1201 MASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO

"To enjoy fair eyesight the rest of my life, is one of the most comforting thoughts that can possibly enter my mind except the thought of a final home in Heaven."
—BEECHER

THE INESTIMABLE BLESSING OF SIGHT
AVOID SPECTACLES & EYEGLASSES
$18.00 a week and expenses

It your blood is pure you are well fitted for life's duties and pleasures. Any clods of impurity need dissolving and purifying with Hood's Sarsaparilla. America's Spring blood-purifying medicine.

HIRES Rootbeer

IS a

Temperance Drink

It is prepared for temperance people, a multitude of whom believe it helpful to the great cause of temperance. Any one who states that HIRES Rootbeer is not a temperance drink, either willfully misrepresents the facts or has not investigated the subject in an impartial manner. HIRES Rootbeer is a temperance drink. The leading chemists say so without qualification, and stand ready to prove their assertion. If there are any fair-minded persons anywhere who have a scrupulous doubt as to the honesty of this claim, and will address THE CHARLES E. HIRES COMPANY, Philadelphia, they will be given every opportunity to satisfy themselves as to the ingredients, the nature, the character of HIRES Rootbeer.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN — Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION — New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN — Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN — St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THE truth of the matter is, there are so many mixtures of Zinc, Barytes, Whiting, etc., sold under misleading brands of "White Lead" and "Pure White Lead," that in order to obtain Pure White Lead it is absolutely necessary to make sure that the brand is right.

Those named in the margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free, also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs of various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 100 William St., New York.

Some Splendid Summer Servings

Libby's

Fire-saving

Luncheons

Troubleless meals—all you have to do is to serve—the very top of quality.

Veal Loaf—a pleasing change for lunch.
Ox Tongue (whole)—Unsurpassed—an ideal lunch.
Compressed Corned Beef—Incomparable—must be eaten to be appreciated.
Peerless Water-Sliced Smoked Beef—An appetizer of unequalled merit.
Pork and Beans—cooked with care—couldn't be better—with or without tomato sauce.
Deviled Ham, Potted Ham, Beef and Tongue make excellent sandwiches—everybody likes 'em.

Put up in convenient size key-opening cans.

"How to Make Good Things to Eat," gives complete list of our Luncheon Specialties, and how to prepare them. Yours for a postal.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago

ONE YEAR'S FREE TRIAL

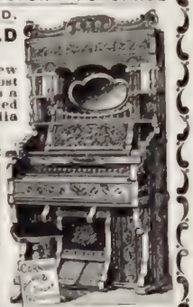
WE WILL SHIP A CORNISH PIANO OR A CORNISH ORGAN ANYWHERE UPON THE DISTINCT UNDERSTANDING THAT IF IT IS NOT SATISFACTORY TO PURCHASER AFTER 12 MONTHS' USE WE WILL TAKE IT BACK AND REFUND PURCHASE MONEY AND FREIGHT CHARGES WITH 6 INTEREST ADDED.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS OF THE WORLD FAMOUS CORNISH PLAN

and for a complete description of the instruments made by us, see our new Souvenir Catalogue for 1899, handsomely illustrated in colors. The most comprehensive musical catalogue in the trade. The frontispiece is a masterly reproduction in fac-simile of an interesting oil painting, designed and executed for us by an eminent artist, representing "Saint Cecelia and the Angelic Choir." This beautiful catalogue is sent FREE charges prepaid, and we also include our novel reference book "The Heart of the People." Catalogue, Book and our latest Special Offers FREE.

PIANOS —FROM— $155 All Pianos are fitted with our Patent Magical Attachment (no organ, harp, zither, etc.)

ORGANS —FROM— $25 All Organs are fitted with Mediatone Orchestral Action.



SPECIAL a prompt response to this advertisement will secure a discount of $10.00 on the list prices as quoted in our 1899 Catalogue on any Cornish Organ or $20.00 on the list prices if you buy a Cornish Piano.

REFERENCES—our bank your bank, any bank, or any of the multitude of patrons who have purchased millions of dollars' worth of instruments from us during the past fifty years.

Mention paper and write to-day CORNISH & CO., (Established nearly 50 yrs) WASHINGTON, NEW JERSEY.

8000 BICYCLES

Overstock must be closed out. '98 MODELS $9 to $18. Shopworn and second hand wheels, good as new, $3 to $10. NEW '99 MODELS $11 to $30. Great factory clearing sale. We ship to anyone on approval and trial without a cent in advance.

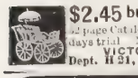
EARN A BICYCLE by helping us advertise our superb line of '99 models. We give one Rider Agent in each town FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.

E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO., CHICAGO, ILLS.

HOW ABOUT THAT FENCE

you were going to build? We sell a fence that is equal in quality to the best on the market, direct to the farmer at wholesale rates. All interwoven—no loose ends to unravel or untwist. Cross wires can't slip. Prices low. Special prices and extra discounts to farmers. ADVANCE FENCE CO., 1906 Old St., Peoria, Ill.

ACENTS WANTED! We furnish free samples to agents. E S Frost, Lubec, Me., sold $132.70, re but two days. Write for Catalog, new goods, rapid sellers. Richardson Mfg. Co., 6th St., Bath, N.Y.



$2.45 buys a MAPLE AND REED BODY Baby Carriage 52 page Catalogue Free. We Pay Freight and ship on 10 days trial. No money required in advance. Address VICTOR MANUFACTURING CO., Dept. H 21, 295 and 297 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

YOUR WAGON WHEELS

may need new rings, new spokes or new tires. These repairs have to be made every little while with wooden wheels. Stop all this expense for all time by buying a set of our

ELECTRIC Steel Wheels

They are made with direct or staggered oval spokes, broad tires, any height, and to fit any wagon. They can't rot, go to spoke and need no tire setting last indefinitely. There is only one thing better, and that is an

ELECTRIC HANDY WAGON.

Our free illustrated catalogue tells all about both and gives prices. Send for it.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO. Box 136, Quincy, Ill.

LARKIN SOAPS

AND PREMIUMS.—FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES: no experience needed; position permanent, self seller PEASE MFG. CO., P.O. Box A, Cincinnati, O

STARK BROS PAY CASH every WEEK if you sell STARK TREES. Outfit free. STARK NURSERY, LOUISIANA, MO., Rockport, Ill., Dansville, N.Y.

WYANDOTTE BAKING SODA

is a bigger package of better soda for less money than you have ever bought before for these reasons:

A package costs but five cents and weighs twelve ounces. Other five cent sodas not so good weigh less.

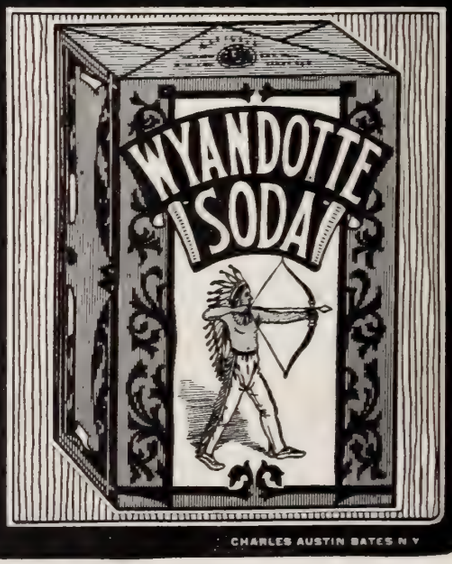
Ounce for ounce, Wyandotte is stronger and better and goes farther than other kinds. It is absolutely pure.

It will make delicious soda biscuits, Johnny-cake, waffles, doughnuts and other things, which are good only when your soda is the best.

We also make Wyandotte Washing Soda and Bell Starch, each of which costs five cents a package.

For thirty days every woman who sends us the name of her grocer can get a full size package of each of these things free.

THE J. B. FORD COMPANY,
Box F, Wyandotte, Mich.



CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

VOLUME 22 NUMBER 24

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, JUNE 14, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

HOLY BIBLE
He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God (2. Sam. 23:3).
Kings of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth: let them praise the name of the Lord (Ps. 148:11, 13).
Righteousness exalteth a nation (Prov. 14:34).
By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth (Prov. 8:16).
HOLY BIBLE
The throne shall be established in righteousness (Prov. 25:5).
Thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers (Ex. 18:21).
Is it fit to say to a king, thou art wicked? and to princes, ye are ungodly? Job 34:18.
1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
11

The Nation's Foremost Men Declare for Christ

1. The President; 2. John Hay, Secretary of State; 3. Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury; 4. U. S. Senator Eugene Hale; 5. U. S. Senator W. B. Allison; 6. Rear Admiral W. T. Sampson; 7. Brig.-Gen. W. R. Shafter; 8. Maj.-Gen. John R. Brooke; 9. Brig.-Gen. Guy V. Henry; 10. Francis L. Patton, Princeton University; 11. Marshall Field

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Aug. M. B., Reading, Pa. What was the "Potter's Field" and where did it get its name?

It was a piece of ground on which a pottery had previously existed, and although the name by which it is now known, locally, is Hak-ed-damm, the old association clings to it. In the Septuagint, the word translated "potter" (in our Bibles), is rendered "furnace." After the incident mentioned in the Gospels, it was used as a burial-ground for strangers and paupers.

W. T. G., Helena, Okla., and many others. What [illegible]

The ordinary study or criticism is directed to finding out the meaning of the passages, their correct translation and their significance and bearing on doctrines. The higher critics go above and back of all that, applying to the books of the Bible the same tests and methods of examination as are applied to other ancient books. They try to find out who were really the authors of the books and when they were written and whether any changes have been made in them since they were written. This latter question they try to solve by a close examination of the text. When they find, for example, such an expression as "There was no king in Israel in those days" (Judges 17:6) they conclude that that sentence was inserted as explanatory, by some one who edited the book after the contemporaneous historian had finished it. Or to take an example of a different kind: There is a statement in Psalm 51:16 that God desires not sacrifice, while in the nineteenth verse it is said that he will be pleased with sacrifice. The explanation the higher critics give, is that probably the latter verse was added later, by some priest who did not wish the people to cease bringing sacrifices. The best scholars of the present day believe that many of the conclusions reached by the higher critics are erroneous, and that others are mere guesses for which there is not sufficient evidence.

B. L. C., Verona, Pa. What was meant by the reservation of the Temple Court in Rev. 11:2?

The seer was instructed not to take the outer court into account, as it was used for the Gentiles and they would have access to it, while the Jews were excluded from their parts. The forty and two months, or three and a half years, is a favorite prophetic period, being half of a septennate. According to the year-day method of interpretation it would mean that Gentile ownership of Jerusalem would continue 1,260 years.

B. V., Spring Lake, N. Y. Is there any evidence that Jesus knew before he was baptized by John that he was the promised Messiah?

His reply to his mother when she found him in the Temple (Luke 2:49), appears to show that at that time, Jesus being then twelve years old, he had some idea that God was in a special and peculiar manner his Father. Whether he realized at that time what his mission was is doubtful. Luke's remark (2:52) that he increased in wisdom after this may indicate that he did not know.

Mrs. S. [illegible]

2. What Indian tribes were represented in the treaty by which the land was ceded to the whites?

1. The area is estimated at 31,400 square miles, and the population at the time of the last census was about 75,000, but is now very much larger. 2. The Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, Seminoles, and Chickasaws.

T. T. V., Fr[illegible] 1. What is known of [illegible] is the name of the father of Mrs. William H. Sigourney, the poet? 3. How can I obtain a copy of Rev. Dr. Talmage's answer to infidel [illegible]

1. Nothing definite. Many stories have been told of his capture and death, but none are substantiated. The last positively known of him, after his treachery to the English and the massacre he perpetrated at Cawnpore, in 1857, was his retreat into Nepaul before Sir H[illegible]

[illegible] inner cleansing and clearness of spiritual [illegible] burst was over, brought him back grateful and [illegible] thanks. The nine are not again mentioned.

M. E. C., Bath, Mich. How is it that when we pray for the conversion of friends, they are not converted? Surely God wishes them to be converted and Christ promised that what we asked [illegible]

It is not God's way to force conversion on any one. It would not be conversion, in the [illegible] If the man will only turn to him, if ever so feebly he will look to him, God will change his nature. But there must be a conscious willingness to receive the blessing. Many such prayers as [illegible] so deals with a man in his providence as to lead him to seek the blessing. But there is [illegible] dealings fail of their designed effect. Man is responsible; you cannot escape that fact and God will not save him against his own will. Christ's promise did not include matters contrary to the principles of the divine government.

Anna S., Ogden, Ia. I am trying to live a true Christian life. I am very fond of skating and "out of doors" games, and I am told that it is just as bad as dancing. As it is impossible for me to think so, I come to you for advice.

There is no harm in a moderate indulgence in innocent recreation and whoever is attempting to persuade you to the contrary is wrong. This applies equally to indoor and outdoor recreations. Your own conscience will prompt you to draw the line at all doubtful enjoyments. To skating and different pastimes that call for exercise in the open air there can be no objection, provided the company be rightly chosen. Dancing, on the other hand, is a recreation that

New Movement of Hebrew Benevolence

Home of the United Hebrew Charities of New York City—Gift of Solomon Loeb—Help for Jewish People

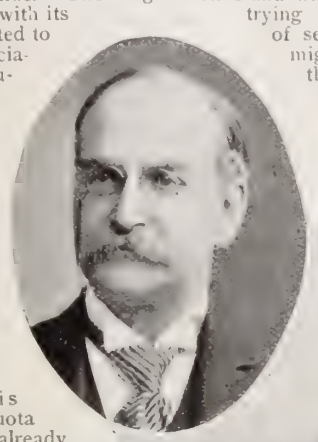
HENRY RICE,
President

DR. LEE K. FRANKEL,
Manager Executive Staff

JACOB H. SCHIFF,
Chairman Executive Committee

OFFICERS OF THE UNITED HEBREW CHARITIES OF NEW YORK

ONE of the most important and interesting events in the history of organized metropolitan charities is the recent dedication of of the new home of the United Hebrew Charities of the city of New York, at Twenty-first street and Second avenue. The large and handsome edifice, with its numerous offices suited to the needs of the association, is a noble monument to the generosity of the donor, Mr. Solomon Loeb. Heretofore the association, one of the most helpful in the city of New York, has not been fitly housed; in its convenient and beautiful new dwelling it will be able to accomplish larger and more effective results in administering relief to needy and struggling Israelites of this great city, whose quota of Hebrew citizens, already large, is continually receiving increase by immigration from countries less friendly to the race than our own.



I. S. ISAACS, SECRETARY

H. S. ALLEN, VICE-PRESIDENT

THE NEW UNITED HEBREW CHARITIES BUILDING

The impressive and dignified opening exercises were attended not only by Hebrews from all over the city but by a large concourse of their Christian friends. Mr. Henry Rice, president of the association, in his address formally accepting the building, gave as follows a brief history of the society:

"Next October will witness the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of this society. Many years ago the need was felt of co-operation among the relief societies which dealt with the Jewish poor of this city. But no successful movement to unify these heterogeneous elements took place until 1874, when delegates from some five or six Jewish relief societies met and organized the United Hebrew Charities of New York City. Year after year other associations with objects of like character have become affiliated with us, and our association has from small beginnings become a mighty factor for good. In 1880, following the well-defined policy of this Society that the truest way to help the poor is to prevent poverty, the directors established our Industrial School for Girls. A somewhat similar institution for boys was created the following year by the Hebrew Benevolent and Orphan Asylum Society and the Hebrew Free School Association in conformity with the suggestions of this society. Both these institutions are fulfilling their respective missions in a manner most satisfactory. A strain was put upon us in 1882 when the rapidly increasing immigration of Jewish refugees from Russia necessitated large expenditures and painstaking personal work. Arduous as were these duties, they were almost insignificant when compared with the labors required to meet the second tremendous wave of Russian immigration which began in 1891. The Russian Transportation Fund was established, in that most trying year, to provide a means of sending newly arrived immigrants to such parts of this country as seemed best fitted to afford them means of gaining an honest livelihood. In 1892 the Central Russian Refugee committe was formed and under direction of the United Hebrew Charities assumed the care of all newly arrived immigrants requiring assistance. The operations of this society extended from February to December of that year, since which time our society has dealt with this class as well as the resident Jewish poor. During the twenty-five years of the existence of the United Hebrew Charities the sums spent in caring for the thousands of the Jewish poor have aggregated more than two and a half million dollars."

The organization has 600 regular contributing members, some of whom give over $1,000 per annum, besides 1,000 annual contributors whose names are not formally enrolled. In addition, prominent Hebrews have been unsparing of their time, interest and labor in developing and perfecting the various branches of work undertaken. The various Sisterhoods of Personal Service, composed of Jewish ladies, and which cover city districts from the Battery to Harlem, joined forces with the Association in 1890, and are doing excellent relief work. The medical and nursing service to the poor in their own homes renders much timely aid where it is sorely needed. The Employment Bureau, which makes a special feature of removing families from the city and distributing them through rural communities, has accomplished much, not only in the interest of the Hebrew beneficiaries, but in that of the overcrowded municipality whose population is thereby reduced, and the country districts whose laboring force is correspondingly increased.

Allied institutions co-operating with the organization are numerous and prominent, as the Central Committee of the Baron de Hirsch Fund, the Montefiore Home for Chronic Invalids, Mt. Sinai Hospital, and others of relative note and distinctively Hebrew origin and management; besides the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Nurses' Settlement, Legal Aid Society, and others in which Christian and Jew are united for the relief of suffering humanity.

The founders of the association, who are also annual contributors to the extent of $1,000 or over, are David L. Einstein, M. Guggenheimer's sons, Emanuel Lehman, Loeb Solomon, Jacob H. Schiff, Speyer & Co., Louis Stern, L. Strauss & Sons, and A. Wolff. The President is Mr. Henry Rice. Messrs. H. S. Allen and Isaiah Josephi are Vice-Presidents; Solomon Loeb, giver of the building, is honorary Vice-President; the Treasurer is Cyrus L. Sulzberger; I. S. Isaacs is Secretary; Charles S. Hirsch, Superintendent of Employment Bureau; and Miss Lillie H. Boedicker is Registrar. Dr. Lee K. Frankel, of Philadelphia, who entered upon his duties as manager of the executive staff in May, is well known through his work as Director of the Jewish Chautauqua Society, Secretary of Dr. Berkowitz's congregation, and member of the Baron Hirsch Fund sub-committees. He succeeded to his position upon the resignation of Mr. N. S. Rosenau, who has been prominently identified with the benevolent activities of the association.

Many interesting facts are brought out in the twenty-fifth annual report of the association. For instance, the Employment Bureau Record shows improvement in the industrial situation. The number of applications received during the year fell from 8,569 in '96–'97 to 7,828, while the applications for help from employers rose from 2,578 to 3,428, showing increasing demand for labor. The number of Jewish immigrants was 21,070, of whom according to the best information to be obtained 4,455 left New York City for interior points, leaving 16,615 to be added to the population of the city.

Russia's Gratitude

When the cable several weeks ago announced widespread suffering in Russia, the proprietor of this journal, desirous of learning the facts, wrote to Count Bobrinskoy, one of the foremost nobles of the Empire, and who rendered valuable service in the great famine of 1892, when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sent the steam ship Leo to Russia with a cargo of food. Count Bobrinskoy's reply, received last week, will be read with interest by many who will recall the circumstances to which he refers. He says:

NICE, France, May 11, 1899.

My Dear Friend:—I thank you sincerely for your letter which I received at Nice. Your cablegram, in which you offer help to the people suffering from hunger in Russia, touched me deeply. Though the failure of crops last year can not be compared with the one of 1891, affecting only some parts of Eastern Russia, yet the need in a limited region is great, especially in the province of Kazan, near the Volga. Your letter has been communicated to the Secretary of State, Count Mouravief, who gave notice of it to the Emperor. I have already informed you by cablegram that foreign help is considered at present by the government as unnecessary, yet your generous offer was highly appreciated as a new proof of the generosity of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its proprietor, whose charitable activity in 1892 will never be forgotten by Russia. I shall always remember it with deep esteem. If I could remain this spring in Russia, I would accept with pleasure the task of being again (but in a private way this time), the channel through which your help might be sent to the famine-stricken districts; but being obliged to leave Russia and remain several months abroad, I could not offer you that co-operation.

A. BOBRINSKOY.

Our Porto Rican Sunday School

From the San Juan (Porto Rico) News of May 21, we take this extract, which will be read with interest by all who have been observant of the course of religious events in our new West Indian colonies:

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School.—The Sunday School has been organized into classes under competent instructors who understand the Spanish language, and is under the auspices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of which Dr. Louis Klopsch is proprietor, and Rev. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage, editor. The contributors of the widely circulated religious periodical provide the necessary equipment for a modern Sunday School, and will hereafter be in touch with the work in Porto Rico, and religious news from the island will be regularly perused by its million readers. The Sunday School meets at 9 o'clock A. M. The little folks are taught to sing hymns and receive excellent moral instruction. Soldiers lately arrived are cordially invited to attend these services." Little Porto Ricans can be greatly helped through Sunday Schools.

· THE · METROPOLITAN · PULPIT ·

. . . WHICH CHURCH? . . .

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Gen. 13: 8:

"Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen. Is not the whole land before thee?"

UNCLE and nephew, Abram and Lot, both pious, both millionaires, and with such large flocks of bleating sheep and lowing cattle that their herdmen got into a fight, perhaps about the best pasture, or about the best water privilege, or because the cow of one got hooked by the horns of the other. Not their poverty of opportunity, but their wealth, was the cause of controversy between these two men. To Abram, the glorious old Mesopotamian sheik, such controversy seemed absurd. It was like two ships quarreling for sea room in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean. There was a vast reach of country, corn-fields, vineyards, harvests, and plenty of room in illimitable acreage. "Now," says Abram, "let us agree to differ. Here are the mountain districts, swept by the tonic sea breeze, and with wide-reaching prospect, and there is the plain of the Jordan, with tropical luxuriance. You may have either." Lot, who was not as rich as Abram, and might have been expected to take the second choice, made the first selection, and with a modesty that must have made Abram smile, said to him:

"You may have the rocks and the fine prospect; I will take the valley of the Jordan, with all its luxuriance of cornfields, and the river to water the flocks, and the genial climate, and the wealth immeasurable." So the controversy was forever settled, and great-souled Abram carried out the suggestion of the text: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen. Is not the whole land before thee?"

Well, in this, the last decade of the nineteenth century, and in this beautiful land, which was called America, after Americus Vespucius, but should have been called Columbia, after its discoverer, Columbus, we have a wealth of religious privilege and opportunity that is positively bewildering. Churches of all sorts of creeds, and of all kinds of government, and all forms of worship, and all styles of architecture. What opulence of ecclesiastical opportunity! Now, while in desolate regions there may be only one church, in the opulent districts of this country there is such a profusion that there ought to be no difficulty in making a selection. No fight about vestments, or between liturgical or non-liturgical adherents, or as to baptismal modes, or a handful of water as compared with a riverful. If Abram prefers to dwell on the heights, where he can only get a sprinkling from the clouds, let him consent that Lot have all the Jordan in which to immerse himself. "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen. Is not the whole land before thee?"

Especially is it unfortunate when families allow angry discussion at the breakfast, or dining, or tea-table, as to which is the best church or denomination, one at one end of the table saying he could never endure the rigid doctrines of Presbyterianism, one at the other end responding that she never could stand the forms of Episcopacy, and one at one side of the table saying he did not understand how anybody could bear the noise in the Methodist Church, and another declaring all the Baptists bigots. There are hundreds of families hopelessly split on ecclesiasticism, and in the middle of every discussion on such subjects there is a kindling of indignation, and it needs some old father Abram to come and put his foot on the loaded fuse before the explosion takes place and say: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen. Is not the whole land before thee?"

I undertake a subject never undertaken by any other pulpit, for it is an exceedingly delicate subject, and if not rightly handled might give serious offence; but I approach it without the slightest trepidation, for I am sure I have the divine direction in the matters I propose to present. It is a tremendous question, asked all over Christendom, often asked with tears, and sobs, and heart-breaks, and involving the peace of families, the eternal happiness of many souls. In matters of church attendance should the wife go with the husband, or the husband go with the wife?

First, remember that all the evangelical churches have enough truth in them to save the soul and prepare us for happiness on earth and in heaven. I will go with you into any well-selected theological library, and I will show you sermons from ministers in all denominations that set forth man as a sinner and Christ as a deliverer from sin and sorrow. That is the whole Gospel. Get that into your soul and you are fitted for the here and the hereafter. There are differences, we admit, and some denominations we like better than others. But suppose three or four of us make solemn agreement to meet each other a week from now in Chicago on important business, and one goes by the New York Central Railroad, another by the Erie Railroad, another by the Pennsylvania Railroad, another by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. One goes this way because the mountains are grander, another takes this because the cars are more luxurious; another that because the speed is greater; another takes the other because he has long been accustomed to that route, and all the employees are familiar. So far as our engagement to meet is concerned, it makes no difference if we only get there. Now, any one of the innumerable evangelical denominations, if you practice its teaching—although some of their trains run on a broad gauge and some on a narrow gauge—will bring you out at the city of the New Jerusalem.

It being evident that you will be safe in any of the evangelical denominations, I proceed to remark, first, if one of the married couple be a Christian and the other not, the one a Christian is bound to go anywhere to a church where the unconverted companion is willing to go, if he or she will go to no other. You of the connubial partnership are a Christian. You are safe for the skies. Then it is your first duty to secure the eternal safety of your lifetime associate. Is not the everlasting welfare of your wife impenitent, or your husband impenitent, of more importance than your church relationship? Is not the condition of your companion for the next quadrillion of years a mightier consideration to you than the gratification of your ecclesiastical taste for forty or fifty years. A man or a woman that would stop half a minute to weigh preferences as to whether he or she had better go with the unconverted companion to this or that church or denomination, has no religion at all, and never has had, and I fear never will have. You are loaded up with what you suppose to be religion, but you are like Captain Frobisher, who brought back from his voyage of discovery a shipload of what he supposed valuable minerals, yet, instead of being silver and gold, were nothing but common stones of the field, to be buried out as finally useless.

Mighty God! In all thy realm is there one man or woman professing religion, yet so stolid, so unhitted, so far gone unto death that there would be any hesitancy in surrendering all preferences before such an opportunity of salvation and heavenly reunion? If you, a Christian wife, are an attendant upon any church, and your unconverted husband does not go there because he does not like its preacher, or its music, or its architecture, or its uncomfortable crowding, and goes not to any house of worship, but would go if you would accompany him somewhere else, change your church relations. Take your hymn-book home with you to-day. Say good-by to your friends in the neighboring pews, and go with him to any one of a hundred churches till his soul is saved and he joins you in the march to heaven. More important than that ring on the third finger of your left hand it is that your Heavenly Father command the angel of mercy, concerning your husband at his conversion, as in the parable of old: "Put a ring on his hand."

No letter of more importance ever came to the great city of Corinth, situated on what was called the "Bridge of the Sea," and glistening with sculpture, and gated with a style of brass the magnificence of which the following ages have not been able to successfully imitate, and overshadowed by the Acro-Corinthus, a fortress of rock two thousand feet high—I say no letter ever came to that great city of more importance than that letter in which Paul puts the two startling questions: "What knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? Or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?" The dearest sacrifice on the part of the one is cheap if it rescue the other. Better go to the smallest, weakest, most insignificant church on earth and be copartners in eternal bliss, than pass your earthly membership in most gorgeously attractive church while your companion stays outside of evangelical privilege. Better have the drowning saved by a scow or a sloop than let him or her go down while you sail by in the gilded cabins of a Majestic or Campania.

Second remark: If both of the married couple be Christians, but one is so naturally constructed that it is impossible to enjoy the services of a particular denomination, and the other is not so sectarian or punctilious, let the one less particular go with the other who is very particular. As for myself, I feel as much at home in one denomination of evangelical Christians as another, and I think I must have been born very near the line. I like the solemn roll of the Episcopal liturgy, and I like the spontaneity of the Methodists, and I like the importance given to the ordinance of baptism by the Baptists, and I like the freedom of the Congregationalists, and I like the government and the sublime doctrine of the Presbyterians, and I like many of the others just as much as any I have mentioned, and I could happily live, and preach, and die, and be buried from any of them. But others are born with a liking so stout, so unbending, so inexorable for some denomination, that it is a positive necessity they have the advantage of that one. What they were intended to be in ecclesiasticism was written in the sides of their cradle, if the father and mother had eyes keen enough to see it. They would not stop crying until they had put in their hands as a plaything a Westminster Catechism or the Thirty-nine Articles. The whole current of their temperament and thought and character runs into one sect of religionists as naturally as the James River into the Chesapeake. It would be a torture to such persons to be anywhere outside of that one church.

Now, let the wife or husband who is not so constructed sacrifice the milder preference for the one more inflexible and rigorous. Let the grapevine follow the rugosities and sinuosities of the oak or hickory. Abram, the richer in flocks of Christian grace, should say to Lot, who is built on a smaller scale: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee. Is not the whole land before thee?" As you can be edified and happy anywhere, go with your companion to the church to which he or she must go or be miserable.

Remark the third: If both the married couple are very strong in their sectarianism, let them attend the different churches preferred. It is not necessary that you attend the same church. Religion is between your conscience and your God. Like Abram and Lot, agree to differ. When on Sabbath morning you come out of your home together, and one goes one way and the other the other, heartily wish each other a good sermon and a time of profitable devotion, and when you meet again at the noonday repast, let it be evident, each to each, and to your children, and to the hired help, that you have both been on the Mount of Transfiguration, although you went up by different paths, and that you have both been fed by the bread of life, though kneaded by different hands in different trays, and baked in different ovens. "But how about the children?" I am often asked by scores of parents. Let them also make their own choice. They will grow up with reverence for both the denominations represented by father and mother if you, by holy lives, commend those denominations. If the father lives the better life, they will have the more favorable opinion of his denomination. If the mother lives the better life, they will have the more favorable opinion of her denomination. And some day both the parents will, for at least one service, go to the same church. The neighbors will say: "I wonder what is going on to-day, for I saw our neighbor and his wife, who always go to different churches, going arm in arm to the same sanctuary." Well, I will tell you what has brought them together, arm in arm, to the same altar. Something very important has happened. Their son is to-day uniting with the church, He is standing in the aisle, taking the vows of a Christian. He had been somewhat wayward, and gave father and mother a good deal of anxiety, but their prayers have been answered in his conversion, and as he stands in the aisle and the minister of religion says: "Do you consecrate yourself to the God who made and redeemed you, and do you promise to serve him all your days?" and with manly voice he answers, "I do," there is an April shower in the pew where father and mother sit, and a rainbow of joy which arches both their souls, that makes all differences of creed infinitesimal. And the daughter who had been very worldly, and gay, and thoughtless, puts her life on the altar of consecration, and as the sunlight of that Sabbath streams through the church window and falls upon her brow and cheek, she looks like their other daughter, whose face was illumined with the brightness of another world on the day when the Lord took her into his heavenly keeping years ago.

I should not wonder, if, after all, these parents pass the evening of their life in the same church, all differences of church preference overcome by the joy of being in the house of God where their children were prepared for usefulness and heaven. But I can give you a recipe for ruining your children. Angrily contend in the household that your church is right and the church of your companion is wrong. Bring sneer and caricature to emphasize your opinions, and your children will make up their minds that religion is a sham, and they will have none of it. In the northeast storm of domestic controversy the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley will not grow. Fight about apostolic succession, fight about election and free agency, fight about baptism, fight about the bishopric, fight about gown and surplice, and the religious prospects of your children will be left dead on the field. You will be as unfortunate as Charles, Duke of Burgundy, who in battle lost a diamond the value of a kingdom, for in your fight you will lose the jewel of salvation for your entire household. This is nothing against the advocacy of your own religious theories. Use all forcible argument, bring all telling illustration, array all demonstrative facts, but let there be no acerbity, no stinging retort, no mean insinuation, no superciliousness, as though all others were wrong and you infallibly right.

Take a hint from astronomy. The Ptolmaic system made the earth the centre of the solar system, and everything was thought to turn round the earth. But the Copernican system came, and made the sun the centre around which the planets revolved. The bigot makes his little belief the centre of everything, but the large-souled Christian makes the Sun of Righteousness the centre, and all denominations, without any clashing and each in its own sphere revolving around it. Over the tomb of Dean Stanley in Westminster Abbey, is the passage of Scripture: "Thy commandments are exceeding broad." Let no man crowd us on to a path like the bridge Al Sirat, which the Mohammedan thinks leads from this world over the abyss of hell into Paradise, the breadth of the bridge less than the web of a starved spider, or the edge of a sword or razor, off the edges of which many fall. No; while the way is not wide enough to take with us any of our sins, it is wide enough for all Christian believers to pass without peril into everlasting safety. But do not any of you depend upon what you call "a sound creed" for salvation. A man may own all the statutes of the State of New York and yet not be a lawyer; and a man may own all the best medical treatises and not be a physician; and a man may own all the best works on painting and architecture and not be either painter or architect; and a man may own all the sound creeds in the world and yet not be a Christian. Not what you have in your head and on your tongue, but in your heart and in your life, will decide everything.

In olden times in England before the modern street lamps were invented every householder was expected to have a lantern suspended in front of his house, and the cry of the watchmen in London as they went along at eventide was: "Hang out your lights." Instead of disputing in your home about the different kinds of lantern, as a watchman on the walls of Zion I cry: "Let your light so shine before men that they, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father which is in heaven." Hang out your lights! You may have a thousand ideas about religion, and yet not the great idea of pardoning mercy. It is not the number of your ideas but the greatness of them. A mouse hath ten offsprings in her nest, while the lioness hath one in her lair. All ideas about forms, and ceremonies, and church government put together are not worth the one idea of getting to heaven yourself and taking your family with you.

But do not reject Christianity, as many do, because there are so many sects. Standing in Westminster Hotel, London, I looked out of the window and saw three clocks, as near as I can remember, one on the Parliament House another on St. Margaret's Chapel, another on Westminster Abbey, and they were all different. One said twelve o'clock at noon, another said five minutes before twelve, another said five minutes after twelve. I might as well have concluded that there is no such thing as time, because the three timepieces were different, as for you to conclude that there is no such thing as pure Christianity, because the churches differ in their statement of it.

But let us all rejoice that, although part of our family may worship on earth in one church and part in another church, or, bowed at the same altar in a compromise of preferences, we are, if redeemed, on the way to a perfect church, where all our preferences will be fully gratified. Great cathedral of eternity, with arches of amethysts, and pillars of sapphire, with floors of emerald, and windows aglow with the sunrise of heaven! What stupendous towers, with chimes angel-hoisted and angel-rung! What myriads of worshipers, white-robed and coroneted! What an officiator at the altar, even "the great High Priest of our profession!" What doxologies of all nations! Coronet to coronet, cymbal to cymbal, harp to harp! Pull out the tremulant stop to recall the sufferings past! Pull out the trumpet stop to celebrate the victory!

When shall these eyes thy heaven-built walls
And pearly gates behold?
Thy bulwarks with salvation strong,
And streets of shining gold.

Colombia Pleads for the Gospel

An Urgent Call for Christian Work in "The Neglected Continent"—Rev. Mr. Norwood's Labors at Bucaramanga—Consecrated Effort that Deserves Cordial Support

SOUTH America, after ages of spiritual darkness and submission to Romish superstition, is at last beginning to see glimpses of the light of truth, in the preached Gospel of Jesus Christ. There are still, however, many parts of that great continent which may be truthfully described as wholly unevangelized. The Republic of Colombia is one of the great sections of that vast territory where, except in the most limited sense, the Bible is still a sealed Book, forbidden to the people; the preaching of the Gospel is followed by the bitterest persecution, and the population are purposely kept in the densest ignorance concerning spiritual affairs.

Rev. Joseph Norwood, a regularly ordained minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a member of the Central Mexican Mission Conference of that Church is conducting a very important religious work in Colombia. He was a successful missionary in Mexico for fifteen years.

Since April, 1897, he has been in charge of the Venezuela Agency of the American Bible Society, which embraces the Republics of Venezuela and Colombia. In 1892 and 1893 he was associated with the Rev. Francisco F. Penzotti, whom the majority of our readers know as a faithful agent of the Bible Society, who, only a few years ago, suffered many months' imprisonment for the cause of Christ and the Bible. With Mr. Penzotti and other assistants, Mr. Norwood canvassed the principal towns and cities of the five republics of Central America, distributing in a little over six months more than 16,000 copies of the Word. During all these twenty-two years in difficult and trying foreign mission fields, Mr. Norwood has been very successful in establishing schools and many new mission stations, in organizing churches, circuits and districts, and in distributing the Holy Scriptures. He is held in esteem by the officers of the American Bible Society and by his fellow-missionaries of all denominations, who give testimony to his Christian zeal and to a prudence and moderation born of experience and judgment. Hundreds of Spanish-Americans have been converted under his preaching. Many of these are now engaged in Bible distribution and other branches of evangelical work, and not less than six are ordained preachers. Associated with him is his excellent wife, who has been a helpmate, indeed, for twenty-one years. Concerning their new undertaking, Mr. Norwood writes as follows:

"In my duties in the Gospel ministry, I have been led on step by step, from the Brazos River to the Rio Grande, thence to the interior of Mexico and from Mexico to Central and South America. I began to preach in the Spanish language in 1878, and since then have preached the Gospel to many thousands who had never before heard it, and in more than a hundred cities, towns and villages, where a Gospel sermon was a thing unknown. In Spanish-America, street or open air preaching is prohibited, but nearly everywhere I have been able to get some sort of a place to preach in, and have not only seized every opportunity, but habitually seek and try to make opportunities to tell the 'glad tidings of great joy' to all the people. I have preached in all kinds of places, and have learned, by experience, that God blesses the Gospel of his Son wherever it is preached with sincerity and in faith, whether in the homes of the rich or the poorest, in the club-room or the theatre, in rented halls, hotel parlors, or dedicated churches.

"But in the interior of the Republic of Colombia I have met a new experience. For several months I tried in vain to secure a place to preach in. Though in no part of Latin America have I found so large a percentage of the people desirous of hearing the Gospel preached and anxious to learn something of 'the Protestant religion,' I found it impossible to secure any sort of a place to preach in except our own home. I tried to rent private houses for the purpose, but was refused. In fact, only a very few persons are willing to rent us their houses even to live in. Bucaramanga, capital of the Department of Santander, is a city of about 40,000 inhabitants and has a low grade theatre in which all kinds of theatrical performances are allowed; yet the proprietor refused to rent it to me to preach in, because the parochial priest notified him that if he did so he and his family as well as all who attended the services, would be immediately excommunicated. Thus it is throughout the interior of the country. Those who own houses, though they may not care for excommunication, dread the effectual boycotting which it produces.

"The American Bible Society pays my salary and traveling expenses, as also those of my colporteurs; but from the very nature of its work, its constitution and regulations make no provision for covering the expenses necessarily incurred in holding Gospel meetings. When in Caracas, Venezuela, we rented and furnished a large store capable of seating 250 persons, and the foreigners—chiefly Germans and Americans—aided us in meeting the expenses, which were $3,000 in two years. Now there are two Protestant missions established in that beautiful city. In other parts of Venezuela, in the northern part of Colombia, and for many miles along the Magdalena River, many persons braved the opposition and granted the use of the largest room in their private residences for our services; and it was a joy to deliver the divine message of love, reconciliation and salvation to the hungry, starving multitudes as they thronged to our meetings.

"In Bucaramanga, Pamplona, Socorro, San Gil, Tona, Zapatoca, and various cities and towns of that department, embracing a population of nearly a half million souls, there are thousands who have become so awakened by our Bible work that they are constantly coming to me and sending me messages to inquire when I am going to preach to them. The people of Tona have twice sent a committee to request us to establish regular services in their town, and proposing to pay all the expenses, including a comfortable support of a missionary. But nowhere have we been able to secure a room, seats and lights for such temporary services as I can give them in connection with my duties as a traveling agent of the American Bible Society.

"My heart longs for an opportunity to give the Gospel to those hungry souls. We could doubtless purchase a site and erect a building, but the plan that suggests itself as being more immediately practical is to have a tent 40x60 feet, made in three sections, so that it may be carried from town to town on mule-back, which is the only means of transportation in that mountainous country. We would also need 300 camp chairs, and wind-proof lamps, and funds to pay the expenses of transportation of these equipments from place to place, as well as to pay for the cost of lighting. The original cost of a complete outfit will be about $750, and the freight and customs duties about $350 to $450. After this, $100 per month will easily cover all expenses for moving and lighting.

"My own services will cost absolutely nothing, because I know from long experience that the impetus our Bible work will receive from these public services will amply compensate for the time I would devote to them, which will be chiefly at night and on Sundays."

Missionary Norwood's plea should not be overlooked by those who are interested in the spreading of the Gospel in "The Neglected Continent," as South America has been aptly called, in a spiritual sense. Any reader of this journal who may feel interested in his excellent work, and who would be pleased to have a share in the evangelization of the unenlightened and superstition-ridden people of Colombia will have an opportunity of doing so. It is a work which deserves the most cordial support of God's people everywhere. Rev. Mr. Norwood, who is now in New York for a short time before returning to his distant post, may be addressed at No. 130 Bible House, New York City, where all letters will receive prompt attention at his hands. Contributions for the "Gospel Work in Colombia" may be sent to Mr. Foulke, treasurer, Bible House, N. Y.

MISSIONARY WORKERS IN COLOMBIA, S. A.

In the photograph, Rev. Mr. Norwood, Mrs. Norwood, and Sen. Gonzales, their helper, are shown, mounted in readiness for an evangelistic tour among the hills near Bucaramanga. Pack mules carry their Bibles and other Gospel literature.

. . . Progress of the World's Peace Congress . . .

Bright Hopes of the Ultimate Success of Plans for Universal Arbitration—The Great Powers Heartily in Accord

DELEGATES ARRIVING AT THE PALACE

DELEGATES LEAVING THEIR HOTEL FOR THE CONFERENCE

THE HAGUE, May 19th.—Thank God, a beginning has at last been made! The great Conference, called by the Czar of all the Russias to discuss and decide upon some practical means of lessening the burdens and the miseries of war, was solemnly opened yesterday afternoon in the "Orange Hall" of the House in the Woods. It was a magnificent assemblage—a wondrous scene, this representative body of the world's statesmen and diplomatists gathered here under the cupola of one of the most beautiful and artistically decorated halls in the world to perform a task which, if carried to its logical conclusion, will win for them the blessings of untold generations and generations. I doubt if another human being—and I do not except the delegates themselves—was so well favored by circumstances as myself in regard to obtaining a view of the proceedings. Thanks to the courtesy of M. De Beaufort Dutch Minister of Foreign Affairs, and to the exceptionally kind attitude of Yonkheer J. C. N. Van Eys, Chief Secretary of the Conference, I was the only newspaper man allowed into the hall during the first session. All the others, without exception, were relegated to the small gallery seventy feet above, and to them, as one of their number afterwards remarked, the assemblage presented the aspect of a huge billiard board overcrowded with balls. To me, on the contrary, it was a picture that, by reason of its impressiveness, will never be effaced from memory. The opening was set down for two o'clock, but a full hour earlier the delegates began to arrive. The very first to enter were the two Chinese—grave, stolid celestials, one old and stout, the other young and thin. They were dressed in rich silken robes, and wore small, round caps. Alone in the great hall, they looked around in wonderment, though also with a certain dubious air, at the huge canvases representing in many instances the blessings of peace and the horrors of war. I almost thought I detected a sarcastic twinkle in the elder man's eye. Was he thinking of his far-off Fatherland, and of the ruthless manner in which it had been carved into of late in the name of humanity and civilization? Presently there arrived the tall form of Count de Muenster, German Delegate-in-Chief, whose seventy-five years have neither affected the elasticity of his gait nor the geniality of his disposition, as he afterwards proved by willingly accompanying me into the garden with several of the other members of the German delegation, in order to be specially photographed for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. After Count Muenster arrived the Americans, and I am proud to say that, taken as a body, they were certainly as fine-looking men as any in the Conference. Four of them are six-footers, to wit, Stanford Newel, American Minister to The Hague; Capt. Mahan, the famous naval writer; Capt. Crozier, the military attache, and Lawyer Holls, the legal expert, while what Seth Low and Andrew D. White lack in stature they make up for in the distinction of manner and appearance. The seats being in alphabetical order, these gentlemen took their places under E (standing for

THE AMERICAN DELEGATION

GERMANY'S DELEGATES (COUNT MUENSTER IN FOREGROUND)

THE FRENCH DELEGATION (M. BOURGEOIS IN CENTRE)

The Photographs on these two pages were taken specially for "The Christian Herald" by our Correspondent, by permission of the Conference officials at The Hague

THE BRITISH DELEGATION (SIR JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE SEATED ON LEFT)

Etats-Unis, French being the official language of the Conference). In the row in front sat the Germans. The English delegation, consisting of Sir Julian Pauncefote, the able and popular British Minister to Washington, and Sir Henry Howard, British Minister to The Hague (a gentleman who, by the way, is bound to America by many close ties and friendships and by the fact that his wife is an American lady), were seated some benches further away. All the delegates having arrived, shortly after two o'clock M. De Beaufort seated himself in the presidential chair with his back to the three windows that light up the hall. He rapped lightly to order, and immediately the buzz in twenty-four languages ceased as if by magic; one might have heard a pin drop. A hundred thoughtful, earnest faces were turned toward the Chair as the Minister arose and commenced his speech of welcome. M. De Beaufort's delivery was clear and measured. He speaks a faultless French, and every word was distinctly heard in all parts of the hall. The cable will already have informed you of the tenor of his remarks. At the close, he proposed the venerable and much respected chief of the Russian delegation, Baron De Staal, for the permanent Chairmanship of the Conference. This proposition was unanimously adopted, and then from one of the furthermost recesses of the hall, close up against the large picture of Prince Frederick Henry's apotheosis, I saw the figure of an aged gentleman with bushy white side-whiskers struggling to reach the aisle. Succeeding in this, he made his way to the Chair, which had meanwhile been vacated by its occupant.

Baron De Staal, in addition to his great age, is not in the best of health, and his delivery was made with effort. He had prepared his remarks in writing, and at some points either his eyesight failed him or the text proved illegible, for he was obliged to stop, hesitate, and even omit one or more sentences. Despite these drawbacks his words made an evident impression on the assemblage, as I could well see from my coign of vantage behind the curtain of a window to the speaker's left, where I secured a photograph of this particular episode no other camera but mine having been allowed to pass the doors of the Orange Hall.

At the conclusion of Baron De Staal's speech the Conference proceeded to appoint as honorary Vice-President, Yonkheer A. P. C. Van Karnebeek, former Dutch Minister of Foreign Affairs, and as permanent Secretary, Yonkheer Van Eys, already mentioned, after which the proceedings were adjourned until to-morrow, when the members will settle down to hard work. The scene at the House in the Woods became most lively and interesting after the adjournment. Members, officials of high and low degree, and the journalists from above invaded all the rooms placed at the disposal of the Conference. It became a veritable brouhaha of voices and a Babel of tongues, every one talking and gesticulating at the same time. But as everything must have an end, little by little the animation subsided, and the crowd drifted towards the front steps of the building, where a large collection of carriages of every kind were drawn up. Just one hour later the House in the Woods looked every bit the same as it does on ordinary occasions when visited by the tourist with a red Badeaker in his hands.

Although in a hurry to catch the mail, I will not conclude my article without referring to the presence at the Conference of that noble, self-sacrificing woman, Baroness Bertha de Suttner, whose book, Die Waffen Nieder, has attained a world-wide reputation. She was the only woman present, and stood above in the press gallery during the whole proceedings, following them with feverish anxiety. By her side stood W. T. Stead, that other great apostle of peace; E. T. Hargrove, Count Goubovsky and the Councillor Jean de Bloch, who is supposed to have inspired the Czar's action by his great statistical work on the losses incurred by war. But these philanthropists, as well as Felix Moscheles and Mesdames Selenka and Waszklevicz, who have all come here to exert their influence in the work of the Conference, will be made the subject of a special article, illustrated with photographs, which I propose to send to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

V. GRIBAYEDOFF.

* * *

Late cablegrams from The Hague indicate that substantial progress is being made by the Conference. The Drafting Committee, of which Russian, American, English and Italian delegates are members, discussed the Russian proposals bearing on arbitration, and agreed to five of the articles almost without modification, though the American delegates declared that they could not admit the provisions of article 10, that monetary questions and questions concerning interoceanic canals should be compulsorily submitted to an arbitration tribunal. The Committee has yet to take up the most important question of all—article 13, which deals with the establishment of an arbitration court. It is expected that the American, British and Russian proposals will be welded into one, and there is every indication of a universal desire to reach the establishment of a system of permanent arbitration.

Among the important changes in the laws of war which the special Committee on the Brussels Conference has adopted are these: "Cities, towns, dwellings and ships which are undefended may not be attacked or bombarded. Buildings devoted to divine services, arts, sciences, benevolence, and hospitals and other places for housing the sick and wounded, to be spared."

The matters that may ultimately be submitted to compulsory arbitration are pecuniary claims for illegal action or neglect toward a subject of another state, postal, telegraph and sanitary conventions, treaties relating to library, artistic and industrial property, boundaries that have only technical and not political interest, questions of assistance, judicial assistance, and rules for preventing collisions at sea.

M. DE BEAUFORT OPENING THE PEACE CONFERENCE

DUTCH TROOPS PARADING IN HONOR OF THE CONFERENCE

HOTEL VIEUX DOELN, HEADQUARTERS OF [illegible]

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Review of the Quarter

S. S. Lesson for June 25. John 11: 20
Golden Text, I. Timothy 1: 15

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

NEITHER the world nor the church will have the Cross; the offence of the Cross is not ceased. In our Lord's day it was not only the sinful multitude, but also, and much more deeply, the religious teachers among the Jews who were scandalized in Jesus Christ. But above and beyond these, the very apostles themselves, the very foundations of the church on which she is built (Eph. 2: 20) "understood none of these things," until Jesus was risen from the dead. The church in the present day is equally blind; far more Jewish in her spirit than really Christian; building more upon doing than upon being what God has called his people to be.

Why was it that the raising of Lazarus so exasperated the chief priests, the Pharisees, Sadducees, scribes and rulers of the people, that from that time the death of Jesus was determined upon by them? How did it touch them? This gentle, holy Man of Galilee, who "went about doing good and healing all them that were oppressed of the devil: for God was with him," sought in no way to usurp their position or authority; why were they so wrath against him? "God was with him," and they felt it. He could not come near to them but that their consciences were made uncomfortable, his presence was intolerable to them. If he was right, all their life was wrong; his teaching was subversive of all the etiquette and customs of their social life; and all their religion withered like grass before the intense reality of his holy, mighty words. They saw that there could be no stopping short in following him: like the rich young man they must part with all that they had if they would follow him, and the cost was too great; so they must—they would get rid of him—in whom God came so uncomfortably near to them.

There is such a thing as "crucifying" to ourselves "the Son of God afresh," and putting him "to an open shame" (Heb. 6: 6), and the crime is more common than it is generally thought to be. There is no neutrality in our relations with him who took our sin and our shame upon the Cross. If we do not take our place with him and put ourselves to shame at his Cross, we take our place against him, and by our rejection of the Cross, we put him to an open shame. The raising of Lazarus was such an indisputable proof of Christ's divine mission that no neutral position could be longer maintained; either he was the Messiah, and must be acknowledged, or he was a malefactor and must be executed. The Jews held counsel together, not as to whether he were indeed the Messiah, but as to what they should do to maintain their "place and nation" (John 11: 47–48). Their consideration was not what was right, but what was politic; not what would please God, but what would best suit them.

Such is human nature: fallen, crooked, contemptible, human nature; it is incapable of transparent truthfulness: it is as the flower of the field, only fit to be burned. Is it any better in the days in which we live? Let judgment first "begin at the house of God" (I. Peter 4: 17). Even in spiritual things, children of God are for the most part self-seeking; they would build up what God seeks to destroy. An experience which would satisfy themselves and make them pleased with themselves—with their love to God and zeal for his service, with their light on the Scriptures, and their readiness to testify for him—this is what most Christian people are seeking for. They want joy, peace, and a consciousness of being holy. This is not the Cross. Taking our place at the Cross cuts off all satisfaction with ourselves and our own experience, our doings and our sayings; we see how all that we are and do is under the curse; but it brings a wonderful satisfaction in what Jesus is, what he has done, what he has said. Like Lazarus we come to death, and learn to know him who is the Resurrection and the Life.

In the anointing at Bethany we see how one woman understood what neither the religious teachers, nor yet the disciples had understood; and Mary anointed for his burial the great sin offering. She had sat at his feet and taken in the lesson of the Cross, which the disciples, still anxious to maintain their own glory, could not learn while in their hearts the ruling thought was which of them should be the greatest. Oh, how dangerous it is for Christians to "compare themselves among themselves!" As long as we can compare ourselves with others, we have not fully understood that in us, "that is, in our flesh, dwelleth no good thing" (Rom. 7: 18); and that if, by grace, we are members of the Body of Christ, we are to complement, not to resemble one another.

"BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK" (REV. 3: 20)

In our Lord's practical teaching of humility, by washing his disciples' feet, we learn the same lesson, and even more deeply. Such a thing may be done by imitation, as in the strange and almost piteous anomaly of the Pope's washing the feet of a few already washed beggars, and at the same time, instead of being like the Lord Jesus, "meek and lowly in heart," proclaiming himself infallible! The way to true humility, and the only way is Christ in us. Human nature, fallen human nature cannot but be proud; Christ cannot but be humble. On earth his human nature was uninterruptedly in contact with God.

God brings human nature to nothingness. Even the Lord himself—pure, sinless as he was—knew that of himself as Man he could do nothing (John 5: 30): the very object of his Being was to set forth and express His Father which was in heaven.

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

AFTER our six months' study of the Gospel of John, it will be well to ask whether this wonderful treatise has had, in our case, the result which it was designed to produce. Reminding his readers that his work was in no sense a complete biography, but merely a record of some of the things that Jesus said and did, the writer says (20: 31): "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God: and that believing ye might have life through his name." That, then, was his object. Has it been accomplished? We must acknowledge that the incidents selected are adapted to the purpose. In the miracles we are impressed not only by their marvelous character, but by their beneficence. In the conversations with individuals, as with Nicodemus and the woman of Samaria, there is disclosed a matchless beauty of character and an authoritative tone that are consistent with the idea of divinity. And in the discourses to the disciples there are revelations and pregnant utterances which could have come only from a Being in whom dwelt the fullness of the Godhead bodily. And we are witnesses of the result. Those who believe do have life. There is no other way of accounting for the changes of character which we see in every generation when that belief enters into a man's heart. And that life still comes in the same way.

Against the day of my burying (John 12: 7). This was a coincidence. It does not mean that Mary foresaw his death. She poured the perfume upon her Lord in the pure love of her heart and probably with no other thought than that of expressing her reverent affection. It was Christ who pointed out the sad appropriateness of the offering. He intimated that it served a purpose of which only he knew. The story is told of a sailor who owed his life and the lives of his comrades to the gift of a woman. On his leaving home on a voyage, his sister looking around for some parting gift for him, selected a miniature mariner's compass to be worn as a charm on his watch-chain. The ship on which he sailed was wrecked, and when he and a few others escaped in a boat at the last moment, they had no compass on board and knew not which way to steer. Then he thought of the charm his sister had given him and by that they steered until land was reached.

Thou shalt never wash my feet (John 13: 8). We respect Peter's protest. It showed his humility and his reverence for Christ. He felt as some honest workman might feel, if his employer's wife or daughter offered in some emergency to lace his shoes. He would say, "It is no fit work for you; I will not permit it." But true loyalty required obedience to Christ's wishes. Peter's protest did him credit; it showed his reverence; and his yielding after Christ's explanation did him credit, too. The story is told of a great king who desired to put one of his courtiers to the test. At an imposing celebration when the courtier was to ride in the same carriage with the king, and all the high officials of the court were looking on, the king bade the courtier enter the carriage first. The courtier realized that all the spectators would charge him with being rude and disrespectful, but his king's wish was paramount. Caring nothing for his own character, or what the others might say of him, he entered the carriage, in advance of the king. As they rode away together the king said: "That was the severest test of loyal obedience you ever went through."

Herein is my Father glorified (John 15: 8). How wonderful that the Being who created the universe and sustains everything can derive added glory from anything we can do! And yet Christ said it was so and we can see how it may be. A little girl is at a boarding school. She knows no one when she arrives, but soon it is seen that she has made many friends. Her gentleness and sweetness, her sympathy with any child who is in trouble, her good temper and uniform cheerfulness have won the affection of schoolmates and teachers. What is the cause? "What a good mother that child must have had!" says the principal, and so that woman whom they have never seen rises in the esteem of all because of the conduct of the child. Happy the Christian who so lives that people seeing his life think better of his Heavenly Father!

There stood by the cross (John 19: 25). It is not certain if four women are here mentioned. Many scholars think that the Greek text implies that the sister of Mary, to whom John refers, was Salome, John's mother, and that Mary, wife of Cleophas, was a different person and not Mary's sister. It is significant that of all who had been blessed by Christ and had followed him, so few appear to have been present at his death. It speaks well for these loving women that they were there. We naturally think that had we been among his friends that we would not have deserted him in his last hours. But how few have the courage when he is ridiculed to avow their allegiance! Not long ago a group of Salvation Army girls were holding a service on the corner of a street. A Christian young man stood listening on the sidewalk. Presently a number of men whom he knew, his employer among them, came out of a cafe and began to ridicule the Salvationists. One and another uttered a gibe, and from making fun of the girls they went on to make fun of their message. They were witty, and soon their remarks set all the crowd laughing. The Christian young man felt an impulse to go to the side of the distressed girls and avow himself a Christian, but he could not get sufficient courage. He turned and slunk away, ashamed of himself for being ashamed of his Lord.

What Think Ye of Christ?

The Greatest Question of the Ages Answered in a Symposium, in which the Leading Men of Our Nation Give Spontaneous Testimony, Publicly Declaring their Belief in the Fatherhood of God, the Divinity of Christ, and the Exalted Mission of the Christian Religion

INFIDELITY, if we may accept the statements of its recognized exponents, has made startling advances during the last twenty years, in all parts of the civilized world. Especially, they assert, has it progressed in those lands where Christianity is the prevailing religion. Agnostics, free-thinkers, atheists, sceptics and infidels have joined forces in common cause against the old Bible. They have attacked its integrity, denied its authority, scorned its precepts, contradicted its history, mocked at its science, and scoffed at its story of Redeeming Love. Their printed blasphemies have been widely circulated to emphasize the evil done by their platform harangues. All this extraordinary infidel activity has produced the most pernicious results in many quarters, especially among the young and inexperienced.

L. P. Morton

Encouraged by these evidences of success, the infidels have grown arrogant and, in more recent platform utterances, their leaders have not hesitated to declare the conviction that the United States is not only not a Christian nation, but that, if the truth were permitted to become known, it would be seen that a very large proportion of the leading men of the nation shared the same opinions with avowed sceptics, atheists and agnostics. The age, they urged, is too enlightened for men longer to consent to a superstitious thraldom suited only to mediæval ignorance and credulity; the era of successful priestcraft has gone by, and intelligent people must now reject the fables and legends, the myths and traditions of the Orient, which had been cleverly gathered together and foisted upon the human race in that agglomeration of books known as the Bible. This being all very skilfully proved to be the case—according to the views of the infidel advocates—the doctrines contained in the Bible, its patriarchal narratives, its impossible miracles, its prophecies and its Gospels, went for nothing, and it must be regarded henceforth as a literary curiosity.

Jno Wanamaker

In asserting that ours is a Godless nation, that our leading men or any considerable proportion of them are unbelievers, the champions of the propaganda of infidelity have uttered a calumny which involves every man, woman and child within the boundaries of the United States.

For the purpose of setting this remarkable charge at rest, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in the name of the God-fearing and Bible-loving people of our country, assumed the duty of investigation. A circular letter was sent to the President, the Cabinet, Supreme Court, United States Senate, Commanders in our Army and Navy, the Governors of the various States, and other leading men of our country. This letter set forth the assertion of the infidels that ours is a Godless nation, and that a large proportion of the leading men in public affairs are infidels or rapidly becoming so; and it concluded by asking the following questions:

I. Are you a friend of Christianity?
II. Do you believe that Christianity is the friend of mankind?
III. Does your belief extend to the recognition of a Supreme Being, to the Divinity of Christ, to the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence?

In the following pages, the answers received to this widely disseminated letter of inquiry are accurately recorded. We present them without comment and leave all who read to draw their own conclusions.

That the United States Cabinet—that body of distinguished men who are the President's advisers in all that relates to the nation's welfare—are Christian, is forever set at rest by the willing and cordial assurances given in answer to the inquiries made upon this point.

EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Copyright, by Wm. Bell Criddle, 1898

Washington, May 26, 1899.
My belief embraces the Divinity of Christ and a recognition of Christianity as the mightiest factor in the world's civilization.

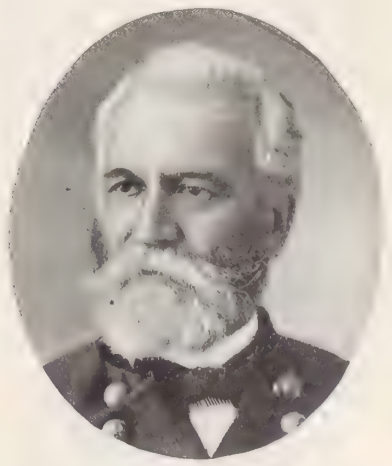
William McKinley

J. W. Philip

Commodore, U. S. Navy

Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, was seen personally by our commissioner, and gladly placed himself on record for Christianity. He said: "I am a member of the Presbyterian Church," and this, to those who know of his activity in that denomination, means much.

Hon. Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, said he had no hesitation in answering in the affirmative the question whether he believed in the Christian faith, and he added his firm conviction that Christianity was the friend of mankind. Further, through his private secretary,



Oliver O. Howard

Major-General, U. S. A. (Retired)

Mr. Gage authorized the statement that he is an active member of the Central Presbyterian Church, of Chicago. There is no more active Christian in the Cabinet.

Hon. Russell A. Alger, Secretary of War, also unhesitatingly declared himself a friend of Christianity—a reply

THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT, AS AT PRESENT CONSTITUTED

"I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. Our Divine Saviour is the best friend any human being ever had or ever could have, and His loving help is freely offered to all who will accept it."

Commissioner, U. S. N.

"I am a firm friend of Christianity . . . My belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being, to the Divinity of Christ, and to the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence."

Rear-Admiral, U. S. N. (Retired.

which, brief though it was, sufficiently answers the infidel assertion.

Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State and the leader of the Cabinet, in most emphatic affirmatives, declared himself a friend of Christianity, a believer in its value to lost humanity, and as recognizing the Divinity of Christ and the potentiality of Christianity as a civilizing agency.

Postmaster General Charles E. Smith authorized an affirmative answer to all the questions.

Attorney General John W. Griggs, the Judicial Executive of the nation, also authorized an affirmative answer.

For a Christian President and Christian advisers, our nation ought to be thankful. But there are further causes for devout thankfulness, as we shall see, on proceeding with our inquiry.

♦ ♦ ♦

The Supreme Court

THERE is no more dignified or learned judicial body anywhere in the world than the United States Supreme Court. Its functions are of the highest importance, involving questions affecting the most vital interests of the nation—civil, religious and political. Individually, and as a court, its members enjoy the profoundest respect and confidence of the country. Their rulings have frequently been set up as a model of jurisprudence for the emulation of other nations.

Hon. Melville D. Fuller is the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. When called upon by our commissioner in person, he explained that the members of the Supreme Court are met with all manner of inquiries from innumerable sources, many of which are undeserving of answer. He recognized the importance of the present inquiry, however, and, although it was a rule among the justices not to answer any question intended for publication, he declared: "I am a friend of Christianity."

Appreciating the delicacy of questioning the Supreme Bench on this matter, or indeed on any matter which might involve the violation of their general rule of silence where publication is intended, no further questions were asked. Indeed, none were necessary.

Hon. Geo. Shiras, Associate-Justice, who was also seen personally, replied: "I am a Christian, of course."

Hon. John M. Harlan, Associate-Justice, would not consent to be interviewed, preferring to observe the judicial rule of silence on such matters: but no oral or written statement from him was needed. Judge Harlan teaches a Bible Class every Sunday morning, and his stainless public career, no less than his private life, give evidence of his Christianity.

The other Associate-Justices observed the rule of silence; but, notwithstanding this fact, there is in all cases the best ground for claiming them on the side of Christianity.

♦ ♦ ♦

The Navy

IT has been urged, with reason, that the life of a sailor is not conducive to the development of Christian character. Continual change of scene, involving new interests and diversions; contact with people of many different creeds and nationalities; alternate hardship and ease, idleness and activity, and long periods during which the seaman has to suffer the deprivation of the society of all who are dearest, combine to make even the mariner's life one that hardly admits of the cultivation of the spiritual side of his nature. And if this be true of the merchant service, how much more may it be true of the Navy? In times of warlike excitement, such as those we have just passed through, when our sailors are called to resist the country's enemies; when scenes of battle, bloodshed and death are familiar; when carnage, shipwreck and disaster are episodes of frequent occurrence, how shall a man engaged in such work give heed to the affairs of eternity?

But "Truth is mighty," and the facts, which are now brought out in the correspondence given in subsequent pages, effectually confound the infidel assailants and establish the character of our naval leaders for orthodox Christianity. It is with genuine pleasure that we give space to the letters themselves. Of the active officers of the Navy, not one who has been communicated with has failed to make a satisfactory declaration.

Rear-Admiral Wm. T. Sampson, who commanded the Atlantic Squadron during the war with Spain, and who is

"I am now nearly seventy-seven years old and for more than a quarter of a century I have been a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church."

Rear-Admiral, U. S. N. (Retired)

"I have been and am now impressed with the belief that the naval men, as a body, are believers in Christianity, and a large number members of Christian churches. I am a friend of Christianity. My belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being, to the Divinity of Christ, to the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence. I believe I have answered all of the questions you have asked, and wish you success in your good work.

Rear-Admiral, U. S. N.

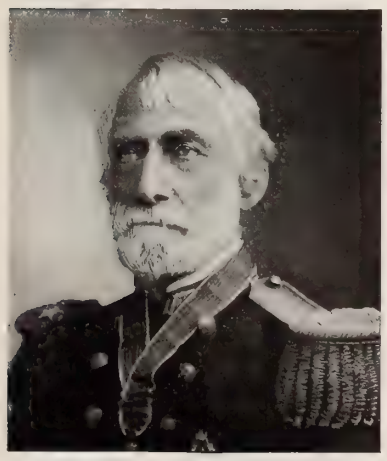
"I am a friend of Christianity, and firmly believe that it is the keystone of the social fabric and the greatest of all civilizing influences."

R. W. Evans

Captain, U. S. N.

"I believe that the inference that many of our most famous and distinguished men of the day are freethinkers, agnostics and unbelievers, and if they are not enemies of Christianity, they are at least not Christianity's friends, is unwarranted."

Thomas L. Phelps
R. Admiral U.S.N.



"The religion of Jesus Christ is the only source or fountain of righteousness, justice or peace to man on earth. I am a friend and a believer in the Christian religion. Of all the religions which have appeared among men, Christianity is the only true one, and it alone has brought to men solace in their sorrow, and a hope in their souls."

F. A. Roe,
Rear Admiral
U. S. Navy

one of the most modest and unassuming men in the service, writes:

"I claim to be a friend of Christianity. I was thus brought up, and thus taught to believe. I have never had occasion to change my belief and convictions on this point."

Brave, clear, ringing words from the lips of the man who led our Atlantic fleet against Spain, and whose guns at Santiago, Cienfuegos, Matanzas and San Juan thundered forth the doctrine of human rights and emancipation from ages of oppression to Cubans and Porto Ricans.

* * *

Rear-Admiral Montgomery Sicard, one of the senior ranking officers in the Navy, thus places himself on record:

"I most heartily answer in the affirmative all of the questions you ask in your letter to me. Furthermore, I can say that I do not see how anyone can reasonably doubt the truths of Christianity."

* * *

Speaking from a lifetime of observation in the U. S. Navy, Rear-Admiral H. L. Howison, writes:

"I have been and am now impressed with the belief that the naval men, as a body, are believers in Christianity and a large number members of Christian churches. I am a friend of Christianity. My belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being, to the Divinity of Christ, to the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence. I wish you success in your good work."

* * *

Strong and impressive are the views expressed by Rear-Admiral J. H. Upshur. In his letter he says:

"Although I am rather averse to seeing my name in public print, the questions you have put are fraught with such dignity and importance to all mankind that I do not hesitate to place myself on record as being profoundly impressed with the importance of Christianity to the world. Without its potent influence, I am persuaded we should sooner or later relapse into semi-barbarism. Mental strength, if derived alone from the highest culture and refinement, falls far short, in its benign influence, of that derived from a firm belief in the lessons of God and of his Son, Jesus Christ. True civilization, I believe, can be derived from no source ignoring the existence of God."

* * *

Rear-Admiral Thomas S. Phelps, in giving an affirmative answer to all the questions, adds that he believes the impression the chief agnostics have so industriously endeavored to disseminate, that the public men, foremost in our government and in our army and navy, largely hold infidel views, is unwarrantable.

* * *

An admirable letter comes from Rear-Admiral Francis A. Roe, who writes:

... "I am a friend and a believer in the Christian religion. Of all the religions which have appeared among men, Christianity is the only true one, and it alone has brought to men solace in their sorrow, and a hope in their souls. I recognize the existence of Almighty God, the Father of men, and Jesus Christ as his only begotten Son. In the history of mankind, of states and nations, no philosophy or doctrine has been as potent for civilization and amelioration as the religion of Christ. It is the only source or fountain of righteousness, justice or peace to man on earth."

* * *

Rear-Admiral Samuel R. Franklin gives a hearty assent to all the questions in the letter of inquiry.

* * *

Rear-Admiral James A. Greer writes: "Having been a professor of religion for more than forty years, I will, in reply to the questions propounded, in your favor of 2nd inst., say emphatically, 'Yes.'"

* * *

Rear-Admiral C. F. Stanton (retired), writes: "I believe in the existence and rule of a Supreme Being, in the Divinity of Christ, and in the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence. One of my hopes and prayers is that all the peoples of the world may some day be joined in a universal brotherhood of Christian love and Christian civilization."

* * *

From Rear-Admiral George E. Belknap (retired), comes this letter, which leaves no doubt concerning the position of that officer:

"Perhaps the enclosed extract, from a recent address I made upon the subject of the Navy, will answer sufficiently the questions propounded by you. Nevertheless, let me add that in a service of fifty-one years, I do not remember to have met more than two officers who held to views similar to those maintained by professing infidels. On the contrary many of the most devout Christians I have ever met have been officers of the navy, distinguished alike by their high professional standing and their undoubting belief in the Divinity and teachings of Christ. As for myself, my membership of the Episcopal Church must attest my faith and belief in a Supreme Being and in his Son, our Lord and Saviour."

* * *

The extract from the address mentioned in the Rear-Admiral's letter is given below:

"If anyone here to-night has ever seen one of our ships-of-war in foreign waters, let me ask him if his pulse did not beat the quicker, his heart thrill with more glowing pride at the inspiring sight? Who could, indeed, look upon the flag of his country, floating in foreign waters from the peak of a trim, well-ordered man-of-war, without quickened throbbings of the heart and more exultant thrills of patriotism? For such ship, wherever she was, carried with her the sovereignty of the United States, and the moment you stepped on board, you found yourself at once on the soil of your country and under the protecting folds of its flag.

"Furthermore, let me tell you that there is no class of our people more interested in the maintenance of the navy than our missionaries. I have met them in many lands and in every clime, and have more than once afforded them the protection of the flag which it has been my privilege to bear abroad. Doubtless some of you are interested in foreign missions. Perhaps some friend or kinsman has gone forth from your midst to do the work of the Master in the solitudes of Africa, or the jungles of Africa, tropic Siam, the great heathen empires of China and Japan, barbaric Korea and the isles of the sea. What to them is the protecting presence of a stout ship-of-war in the waters of those remote parts of the world, can be felt and expressed by themselves alone.

"In this connection, let me give you this little incident in the life of the late Rear-Admiral Foote, of noble memory. When he visited Siam in command of the sloop of-war Portsmouth, in 1856, he invited the second king to visit the ship. The king gladly accepted, and after being received with royal honors and shown all the ins and outs of the ship, including a battle exercise, he was asked into the cabin for luncheon. As they sat down at table, Foote, as was his wont, said grace, whereupon his guest remarked, 'I thought only missionaries prayed before meat?' 'But, your majesty, every Christian is a missionary,' replied stout Foote, the subsequent hero of Fort Donelson and Island No. 10 during our civil war. Now the king was a man of thought and cultivation and fairly conversant with the English tongue, but imbued with a depreciative feeling towards missionaries. His host's sturdy reply, therefore, must have strongly impressed him, and doubtless often recurred to him subsequently when called upon to deal with questions affecting the missionaries in his kingdom."

* * *

Commodore Frederick Rodgers writes himself down "emphatically a friend of Christianity and a full believer in it. I believe in the existence of a Supreme Being, in the Divinity of Christ, and, moreover, in the imperative necessity of such belief for the maintenance of civilized government of the people."

* * *

Many of these letters, from men whose names are familiar in every American household as those of our nation's bravest and ablest commanders, go far beyond the text of the note of inquiry. Thus, Commodore W. K. Mayo writes:

"I am the child of Christian parents, and made a public profession of my trust in the atoning grace of our Lord Jesus in the Presbyterian Church, at Norfolk, Va., ere I was twenty years of age. There was nothing remarkable about my 'con-

"I desire to answer emphatically, Yes."

C. S. Norton
R. Admiral U.S.Navy

"I answer emphatically, Yes."

S. R. Franklin

Rear-Admiral, U. S. Navy

"True civilization, I believe, can be derived from no source ignoring the existence of God. I do not hesitate to place myself on record as being profoundly impressed with the importance of Christianity to the world Without its potent influence, I am persuaded we should sooner or later relapse into semi barbarism."

Just. H. Upshur

Rear-Admiral, U. S. Navy

"Christian nations lead in the world's achievements, progress and greatness."

James A. Mount

Governor of Indiana

"In a service of fifty-one years I do not remember to have met more than two officers who held to views similar to those maintained by professional infidels. On the contrary, many of the most devout Christians I have ever met have been officers of the navy. As for myself, my membership of the Episcopal Church must attest my faith and belief."

Rear Admiral, U. S. N. (Retired)

"For a third of a century I have been a member in good standing of the Protestant Episcopal Church."

Brig.-Gen., U. S. A.

"I wish to speak with emphasis of full conviction after long and careful consideration of both sides of the subject. Most fully and distinctively, yes, I am a friend of Christianity."

Brig.-Gen. U. S. A.

version,' as this act is popularly called; it was simply the outward evidence of an internal 'make-up'—a natural endowment—and nearly all of my seventy years of life have been so full of joy a.... gratitude that my matin song is 'Holy, Holy, Holy! Lord God Almighty.'

"I have lived long enough, have seen enough of men and manners, have so often enjoyed the consciousness of a Divine Helper being near me when in circumstances of trial and danger, as to know that my faith in God, Jesus, and the present help, the Holy Ghost, does not come out of that Book which men call the Holy Bible, but that the Holy Bible is the outcome of that religion of [illegible] understanding to perceive. The primal disclosure of God, the native propensity to religious thought, constitute the reason of my faith, which gives me trustful reliance upon God, blessing him for the covenant of his Grace, and Jesus the Mediator of it, and the Holy Spirit, to guide and govern in the beauty of Holiness."

* * *

Rear-Admirals Lewis A. Kimberly and Silas Casey both sent affirmatives to all the questions.

* * *

Rear-Admiral Pierce Crosby (retired), writes: "I am a firm friend of Christianity. . . . My belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being, to the Divinity of Christ and to the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence."

* * *

Rear-Admiral Aaron K. Hughes declares himself a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church for over a quarter of a century.

* * *

Rear-Admirals A. H. Farquhar and C. S. Norton answer with emphatic affirmatives.

* * *

Rear-Admiral E. C. Matthews believes in the truths of Christianity "to the fullest extent," and adds: "I cannot see how an earnest and reasonable man of Christian parents can believe anything else."

* * *

Commodore J. W. Philip, one of the bravest officers actively engaged in the Spanish war, gives a very decided affirmative answer to all the questions.

* * *

This admirable letter from Rear-Admiral Stephen B. Luce marks him as an officer with Christian convictions that are not only earnest, but intensely practical:

"I am a member (an unworthy member goes without saying), of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America. Being a member of the Church of Christ, I may be considered as a Christian, as far as poor, weak humanity may hope to be one. It is my belief that the countries where the observances of the Christian religion generally prevail are absolutely sure of Divine protection and guidance in national affairs. The nations that are the most religious are the most prosperous. I have always held that where the various denominations of the great Christian Church can meet on common ground—as they most certainly can—there should be drawn up a code of Christian ethics, which all might subscribe to, for the use of public and private schools throughout the land. All children of Christian parents should be taught the few, simple truths on which the Christian religion is based. It is in this way that we, as a nation, may become religious, when all things will be so ordered and settled upon the best and safest foundations, as the Liturgy has it, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us for all generations."

* * *

It will be remembered that when our Government contemplated sending a fleet to the coasts of Spain, that important command was given to Commodore John C. Watson, one of the bravest officers in the service. He is not only a brave sailor; he is a thorough Christian, as his letter below demonstrates. He writes:

"I gladly answer 'Yes,' and I believe the Lord Jesus Christ, our Divine Saviour, is the best friend any human being ever had or ever could have, and his loving help is freely offered to all who will accept it."

Noble words these, from a hero and a veteran of the Navy. Such are the men who uphold our flag throughout the oceans of the world!

* * *

Commodore J. H. Gillis, another veteran, writes as follows:

"I would state that, having been for many years, and being now a member of the Presbyterian Church, I could hardly be other than in sympathy with any movement against the enemies of religion, and could not reply to any of your questions except in the affirmative and that in the most emphatic manner. . . I consider the company of any earnest follower of Christ, no matter how humble his station, better than that of the highest in land, if he knows not God."

* * *

Commodore H. B. Robeson is a member of the Episcopal Church, and gives a cordial affirmative to all the questions.

* * *

There is a boldness characteristic of a "Son of the Sea" in this frank avowal of belief from Commodore W. P. McCann. He says he would be very sorry to hear that his name had been enrolled among the disciples of infidel teachers, as he has not the slightest respect for such small philosophers or their teachings or theories. In a general way he adds: "I can answer for the older officers of the navy, with whom I have been associated for over half a century. I cannot recall the name of one who was or is an enemy of Christianity. Moreover, those officers who have particularly distinguished themselves by their ability and heroism have entertained the warmest religious sentiments."

* * *

Captain C. M. Chester, of U. S. S. [illegible]

"Much as I dislike to appear publicly in the discussion referred to in your letter, I am compelled by the vows taken upon my becoming a member of Christ's church many years ago, to answer all your interrogatories in the strongest affirmative. If we exclude the recognition of a Supreme Being and the potency of religion as a civilizing influence from the results of the recent trouble with Spain, then was that war vain and our protestations fraudulent?"

* * *

Captain Silas W. Terry, of the battleship Iowa, writes: "I have no hesitancy in saying that I am a friend of Christianity, that I believe that Christianity is the friend of mankind; and, further, my belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being, the Divinity of Christ and the dignity of Christianity as a civilizing agent."

* * *

Captain Robley D. Evans, better known as "Fighting Bob," the commander of the Indiana, in answering the inquiries, begins by saying that he has no quarrel with anyone on religious grounds, as he believes in absolute freedom in such matters; but he adds: "You may be sure that I am a friend of Christianity, and firmly believe that it is the keystone of the social fabric and the greatest of all civilizing influences."

* * *

Captain Henry Glass of the cruiser Charleston, in expressing his emphatic belief in the Christian faith, adds: "From my experience in anti-Christian countries, I believe that Christianity has accomplished more for enlightenment and progress and the alleviation of human suffering than all other known influences."

* * *

Does not this echo the testimony of our missionaries and Gospel workers abroad in a manner truly wonderful? Doubtless the experience and observation of other commanders will coincide with that of Captain Glass.

In the foregoing letters and interviews it is submitted that the evidence effectually disposes of the charge of the allegation that "agnosticism and infidelity have found supporters among the leading men of the nation"—as far, at least, as the most prominent officials in our national Administration, Cabinet, Supreme Court, and Navy are concerned. By their frank and unqualified avowals, these leaders of national thought and action have forever set at rest the ungracious slander uttered against the country. Their letters will gladden the hearts of multitudes who

"I beg to state that I am decidedly a friend of Christianity."

[illegible] U. S. A.

"All men who [illegible] progress [illegible] civilization in all countries must believe in the potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence."

[illegible] U. S. A.

"To all questions I answer, Yes."

U. S. S.

"When any one tells me there is nothing in the Christian religion, and sneers at my mother's faith, and talks flippantly of her Bible, he heaps insult upon the honored dead, and I will have none of it."

Governor of Missouri had been greatly disturbed by the loud claims of the unbelievers, and especially by the flagrant assertions of the prevalence of infidelity in "high places." These letters show, beyond all peradventure, that we are a Christian nation. They refute the calumny of national godlessness and establish the fact before the whole world that, as a people, "America is for God"; that we regard Him in all our policies, seek Him in our counsels, and lean upon Him in our mightiest enterprises.

The Army

IN times of war, with a large army in active service, one might suppose that there would be very little opportunity for the inculcation and growth of Christian principles, particularly among the officers and troops. Such, however, is very far from being the case. It has been demonstrated, in many instances, that when troops are actively engaged on the field, and when sickness and death invade the camps—whether as the result of the enemy's bullets or from the ailments peculiar to military campaigns—there is a strong undercurrent of serious thought among both officers and men, which affords excellent opportunity for turning their minds to spiritual things. The rank and file of our army contains not only a goodly proportion of sound Christian men, but many of the officers are earnest believers. This has been made apparent during the religious work in our camps both at home and abroad during the last twelve months. Chaplains, evangelists and lay workers of all denominations united in praise of the Christian spirit evinced by many of the officers, as well as by the men themselves; and this spiritual activity has been kept alive to a large extent among our troops in the West Indies and the Philippines, notwithstanding the rough work upon which they were engaged.

* * *

But it is with the heads of the army that we have to deal in the present instance, as the imputation of irreligion "in high places" which is made by the infidels, aims far above the rank and file. Were we to accept it, we would believe that the generals, major-generals, brigadier-generals and lieutenants of our army—from the highest to the lowest of the grades—were largely tainted with the poison of unbelief. Is this true, or is it a libel on our army? We shall let the officers speak for themselves.

* * *

Major-General J. W. R. Shafter, the victor of Santiago, and one of our bravest and most popular military leaders, unhesitatingly places himself under the standard of the Christian faith. He declares, in his letter in response to the questions submitted, that he is a friend of Christianity and believes in the Divinity of Christ and in the power of the Christian religion as a means to salvation.

* * *

Brigadier-General M. D. Hardin writes: "I sincerely believe there is no hope for the permanent success or real progress of any people who are not truly religious. And now that the Christian religion has been revealed to man I sincerely believe no nation can progress without believing and practicing it in its purity, avoiding formalism and superstition on the one hand and agnosticism and atheism on the other: the latter is due to the pride of intellect by which man fell."

* * *

Brigadier-General R. C. Drum avows himself a decided friend of Christianity, and so also does Brig.-Gen. W. P. Craighill, the latter supplementing his affirmatives with this sentence: "I wish to speak with the emphasis of full conviction after long and careful consideration of both sides of the subject."

* * *

Brig.-Gen. W. B. Rochester also gives with a soldier-like directness, a bold and hearty affirmative to all the questions.

* * *

Brig.-Gen. D. W. Flagler, chief of Ordnance of the United States Army, thus indicates his religious position:

"I have to state that I have been a communicant in the Protestant Episcopal Church, United States of America, for many years, and believe in all statements contained in the creed of that church."

* * *

A very significant and instructive answer is that of Brig.-Gen. William P. Carlin, who writes:

"I answer your questions in the affirmative. I believe that the manifest decline in Christian faith is due to the failure of professing Christians to live their religion."

* * *

Brig.-Gen. M. R. Morgan is a thorough believer in the Christian faith.

* * *

Brig.-Gen. Guy V. Henry is the Commander of the Department of Porto Rico, and the questions reached him at his headquarters in San Juan. After answering all in the affirmative, Gen. Henry adds this sentence, which may well be pondered by thoughtful Americans:

"The foundation-stone of a nation's prosperity, as history shows, is moral education, and any man who follows the Christian code will not fall by the wayside. Upon that foundation our success in governing our colonies will depend; its neglect will result in failure. 'Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people.' This motto is over the West Point Chapel; it is educated into, and I believe felt to be true by every officer and soldier in our army and navy."

* * *

Adjutant-General H. C. Corbin is brief and to the point, and contents himself with stating that it gives him pleasure to send an affirmative to all the questions.

* * *

Surgeon-General George N. Sternberg declares himself the son of a clergyman and a friend of the Christian faith, implying a living belief on his part in the same doctrines.

* * *

A notable letter, which may well serve as a model of its kind to both soldier and civilian, is that of Brig.-Gen. J. M. Wilson, Chief of Engineers, who writes:

"I am an earnest friend of Christianity, I recognize the power and love of a Supreme Being, and I fully believe in the Divinity of the Saviour and the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence. For a third of a century, I have been a member in good standing of the Protestant Episcopal Church; the vestry of the parish, with which I am now identified, has upon it three officers of the regular Army, one officer of the Navy, one ex-officer of the regular Army, and one ex-officer of the former Confederate Army.

* * *

Inspector-General Joseph C. Breckinridge sends a letter, which conveys, in no uncertain tone, his fervent faith. After affirmative answers to all the questions, he adds:

"I believe in God the Father, Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord. Any man who follows the progress of civilization in all countries must believe in the potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence. Are not missionaries the forerunners of civilization?"

* * *

Major-General John R. Brooke, Commander of the Military Department of Cuba, writes from his headquarters at Havana in curt and soldier-like phrase, "I answer 'yes' to all of the three questions." Those who know General Brooke most intimately declare him to be a model soldier, broad-minded, judicious and everywhere commanding respect by his strong Christian character.

* * *

This record of the religious views of our country's valorous sons would be incomplete without the name of General Oliver O. Howard. Though now retired from active service, Gen. Howard's heart is still with the men of the camp and field, with whom he has spent the better part of his life, and among whom he rose to high distinction through gallantry and ability. General Howard is the typical Christian soldier of this country, everywhere honored and everywhere loved. He writes:

"You ask me, first, 'Are you a friend of Christianity?' If there were any way to strengthen the word 'yes' I would say adopt it. A thousand times yes. Of

"Yes, with all my heart."

W. P. Frye

U. S. Senate

"There is not nor has there ever been in the world any influence to be compared to Christianity as a civilizing influence. It has done more for man than all the religions, from the foundation of the world."

Richd. R. Kenney

U. S. Senate

"Christianity has done more good to mankind than all other religions or systems of faith or belief or unbelief. I believe in God the Father, Christ the Son and the Holy Ghost."

F. M. Cockrell

U. S. Senate

♣

"I cannot believe that any considerable number of the leaders of thought at the present day are freethinkers, agnostics or unbelievers."

A. D. Candler

Governor of Georgia

"I answer Yes to all of your questions."

James H. Berry

U. S. Senate

"Returning to Washington, I find your favor of 21st awaiting me. Replying to your query, 'Are you a friend of Christianity?' I answer, Yes."

Boies Penrose

U. S. Senate

In addition to sending a hearty affirmative to all the questions, Senator Kyle adds: "I am happy to express my sincere belief in the principles of Christianity."

James H. Kyle

U. S. Senate

♣

"I claim to be a friend of Christianity. I was thus brought up, and thus taught to believe. I have never had occasion to change my belief and convictions on this point."

W. D. Crampton

Rear-Admiral, U. S. N.

"My belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being, to the Divinity of Christ and the surpassing potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence. No one has a right to quote me to the contrary."

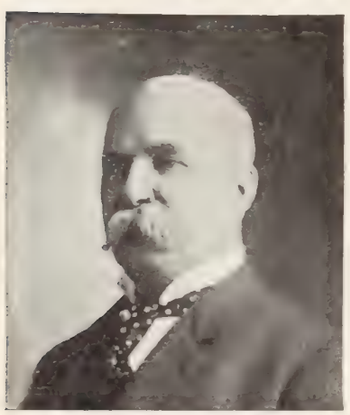
W. V. Allen

U. S. Senate

"To all of the questions I answer unhesitatingly, Yes."

J. M. Thurston

U. S. Senate



"I do most assuredly" (believe in Christianity).

J. H. Gallinger

U. S. Senate

"It has done more for civilization and the elevation and ennobling of mankind than all other influences in the world."

Geo. C. Perkins

U. S. Senate

course. I mean in the answer no sect, no denomination of Christians, no hierarchy of any human making, but simply the Christian religion as set forth in the New Testament and supported by the holy Scriptures of the Old Testament.

"Second. Is the Christian religion the friend of mankind? Of course. It makes man happy; it makes him, when genuine, treat his fellow-man with love and helpfulness.

"Third. Do you believe in the Divinity of Christ? This covers the whole ground. Certainly I do. The Almighty manifests himself especially to us all in the person of his Son, our Lord. God's Holy Spirit helps me to understand the Scriptures concerning Christ. My love for him meets his love for me, and I am glad. The Spirit calls me to see his shining face—the face of a living, loving, mighty Saviour. Through him—the Mediator, the Immortal—our Father's arms are always stretched out to welcome every child who will turn towards him. These are things to be spiritually discussed. The outsider, the sceptic, tries to solve such problems by intellect alone—but they are heart-problems. 'With the heart man believeth unto righteousness.'"

U. S. Senate

OUR quest has already taken us through the various departments of the National Government—those of the Chief Executive, the Cabinet, the Supreme Court, the Army and Navy—and we must needs look elsewhere to find the substantial proof of the assertion of "infidelity in high places." Whither shall we now turn in pursuing our investigation? Is it in Congress that the sceptics, agnostics, free-thinkers and what-not hide themselves? Has the nation, while preferring Christian statesmen and leaders in other positions of eminence, neglected Congress, and so allowed its spirituality to go by default that an unbelieving troop has crept in who "know not God," and believe not in his Son?

* * *

As we turn to that grave and august body, the United States Senate, we confess to no misgivings. We find the Senators—almost all of them men of ripe judgment in human affairs, and with great interests in their keeping—ready to give to our interrogatories most attentive consideration. Their responses speak for themselves and need no comment or explanation of ours to declare the fact that the Senate of the United States is Christian.

* * *

Sen. Thomas C. Platt, of New York, writes this very striking testimony, which affords a glimpse of the religious inner nature of this well-known public man:

"I consider that Christianity, rightly apprehended and vitalized, is inherently and essentially a friend of humanity, and that to-day, with the enlightened attitude that mankind is assuming toward it, Christianity is proving itself to be more than ever a friend to the human race. I believe that the qualities of Divine goodness were marvelously illustrated and actualized in the character of Jesus Christ, and that his life is a remarkable revelation of the inherent possibilities in human nature. I believe that the genius of Christianity, which emphasizes the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man—the kinship of all races and individuals—is potentially broadening, liberalizing and civilizing."

* * *

Sen. W. V. Allen, Neb., writes declaring his belief in Christianity, and adds: "No one has a right to quote me to the contrary."

* * *

Senator B. R. Tillman, of South Carolina, a man noted for his outspoken opinions, runs the Gospel flag to the masthead and writes that he is not in any sense of the word a disciple or believer in the doctrines of infidelity. "True Christianity," he adds, "is a very rare thing, even in the churches, and he would be a fool who denies the beneficent influence of the Christian religion upon men as taught by Christ. It is the best code of morals to live by that has ever been formulated."

* * *

"I am a Presbyterian and a member of that church," writes Senator Chas. J. Faulkner, of West Virginia, in giving his affirmative answer, "and an earnest and sincere believer in Christianity and in the Divinity of Christ. I believe that the teachings and precepts of the Christian religion have had more influence in ameliorating the condition of human society and advancing its civilization than any other cause."

* * *

Senator Geo. L. Wellington, of Maryland, has a "word in season" concerning infidel claims which is specially appropriate. He considers that too much importance is given to infidel leaders as factors in religious matters. He adds "So far as I am personally concerned I have no hesitancy in saying that I believe in the Christian faith, and, further, I believe that the Christian religion and the civilization it brings with it are the highest and best gifts to mankind.

* * *

Senator James K. Jones, of Arkansas, in these unmistakable words avows his belief:

"I am a firm believer in the Christian religion, in the immortality of the soul, and in the beneficence and wisdom of an All-wise God, and that but for this belief, this life, in my opinion, would not be worth living."

* * *

"I am happy to express my sincere belief in the principles of Christianity," is the terse reply of Senator James H. Kyle, South Dakota.

* * *

"There is not nor has there ever been in the world any influence to be compared to Christianity as a civilizing influence," enthusiastically writes Senator Richard R. Kenney (Delaware). "It has done more for man than all the religions from the foundation of the world."

* * *

Senator F. M. Cockrell (Mo.), writes: "I believe firmly and unwaveringly in our holy Christianity as the most potent, civilizing and elevating influence on mankind in this world. I am the unfaltering friend of Christianity, which is man's best friend. Christianity has done more good to mankind than all other religions or systems of faith or belief or unbelief. I believe in God the Father, Christ the Son, and the Holy Ghost."

* * *

"Yes, with all my heart," responds Senator Wm. P. Frye, of Maine, in avowing his Christian belief. Equally cordial are the affirmatives that come from Senators W. V. Allen (Neb.), W. B. Allison (Ia.), James E. Berry (Ark.), J. H. Gallinger (N. H.), W. E. Mason (Ill.), John T. Morgan (Ala.), H. C. Hansbrough (N. Dak.), H. D. Money (Miss.), Geo. W. McBride (Ore.), Eugene Hale (Me.), Marion Butler (N. C.), John L. McLaurin (S. C.), J. M. Thurston (Neb.), George Gray (Del.).

* * *

Senator Geo. C. Perkins, of California, in his letter, makes this declaration:

"I am a loyal friend of Christianity, and believe that it has done more for civilization and the elevation and ennobling of mankind than all other influences."

* * *

From Senator Samuel Pasco, of Florida, comes a thoughtful note in which he defines his belief in these words:

"The highest type of civilization the world has ever seen is founded on Christianity, and the practice of its principles has in all ages made mankind better and happier. I accept the Bible as the revealed will of God to man, and believe in all of its doctrines and principles. In my opinion, it clearly teaches the Divinity of Christ."

* * *

Such is the testimony of the Upper House of Congress—the United States Senate. These letters prove, more than whole volumes of argument could do, that Congress recognizes that God is at the helm of our nation's affairs, and controlling its destinies. One cannot help remarking the earnestness that characterizes many of the letters, the writers of which desired to make the record effective in the battle with Agnosticism.

"I unhesitatingly answer yes to all the questions you ask."

John R. Taylor

Principal of Yale

"I am the friend of Christianity; it gives me pleasure to answer in the affirmative."

H. C. Corbin

Adjut.-Gen. U. S. A.

"I am a Presbyterian and a member of that church, and an earnest and sincere believer in Christianity and in the Divinity of Christ. I believe that the teachings and precepts of the Christian religion have had more influence in ameliorating the condition of human society and advancing its civilization than any other cause."

Chas. J. Faulkner

U. S. Senate

"I am glad to answer Yes to all your questions, and would add that my belief is that the leading men of the country hold the same views."

Marshall Field

State Governors

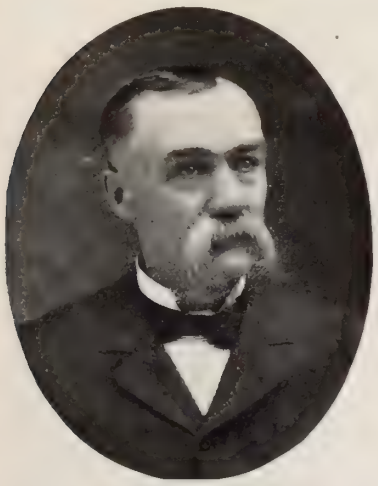
"I beg to answer in the affirmative."

GEORGE GRAY,
U. S. Senate

"I am a friend to Christianity. I know Christianity is the friend to mankind. I believe in the Trinity, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit. I believe in the Bible as the inspired Word of God."

A. J. McLaurin

Governor of Mississippi



"I am a friend to Christianity. To your second and third questions I can also cheerfully answer in the affirmative."

Andrew E. Lee

Governor of South Dakota

"In answer to the questions which you have put to me, let me answer in the most direct way, and simply say: To the First, I am: to the Second, yes; and to the Third, yes.'

Wm. A. Mercer

Brigadier-General, U. S. A.

BUT leaving national affairs, it may be argued that there are still other public men of exalted position, besides those we have already indicated, of whom the assertion of the infidels might be true. To anticipate this claim, we have written to the Governors of all the States, a letter of inquiry regarding their attitude toward Christianity. As in the former lines of investigation, we let the responses speak for themselves, being willing that the agnostics should derive from them whatever encouragement they may afford.

* * *

There could hardly be a stronger or more eloquently touching testimony than this of Hon. Lon V. Stephens, Governor of Missouri. He writes:

"If there is nothing in this religion of Christ, who died for man, my own mother deceived me on her death-bed. When her soul was about to wing its flight she told us all triumphantly, with her poor emaciated face wreathed in smiles, that she was going to another home in heaven; that she would join other loved ones there; that she wanted her boys and girls to so live that on some sweet day we would all meet again and live and love forever and forever. When anyone tells me there is nothing in this Christian religion and sneers at my mother's faith and talks flippantly of her Bible, he heaps insult on the honored dead, and I will have none of it."

* * *

God's people everywhere will value this outspoken declaration from Hon. George W. Atkinson, Governor of West Virginia, which proves that State to have a wise and worthy Executive:

"I most certainly believe that Christianity is the unquestionable friend of mankind. It has given humanity, all over the world where it has been introduced, an uplift which is not comparable in any sense with any other system of religion that has been tried in the past.

"I never had any doubt arising in my mind about the Divinity of Christ, and I have given to the subject careful thought and study. I believe in the surpassing potency of the civilized influences which grow out of the teachings and principles of the Gospel of the Christ. To blot out Christianity would be to draw a veil of darkness over the world and render mankind desolate and miserable."

* * *

Hon. W. E. Stanley, Governor of Kansas, Hon. DeForest Richards, Governor of Wyoming, Hon. Robert B. Smith, Governor of Montana, Hon. Wm. O. Bradley, Governor of Kentucky, Hon. H. M. Wells, Governor of Utah, Hon. Andrew E. Lee, of South Dakota, Hon. E. C. Smith, Governor of Vermont, Hon. W. D. Bloxham, Governor of Florida, Hon N. O. Murphy, Governor of Arizona, Hon. David W. Jones, Governor of Arkansas, Hon. A. J. McLaurin, Governor of Mississippi, Hon. C. M. Barnes, Governor of Oklahoma, and Governor Frank Rollins, of New Hampshire, have all written, declaring their firm belief in Christian doctrines.

* * *

Some of the letters received from the Governors of other States are magnificent testimonials to the truths of Christianity. Hon. Joseph M. Devine, ex-Governor of North Dakota, thus expresses his personal belief:

"Christ gave to the world an ideal and with that ideal, life. He lifted and continues to lift up all mankind. He who holds to that ideal is invincible; no environment can control him, no combination absorb him, no adversary destroy him, for he has that within himself which laughs at destruction and abides forever. Christianity as a civilizing influence permeates and uplifts all civilizing influences. The religion of a man, an age or a nation determines the character of that man, that age or that nation."

* * *

The triumphs of Christianity are set forth in eloquent words by Governor James A. Mount, of Indiana. He writes:

"Christian nations lead in the world's achievements, progress and greatness. It is the Christ-like spirit that inspires and carries forward charitable and philanthropic work. The founders and managers of colleges and seminaries, of hospitals and reformatories, are largely Christian men and women; even the exceptional cases are always found in lands dominated by Christian influence. It is the Christian spirit that seeks to reclaim the fallen, to relieve distress, mitigate suffering, to make the world purer and mankind happier.

"I believe in a Supreme Ruler, and humbly seek the light of his unerring counsel to guide me in the discharge of the duties incumbent upon me."

* * *

Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, Governor of Iowa, writes:

"I answer each of your three interrogatories in the affirmative. The history of the past year, more than that of any other twelve months, emphasizes the potency of the Christian religion as a civilizing influence. Think as we please, plan as we will, do what we may, the evidence is unmistakable that Christian civilization is to encircle the globe, and that the nation that rejects it, or refuses to assimilate, must soon perish from the earth."

Governor Shaw is a member of the M. E. Church, and has thrice represented his State in Quadrennial General Conference.

* * *

In a somewhat similar strain Hon. C. A. Thomas, Governor of Colorado, writes:

"I am a friend of Christianity. It has been of great and incalculable benefit to mankind, and its influence upon civilization and society has been uplifting and ennobling. The abandonment of Christian teachings and Christian influences would be calamitous."

* * *

The claim of the agnostics of "widespread infidelity in high places" is not entertained by Hon. A. D. Candler, Governor of Georgia, who writes avowing his Christian principles, and adds: "I cannot believe that any considerable number of the leaders of thought at the present day are free-thinkers, agnostics or unbelievers. This certainly has not been my observation, either among the professional men, the business men, or even among the politicians in the portion of the republic in which I live."

* * *

Hon. Joseph F. Johnston, Governor of Alabama, after declaring his Christian principles, writes: "I believe the precepts of the Master the only safe guide for individuals and nations, both in this life and that to come."

* * *

Hon. Alva Adams, ex-Governor of Colorado, writes that he is in no sense a disciple of agnosticism. "I believe," he adds, "that our civilization will become weaker and less virile in measure as we depart from the orthodox Christian faith of our fathers."

* * *

This, from the Governor of Virginia, Hon. J. Hoge Tyler, will be read with especial appreciation by those who know the preciousness of the privilege to which the distinguished Virginian refers. His letter illustrates the readiness of the loyal believer at all times to "stand up for Jesus," and certainly in these days, when arrogant atheism and infidelity assail on every hand, it is more than ever necessary for the Christian to show his colors. He writes: "Recognizing the inestimable benefits conferred upon the world through the Christian religion, it is a privilege to bear personal testimony to the comfort and joy the belief in the Atonement through Christ can give."

* * *

Another State Executive who firmly upholds Christianity is Hon. Wm. A. Poynter, Governor of Nebraska, who writes: "Christianity is the foundation of the world's highest and best civilization. The more nearly States conform their laws to the teachings of Christianity, the more equal justice is the portion of all the people."

Such is the voluntary testimony of the Governors of many States, and it establishes the fact that they are, as a whole, men of high Christian principle, worthy of the great offices they fill.

"Yes" (to all the questions)

"I am a friend of Christianity. I am a member of the Episcopal Church, and firmly believe in the Apostles' Creed."

D. W. Jones,

Governor of Arkansas

"Recognizing the inestimable benefits conferred upon the world through the Christian religion, it is a privilege to bear personal testimony to the comfort and joy the belief in the Atonement through Christ can give."

J. Hoge Tyler

Governor of Virginia

"I believe that the manifest decline in Christian faith is due to the failure of professed Christians to live their religion."

William P. Fowler

Our Universities

"He would be a fool who denies the beneficent influence of the Christian religion upon men as taught by Christ. It is the best code of morals to live by that has ever been formulated."

U. S. Senate

"So far as I am personally concerned I have no hesitancy in saying that I believe in the Christian faith, and further, I believe that the Christian religion and the civilization it brings with it are the highest and best gifts that can be given to mankind."

U. S. Senate

"Yes! I do believe in the Divinity of Christ. Yes! I do believe that Christianity is the friend of mankind. Yes!-I do believe in the surpassing potency of the Christian religion as a civilizing influence.

Very [illegible] yours,

Russian Imperial Embassy,
Washington, D. C.

"AS education advances, the belief in Christianity wanes," is an oft-repeated assertion of the disciples of Agnosticism. The wish is father to the thought. The imputation is levelled at our universities and other institutions of learning. How far it is true, may be ascertained from the answers received from a large number of our leading educators, which conclusively show that the great colleges of America are controlled by men of high Christian principle, whose loyalty to the doctrines of the Great Teacher is deep and fervent. With such illustrious examples in the faculties of these institutions, the youth of our nation are not in danger of being seduced by the sophistries of the agnostics. These letters, in the main, are concise and go straight to the point at issue.

* * *

"What I believe is expressed in the Apostles' Creed," writes Rev. George Williamson Smith, D.D., LL. D., President of Trinity College.

* * *

Hon. Alex. Stewart Webb, LL.D., President of the College of the City of New York writes: "I believe in the Bible and in Christianity. Yes, yes."

* * *

"It gives me pleasure to reply to your letter of inquiry," writes Prof. George E. MacLean, of the University of Nebraska. "In the words of the Apostle Paul, 'I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.' My belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being, the Divinity of Christ, and the potency of Christianity as a civilizing influence."

* * *

The Principal of our leading University for women, Prof. J. M. Taylor, of Vassar, replies tersely: "I unhesitatingly answer 'Yes' to the questions you ask."

* * *

Prof. Henry Wade Rogers, President of Northwestern University, in announcing his orthodoxy, writes: "Christianity has shaped the laws, manners, customs and literature of the civilized world. Every one, whether he believes in Christianity or not, must concede that fact. It has abolished slavery, modified the rules of war, built hospitals, poorhouses, and asylums, and taught that all men are free and equal."

* * *

"I am an ordained minister of the Presbyterian Church," is the answer of Prof. Francis L. Patten, President of Princeton University, "and of course my belief extends to the recognition of a Supreme Being, the Divinity of Christ, as well as the other doctrines embraced in the Westminster Confession of Faith."

* * *

Prof. A. H. Fetterolf, Ph. D., LL.D., President of Girard College, writes: "I answer your questions with a cheerful and unqualified 'Yes.'"

Yet the enemies of Christianity pointed to this college as one that was founded in infidelity.

* * *

From Mount Holyoke College (which has educated and sent out a great host of Christian teachers), comes this letter: "The testimony of the nearly 2,000 years since Jesus Christ came into the world shows that Christianity is the friend of mankind. I believe that the kingdom of Jesus Christ will be universal on the earth, bringing in the reign of righteousness and peace.—Elizabeth G. Mead, Principal."

* * *

"I am not ashamed or unwilling to be known anywhere as a thorough, old-fashioned believer in Christianity, pure and unadulterated for every man, and woman, and child whom God hath made. I believe it is the agent, and the only effective agent, in giving civilization to man." This is the answer of Prof. E. Hitchcock, Dean of Amherst College.

* * *

Prof. R. E. Adams, of the University of Wisconsin, sends a brief note, in which he says: "I beg to answer all three questions in the affirmative."

* * *

Through his secretary, President Cyrus Northrup, of the University of Minnesota, also gives affirmative answers, and a similar reply comes from Prof. F. H. Swan, of the University of Kansas.

* * *

President Schurman, of Cornell University, is now in the Philippines, as a member of our Peace Commission, but his secretary, Mr. H. C. Howe, writes for him in his absence, giving assurance of Dr. Schurman's Christianity. He says, in his note: "Dr. Schurman is a member of the Baptist Church and an earnest Christian."

* * *

"I am giving my whole life to teach these things" (the doctrines of Christianity), writes Prof. William R. Harper, of the University of Chicago.

* * *

Prof. Martin Kellogg, LL.D, University of California, sends a decided affirmative.

* * *

"Yes, to each of the questions," answers Prof. Cochran, of the Polytechnic Institute, Brooklyn. "Christ and Christianity have given to humanity all that is noblest and best."

* * *

In a letter expressing the most loyal belief in Christianity, Prof. James B. Angell, President of the University of Michigan, concludes with these words: "I have endeavored to illustrate that belief during a somewhat extended life."

* * *

Such is the testimony of some of our nation's most distinguished educators, who, perceiving the importance of the occasion, and ever ready to declare their love and loyalty to the old Bible and the faith of their fathers, have considered it time well spent to place themselves on record in the battle against Infidelity.

* * *

In addition to the foregoing, a number of letters have been received from men and women prominent in the mercantile and professional world—some of them among the best known Americans of our day—and all, with singular unanimity, declare their loyalty and adherence to the Faith of the Cross. Marshall Field, the merchant prince of Chicago, and an employer of thousands of workers of both sexes, gladly answers with a "yes," to all the questions, and adds: "My belief is that the leading men of the country hold the same views."

* * *

Mr. John Wanamaker, whose noble Christian life and broad philanthropies are known everywhere, sends the assurance of his faith in Christianity, and adds that he has never entertained a doubt of the Divinity of Christ, and that, as he grows older, he recognizes more and more the importance of the Christian religion to mankind.

* * *

Hon. Levi P. Morton, speaking for himself and for the important class he represents, declares for orthodox Christianity.

* * *

Such is the verdict of the nation's leaders in thought, influence and public position, on the great question of the ages. Their unanimous and unequivocal declaration of Christian belief will come to all lovers of Gospel truth like a welcome message, proclaiming the United States a Christian nation, and its foremost representatives sincere followers of the Man of Nazareth.

* * *

At all the embassies of foreign governments in Washington, as well as at the Legations, the United States is officially regarded as a "Christian nation." Even the Ambassador of China, Wu Ting-fang, places on record, over his own signature, the fact of our national Christianity, of which the Infidels and Agnostics appear to be so ignorant. Minister Wu sums up his own and his government's position in these remarkable words: "For my answer, I have to refer you to the 29th article of the treaty of 1858, between China and the United States which reads, 'the principles of the Christian religion . . . are recognized as teaching men to do good, and to do to others as they would have others do to them.' Such was, and still is, the opinion of the Chinese Government respecting Christianity, and in this opinion I heartily concur."

"Christian civilization is to encircle the globe, and the nation that rejects it or refuses to assimilate, must perish from the earth."

Governor of Iowa

"I believe that the genius of Christianity, which emphasizes the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man—the kinship of all races and individuals—is potentially broadening, liberalizing and civilizing."

U. S. Senate

"The principles of the Christian religion, as professed by the Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches, are recognized as teaching men to do good and to do to others as they would have others do to them."

Chinese Ambassador at Washington

Baby Clarke Restored

SELDOM have the troubles of a private family so interested millions of persons as did the kidnapping of little Marion Clarke, described on this page last week. There were few citizens of New York who were not concerned about the lost child, and anxious to have her discovered and restored to her parents. Combined with sympathy for the parents was the desire to have the criminals detected and punished in so exemplary a way as to deter others from engaging in the same enterprise. It is doubtful if the police, unaided, would have been successful in either object. But the daily journals spread the news of the crime far and wide, and by publishing an excellent portrait of little Marion, enabled any person seeing her to recognize the child. This recognition occurred on June 1 in a country post-office at St. John's, N. Y., a hamlet in the mountains of Rockland County. A woman, carrying a child, called there for letters, and the Post-mistress handed her two. Looking at the child, she felt convinced that it was the missing babe, and as soon as the woman left, the Post-mistress gave information to the authorities and secured a warrant for her arrest. Information was at once sent to New York, and a detective, accompanied by the child's father, went to the country village and identified the babe and arrested the woman and her husband, whose name is Wilson. On the next day the nurse who abducted the child was found at White Oak Ridge, a village near Summit, N. J. She confessed her guilt and said that she was led to commit the crime by Wilson, who, with his wife, occupied an apartment in a New York lodging house, where the nurse-girl made their acquaintance. The girl was poor, and Wilson showed her how, by stealing a child, a large sum of money might be secured as ransom. He undertook to conduct the negotiations if she would steal the child. She consented, and efforts were made to get a place for her in some wealthy family. These failed, but she succeeded in getting an appointment from the Clarkes. The child was taken, as already related, and the nurse and the Wilsons went with her to the country. The nurse then returned to New York, leaving the child in the care of the Wilsons. But getting scared in the city, she went to the residence of an aunt near Summit, where she was arrested. The babe received an ovation when her father brought her home. A great multitude gathered in the street when the news was published that she was coming home, and gave joyful cheers as she was taken from the carriage and placed in the arms of her distracted mother. Such a scene helps us to understand the assurance that Christ gave of the rejoicings that there are in heaven when a soul which has been lost, but is found by the Good Shepherd, and is brought out of the bondage of sin into God's kingdom.

Copyright by Bromwidgdales, New York, 1899

MARION CLARKE, THE CHILD KIDNAPPED BY HER NURSE

Likewise I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth (Luke 15:10.)

Dreyfus to Have a New Trial

At last justice is to be done to the French officer who for four years has been imprisoned on Devil's Island off the coast of Guiana. On June 3 the Court of Cassation in Paris formally pronounced as illegal, the trial at which he was condemned, and ordered a new trial; which is almost sure to end in his acquittal. The evidence submitted to the Court of Cassation showed that when Dreyfus was tried for disclosing military secrets to Germany, three documents were produced in proof of the charge, and on those documents he was condemned. Two of them have now been proved to be forgeries, and the third, which may be genuine, did not refer to Dreyfus at all. The prisoner is clearly innocent, and all the disgrace and suffering inflicted upon him were the result of a wicked plot. The men guilty of the outrage are men at the head of the French Army, and one of them is a statesman who has held high office. Their knavery and duplicity have disgraced the name of France throughout the world. A large part of the population of Paris have added to the disgrace by opposing the vindication of the innocent sufferer, on the ground that he could not be vindicated without condemning men high in office in the government and the army. Happily they have not had their way. The innocent man is to be taken back and retried. Whether the guilty men will be punished is uncertain, as they have powerful influence which may be used to protect them from the penalty they so richly deserve. It cannot, however, protect them from the scorn and contempt of the civilized world, nor can it remove from their country the stain they have brought upon it by their villainy. The French people have long been notorious for their godlessness and they are reaping the fruits of it.

The right of the needy do they not judge. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? (Jer. 5:28).

The Lucknow Memorial

A noble granite shaft has just been erected at Lucknow in India, to commemorate the valiant defence of the Residency there, during the mutiny of 1857. The heroism of that siege is historic. A handful of officers, with their wives and daughters, were surrounded by the native soldiers, who had been armed and trained for service in the English army of occupation. They hoped to outrage and massacre the little company, as they did the women and children at Cawnpore. But the English closed the gates of the Residency and fought bravely in defence of the place. Though outnumbered nearly a hundred to one, and though weakened by disease and overpowered by the intense heat, they kept the demoniacal murderers at bay, throwing them from the top of the walls, when they tried to enter by climbing, and struggling with them underground, when they dug a tunnel under the walls. The ladies of the garrison nursed the sick, attended to the wounded and even carried ammunition to the soldiers, who could not, even for a minute, leave the breaches which the enemy's cannon had made in the walls. Early in the siege, the brave Sir Henry Lawrence died of his wounds, but with his dying breath, he enjoined his men to die at their posts rather than surrender. There was not a man among them who hesitated to obey, or would agree to yield. Their ammunition was almost exhausted and most of their provisions had been eaten—for they held the place for eighty-seven days—when the Highlanders, under Sir Colin Campbell, cut their way through the besieging force and delivered the heroic garrison. The shaft now erected on the spot where the fiercest struggles took place, is a memorial of the men and women who held out to the end. The courage and endurance they displayed should characterize the Christian in fighting the good fight of faith. The time will come when the heroes in that conflict will be honored.

OBELISK RECENTLY ERECTED AT LUCKNOW, INDIA

They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony and they loved not their lives unto the death (Rev. 12:11).

The Test of Insanity

At a recent meeting in New York of the American Medico-Psychological Association there was an important discussion of the criminal side of the insanity problem. The question arose out of a paper read by Dr. Charles Macdonald on the true test of insanity in criminal cases. He contended that the present tests are misleading. "It has been decided by the highest court of this State," said he, "that the test upon which the responsibility of a criminal who pleads lunacy is established is the knowlege of the distinction between right and wrong, and the knowledge of the quality of the act which has been committed. Such a test is in direct conflict with the law of nature and the discoveries of science. Something more than the mere knowledge of right and wrong is requisite to make persons responsible for the commission of crime. As a prerequisite for such responsibility, the defendant must possess the ability to choose the right." The courts are very little likely to agree with the Doctor in classifying all as lunatics who are unable to choose between right and wrong. Many are in that condition, not through lunacy, but through the bondage of habit and self-indulgence, which has weakened the will. Paul's remedy for such cases is better than a lunatic asylum.

Walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh: for the flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh, so that ye cannot do the things which ye would (Gal. 5:17).

Ropes from Spiders' Webs

A scientific journal reports a remarkable result of French ingenuity. This is no less than the training of spiders so that they will spin webs regularly for a useful purpose. The webs are used for the construction of balloon ropes for the military-aeronautic section of the French army. This novel industry is in operation at Chalais-Meudon, near Paris, and is an object of extreme interest not alone to entomologists. The insects are kept diligently active in a certain routine of movement, each one being able to spin some thirty or forty yards of thread without taking a rest. Twelve spiders are placed above a reel, to which their threads are attached, and the reel, being gently revolved, winds off the thread as fast as the little spinners are able to produce it. The threads are twisted into strands which after being carefully washed, are then skilfully woven into cords. The latter are declared to be both stronger and lighter than the silken cords which have hitherto been used by balloonists. It seems almost incredible that anything as weak and flimsy as a cobweb could ever, even in great number, become strong. It would appear, however, if this report may be trusted to have been done. But the spiritual achievement to which the prophet compared it, remains as impossible as ever. No man out of his own feeble performances can weave for himself a rope of righteousness.

They weave the spider's web . . . but their webs shall not become garments (Isa. 59:5, 6).

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR
T. DeWitt Talmage
EDITOR.

Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald ... payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence ...

Remittances ...
Express Money Orders are always safe and may ...

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. ... outside the United States, the Canadas, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. ... before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted ...

Back Numbers. ... back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. ...

Expiration ... per indicates when your paper will be stopped unless ...

Change of Address.—Always give both your old ...

The Name ... live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald ... the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters should be addressed
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
... New York City.

The Filial President

WHEN we wrote about Presidents and their mothers, a few weeks since, we thought especially of President Garfield and President McKinley and their respective mothers. But President Loubet, of France, in the matter of filial affection seems to be quite their equal. One day lately, he visited the little town of Montelimar, where his peasant mother resides, and though at the risk of breaking up the parade which attended to do him honor, when trembling with emotion and delight, his mother appeared on a balcony especially arranged for her, he descended from his carriage, climbed up to the balcony and caught the delighted woman in his arms, imprinting on her cheeks kiss after kiss, and hugging her as he would have done in his boyhood.

There is something very hopeful for a civilization which cultivates these holy affections of our nature: and that nation which honors a son because he honors his humble mother, has elements in it which will endure. There is a republican simplicity. And there is, also, a domestic simplicity, which is more beautiful still. God says, "Them that honor me, I will honor." And sons who honor their parents honor God. This incident is especially interesting as coming from France and from a republican President there.

The Child Population of Porto Rico

THIS does not strike the stranger as a very important factor. But, still it is true, that she who rocks the cradle, rules the world. Civilization and Christianity must both begin with the children. It is only picturesque, to watch the half-clad or naked progeny that multiply so rapidly in Porto Rico. But, soon they cease to be "toddling weethings," and are projected into the world, to do petty errands, bring the fuel for the fire, beg of the stranger a pittance toward the domestic support. Gen. John Eaton, so long the honored Commissioner of Education in this country, is studying the problem of the public school, and the different Christian denominations, with reference to work in the churches and the families. There is a grand opportunity for the Catholic Church, as represented by Americans, to illustrate what is best in Americanism; the liberality and activity of the Christian denominations in their Christian work here. Never before has there been so good a chance for the different denominations to rise above their differences and obey the commandments given by the Master to the Apostle Peter: "Simon Son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Feed my lambs, feed my sheep."

Population Determined by An Industry

COMMERCE in Hawaii is dependent upon the sugar industry. Of the thirty millions of dollars devoted to this industry, twenty-two and one-half millions are American. Of the population employed in the same, mainly Chinese and Japanese, there are 24,623, or nearly one quarter of the population of the island. In other words, the capital of this industry is American, the labor Mongolian. In its historic origin, the capital comes from a Christian land: this labor from the lands that are pagan. This, at least, is true of China, and to a large extent of Japan.

What the capital of this industry might do to elevate this labor, by encouraging the work of schools and churches: by cultivating among these Mongolians, the true conception of the family: by making the industry friendly to labor, it would take a long story to tell. Certainly it will not do for American capital to treat Oriental labor as if it were slave labor. It is the labor of men made in God's image, however much they have lost it. It is the labor of human brotherhood: schools and churches and the influence of home surroundings. Why should not Americans, growing wealthy through this rich response of the tropics to their outlay, be generous toward their laborers? Why should not American civilization show itself Christian? It will make better laborers, and their investments will yield richer returns.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME

Contributions, Disbursements, Etc., of "The Christian Herald's" Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, Nyack, N. Y., for the Summer of 1898

DISBURSEMENTS.

HOUSE FURNISHINGS AND FITTINGS.

[illegible]	$51 82
G. R. Wyman, "	34 00
Howard Garner, Hardware	5 00
E. J. N. Tallman, Hire of Piano	15 00
[illegible]	15 00
[illegible]	21 42
G. C. M. Thompson, Painting	3 90
G. D. Williams, "	4 52
[illegible]	10 80
		153.13

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING AND SUPPLIES.

Harrison & Dalley, Dry Goods, etc.	12 11
[illegible]	12 14
Thos. Glynn, Shoes	27 20
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
		235.80

MEDICAL.

Dr. Lewi	45 00
Dr. Polhemus	22 00
J. D. Blauvelt, Drugs and Medicines	7 29
		74.29

SALARIES, ETC.

[illegible]	[illegible]
Caretakers	269 86
Watchman, Hostler, Helpers and Chores	458 61
[illegible]	[illegible]
		899.48

FOOD SUPPLIES.

Geo. J. Altman, Butcher	76 71
E. L. Baldwin, Fish	10 03
J. K. Smith "	3 18
A. H. Denton, Vegetables	12 33
J. E. Morris & Co., Groceries	446 83
Randolph & Sippell "	59 95
[illegible]	[illegible]
American Pie Co., Pastry, etc.	11 25
Mrs. J. Fraser, Bread	160 40
Creamery Bakery, Bread	151 57
Robertson & Monroe, Bread	31 40
Geo. F. Wood, Milk	219 40
Nyack Ice Co., Ice	42 43
Miscellaneous Groceries	17 22
Wages to Cook, Maids, etc	121 10
		1,445.87

LIVERY AND STABLES.

A. E. & J. H. Christie, Harness, etc	58 10
Rye & Town, Hay, Feed, etc	93 22
E. Van Houten, Livery	27 [illegible]
J. H. Blauvelt, Horse shoeing, etc	14 40
Use of Horses	107 30
Transportation of Horses	17 30
Miscellaneous	11 00
		329 10

FREIGHT AND TRANSPORTATION.

Matthews Express Co., Baggage, etc	17 81
North River S. S. Co., Children's Fares	225 83
[illegible]	[illegible]
Miscellaneous Car Fares	17 42
		404.00

MISCELLANEOUS.

Blauvelt & Morrell, Insurance	50 00
W. H. White & Co., Coal	19 32
W. W. Hinton, Stationery, etc	4 85
J. W. Tremper, Water	20 00
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Telegrams and Telephone	4 58
Legal Expenses	10 00
Auditing Account	35 50
		169.64
Total Amount of Disbursements		3,711.31
Deficit in 1895, 1896, 1897		2,299.65
		6,010.90
Contributions received during 1898		5,149.03
Deficit carried forward		$861.93

Public Accountant's Certification.

This is to certify that I have carefully examined every item of expense in connection with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Children's Home, and have diligently compared every stub, receipt, voucher and check, and find the same correct and in accord with the above statement in every particular.

Sworn to before me this 26th day of May, A. D., 1899.

WM. S. GUERNEAU, NOTARY PUBLIC, NEW YORK

Wm. S. Guerneau
Notary Public

Louis Klopsch
Public Accountant,
[illegible] New York.

BRIEF NOTES

Recent statistics [illegible] Hawaiian Islands the Japanese outnumber the native Hawaiians.

A weekly journal [illegible] two years [illegible] jail for too candidly commenting upon Government affairs.

The American Tract Society [illegible] fact that during the past six years American citizens have given $263,800,000 to educational, philanthropic and religious organizations.

The Methodists of Washington [illegible] thousand dollars, which some anonymous donor has given them to lift the debts from their chapels.

According to recently published statistics of churches of all denominations in the United States, compiled by Dr. H. K. Carroll, there are now 26,057,909 communicants, a gain since 1890 of [illegible].

[illegible] of Washington, D. D., of which Rev. E. H. Severn is pastor, more than seventy persons were added to the [illegible] sixty-two and the youngest eleven years.

There are now eighteen Baptist churches in France, with a membership of 1,295, and thirty-six preaching stations. One of these churches, that in Nancy, goes back to Reformation times, and is descended from the original Baptists of the Vosges.

The latest church statistics collected for 1898 gave for the whole country an aggregate of 143,320 ministers, 187,100 churches and 26,651,969 communicants. The denomination ranking first in point of numbers is the Roman Catholic and the second the Methodist Episcopal.

There are 250,000 Indians in the United States, distributed throughout twenty-five States and territories, the largest number, 72,000, living in the Indian Territory, with 35,000 in Arizona, 18,000 in South Dakota, 13,000 in Oklahoma, 12,000 in California, 10,000 in Wisconsin, 5,200 in New York, and 2,802 in North Carolina.

Advance summaries of the Congregational Church, collected by the Independent, show the total number of churches to be 5,620; ministers, [illegible]; [illegible] Sunday School membership is 682,613. The benevolent contributions in all were $1,892,910. The membership shows a gain of 2,370. The additions on confession were 25,189.

Dr. Harry Dowkontt, who is at the Philafrican League's settlement of Lincoln, West Africa, writes that Mr. Frank T. Lea, one of their valued workers, has been very ill, with a temperature at times of 105. He and Mrs. Lea are now on their way home. Their places at Lincoln will be filled by Mr. Carson of Scotland and Miss Beinrichs of Switzerland.

Rev. Eynon Davis, an English minister, speaking recently at a Sunday School anniversary, described the trouble he had when a Sunday School teacher, with one boy in his class, who was utterly mischievous and unmanageable. The boy has grown up, and a few days before coming to that meeting, Mr. Davis met him. He had grown out of his recollection but he knew his former teacher and he introduced himself. To Mr. Davis's surprise, the bad boy had become a Baptist minister.

A dispatch from Guthrie, Okla., announces a tragic death in the pulpit. Rev. H. H. Baldwin, while conducting a service at Fountain, Dewey county, had just finished an impassioned appeal to his hearers to repent and turn from sin, when a thunderstorm broke over the town. There was a blinding flash of lightning, a tremendous crash of thunder. The congregation were horrified to see the preacher fall to the floor, and when friends went to his help he was found to be dead.

For the information of a subscriber at Denver, Colo., and others, we explain: 1. Gifts intended to be left by will in aid of our Fresh Air work should be left to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, as the institution is incorporated. 2. The same applies to legacies or bequests for the Bowery Mission, which is also an incorporated institution. 3. Bequests or legacies for the Bethesda Home Rescue Work should be made payable to the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as the institution is not incorporated.

Mr. William [illegible] has been visiting this country, has this pleasant report to give to the English journal with which he is connected: "It is not to the creature comforts of America that I look back with gratitude and affection. It is to the spontaneous and unaffected human kindness that met me on every hand, the will to please and be pleased in daily intercourse; and in the spiritual sphere the thirst for knowledge, for justice, for beauty, for the larger and purer [illegible]."

President McKinley sent congratulations to the American Sunday School Union at its [illegible] recently in Philadelphia. Among the speakers at the meetings was Dr. N. D. Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, who at the beginning of his career served the Union as a missionary in Nebraska. Mr. Henry Varley tendered congratulations from English Christians, and every Evangelical [illegible] represented by some eminent minister who bore testimony to the value of the work done by the Union.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Women in Japan

A Strange Tribute — Working in Rice-Fields — Advancement — The "Baby Carriage"

IN the southern part of the city of Kioto stands the well-known temple Higashi Hongwanji, the largest and most magnificent in Japan. From the beams of the roof hang thick black ropes, once used in hoisting heavy timbers; one of them is five inches in diameter and 250 feet long; all are made of hair from the heads of 3,500 women, who having no other way to help, offered the tribute of their glossy tresses to Buddha. Here and there, gray threads making pathetic breaks in the raven ropes, show that the aged gave their scanty locks. The temple is of comparatively recent erection; yet it is doubtful if any Japanese women of the present day would make again such sacrifice to Buddha. In Kioto flourishing mission work has been in existence since 1885; hospital, school buildings and teachers' residences, all fronting on the Imperial palace grounds. Recent rumor has suggested possible change in the established State religion, which is Shintoism. A new university in Tokio, under Imperial patronage, affords first-class educational advantages to women. The Empress is cultivated and progressive, and is doing much to introduce Western customs among her people. The great danger which threatens Japan as her old religions are being demolished, is from agnosticism and infidel sophistries. But one need not fear for the kingdom of Christ; it will prevail. The Japanese women who made such offerings to Buddha, will accept gladly, as it is more freely revealed to them, the higher object of devotion, our Christ, who asks neither sacrifice nor burnt offering, but love for God and our fellows.

Every year on the steps of the Higashi Hongwanji, a traveler tells us, the contributions of rice brought by pilgrims from distant provinces are stacked high in their cylindrical straw bales, themselves emblems of abundance. This rice is sent as an annual tribute from different parts of the empire to be used as offerings in the sanctuaries, for the priest's food and for alms for the poor. Such gifts often represent graver sacrifice than the ropes of hair. Rice is the staple of the Empire, the food of the people. Its production and preparation, especially in the interior, where only the most primitive agricultural implements are found, involve much hard and repulsive labor, which the women share equally with the men. In the rice-fields, workers stand knee-deep in the mud setting out young shoots or stirring up the muck. From their costume, one sex can hardly be told from another. All wear trousers and coarse blue cotton blouses; wrappings to the knee of thick cloth to protect the flesh from the assault of frogs, snails and blood-suckers of many kinds. For protection from the sun and rain they wear great white hats of straw, looking like so many mushrooms in the paddy-fields. Grass coats which shed the rain are worn in wet weather. Fields are dotted with long well-sweeps; or here and there, laborers are seen treading water-wheels. One of the easiest and prettiest features of the industry is shown in our picture where a mother and her daughter are separating grain from the stalk by an exceedingly primitive process. The fashionable baby carriage of Japan finds illustration in our photograph. Says E. A. Skidmore:

The little children are the most characteristically Japanese of all Japanese sights. Babies are carried about tied to their mothers' backs, or to that of their small sisters. They sleep with their heads rolling helplessly around, watch all that goes on with their black beads of eyes, and never cry. Their shaven crowns and gay little kimonos, their wise, serene countenances, make them look like cabinet curios. As soon as she can walk, the Japanese girl has her doll on her back, until she learns to carry it steadily and carefully; then the baby brother or sister succeeds the doll.

NATIVE WORKERS SEPARATING RICE FROM THE STALK IN JAPAN

Pleasant Goodness

We need to realize more vividly the necessity of being "pleasant to live with," as well as faithful to life's higher obligations, says a thoughtful writer. We may accomplish our daily tasks painstakingly and well, and bear our full share of each day's burdens and perplexities, and yet by an unlovely spirit cause the very ones for whom we toil and sacrifice to feel that what we do does not compensate for what we are—that the value of our service is overbalanced when placed in the scale with the cloudy looks and sharp words which are its accompaniment. The fact is, we must joy in doing what is good and kind for its own sake, and not for the sake of any recognition or reward from those we help. Let us do good because it is the better part.

"Little Brother and Sister's" Letter

A letter in big, printed characters, signed "Little Brother and Sister," comes from Chattanooga, Tenn., and puts a pretty appeal so prettily that it makes a nice little story for family reading. It says:

We live on a big farm near Lookout Mountain. We used to live in New York, and we know about the poor little tenement children there. Our mamma reads us about all the children you are helping at your beautiful Children's Home in the country, and we want to send some of our clothes to the little ragged ones. Our mamma will let us, and we will send good, strong ones that we have outgrown and some that we can wear now—for we don't want to give only the things we don't need. One of us is seven and the other is nine. Would the clothing we wore last summer and the summer before be too little? Shall we send them to the Bible House?

"Little Brother and Sister," our children at the Home will be delighted to be remembered by you so kindly. Our little guests are from five to twelve, so you see that your little suits and dresses will be sure to fit somebody there. Send to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y.

"The Bible in the Home"

The May meeting of the Mothers' Club of Atlanta, Ga., took as their subject for discussion "The Bible in the Home," and considered this subject under the following phases, which we give, thinking they may be helps to the study of this important question elsewhere:

1. Value of the Bible simply as one of the books in the home. 2. The Bible as literature. 3. Value of the Bible as the only safe guide to correct living. 4. Value of the Bible as an early companion to children. 5. What do the Scriptures suggest concerning the teaching of God's Word to children? 6. How shall Bible stories be rendered in the home? 7. How shall Bible truths be taught in the home? 8. There are homes where the Bible is never touched except to be dusted; there are other homes entirely without the Bible. If your child were to be brought up in either of these homes, which would you prefer? Why? 9. Experiences—(a) As a child what did the Bible mean to you? (b) As a mother what does it mean to you now? (c) What do you want it to mean to your child?

The President of the Georgia Assembly of Mothers is Mrs. William King, who by personal work, and as woman editor of a big Atlanta daily, has done much to advance the cause of childhood in the home and in the Sunday School.

One Egg for Dinner

That is the bill-of-fare on a California ostrich farm, says a traveler.

"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten," said the farmer, counting the guests he had invited to spend the day at the ostrich farm with him. "I guess that one egg will be enough." He went to the paddock and brought to the house an ostrich egg. For a whole hour it was boiled, then the shell was broken, and a three-pound hard-boiled-egg was laid upon the plate. The white had the bluish tinge seen in the duck's egg, and the yolk was of the usual color. It tasted as it looked—like a duck's egg, and had no flavor peculiar to itself. As it takes twenty-eight hen's eggs to equal in weight the ostrich's egg which was cooked, there was enough and to spare; and before leaving the table the party unanimously agreed that an ostrich egg is good fare.

Compensation

The truest words we ever speak
Are words of cheer.
Life has its shade, its valleys deep;
But round our feet the shadows creep,
To prove the sunlight near.
Between the hills those valleys sleep—
The sun-crowned hills,
And down their sides will those who seek
With hopeful spirit, brave though meek,
Find gently flowing rills.

For every cloud a silvery light;
God wills it so.
For every vale a shining height;
A glorious morn for every night;
A joy for every woe.
For snow's white wing a verdant field;
A gain for loss.
For buried seed, the harvest yield;
For pain, a strength, a joy revealed;
A crown for every cross.

An Odd Request

IT is very well known how tenacious a hold a habit obtains over one. The following incident illustrates this fact in a forcible, though rather amusing manner. A lady of my acquaintance had a large family of boys, whom she was earnestly striving to bring up in the right way. Among various good plans which she adopted was that of reading a chapter in the Bible aloud to them every night before they went to sleep. Time went on, and the eldest son arrived at an age when he could earn somewhat to help himself, and he obtained a position as telephone operator in the little village where they lived. He was required to sleep at the office in order to answer any possible night-calls; and about ten o'clock the first evening wheron he entered upon his new position, the telephone in his mother's house rang sharply. Upon answering the call, she found it to be her absent son, who said that in the hurry of packing up his belongings, he had omitted to take his Bible. He could not sleep without having read his customary chapter, and he concluded by asking his mother to read him a chapter over the telephone. She was a good mother and very solicitous to do everything possible for her son's best welfare, but the task was a little too difficult even for her loving zeal, and he was obliged to wait until the next day for his Bible reading. This true story illustrates the point that a good habit can be as strong as a bad one.

MARY S. WILLIAMS.

Motherhood as a "Profession"

It is quite the fashion, nowadays, in well-to-do families, says Helen Watterson Moody, to provide the daughters with some special training by means of which they can earn their own bread and butter if the family fortunes should suddenly fail. It is held to be altogether wise and proper to educate a daughter for a possible profession in a remote contingency; yet, while nineteen out of twenty of our girls become wives and mothers, no training whatever for the real profession of their lives is thought to be necessary. Any practicing physician will tell you that four-fifths of the illness among children could be avoided by proper knowledge and care on the part of the mothers. May this not be true of mental and spiritual defects, also? Knowledge, as well as good intent, is essential to success in growing trees and flowers. Child-culture is equally a science; and it is certainly a far more serious and important one.

A Wise Plan

"It is what my child is and will be; not what he has or may have, that concerns me most," one mother said to another as they watched their children at play. "You know he understands quite well what I mean when I say, 'Robbie, I want you to keep your soul clean to-day. I don't want you to have one thought that will soil it.' We tell our children that about their clothes, but not about their souls. 'Bring mamma a lot of good deeds to-night,' I say, and he tries to do it."

· A · Unique · Missionary · Effort ·

How Bible Study, Conducted by Rev. D. M. Stearns, in Many Cities, Has Led to the Giving of $121,975 to Foreign Missions

AMONG the many significant religious developments of the closing years of this century, one of the most remarkable is the work of Rev. D. M. Stearns, the pastor of the Church of the Atonement, at Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa. It may be thought at first sight an exaggeration to class a work so quietly and unostentatiously conducted as one of the most remarkable movements of the century, but there are many movements intrinsically important and deeply significant of which the world knows little—and this is one of them.

It would astonish many a man to spend a week with Mr. Stearns and see the kind of work in which he is engaged. On Monday morning, after preaching twice on the previous day in his own church at Germantown, he is in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he finds about two hundred and fifty earnest men and women with Bibles in their hands, ready to devote a morning to the study of God's Word. At the conclusion of the meeting he goes to New York City where a similar company of one hundred and fifty await his coming. Every Thursday he meets his Philadelphia students, numbering three hundred, and on every Saturday he has a meeting at Germantown, of one hundred and twenty. As if these four important meetings were not sufficient, he has a list of ten other cities which he visits in alternate weeks. In one week on the days between the New York and Philadelphia meetings, which are held every week, he visits Morristown, N. J., Orange, N. J., and Easton, Pa. Then after holding the Philadelphia meeting he visits Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Md., getting back to Germantown in time to hold his regular Saturday evening meeting. The next week the route after leaving New York is Plainfield, N. J., Newark, N. J., and Jersey City, N. J., thence to Philadelphia and Harrisburg, Pa., and Lancaster, Pa., and back to Germantown. The audiences in these cities vary from two to three hundred regular attendants. Truly a busy life is this, involving much study and almost continuous travel.

In all, Mr. Stearns has the opportunity of addressing upwards of two thousand students in the various cities. They belong to many denominations and are of all classes. There is no sensational method of drawing them together, no advertising, no peculiar teaching. Mr. Stearns believes in the Bible, as the inspired Word of God, and teaches the doctrine of salvation through the blood of Christ. He believes that Christ will come again to receive his people to himself and will reign with them through the Millennium, and while waiting for that glorious appearing it is the duty of Christ's people in dependence on him, to make every effort possible to them to make known the Gospel in every land. Prominent in all his teachings is the great truth that Christ will fill every heart that is emptied of worldliness and sincerely desires his presence, and that the soul so blessed with Christ's indwelling will be holy and an instrument that our Lord will use in his service. To know God in Christ Jesus as revealed in the Scriptures and to be filled with the Spirit—these are the ideals which this consecrated teacher holds up to all who come within sound of his voice. There is nothing unusual or remarkable in this teaching, but there is in the directness, clearness and persistence with which it is presented and urged at every meeting.

The spiritual results of this teaching and the study of the Bible, on which it is based, cannot easily be estimated; but there is one tangible evidence of its effect. Mr. Stearns has very little to say in his classes about money. For himself, all he cares to have are the small expenses of his weekly journeys; but he presents the needs of the Lord's servants who are laboring at the front in heathen lands. His appeals on their behalf are never urgent; he is content with letting the facts be known, believing that if the spiritual teaching has been received and assimilated, the duty of giving will be perceived. The man in whose soul Christ dwells, cannot be happy unless he is "about his Father's business," and he soon realizes that it is a delightful privilege to give to the Lord's work. Thus, without any special effort, and almost spontaneously, the members of these Bible classes have handed to Mr. Stearns sums of money to be devoted to such causes as he has recommended. In 1889 the amount thus given aggregated $553. It continued to grow until it has reached the astonishing sum of $23,511 in a single year, and in the ten years from the beginning of 1889 to the end of 1898 it reached the magnificent total of $121,975. None of this money goes to the support of Mr. Stearns' own church, which itself contributes freely, but to the support of home and foreign missionaries. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has had the pleasure of receiving and transmitting a portion of this money to the foreign lands as indicated by Mr. Stearns, and gratefully acknowledges the aid thus rendered to the good causes from time to time presented in its columns. Mr. Stearns has adopted the excellent method of publishing monthly, in a little journal called Kingdom Tidings, an acknowledgment of every sum received during the month, and a statement of the causes to which it was applied.

During the past year the distribution was as follows: To the missionary work in Japan $5,500; to China $5,200; to India $4,800; to Africa $1,400; to South America and the West Indies $1,400, and the remainder to various causes, prominent among which was the support of Christian men who are laboring for the conversion of the Jews. These sums are sent regularly as fast as they are received to the various fields of labor, through the recognized American Boards and Missionary agencies, and the wishes of the givers are always scrupulously observed in the destination of their gifts.

REV. D. M. STEARNS, THE FAMOUS BIBLE CLASS TEACHER

The Lord's servant who has been the humble instrument of this truly wonderful work is the most modest of men. He insists that the work could be done just as easily and successfully by any other minister, and that Christ is always ready to use in such service anyone who will yield himself to his influence. Mr. Stearns is a Nova Scotian by birth. He received his education at Picton Academy and subsequently studied theology while filling the office of principal of a public school at Halifax, N. S. In 1876, he removed to Boston, Mass., where he was ordained to the Congregational ministry, and since that time has devoted all his time to preaching and teaching the Bible classes. In 1885, he became pastor of the Reformed Episcopal Church of Scranton, Pa., organizing Bible classes in other neighboring cities. Thence he removed to Germantown, where the present work has been organized. In 1891, Mr. Stearns visited India, China and Japan, spending a month in each country, personally witnessing the work he has done so much to support. Last year he visited South Africa and made the acquaintance of the missionaries there. It is worthy of notice that during the seven years Mr. Stearns has been at Germantown, as at Scranton, this great Bible class work grew spontaneously. Calls came to the teacher from people in the various cities who had heard the kind of teaching he gave, and desired to participate in its benefits. He simply responded to the invitation, and in no case did he "work up" a class. It has, he contends, been the Lord's leading throughout, and no one is more surprised at it than Mr. Stearns himself. There has been no attraction but the Book itself, simply expounded, and its precepts applied to the exigencies of modern life. The missionary development came in the same way, and at the outset no one foresaw how large would be the result of these voluntary offerings. Like Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, England, Mr. Stearns has seen a great work grow under his hands, by simply availing himself of the opportunities which the Lord opened before him. He has never regarded it as his own work, but as the Lord's, and himself as the Lord's agent in the doing of it.

"He Laughs Best Who Laughs Last."

A hearty laugh indicates a degree of good health obtainable through pure blood. As but one person in ten has pure blood, the other nine should purify the blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Then they can laugh first, last and all the time, for perfect happiness comes with good health

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills, the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Alcolia Stove Free

A unique invention, consisting of a lamp combustible alcohol, with an attachment to [illegible] Wearing Apparel. May be used from time to time and will burn continuously for nine hours; is safe, economical, and can be carried in pocket.

The above, ready to light, will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of cover from box of Armour's Beef Extract and Vegetable Tablets.

To be had of all druggists and grocers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 25 cents.

The Tablets are Vegetarian with Armour's Extract of Beef, compressed, cooked ready for use.

Each Tablet a Meal.

Will keep in any climate any length of time. Recommended to soldiers, sailors, hunters, golfers, bicyclists, and travelers by land or sea, or wherever the convenience of the kitchen are not at hand. Address

Armour & Company, Chicago.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness, and flavor noticed in the finest cake, biscuit, rolls, crusts, etc., which expert pastry cooks declare is unobtainable by the use of any other leavening agent.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., N. Y.

Young Men and Women of Ability

$400 to $800 salary the first year. $1,000 guaranteed in 3 to 5 years.

[illegible] preparation at home or at the school. Cost of tuition covers all expenses until placed. Pupils located in any large city . . . . . References in all sections of the U. S. . . .

Chas. F. Young, Montague St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT

And on Lake Champlain

$4 to $8 per week. Send 4c. postage for Illustrated Book.

A. W. ECCLESTONE, G. P. A., 366 Broadway, N. Y.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

STARK BRO'S PAY CASH every WEEK if you sell STARK TREES. Write Free. STARK NURSERY, LOUISIANA, MO., Rockport, Ill., Dansville, N.Y.

$14.95 $14.95 Buys a $40.00 Bicycle

Our brand new latest '99 Homer Bicycle all fitted up complete and ready to ride for $14.95. Guaranteed equal to the best $40 or $50 bicycle ever made or no sale. It's a Wonder Offer.

OUR HOMER Bicycle at $14.95 is superior in value, a rare bargain and is insured for one year by our written Binding Guarantee. It's made by the best expert bicycle builders that money can employ, from strictly first-class material, beautifully finished and is equal to any $40 to $50 wheel ever built. It has every improvement, all the good points and no defects. Made from best cold drawn seamless steel tubing with latest Arch Crown Fork, 1¾ in. drop in frame, fine quality pedal cranks with 6¾ in. throw, large handsome detachable sprockets, genuine Weiner hubs, best cam wheel rims, full ball-bearing with ball retainers, inserted, guaranteed, Nepaul tires, strongly constructed. Take your choice of Men's, Boys' or Ladies' Style in Frame. Any style handlebar, set to suit. Gear, Black, Green or Maroon colors. Complete Set of Tools Free with either machine. Etc.

SEND NO MONEY but send this ad., state whether ladies' or gents' is desired and we will send this our latest '99 model Homer bicycle to express office subject to examination. When it arrives examine it thoroughly and if found just as represented, the greatest bicycle value on earth and fully equal to other $40 and $50 bicycles, then pay the express agent our special price $14.95 and expressage. Pay nothing if unsatisfactory, but refuse to accept it from the railroad agent or express. Pay nothing if unsatisfactory, but refuse to accept it from the railroad agent or express.

MORGAN & WRIGHT TIRES fitted for $2.00 extra, or $16.95 in all. When ordering state if the Morgan & Wright or our Regal tire is wanted. Write for Big Free Catalogue.

THE G. LOUIS VEHON CO., 155-157 W. Jackson St., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Blessedness of Giving

"CHARITY never faileth." The poor we have always with us, and there are few hearts that do not in some way acknowledge their claim. But true charity is not a casual emotion nor yet one of accident. It is of course better that people should give in response to a casual emotion than not give at all; but it is far better that the feeling should be based upon duty and principle, and administered with something of that method and regularity which are the only security for the discharge of obligations of any kind.

Undoubtedly many noble hearts feel that sending regularly a certain tithe of their incomes to accredited charities is but a cold and formal settlement of the claims of humanity. But though such vicarious charity is not all, it is the best a very large portion of the community can do; for, supposing they were willing to give their time as well as their money, it is doubtful if they would not do more harm than good. What bunglers the majority of our business and professional men would be in a garret or cellar! Not only that they would be "taken in"—every city missionary and Sister of Charity is that, over and over again—but they would not know what to say nor how to say it. They would probably cut the matter short with a dollar, and go away disgusted without in any way touching the better feeling of the person relieved.

The poverty and suffering in large cities is indeed so vast that no private charity could deal with it; it can only be reached by co-operative attempts. Even these may be unable in many instances to do more than keep soul and body together; but so sacred is human life that all instantly admit the immediate and elementary claim of sheer physical want. Deaths from starvation, in its true technical sense, are rare; but few of the miserably poor are free from disease, which the want of proper food wakens into activity—that is, they get just enough to prevent death from absolute inanition. There are thousands of such cases in every large city, not one hundred of which would be reached by private charity.

. . .

ASSOCIATE charities are the only way yet devised capable of coping with misery on a large scale, for a corporation, instead of working through individual prepossessions, decides according to arranged scales of relief, based upon wise rules and proved principles, two of the most prevalent being, first, an obvious and physical necessity; second, a willingness to work if work is found for them. To obstinate and resigned idleness no help ought to be given, for "Thus we command you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat." No political economist could be more severe on the idle poor than the Apostle in this sentence.

There is not one word in the Bible which teaches that the poor should be made comfortable by the rich. The brotherhood of Christ gives no right to be idle in the name of Christ, and if such a claim exists it is limited to those who, from misfortune or sickness, are unable to maintain themselves. The Bible idea is that a man should be independent; should labor for himself and his household, and bravely face his lot if it is a hard one. A man who can work and who takes charity debases his manhood and has no conception of that dignity of soul which Christianity teaches. Voluntary dependence on society is a moral curse, and no man can escape his relation to God and his fellow creatures by burying himself in a huge body called "the poor," and thinking, because he is not rich, that therefore the duty of Christian manliness does not fall on him.

. . .

THE case of Lazarus is often too much strained. If Lazarus had been an able-bodied, healthy man, the parable would have ended differently. It is the sick, the cripples, the very young, and the very aged, who are prima facie claimants of the city's charity. But the managers of all institutions know that great numbers of strong men ask alms from relief funds because they have refused upon "trade principles" to work for lower wages than they valued themselves at. Any charity to such, is a wrong in every direction; but most of all, to the man himself; for as soon as a workingman admits that there is for him any other way of living than by the labor of his hands, he is on the descent from the idle to the dangerous classes; for what he cannot get by begging, he will soon take by force. "Every able-bodied beggar is already an actual thief, and a possible burglar." To give alms to such is to seal their degradation; daily work is the only social gospel by which they can be saved.

If our connection with the poor be limited to meat and money matters, the interest on both sides is shallow; to be strong and enduring it must embrace the wants of the immortal nature. It is the greatest of fallacies to imagine that > "The bread of man indeed made all his life,

> And, washing seven times in the 'People's Baths'
> Were sovereign for a people's leprosy—
> Still leaving out the essential prophet's word,
> That comes in power."

. . .

THE necessity of charitable associations being evident, how much ought we to give? The Jew gave a tenth; but we must notice in the larger personal responsibility of the Christian dispensation it is made the very essence of charity that it should be given willingly and of love. All through the New Testament charity is inculcated as a grace, not as a duty. Believers are expressly told that they are at liberty to give or to withhold—as in the case of Ananias—their willingness being the savor of charity most acceptable to God. Hence the poor as well as the rich are included in the blessedness of giving; for it was the poor widow's two mites that Christ praised, it being love and not gold that makes charity of great price.

. . .

IT is not charity then to give through pressure of public opinion, or for our own glory; we might as well give under torture, and think it a merit. Pure charity should also have the ground to itself. It is wrong to mix it up with pleasure-seeking and money-getting. What can be more absurd than a charity dinner, or a charity ball? One set of people starving and another set eating a rich dinner to relieve them! Does dancing at a ball, or buying at a bazaar, or putting half dollars into a raffle, or listening to fine music become virtuous acts because the proceeds are to go to charitable purposes? Can the damsels from the House Beautiful take stalls at Vanity Fair, and the pilgrims to the Celestial City buy from them, and so get a push forward on the heavenly road? Is not this a pernicious way of teaching, that we may do evil that good may come? True charity is doing good to the souls and bodies of men and women, without looking for a return, either in the way of music, dancing, flirting, or acknowledgment of any kind.

We have been so long and so earnestly warned against giving money to beggars on the streets, that we have all experienced that peculiar sensation of feeling mean on high moral grounds, which follows a refusal to some evidently miserable victim of sickness or famine. And somehow there is always a lurking doubt as to whether this refusal is in accord with what Jesus of Nazareth would have done in the same circumstances. It may be a truth of social science that such alms propagate vice and misery; yet it is hard to snap our purse in the face of a little child, or weary woman, hunger-smitten and weeping. There is a wonder in our hearts whether a political principle is always a cardinal virtue. We ask ourselves if Christ walked Boadway, as he once walked old Jerusalem, would he pass by the blind man, or the crippled child, or turn a deaf ear to the pleading voice begging in "God's name." I presume not to judge here, but for myself I will venture my penny, trusting that charity, even when she shoots at random, will not miss her mark.

. . .

AND who has not in their best moments been sensible of that mysterious longing to give, and not to get—to give their bread, their clothing, their money, their selves. It is a blessed impulse, for it is from the Divine One, who gives himself, and with himself freely gives us all good things. The cup of cold water may be given with a blessing or a word of salvation, and shall not lose its reward. We cannot all be Luthers to reform nations, or Whitefields to preach to thousands, but we may remember that if we "convert one sinner from the error of his way, we shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins." And it takes a soul to save a soul. It is only accomplished by that love which is the very essence of true charity, and without which, though we gave all our goods to the poor, we are only as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

Let us give, then, willingly and generously; and in so doing taste of the blessedness of heaven. Let us give, and it shall be given unto us. "There is he that scattereth, and yet increaseth; there is he that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing; there is he that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth only to poverty." Charity gives itself rich. And it is to be a part not only of our private piety, but of our public worship; a part beautifully expressed in the following very ancient Latin hymn:

O Lord while thus in Psalm and prayer
Our voices we uplift,
Fain would our hands thy worship share,
And praise thee with a gift.

The rich shall bring their golden store,
The poor shall yield their mite;
And every heartfelt gift shall be
Just equal in thy sight.

So may to us these words divine
One day thy welcome be:
"Because thou gavest unto mine,
Thou gavest unto me."

Amelia E. Barr

GOLDEN BREAD

As much more delicious and healthful than "white" bread as gold is more valuable than silver!

Did you ever eat a slice of bread made from the Franklin Mills Flour of the Entire Wheat? No? Well, you have yet to taste the most delicious bread that human hands ever made.

Franklin Mills flour makes bread of a beautiful golden hue. To look at it is to want to try it. To eat a single slice is to want some more (or to try it once is to discard all other bread in its favor). Bread made from this flour has a rich, nutty flavor, which makes ordinary "white" bread seem tasteless and insipid. This delicious flavor is due to the proteids and phosphites which constitute the entire food value of the wheat berry and make it the most nutritious of all cereals.

This is why this rich flavor is peculiar to bread made from Franklin Mills flour; no other flour contains these proteids to a like extent. Ordinary "white" flour cannot, because these food elements are of a dark color, and must therefore be removed or the flour cannot be "white." Neither are these proteids found to a like extent in cheap graham flour, which is largely composed of the indigestible outer bark or shell, designed by Nature simply to protect the valuable kernel inside, and not to be eaten.

It is plain, therefore, that Franklin Mills flour is the most nutritious, as well as the most delicious flour, in the market. It is all food, and nothing but food, because it contains all the nutriment of the whole wheat kernel, and none of the indigestible outer shell. Those who try it once never go back to any other brand: not only do they like it better, and receive more nourishment, but they find that it goes further in bread-making, and in the end is the most economical flour made.

If you want the most nutritious bread, the most delicious bread, the best-looking bread, the least expensive bread, the best bread in every way, you will use Franklin Mills Flour of the Entire Wheat. It is sold by nearly all up-to-date grocers who sell "the best" rather than "the most profitable." If yours should not have it in stock, write Franklin Mills Co., Lockport, N. Y., who will see that you are supplied, and who will gladly send you a handsome illustrated booklet, free of charge, upon request.

A NEW SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOOK.

ROYAL HYMNAL

By Rev. ROBERT LOWRY and IRA D. SANKEY.

"We have never had such enthusiastic singing in our Sunday-school as we have had since its adoption."
Rev. CHAS. HERALD, Pastor,
"Bethesda" Cong'l Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

$30 per 100. Sample copy, post free, 25 cts.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

WANTED A MANAGER.

A Subscription Publishing House of nearly 20 years' standing, highest reference and rapidly increasing business, desires to employ Field Managers to drill and appoint agents in different localities. Liberal salary with commissions given; opportunity for advancement. Address, MANAGER, 10 W. Saratoga St., Baltimore.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs, S. S. and every good purpose. Books, Sheet Music, Octavos, Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments. New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free.
FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

$300 to $10.00 a day can be easily made working for me. People preferred who can furnish their own team. Applicants must furnish satisfactory reference as to character and standing. B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

The Personal Side of PHILLIPS BROOKS

In which his close friend

BISHOP W. N. McVICKAR

Tells of the early life and later triumphs of one of the most lovable of men, with characteristic anecdotes of this most distinguished clergyman.

In this week's number of

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

Founded A° D° 1728 by Benj. Franklin

Date of June 17.

5 Cents. Now on the News-Stands. 5 Cents

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

THE : : : UNEXPECTED

Or, Aunt Jane's Fresh Air Experiment, and how it Resulted

... By HELEN HALL FARLEY ...

CHAPTER II.

BARTHOLOMEW wondered why his aunt did not come to the door and greet his invited guests. When, after helping the last child out of the wagon, he caught sight of her flushed and angry face at the window, he was dumbfounded.

"What's got into her now I don't know," he said to himself with some anxiety in regard to the welcome of the "unexpected." He instantly resolved to put the children in a safe place and face the storm alone. He led them around the house to the big side piazza.

"Just make yourselves comfortable right here, will you?" he said pleasantly. "I'll be back before you can say Jack Robinson."

"Now, sir," said Miss Temple wrathfully, as the boy appeared in the kitchen a moment later, "I want to know what you mean by bringing all those rag tags here, and where you're going to take them."

"Where am I going to take them?" he repeated wonderingly. "I don't intend to take them any further. I brought them here as you said I should."

"[illegible]"

"Ma'am."

"How dare you stand there and lie to me?"

His face flushed.

"I'm not lying," he said with some temper. "You said that I should tell Squire Daniels that you'd take six children three weeks, and that's what I told him."

Miss Temple raised up her hands in horror.

"I did not," she said emphatically. "No one in their senses would agree to take six children from the slums for three weeks. I told you I'd take two children two weeks, and I told you particularly to get nice children. Now you start off in double quick time and take every one of these young ones to Squire Daniels—right off, do you hear!"

"I can't. Squire Daniels has gone to Murray with a load of children."

"Well, you've got to take them some where, and be quick about it. "I don't intend to keep an orphan asylum even to please you."

The boy was getting desperate, not realizing that he stood like an impregnable rock between his aunt's anger and the helplessness of the "unexpected."

Suddenly a happy thought cleared the shadows from his face.

"Aunt Jane, said he coaxingly, "just step out and see the children, and then, if you say so, I'll take them somewhere."

She looked at him piercingly, as if she would read his motive in the suggestion, then she went out of the kitchen door aggressively, as if searching for a weapon of war. She stood on the door step for a moment, and then went slowly around the house.

Bartholomew wisely lingered behind. "You've got it this time, ain't you?" remarked Peggy, with her customary titter. But her remark passed unheeded; the boy's thoughts were wandering around the house.

He walked up and down the kitchen for perhaps five minutes, then he went outside and sat down on the door-step for ten minutes more. Billy stood patiently outside the gate—waiting and wondering.

Presently the boy went quietly around the house, then he pulled his handkerchief out and wiped his nose and his eyes at the scene before him. Every one who had called Miss Temple austere and cold and reserved ought to have seen her there. The "littlest one" was on her lap, crutch and all. The small, crippled girl sat on a stool at her feet, and the other four hovered about her like bees after honey. Her eyes were wet with tears, but they shone like flowers after a bath. Her usually plain face was all aglow. Catching sight of Bartholomew she called out cheerfully:

"Tell Peggy to bring out a big pitcher of milk, and—and—I guess you'd better unhitch Billy."

Bartholomew felt as if he were treading on air as he ran to attend to Billy's wants.

"She pities them," he said to himself, "and they say 'pity is akin to love.' But it doesn't seem like Aunt Jane—not a bit. How her face shone! And she was smiling and crying at the same time."

No, it was not like his Aunt Jane—not in the least. She had been kind, in her way, to Bartholomew, but never tender, nor were smiles often seen on her face. She had tried to do her duty to her orphan nephew, but it had been simply cold duty without love.

"She looked really pretty, Aunt Jane did, holding that dear little crippled boy; it looked homelike."

Bartholomew swallowed a sob as his thoughts ran riot after this fashion, for it suddenly came to him how his mother used to hold him. He hurried with his work, patting Billy softly now and then and once laying his cheek against him.

Presently he was back in the yard again, going around the house to feast his eyes on the pretty scene. They were all there yet—his aunt and the guests—and Peggy had joined them to say that the biscuits were baked. Then there was a busy time. Faces and hands were hastily washed, the table was set, and very soon the "unexpected" were seated with Miss Temple and Bartholomew around such a table as they had never seen before. There were hot biscuits and honey, cold chicken and frosted cakes, berries and cream and sweet, fresh milk. There was a great bowl of fragrant roses in the centre of the table, and through the open doorway came the scent of the climbing honeysuckle and the glad song of birds.

The shyness of the guests passed away before the meal was ended. It could not have been otherwise under the kindly attentions of the mistress of the house and the merry chatter of Bartholomew.

After supper the latter was commissioned to take the little ones out of doors, which he did with great pleasure. Meanwhile his aunt and Peggy had their hands full getting the supper dishes away and beds ready for the children. Miss Temple insisted upon thorough baths all around.

At nightfall every child was sleeping restfully. Bartholomew was looking over the Cross Roads Record when Miss Temple joined him.

"What did old Mr. Crane say about the Wyandottes?" she asked.

"He said he didn't see why you couldn't let him have more than two."

"More than two! Who said he couldn't have more than two? I told you to tell him he could have six in three weeks' time."

A light suddenly dawned upon Bartholomew: his face flushed hotly.

"Aunt Jane!" he cried out.

"Well?"

"It's all my fault," he said honestly. "I'm an old blunderhead, and I don't wonder you were vexed with me. I got mixed up somehow, and I just turned things right around. I told Squire Daniels you said you wanted six children three weeks, and I told old Mr. Crane you'd let him have two white Wyandottes in two weeks. I'm awfully sorry."

He expected she would be angry, but, instead, she laughed good-naturedly.

"I am not sorry you got mixed up," she said. "I'll make it all right with old Mr. Crane, and I think it will be all right with the six children. What do you think?"

"Do you mean to keep them all here three weeks, Aunt Jane?"

"Yes."

"Well, it's mighty good of you," he said, with admiration in his eyes and voice, "and I'll promise to help you all I can."

"Bartoli!" she said gently.

She had never called him that before. That had been his mother's name for him. She had never looked at him as she was looking at him now—with love-light in her eyes. He did not speak; it seemed as if he could not; but he looked at her with an answering gleam.

"Bartoli!" she continued, "I [illegible] When I was sinning the worst I was a wicked woman. I was furious to think you had brought me six miserable neglected children, and I felt like doing something dreadful. I was nearly up to the piazza before the children saw me. I'll [illegible]" her voice becoming exceedingly gentle. "They were all eagerly watching a humming bird that was getting nectar from the climbing honeysuckle. They were not talking, they scarcely moved, each little pale face lit up with expectancy. If there had been a clamor of voices, I suppose the 'old Adam' would have held high carnival with me. But I couldn't hold out against the pathetic sweetness of those pale, rapt faces. The 'littlest one' heard my step first, and looked at me, a soft gurgle of gladness escaping him. He reached out his tiny arms, crying out, 'It's buful, ain't it? Me finks dis is heaven here.' Well, Bartoli, my dear, who could stand that? That poor, pitiful little cripple held the key to my heart, bless him! My heart—I hardly knew I had one, Bartoli—flew open then and there, and in another moment I had that little child on my lap, in my arms, close to my heart. A strange thing happened to me all at once, with those six pairs of eyes regarding me wonderingly and wistfully. I seemed to see Jesus right there with a halo round his dear head. It was just as if I heard his voice saying, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these . . . ye have done it unto me.' Perhaps I nearly smothered the little fellow in my close embrace, for when I loosened my hold a little he lifted great startled eyes to my face. But even as I looked at him a great joy came into them. I did not know I was crying until the little one said, 'Don't ky, me loves ou.'"

She was considerably excited and had talked rapidly; Bartholomew, meanwhile, watching her wonderingly and yet sympathetically. She had stopped now, and was leaning her head on her hand. Suddenly she began again:

"Bartoli," she said with unmistakable tenderness, "I don't suppose I have ever acted as if I loved you, but I do. I haven't done the fair thing by you—my own brother's child—but I'll turn over a new leaf. I promise you as sure as my name is Jane Temple. You've wanted to go to the academy and I've held you back, but when the fall term opens, there is where you'll be and—and—God bless you."

The new love had lifted her up above herself—as it were. There was a radiance in her eyes altogether new to her, and color had come into her usually sallow face.

Bartholomew's lips parted as if he were about to speak, but instead he arose from his chair and threw his strong young arms about his aunt with the first caress he had ever shown her. It said—even stronger than words—"I love you! I love you!" And she was satisfied. Life would henceforth be worth living for both of them. The outer door was still open, and they went and stood in it with their arms around each other. They stood silently a little while, then Miss Temple said with a smile:

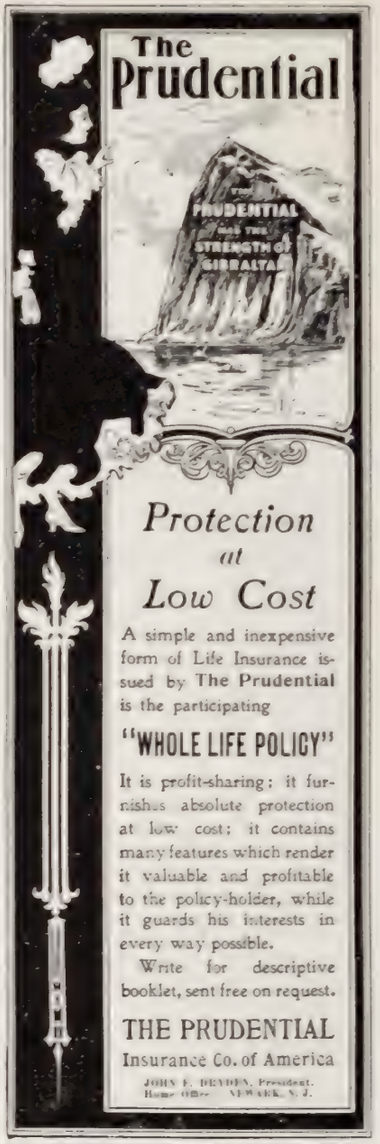
"I think we'd better go to bed, Bartoli. It is getting late, and there are our guests to think about early in the morning."

They kissed each other good-night for the first time, but it would not be the last. Then they went in and shut the door, and the peace of God dwelling within that house rested upon them.

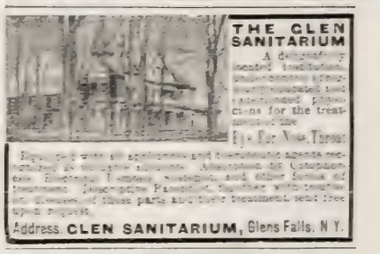
(To be continued).

Trial Package Free!

If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address JOHN A. SMITH 219 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.



The Prudential
THE PRUDENTIAL HAS THE STRENGTH OF GIBRALTAR
Protection at Low Cost
A simple and inexpensive form of Life Insurance issued by The Prudential is the participating
"WHOLE LIFE POLICY"
It is profit-sharing; it furnishes absolute protection at low cost; it contains many features which render it valuable and profitable to the policy-holder, while it guards his interests in every way possible.
Write for descriptive booklet, sent free on request.
THE PRUDENTIAL
Insurance Co. of America
JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.
Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.



...CANCER...

[illegible]

WANTED.—A case of bad breath that R-I-P-A-N-S will not cure. The R-I-P-A-N-S Tabules are the only known remedy for bad breath. One gives relief. R-I-P-A-N-S may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed for the small sum of 5 cents, if sent to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York.

It Is a Certainty That Catarrh can be cured. You will believe it after using a sample of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Mailed free. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Blosser Building, Atlanta, Ga.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP [illegible]

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES [illegible]

BICYCLE FREE OR CASH TO ANY ONE [illegible]

Beyond Comparison [illegible]

· New · Ideas · in · Christian · Work ·

An Open Forum for Practical Suggestions, to Which All Interested Readers are Invited to Contribute

Traveling Men's Social Temptations

Horto, P. I., April 12th.

Editor "The Christian Herald"

I have at hand a copy of your paper of date February 22, in which I have been reading with much interest a sermon by the Rev. Mr. Talmage entitled "The Midnight Express Train," addressed to the traveling men of the country. I have seen the entire question discussed therein by Mr. Talmage from the point of view which it is impossible for him to take—that of one of the fraternity, with the necessity behind me of thereby winning a livelihood—and I desire to reply through you, if you will permit, to what seem to me to be errors of both omission and commission. I assure you at the outset that I am actuated by no spirit of controversy, but merely wish to present more clearly a great problem which must be solved in due time and place, if our modern Christianity is to accomplish what all admit to have been the purpose of the great Teacher. I trust that with this explanation you will give the space for what I have to say.

I am a yeoman in the navy, now serving on the Asiatic station. I enlisted for the late war with Spain as a landsman, and without outside influence have won by hard work the position I now hold. I was previously collector, clerk, draughtsman, purchasing agent, traveling man—just as I had to be to earn my living. I was brought up a strong churchman; and, while I do not pretend that I have resisted the temptations which beset men on the road or off, yet it would be a most pleasant sight to see Mr. Talmage's exhortations carried into practice by the young men who every year go upon the road to sell their employer's wares. But are we to be content with pointing out the right road when more than mere pointing is needed?

Now the young man has decided to start on his journey on Sunday "to save a day." He is told that his employer has no right to rob him of that day of rest, to say nothing of the violation to the Sabbath. But his employer expects him to save that day. If he does not, he may be sure that he will either be dismissed for his neglect, or at least will have a mental mark made against him, which on some future occasion may decide a question of retention or dismissal against him. I fully appreciate all that can be said of time-serving or bowing the knee to Baal—but has Mr. Talmage ever had to search, day after day for employment, with his pockets empty or nearly, his clothes old and worn, shabby, chilled by rebuff after rebuff, perhaps in winter when all his limbs are so cold and tired that he can hardly drag them from one office to another; so disheartened by failure and stung by frequent rudeness in the receptions he experiences, that he is but barely able to continue the struggle, and, above all, when he must still counterfeit hope and courage that those at home dependent upon him for bread (no more) may not lose heart as he long ago has? I have done this and know what it means, as does many another. But he will say, "Put your trust in God, who sends these trials for your own eventual good." Ah, yes; but at those weary moments you have no trust to repose there and God seems so far away. So far away that prayer will not reach him, and the world and its inevitable necessities so terribly near at hand.

Of the recommendations as to the manner of spending time while on the train I have nothing but hearty approval. The same for his attack on the various practices of "treating." I must add, however, that most of the best houses now discourage this practice among their salesmen, considering that the outlay is much greater than the return.

But we come to the manner of spending the evening. Now, the salesman has been "on the go" all day. When making a circuit of smaller towns he has probably taken a train before daylight in the morning so as not to lose any part of business hours from seeing his customers. The house requires him to report frequently on the state of trade in the different places, the dispositions and financial appearance and methods of the houses he interviews, and the nature of any business arrangements he has effected or set on foot with other concerns. He has also probably to conduct more or less correspondence with customers to whom he is personally known, and who either expect his coming or think he should explain some matter to the firm he represents which is not by them properly understood. Besides all this he has frequently to see, on business, men whose occupations during the day did not permit representations at such length as was necessary to secure their trade. He therefore often finds himself working night and day, with no more time to himself than sufficient for sleep and food. Now he has an evening to himself—what shall he do with it? He need not be necessarily a vicious young man. He may be one of good principles, perceptions and intentions. But he is a very tired one, for he has not only abored faithfully and conscientiously for his employer, but he would have been censured by that employer and in danger of dismissal had he done any less. Competition is so keen nowadays that it is only by the greatest exertions a salesman can succeed. His competitors are straining every nerve and so must he. His employer has gone out for a week, perhaps, made a record-breaking, nerve-racking trip—for that week only—and has returned loaded with orders. He says, "See what I have done." And he will see no reason why his employee should not do it, too, for many weeks at a stretch.

Now, every young man has a good, healthy desire for recreation. It need not be violent, it need not be at all excessive, but some pleasure he must have. He cannot, in the interest of his own brain, work all the time, since all men have not the capacity of the learned blacksmith for it. He is just an ordinary young man, needing some amusement or diversion to restore the healthy normal balance of his mind and brain, and the question is, How to pass the evening.

He is forbidden to go to the theatre. Why? Are all dramatic representations harmful? I have myself seen and taken part in Y. M. C. A. affairs of mock trials, dialogues, recitations and elocutionary efforts, and it seemed to me that all hands had a very good time, including the clergy.

The gambling house and house of infamy I will condemn most unqualifiedly, but at the same time I will tell you the secret of their fascination. They do anything and everything to please; and, above all, they plan on the knowledge that human nature is very weak.

These are some of the phases of the question which must be taken into account before it can be effectually answered. It is well to urge the employee not to desecrate the Sabbath; but the fault lies not with him, nor should the blame. Keep the Sabbath day holy by all means, but apply the lever to the master, not the man. Keep from evil places and foul companionship, but make something to take the place of what is given up.

I wish as earnestly as any one can to see the same result arrived at as that Mr. Talmage advocates; but I know it can never be done until the hook is baited as skilfully for the palate of the misguided fish as that which the arch-enemy uses. Yours very truly,

ONE OF THE MANY.

Spiritual Growth

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for June 25. Mark 4: 26-32

OUR commonly accepted idea of conversion is responsible for much that is unsatisfactory in the Christian life. It is not at all unusual to find in a church, members who, if asked how they know themselves to be Christians, reply by referring to an experience in some past time. At some period, recent or remote, they went through anxiety, distress and alarm, and found peace by trusting in Christ. That time is a memory, recalled at seasons of communion, or under doctrinal preaching. Much as when a man takes out a policy of insurance on his life, they regard this experience as a transaction by which they will secure certain benefits in the life to come. But the teaching of Christ and of his Apostles, show that the Christian life is much more than this. Such experience may be the basis, the commencement of Christian life, but can never be more than its starting-point. Christ insisted that unless a man took up his cross and followed him, he could not be his disciple. This was not belief in the Cross but actually bearing the burden of the cross and living a life of self-denial and self-renunciation. Paul speaks of being crucified with Christ and dying daily. Peter inculcates growth in grace. James demands increase in self-control and active charity and John an increasing yielding to the nature which cannot sin.

All this implies not a reliance on a past transaction but progress and development. The new nature which Christ imparts, when the soul yields itself to him at conversion, should be gaining fuller mastery of the soul and be transforming the whole man into likeness to Christ. Negatively, it should prevent the man committing sin; and positively, it should develop the better qualities of his nature so that he becomes a living example of Christ to the world. Christ thus becomes in truth a Saviour, delivering the soul from the thraldom of sin and giving it new power of active beneficence. This process is a continuous one, to which all our experience should contribute. If our lot is one of suffering, patience should grow and increase. If it is one of persecution and temptation, the faith and courage and vigor of the soul ought to be developed; and so with every grace of the Christian character. All that happens to us should perfect us, and all things work together for good to them that love God. To become a Christian is not merely to escape future punishment, but to obtain the highest development of which the soul is capable. As a boy at school may escape the rod by performing his appointed tasks, but is chiefly being fitted by his education for future duties in the world, so the follower of Christ, if he submits to Christ's discipline, becomes capable of fulfilling the purposes for which he was saved. Forgetting the things which are behind, he presses forward to those which are before, always making the height attained, a starting-point for some higher attainment.

Sometimes this progress is spoken of as a race, or a struggle, a fight, which are all conscious experiences. It is also a growth which may be in large measure unconscious. As the blacksmith does not labor to increase the muscular power in his arms, but to perform definite work, yet by that very work does gain increased muscular power, so the Christian, by doing the will of Christ in the world, gains increased capacity to do it. His eyes are not continually fixed on his own condition, but while endeavoring to help others, gains unconsciously. Like the tree, he bears fruit because it is his nature to bear fruit and not by conscious effort. Christ being his model, his ideal, he is transformed into the same image or into his likeness by loving reverence. And apart from his own side of life, there is a definite operation on him of divine grace. We know not how it is applied, but it is a matter of experience that the nature of Christ has power over him. As we have seen a hypnotic subject actually living temporarily the thoughts of the operator, doing his will and expressing his nature, so Christ exercises over the soul, that yields itself to him, such a power that it lives Christ's life among men. This comes from a desire to be his to use, and a readiness to be his instruments. When he sees in any soul such a spirit he makes his abode with it and the soul grows into power and usefulness.

Hood's Sarsaparilla goes direct to the seat of any trouble and by cleansing the blood speedily removes the causes of manifold complaints and gives a health-tone to the whole system.

What is Diastase?

The medical press has been giving much space to a new digestive principle which is remarkable for its action on starched foods (vegetables, cereals, fruits, breadstuffs) and for its efficiency in curing the commonest and most obstinate form of dyspepsia, namely, amylaceous (or starchy) indigestion.

This principle is Taka-Diastase, the invention of a Japanese chemist, Mr. Jokichi Takamine. Now a diastase is a preparation that digests starchy foods; but heretofore while we had perfected pepsin and pancreatin, which are efficient in digesting meats and albumens, there was no good diastase—in other words, the commonest form of indigestion was hardest to cure, and all for lack of a good remedy.

This being the case, it is easy to understand why such authoritative medical papers as the London Lancet and the New York Medical Times have spoken in praise of Taka-Diastase in terms that can hardly be strengthened. Taka-Diastase cures starchy indigestion. The only form in which it is offered to the general public is as Kaskola Tablers, in which it is combined with pepsin, pancreatin and other stomach stimulants of long-recognized value. The Tablets are accomplishing remarkable results, and so great is the confidence of their manufacturers, the P. L. Abbey Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., that they send any reader of this paper a fifty-cent box free, on condition that, if they give benefit, the price shall be mailed to the makers within two weeks. If no benefit is given, no charge will be made.

Simply delicious the epicure's delight and the housewife's satisfaction—every one selected
Swift's Premium Hams

Each slice a rasher of appetizing delight—the ideal morning dish of quality
Swift's Premium Breakfast Bacon

The kind mother used to try out in the old-fashioned kettle in the good old fashioned times—just as clean and just as pure—
Swift's Silver Leaf Lard

All the strength of the choicest beef—extra condensed nutriment
Swifts Beef Extract

Creamy, delicious tasty flavor, mechanically clean and always wholesome—
Swift's Jersey Butterine

Purely vegetable and a perfect vegetable shortening, wholesome and healthful—
Swift's Cotosuet

Sold all over America and made by
Swift and Company, Chicago

The 1899 PEERLESS STEAM COOKER and sterilizer is the Cheapest and Best 4 Big Improvements just out. Prevents all odors. Cooks entire meal on one burner. Saves from 10 to 50 dollars in fuel. To introduce new Pat. whistle and fire proof bottom we offer choice of kitchen novelties FREE. Agents Wanted.
PEERLESS COOKER COMPANY, BUFFALO, N. Y.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,
102 Fulton st., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Dealers supplied. 52-page illustrated catalogue free.

MERIT WINS
POZZONI'S
MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER

"A fair face may prove a foul bargain." Marry a plain girl if she uses . . . . .

SAPOLIO

Summer Dainties

Libby's Luncheons

What you want when you want it—fire-less, heat-less, work-less, all-ready substantials.

Deviled Ham, Potted Ham, Beef and Tongue—The proper sandwich food. Nothing else so good.
Veal Loaf—A delicious viand.
Ox Tongue (whole)—Appeals to all particular palates.
Peerless Wafer-Sliced Smoked Beef—So very fresh-tasting.
Pork and Beans—Better than Boston-baked.

Put up in convenient size key-opening cans.
"How to Make Good Things to Eat." Yours for a postal.
Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago.

When an Invalid Chair is Required

nothing short of the best (most comfortable and safest) should be bought. This kind we sell at same price as asked for ordinary. Write for catalogue of Invalid Chairs for house or street, and combined for both.

Block Reclining Chair
Fifty changes of position. Seashore Wheel Chairs.

Reclining Go-Cart
changes to a Baby Carriage when you push a foot treat handle-bar, raising foot-rest and lowering back. Made of best rattan, with pretty parasol and fine rubber tire seat. Exceptional, thoroughly comfortable, fine looking and perfectly safe. Go-Carts, $2.50 to $20.
Write for Catalogue A.

This Style, $14.00

Baby Carriages $3.75 to $50
Write for Catalogue B.

Should your dealer not have our goods, you may buy direct from the factory. We pay freight east of the Mississippi. Representatives wanted.
PHILADELPHIA BABY CARRIAGE FACTORY
713-715 Spring Garden Street - - - PHILADELPHIA

EARN A BICYCLE

By Selling Baker's Teas, Etc., among friends. A total of 75, 90, 100, 125 or 150 lbs. for a BICYCLE. (Different grades and sizes.) 50 lbs., Gold Watch; 25 lbs., Silver Watch; 15 lbs., Nickel Silver Chatelaine Watch; 10 lbs., Crescent Camera or Gold Ring.
Express prepaid.
Write for Catalogue, Etc., FREE.
W. G. BAKER,
Springfield,
Dept. 67 Mass.

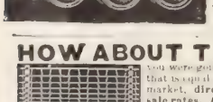
MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate WHITE BRONZE
More artistic and enduring; less expensive. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Color greatly improved. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.
NO MOSS GROWING. CLEANING. NO CRUMBLING CRACKING.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

NEW WAIST SET, 10c.

Our new '98 set of handsome design includes 1 pair rigid-link ball-end cuff buttons, 3 studs, 1 collar button, and the latest belt retainer. Extra heavy 14k. Roman gold or sterling silver plate, worth 40c. at any store. We send complete set, with new catalogue of bargains, postpaid for ONLY 10c., 3 for 25c.
Ingersoll & Bro., Dept. 61
67 Cortlandt St., N.Y.

HOW ABOUT THAT FENCE



you were going to build? We sell a fence that is equal in quality to the best on the market, direct to the farmer at wholesale rates. All interwoven—no loose ends to unravel or untwist. Cross wires can't slip. Prices low. Special prices and extra discounts to farmers.
ADVANCE FENCE CO., 1906 Old St., Peoria, Ill.

$13.25 BUYS A $25.00 BICYCLE
Don't buy a bicycle before you write for our 1899 full line and second hand wheels from $5 upwards. Write Address VICTOR MANF'G CO.
Dept. G 42, 205 and 207 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

O'Neill's

SIXTH AVENUE, . . .
. 20th to 21st Street, . .
. . . . . NEW YORK

Importers and Retailers

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Cloaks, Costumes, House-Furnishing Goods, Etc.

SOME SPECIALLY ATTRACTIVE BARGAINS
Reserved for Our Mail-Order Customers!

WOMEN'S CHEVIOT SERGE SUITS with Fly Front, Walking Coat lined throughout with black Taffeta. The Skirt is Percaline-lined, full circular shape. These Suits are made and finished entirely by men tailors $9.98

WOMEN'S WASH SKIRTS. Linen Skirts, four yards wide and finished with deep hem. A great bargain at . . . $1.98

WHITE PIQUE SKIRTS, full circular shape, finished with three rows of insertion and deep hem $4.98

SUMMER SILKS. Black Satin Duchesse, 27 inches wide. Regular $2.50 quality $1.50

Black Peau de Soie, 22 inches wide. Regular $1.40 quality. $1.00

Samples of these or any other silks that you may require may be had upon application.

When you write mention "The Christian Herald."

H. O'NEILL & CO., Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK

Cooler
More Comfortable

More Elastic than Lawn or Cambric

ARNOLD'S GAUZE DRAWER, with deep umbrella ruffle of cambric, lawn or embroidery, is a dainty and attractive summer garment, as good as it is new.

We have such confidence in the great merit of these goods that we offer to cheerfully refund money in all cases where they fail to give satisfaction.

Prices begin at fifty cents and run up to as high as you want to pay for the embroidery. The fabric is the same in each.

Send for illustrated catalogue of these and other goods of our manufacture.

NOVELTY KNITTING CO.
320 BROADWAY, - ALBANY, N. Y.

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay if cured. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

DON'T SHED HAIRPINS
. . . But buy . . .
"Holdfast" Hairpins

The only hairpins that stay where you put them and neither fall out, warp, split, break nor rust. Curved to the shape of the head.
Size 2¾ inches; white, black, brown or auburn. Also 3¼, 3¾ and 4½ inches, with heavy prongs for bran or bonnet use.
If your dealer will not supply you, send 10 cents in stamps for sample of six small or one large, stating whether hair is heavy or light.
BEAUTIFUL BOOKLET FREE.
CONSOLIDATED SAFETY PIN CO.,
Box 129, Bloomfield, N. J.

Gem Nail Clipper

Every person desiring shapely, handsome finger nails, should have one. No lady's dressing table complete without it.

Just the thing for cutting Children's nails.

Trims the nails long, short, rounded pointed; manicures, cleans and files them. Excellent for treating ingrowing nails. Made from high-grade tempered tool steel, nickel finish, accurately ground. Ask your dealer, or we will send by mail, postpaid on receipt of 25 cents.
COE MANUFACTURING CO.,
50 E Warren Street, New York.

FREE ONE YEAR'S TRIAL.

All freight paid by us if not satisfactory. Our new Catalogue tells you all about it. It is free. Send us a postal for it today. A better Organ or Piano for less money than any company in the world. Over 50 styles to select from. It will do no harm to get our catalogue before you purchase elsewhere, and may save you money. It shows you how to get a handsome premium free. We sell on any reasonable terms desired. Special bargains for summer and fall. BEETHOVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO.
P.O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only Truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and it retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Comfortable Belts made to reduce corpulency. The use of these belts reduces your size and leaves no room for surplus fat to accumulate. They can be used after any operations. Our goods are not sold by agents or druggists. Send for free pamphlets to the Improved Elastic Truss Co., 708 Broadway, N. Y. (Established 17 years.)

LARKIN SOAPS

AND PREMIUMS.—FACTORY TO FAMILY
Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.
The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.
OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.

RUBIFOAM

is an exquisite dentifrice. Please try it. Your teeth deserve the best care you can give them. Health, happiness, and comfort depend upon them.

Price 25 cents. At Druggists. Sample vial of Rubifoam sent free on receipt of postage 2 cents. Address E. W. Hoyt & Co., Lowell, Mass.

RHEUMATISM QUICKLY CURED.

In an article contributed to the London Lancet, a Philadelphia physician says: "Tartarlithine has given me results beyond all comparison superior to any preparation which I have tried. The promptness of its action is in many cases astonishing, a subsidence of distressing symptoms quickly following the administration of three doses of five grains each, taken four hours apart in a half pint of water on a reasonably empty stomach. The use of the preparation in the quantities named has sufficed in all cases so far treated, about twenty in number, to practically cure the disorder, temporarily at least.

Regular package $1.00.
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

ASTIGMATISM POSITIVELY CURED OR MONEY REFUNDED

THE INESTIMABLE BLESSING OF SIGHT.
AVOID SPECTACLES & EYEGLASSES, HEADACHE & SURGICAL OPERATION. ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ON THE EYE, MAILED FREE.
THE IDEAL COMPANY, 239 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

8000 BICYCLES

Overstock. Must be closed out. '99 MODELS $9 to $18. Shopworn and second hand wheels, good as new, $3 to $10. NEW '99 MODELS $11 to $30. Great factory clearing sale. We ship to anyone on approval and trial without a cent in advance.
EARN A BICYCLE by helping us advertise our superb line of '99 models. We give one Rider Agent in each town FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.
E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO., CHICAGO., ILLS.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

NOTICE NAME THUS, Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE

to sell Sash Locks and Door Holders. Sample Sash Lock free for two-cent stamp. Immense; better than weights; burglar proof. $10 a day. Write quick. Address BROHARD & CO., Dept. 11, Philadelphia, Pa.

COSTS AGENTS NOTHING

to start in business handling our new fast selling specialties and make big profits. Catalogue free.
C. VINING NOVELTY CO., 60 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

VOLUME 22 NUMBER 25

COPYRIGHT 1899 BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, JUNE 21, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

AN ORIENTAL SHEPHERD OF THE PRESENT DAY (See page 501)

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

L. V. B., Pittsfield, Mass. What is the meaning of Christ's not quenching smoking flax (Matt. [illegible])?

It refers to his gentleness and patience. When men come to him with a feeble faith he does not despise and reject them, but increases their faith. The fire in the flax does not deserve to be called fire—it is a mere smoldering, which rough treatment would put out. Only by the smoke do we know that there is any fire in it, but it may be fanned to a flame. Christ deals gently with the weak, and is patient with their infirmities.

H. A. D., Valley Mills, Tex. Is not insurance of any kind a species of gambling? Does not, for instance, the insurance company practically bet [illegible] burned within a year?

No; the principle is one of average. If the statistics show that as a rule only one house in two hundred is burned in a year and the company can persuade two hundred persons to insure, the company will receive a thousand dollars in premiums. If the assumed average is fulfilled and one house is burned, the company pays the owner five hundred dollars and makes five hundred profit. It is legitimate business and mutually advantageous.

Reader, Allegheny, Pa. 1. If God leaves us for a moment, is that [illegible]? 2. If a person is called to repentance by a vision but through not understanding the vision does not respond, does it become too late when he afterwards does understand the vision? 3. What does Paul mean by saying (I. Cor. 13: 12) "then shall I know even as I am known"?

1. No, God does not leave us at death. Some injury to the body, or disease, or old age is the cause of death. 2. A dream, or a vision as you call it, may scare a person and eventually lead him to repentance, but God does not call a person to repent[illegible]. He may use the dream as he uses other methods, but it is foolish to regard them as calls. You will find in the Bible definite calls to repentance and you may accept them at any time. Pay no attention to your dreams; they, as a rule, are the product of indigestion or an overwrought brain. 3. That in the future life knowledge will be increased, and we will know the mysteries of our being as now God knows them. Some commentators believe that the expression is an assurance that men will know, and be known by, their friends in the future life.

Mr. J. S. McComb, a reader of this journal in Honolulu, H. I., writes:

A grand work is being carried on by the Peniel Mission in Honolulu, H. I. This city is the half way resting-place between the mainland and the Philippines, and the opportunities for Christian work among the troops from the transports are great. A few days ago, Col. Smith of the Thirteenth Regulars, gave us permission to hold a service on the transport Senator. The boys were delighted. They listened attentively to the Gospel story, and many were bathed in tears. At the close of the meeting about forty requests for prayers were made. The great need is Bibles and Christian literature; the boys crowded around us begging for Testaments and Bibles. Miss Whistler, Miss Bushnell and Miss Cheeseman are carrying on this blessed work. Any packages of Bibles or devotional books will be judiciously distributed.

Reader, Summit, N. J. Suppose two men were walking along the street, and a block or two distant from a certain Mission building, where a service was going on. One of the men realized that he had forgotten something, and turned to go in the other direction; but his companion, proceeding on his way, passed the Mission house, and, being much impressed by the music, went in and gave himself to Christ. Now, suppose also that his companion would have become a Christian had he only been so fortunate as to have attended the meeting: Do you think that the Christian would have any more right than his companion to enter heaven?

Your hypothetical illustration is evidently based on your inward conviction that affairs in this world are largely governed by chance. Such a combination of circumstances as you describe is quite possible, however; but it does not follow that because one became a convert through entering the Mission, the other, by not entering, lost forever, through no fault of his own, the opportunity of salvation. Had he afterward truly repented of his sins and put himself in a receptive attitude, as the other did, he would have found the gate of mercy wide open and God ready to pardon. Besides, the "right" to enter heaven belongs to no one on his own merit or as the reward of anything he has ever done, since all are sinners before God; but it is a right secured through the blood of Christ, who "brought life and immortality to light," and who has made all who accept and believe in him joint heirs with himself in the life hereafter.

Reader, Mittineague, Miss., writes:

I am a paper-maker by trade, and would like to put in a word for my fellow-workmen. Most of the paper mills in this section have stopped working their employees on Sundays and Sunday nights, while in some mills all repairing and fixing of machinery is planned for Sunday, though most of it could be done during the week as they do where I am employed. We have a Sunday School superintendent at the head of the company I work for, and he tries, I believe, to get others to attend church by his example. I think there should be a Sabbath League formed to take in all denominations. It should be impressed on the workingman that his liberty is being taken away from him by unobservance of the Sabbath. Of course, I am only a workingman, but I don't always expect to be; and I will always use my influence for the recognition of one day's rest in seven for every one.

A SCENE ON THE ROUTE OF THE NICARAGUA CANAL

Our photograph shows the nature of the territory through which the proposed interoceanic canal will run. The road-bed has to be made substantial and a great deal of preparatory work will have to be done before the rails are laid. In certain seasons the section is a very unhealthy one.

L. D. S., Maxwell, Ont. What is Theosophy? What special doctrines different from Christianity do theosophists believe?

It differs little, if at all, from ancient mysticism. It depends less on the revelation of God in the Bible for its knowledge of him than on communications the Theosophists profess to receive from the unseen world. They hold that man is "an efflux" from the Infinite Existence; that God manifests himself in the triune forms of fire, light and spirit. Human life is the result of the divine fire from which light and love are generated. The cause of spiritual deterioration is that a man should prefer the life, light and spirit of the world to those of God. They also hold that man is a composite of five elements which as bodies encompass him. That these bodies are successively sloughed off at the close of successive existences and the final state of happiness is not reached until, one after another, he has lost these bodies and as pure spirit passes into the Infinite. The length of these existences is determined by conduct, so that if in this life a man has i[illegible] which, as his outer [illegible]s, so that [illegible] fixture of Christianity with Hinduism and Buddhism.

Mrs. A. McD., Rahway, N. J. We have been [illegible] appeared in THE MAIL-BAG from the fortunate possessors of rare old Bibles. We have heard of [illegible] bottom of the page or not, the printer never carried anything over to the next page, but invariably be[illegible] to the confusion of the reader. I have never seen one reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may have.

E. O., Ancram, N. Y. In early ages, surnames or over-names, as they were called, were not in use, there being no family names. Surnames can be traced no further back than the latter part of the tenth century. It seems that they first came into use in France and [illegible] introduced into England. The assumption of [illegible] where of much later date than their use by the noble families, who took the names of their estates. Many names were derived from the surroundings or country, such as "Marsh," "Dale" and "Wood," and in some cases the preposition "at" was retained as "Atwood." Many surnames are patronymics, often formed by "son," or its equivalents, added to the name of the father. Such names often fluctuate from one generation to another, as Alan Walterson had a son, Walter, who called himself "Walter Alanson." In the highlands of Scotland, the prefix "Mac" served the same Subscriber. 1. Is it true that the Filipinos inoculate American prisoners with leprosy? If so, is it not contrary to all rules of war, and may not the horrible practice cause an epidemic of leprosy in the United States when the soldiers return? 2. What will give fluency of speech in public prayer? I have stayed away from prayer-meeting at times through fear of being called on to pray. I get nervous and repeat my words.

1. Such stories have been circulated, but we regard them as largely sensational. In a few isolated cases they may be true. There is no danger of an epidemic of leprosy from such a cause. 2. You are wr ng to stay away. Timidity can never be overcome except by accustoming yourself to the trying situation. Many of the most famous speakers have been exceedingly timid at the outset. In praying in public, make your petition as brief and simple as possible, suited to the peculiar needs of the occasion. If your heart be in [illegible] will find [illegible] of nerv[illegible]

Ruralist, Paterson, N. J. Is it true that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Bright Hopes for the World's Peace

A Great Gathering of Famous Peace Advocates at the Hague, to Influence the Conference

From Our ... Special ..... Correspondent

FELIX MOSCHELES

THE HAGUE, May 26th.—It is now eight days since the world-famous Peace Conference opened in this ancient town. Those delegates who came to The Hague either imbued with a hostile feeling toward the Conference, or at the best with the idea of engaging in its debates in a perfunctory manner, and simply because international comity required that the Czar's proposal should be treated with some show of respect, have apparently been converted to sounder views on the subject. At all events, there is no more shrugging of shoulders, no more sneering, no more flippant talk with reference to the outcome, but, on the contrary, there is a general tendency to put the shoulder to the wheel and secure practical and lasting results. This change of heart applies even to the worst sinner of all—Professor Von Steugel, of Munich, who scandalized all Europe a short while ago by his brochure, entitled Eternal Peace, which would have been much better named Eternal War, since he endeavored to prove in its pages that the idea of arbitration, partial disarmament, etc., was a wild and ridiculous chimera.

Besides the delegates proper, there are in The Hague to-day many ex-officio workers in the cause of Peace—noble men and women who have devoted so many years of their lives to this cause. One of the foremost of these is Baroness Bertha Von Suttner, the authoress of that now world-famous book, Lay Down Your Arms. The Baroness Von Suttner's rooms at the large hotel adjoining the Plein or central square of The Hague can be considered the headquarters of the different peace societies, whose representatives have come to watch the proceedings of the Conference. Here, in a spacious apartment, specially provided for the purpose, the Baroness is to be found the best part of the day, consulting with her friends or receiving visitors. Every moment of her time is thus occupied. Thanks to her high position and her literary attainments; thanks above all to the charm of her manner and her social qualities, she is persona gratissima with all the notable personages attending the Conference, and at her table may often be found the chiefs of the delegations themselves. The first day I called on her, for example, she was expecting to dinner Count Welsersheimb, chief of the Austrian delegation; Count d'Estournelles, of the French delegation; Count Gourko-Romeika, Baron De Staal's first secretary, and Baron Jean De Bloch, the famous author of War, that huge, statistical work which is said to have inspired the Czar to issue his rescript.

The Baroness is a lady in middle life. Although a doctrinaire, she is not a "new woman" in the vulgar sense of the term. Her husband is a stanch supporter of his wife's theories, and devotes as much time as she to the cause dear to both. In answer to my inquiry as to the reason of her appearance at The Hague, the Baroness said: "Although my heart is filled with joy that this dream which for so many years seemed to be beyond the pale of realization should have at last assumed tangible form, I am not allowing myself to be carried away by my enthusiasm. There is still an enormous amount of work to be done before the end is attained—obstacles innumerable to be overcome. Among these, of course, must be reckoned the preconceived notions of many of the delegates—such men as Professor Steugel and others, who seem to look upon war either as an unavoidable evil or an absolute necessity. My object in coming to The Hague was to reach these people, if possible, to bring them together in my salon and there discuss these questions in a spirit of fairness and conciliation. This exchange of ideas will, I think, be the more effective for being less formal and less hampered by diplomatic usage or parliamentary rules than the debates in the bosom of the Conference. I hope in this manner to exert a wholesome influence on the delegates, and, if possible, smooth over some of the difficulties that are sure to arise."

Baroness Von Suttner is at the head of the Austrian branch of the International Peace Association, having its central bureau at Berne, Switzerland, and as such she has been extremely active in organizing meetings in favor of the Czar's recent rescript throughout the entire Austro-Hungarian empire.

Another most interesting feminine peace advocate now at the Hague is Frau Margareta Lenore Selenka, wife of Professor Selenka of the University of Munich. This delicate little woman has, by sheer force of will and determination, succeeded in organizing, in a few short weeks, a universal manifestation among members of her own sex in favor of the Conference. On May 15 no less than four hundred mass meetings of women were held in all the large towns in both hemispheres, at which resolutions were passed warmly indorsing the Czar's rescript. The terms of these resolutions being sent by cable to Madame Selenka, this lady was able to present the entire batch to Baron de Staal in person, yesterday afternoon. It is currently reported that this manifestation has created a deep impression on the members of the Conference. Among the signers of the resolutions were Lady Aberdeen, wife of the Governor-General of Canada; Mrs. Wright Sewell, of Indianapolis, and many other women prominently connected with public movements in the new world.

As a specimen of the telegrams received by Madame Selenka, the following sent by the prominent ladies of Tokio may be found interesting. The translation was made by a Japanese student, and is reproduced verbatim:

"We, women of Japan, gathered together today in Tokio in an assembly, have resolved unanimously to express our heartiest gratitude to his Imperial Majesty, the Czar of Russia, for his taking initiative to advance the cause of peace of the world. We also wish to express our profoundest sympathy for the noble act of the Governments of the world in accepting this initiative and coming together in a conference in order to consider the means of carrying out this sacred ideal. We wish with all the heart and mind and give expression to our deepest hope that the Conference may advance the realization of the great aims for which it has been called together, and thus the brutalities of belligerent acts may vanish more and more and peace and justice be established among nations. Then only shall the continued prosperity of the countries and the undisturbed happiness of the families be attained.'

With a passing mention for Madame Wascklavicz von Schilfgaarde, who, as the head of the Dutch Women's Peace Association, is rendering valuable service to the cause in general and to the delegates at the Conference in particular, let us turn to the masculine promoters of peace and good-will now engaged in seconding the Czar's programme at The Hague. The most picturesque of these is undoubtedly the old Jewish banker of Warsaw, Privy Counsellor Baron Jean de Bloch, who is stopping in the village of Scheveningen nearby. The old gentleman has written or compiled an enormous work in several volumes, showing the terrible ravages of present-day engines of war, and the manifold sufferings occasioned by the modern military system. The book was suppressed by the Russian censor, but the Baron did not allow himself to be sat down upon so easily. He brought the matter to the attention of the Czar, and not only was the embargo taken off the work, but, as many say, the Czar was sufficiently impressed by it to look into the subject further, and finally issue his famous rescript. In justice to Baron de Bloch, it must be said that he does not make any pretence himself of having directly influenced the Czar. To come to his personality, he is full of his books, or rather of the subject of which they treat. I think I should have needed a good-sized handcart to carry away the volumes which he placed at my disposal. He has treated every phase of the question with a wealth of detail and a conscientious regard for facts and figures which do credit to his honesty, industry and perseverance. His books teem with illustrations, mainly photographic reproductions of the effects of the modern rifle-ball. Some of these pictures are terrible to behold, one particularly—the photograph of a man's head smashed practically into atoms by a shot from an army rifle with the missile known as a "jacketed" bullet. The Baron intends remaining near The Hague during the entire duration of the Conference. He has ordered several cart-loads of his books to be sent here, and he will distribute them among the Conference members.

The Anglo-Saxon nations are represented in this peace-loving coterie by Felix Moscheles, chairman of the Executive Committee of the International Arbitration and Peace Association of London, and Dr. Benjamin Trueblood of Boston, secretary of the American Peace Society. Felix Moscheles is the son of the late well-known German composer, the life-long friend of Mendelssohn. He is himself a talented musician, but also, and above all, a painter of note and a writer of distinction, a sociologist and a polyglot. All will remember his interesting reminiscences of his early companionship with Du Maurier, published two years ago in an American magazine. His recent autography has received general encomiums from the press on both sides of the Atlantic. Moscheles has been identified with the peace crusade for many years, as also with numerous other reform movements. A series of paintings by him, entitled "Pictures With a Purpose," have been exhibited in the Whitechapel district and elsewhere with the object of bringing certain social and moral lessons home to the masses.

It should not be forgotten that although the Russian Emperor has taken the initiative in this all-important question, it is to the United States that falls the honor of having been the first in the field to advocate general peace and disarmament. The very first association to propagate this theory came into existence under the name of "The Society of Peace" at Boston in 1810, its founders being Dr. W. Ellery Channing and Noah Webster. Five years later similar associations were started in New York and Ohio, and in the course of time these and other branches were incorporated under the title of The American Peace Society. This, with the kindred Universal Peace Union, now constitutes a powerful force among the factors that are making for peace.

Last, but not least, among the prominent advocates at the Hague is W. T. Stead, the enterprising, wide-awake and go-ahead editor of the London Review of Reviews. In many respects Stead deserves to be placed at the very top of the list, for he alone, of all the apostles of disarmament and arbitration, has succeeded in gaining the ear of the great Russian potentate, the last time within the past fortnight. His special newspaper, War Against War, fairly brought the non-conformist masses into line in England, and prevented the jingoes from placing obstacles in the way of the proposed Conference, for all of which the Czar felt grateful, and did not hesitate to thus express himself when Stead last called on him. Mr. Stead is in constant touch with the delegates, beginning with M. de Staal himself, and will probably play an important part behind the scenes during the course of the Conference.

V. GRIBAYEDOFF.

BARON DE BLOCH, THE AUTHOR OF "WAR"

BARONESS VON SUTTNER—W. T. STEAD IN HIS WORKROOM NEAR THE HAGUE

FRAU SELENKA

Nebraska Prairie Church Fund

Prevanek	$ 50
J G Peterson	5 00
Miss Carrie Norton	1 00
Victor Benke	1 00
Y M C A, Summit, N J	1 00
Dr Reginald H Sayre	10 00
Mr Putnam	1 00
Miss M I Upham	1 00
Joseph Bailey	1 00
I H N, Birchton	05
Mrs Charles H Knowles	1 00
A friend, Chester	5 00
Sub Mass	5 00
Total	$332.65

· THE · METROPOLITAN · PULPIT ·

Pictures Good and Bad

A Sermon by The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Isaiah 2: 12, 16, ... The day of the Lord of hosts shall be . . . upon all pleasant pictures PICTURES are by some relegated to the realm of the trivial, accidental, sentimental, or worldly, but my text shows that God scrutinizes pictures, and whether they are good or bad, whether used for right or wrong purposes, is a matter of Divine observation and arraignment. The divine mission of pictures is my subject. That the artist's pencil and the engraver's knife have sometimes been made subservient to the kingdom of the bad is frankly admitted. After the ashes and scoria were removed from Herculaneum and Pompeii, the walls of those cities discovered to the explorers a degradation in art which cannot be exaggerated. Satan and all his imps have always wanted the fingering of the easel; they would rather have possession of that than the art of printing, for types are not so potent and quick for evil as pictures. The powers of darkness think they have gained a triumph, and they have, when in some respectable parlor or public art gallery they can hang a canvas embarrassing to the good but fascinating to the evil.

It is not in a spirit of prudery, but backed up by God's eternal truth, when I say that you have no right to hang in your art rooms or your dwelling houses that which would be offensive to good people if the figures pictured were alive in your parlor and the guests of your household. A picture that you have to hang in a somewhat secluded place, or that in a public hall you cannot with a group of friends deliberately stand before and discuss, ought to have a knife stabbed into it at the top and cut clear through to the bottom, and a stout finger thrust in on the right side ripping clear through to the left. Pliny the elder lost his life by going near enough to see the inside of Vesuvius, and the further you can stand off from the burning crater of sin the better. Never till the books of the Last Day are opened shall we know what has been the dire harvest of evil pictorials and unbecoming art galleries. Despoil a man's imagination and he becomes a mere carcass. The show windows of English and American cities, in which the low theatres have sometimes hung long lines of brazen actors and actresses in style insulting to all propriety, have made a broad path to death for multitudes of people. But so have all the other arts been at times suborned of evil. How has music been bedraggled? Is there any place so low down in dissoluteness that into it has not been carried David's harp, and Handel's organ, and Gottschalk's piano, and Ole Bull's violin? and the flute, which though named after so insignificant a thing as the Sicilian eel, which has seven spots on the side like flute holes, yet for thousands of years has had an exalted mission? Architecture, born in the heart of him who made the worlds, under its arches and across its floors, what bacchanalian revelries have been enacted! It is not against any of these arts that they have been so led into captivity!

What a poor world this would be if it were not for what my text calls "pleasant pictures!" I refer to your memory and mine when I ask if your knowledge of the Holy Scriptures has not been mightily augmented by the woodcuts or engravings in the old family Bible, which father and mother read out of, and laid on the table in the old homstead when you were boys and girls. The Bible scenes which we all carry in our minds were not gotten from the Bible typology, but from the Bible pictures. To prove the truth of it in my own case, the other day I took up the old family Bible which I inherited. Sure enough, what I have carried in my mind of Jacob's ladder was exactly the Bible engraving of Jacob's ladder; and so with Samson carrying off the gates of Gaza; Elisha restoring the Shunammite's son; the massacre of the innocents; Christ blessing little children; the Crucifixion and the Last Judgment. My idea of all these is that of the old Bible engravings, which I scanned before I could read a word. That is true with nine-tenths of you. If I could swing open the door of your foreheads I would find that you are walking picture-galleries. The great intelligence abroad about the Bible did not come from the general reading of the book, for the majority of the people read it but little, if they read it at all; but all the sacred scenes have been put before the great masses, and not printer's ink, but the pictorial art, must have the credit of the achievement. First, painter's pencil for the favored few, and then engravers' plate or woodcut for millions on millions!

What overwhelming commentary on the Bible, what reinforcement for patriarchs, prophets, apostles, and Christ, what distribution of Scriptural knowledge of all nations, in the paintings and engravings therefrom of Holman Hunt's "Christ in the Temple;" Paul Veronese's "Magdalen Washing the Feet of Christ;" Raphael's "Michael the Archangel;" Albert Durer's "Dragon of the Apocalypse;" Michael Angelo's "Plague of the Fiery Serpents;" Tintoretto's "Flight Into Egypt;" Rubens' "Descent from the Cross;" Leonardo Da Vinci's "Last Supper;" Claude's "Queen of Sheba;" Bellini's "Madonna" at Milan; Orcagna's "Last Judgment," and hundreds of miles of pictures, if they were put in line, illustrating, displaying, dramatizing, irradiating Bible truths until the Scriptures are not to-day so much on paper as on canvas, not so much in ink as in all the colors of the spectrum. In 1833, forth from Strasburg, Germany, there came a child that was to eclipse in speed and boldness anything and everything that the world had ever seen since the first color appeared on the sky at the creation, Paul Gustave Dore. At eleven years of age he published marvelous lithographs of his own. Saying nothing of what he did for Milton's Paradise Lost, emblazoning it on the attention of the world, he takes up the Book of Books, the monarch of literature, the Bible, and in his pictures, "The Creation of Light," "The Trial of Abraham's Faith," "The Burial of Sarah," "Joseph Sold by his Brethren," "The Brazen Serpent," "Boaz and Ruth," "David and Goliath," "The Transfiguration," "The Marriage in Cana," "Babylon Fallen," and two hundred and five Scriptural scenes in all, with a boldness and a grasp and almost supernatural afflatus that make the heart throb and the brain reel and the tears start and the cheeks blanch and the entire nature quake with the tremendous things of God and eternity and the dead. I actually staggered down the steps of the London Art Gallery, under the power of Dore's "Christ Leaving the Praetorium." Profess you to be a Christian man or woman, and see no divine mission in art, and acknowledge you no obligation either in thanks to God or man?

It is no more the word of God when put before us in printer's ink, than by skilful laying on of colors, or designs on metal through incision or corrosion. What a lesson in morals was presented by Hogarth, the painter, in his two pictures, "The Rake's Progress," and "The Miser's Feast," and by Thomas Cole's engravings of the "Voyage of Human Life," and the "Course of Empire," and by Turner's "Slave Ship." God in art! Christ in art! Patriarchs, prophets and apostles in art! Angels in art! Heaven in art!

The world and the church ought to come to the higher appreciation of the divine mission of pictures, yet the authors of them have generally been left to semi-starvation. West, the great painter, toiled in unappreciation till, being a great skater, while on the ice he formed the acquaintance of General Howe, of the English army, who through coming to admire West as a clever skater, gradually came to appreciate as much that which he accomplished by his hand as by his heel. Poussin, the mighty painter, was pursued and had nothing with which to defend himself against the mob but the artist's portfolio, which he held over his head to keep off the stones hurled at him. The pictures of Richard Wilson, of England, were sold for fabulous sums of money after his death, but the living painter was glad to get for his "Alcyone" a piece of Stilton cheese. From 1640 to 1643 there were four thousand six hundred pictures wilfully destroyed. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth it was the habit of some people to spend much of their time in knocking pictures to pieces. In the reign of Charles the First it was ordered by Parliament that all pictures of Christ be burnt. Painters were so badly treated and humiliated in the beginning of the eighteenth century that they were lowered clear down out of the sublimity of their art, and obliged to give accounts of what they did with their colors. The oldest picture in England, a portrait of Chaucer, though now of great value, was picked out of a lumber garret. Great were the trials of Quentin Matsys, who toiled on from blacksmith's anvil till, as a painter, he won wide recognition. The first missionaries to Mexico made the fatal mistake of destroying pictures, for the loss of which art and religion must ever lament. But why go so far back when in this year of our Lord, to be a painter, except in rare exceptions, means poverty and neglect; poorly fed, poorly clad, poorly housed, because poorly appreciated! When I hear a man is a painter, I have two feelings—one of admiration for the greatness of his soul, and the other of commiseration for the needs of his body. But so it has been in all departments of noble work. Some of the mightiest have been hardly bestead. Oliver Goldsmith had such a big patch on the coat over his left breast that when he went anywhere he kept his hat in his hand closely pressed over the patch. The world-renowned Bishop Asbury had a salary of $64 a year. Painters are not the only ones who have endured the lack of appreciation. Let men of wealth take under their patronage the suffering men of art. They lift no complaint; they make no strike for higher wages. But with a keenness of nervous organization which almost always characterizes genius, these artists suffer more than anyone, but God, can realize. There needs to be a concerted effort for the suffering artists of America, not sentimental discourse about what we owe to artists, but contracts that will give them a livelihood; for I am in full sympathy with the Christian farmer who was very busy gathering his fall apples, and some one asked him to pray for a poor family, the father of which had broken his leg, and the busy farmer said: "I cannot stop now to pray, but you can go down into the cellar and get some corned beef and butter and eggs and potatoes; that is all I can do now." Artists may wish for our prayers, but they also want practical help from men who can give them work. You have heard scores of sermons for all other kinds of suffering men and women, but we need sermons that make pleas for the suffering men and women of American art. Their work is more true to nature and life than some of the masterpieces that have become immortal on the other side of the sea, but it is the fashion of Americans to mention foreign artists, and to know little or nothing about our own Copley and Allston, and Inman and Greenough, and Kensett.

What a preparation for the wear and tear of the day a five minutes' look in the morning at some picture that will open a door into some larger realm than that in which our population daily drudge! Or what a good thing the half hour of artistic opportunity on the way home in the evening, from exhaustion that demands recuperation for mind and soul as well as body! Who will do for the city where you live, what W. W. Corcoran did for Washington, and what others have done for Philadelphia, and Boston, and New York? Men of wealth, if you are too modest to build and endow such a place during your lifetime, why not go to your iron safe and take out your last will and testament, and make a codicil that shall build for the city of your residence a throne for American art? Take some of that money, and build an art gallery that shall associate your name forever, not only with the great masters of painting, who are gone, but with the great masters who are trying to live; and also win the admiration and love of tens of thousands of people, who, unable to have fine pictures of their own, would be advantaged. By your benefactions build your own monuments, and not leave it to the whim of others. Some of the best people sleeping in Greenwood have no monuments at all, or some crumbling stones that in a few years will let the rain wash out name and epitaph; while some men whose death was the abatement of a nuisance, have a pile of Aberdeen granite high enough for a king, and eulogium enough to embarrass a seraph. Oh, man of large wealth, instead of leaving to the whim of others your monumental commemoration and epitaphology, to be looked at when people are going to and fro at the burial of others, build right down in the heart of our great city, or the city where you live, an immense free reading-room, or a free musical conservatory, or a free art gallery, the niches for sculpture and the walls abloom with the rise and fall of nations, and lessons of courage for the disheartened, and rest for the weary, and life for the dead; and one hundred and fifty years from now you will be wielding influences in this world for good. How much better than white marble, that chills you if you put your hand on it when you touch it in the cemetery, would be a monument in colors, in beaming eyes, in living possession, in splendors which under the chandelier would be glowing and warm, and looked at by strolling groups with catalogue in hand, on the January night when the necropolis where the body sleeps is all snowed under. The tower of David was hung with one thousand dented shields of battle; but you, oh man of wealth, may have a grander tower named after you, one that shall be hung not with the symbols of carnage, but with the victories of that art which was so long ago recognized in my text as "pleasant pictures." Oh, the power of pictures! I cannot deride, as some have done, Cardinal Mazarin, who, when told that he must die, took his last walk through the art gallery of his palace, saying: "Must I quit all this? Look at that Titian! Look at that Correggio! Look at that deluge of Caracci! Farewell, dear pictures!"

As the day of the Lord of hosts, according to this text, will scrutinize the pictures, I implore all parents to see that in their households they have neither in book or newspaper or on canvas anything that will deprave. Pictures are no longer the exclusive possession of the affluent. There is not a respectable home in these cities that has not specimens of woodcut or steel engraving, if not of painting, and your whole family will feel the moral uplifting or depression. Have nothing on your wall or in books that will familiarize the young with scenes of cruelty and wassail; have only those sketches made by artists in elevated moods, and none of those scenes that seem the product of artistic delirium tremens. Pictures are not only a strong but a universal language. The human race is divided into almost as many languages as there are nations, but the pictures may speak to people of all tongues. Volapuk many have hoped, with little reason, would become a world-wide language; but the pictorial is always a world-wide language, and printers' types have no emphasis compared with it. We say that children are fond of pictures; but notice any man when he takes up a book, and you will see that the first thing that he looks at is the pictures. Have only those in your house that appeal to the better nature. One engraving has sometimes decided an eternal destiny. Under the title of fine arts there have come here from France a class of pictures which elaborate argument has tried to prove irreproachable. They would disgrace a bar-room, and they need to be confiscated. Your children will carry the pictures of their father's house with them clear on to the grave, and, passing that marble pillar, will take them through eternity.

Furthermore, let all reformers, and all Sabbath School teachers, and all Christian workers realize that, if they would be effective for good, they must make pictures, if not by chalk on blackboards, or kindergarten designs, or by pencil on canvas, then by words. Arguments are soon forgotten; but pictures, whether in language or in colors, are what produce strongest effects. Christ was always telling what a thing was like, and his Sermon on the Mount was a great picture-gallery, beginning with a sketch of a "city on a hill that cannot be hid," and ending with a tempest beating against two houses, one on the rock and the other on the sand. The parable of the prodigal son, a picture; parable of the sower, who went forth to sow, a picture; parable of the unmerciful servant, a picture; parable of the ten virgins, a picture; parable of the talents, a picture. The world wants pictures, and the appetite begins with the child, who consents to go early to bed if the mother will sit beside him and rehearse a story, which is only a picture. When we see how much has been accomplished in secular directions by pictures—Shakespeare's tragedies, a picture; Victor Hugo's writings, all pictures; John Ruskin's and Tennyson's and Longfellow's works, all pictures—why not enlist, as far as possible, for our churches and schools and reformatory work and evangelistic endeavor, the power of thought that can be put into word pictures, if not pictures in color? Yea, why not all young men draw for themselves on paper, with pen or pencil, their coming career, of virtue if they prefer that, of vice if they prefer that. After making the picture, put it on the wall, or paste it on the fly-leaf of some favorite book, that you may have it before you. I read of a man who had been executed for murder, and the jailer found afterward a picture made on the wall of the cell by the assassin's own hand, a picture of a flight of stairs. On the lowest step he had written: "Disobedience to parents"; on the second, "Sabbath breaking"; on the third, "drunkenness and gambling"; on the fourth, "murder"; and on the fifth and top step, "a gallows." If that man had made that picture before he took the first step, he never would have taken any of them! Oh, man, make another picture, a bright picture, an evangelical picture, and I will help you make it! I suggest six steps for this flight of stairs. On the first step write the words: "A nature changed by the Holy Ghost and washed in the blood of the Lamb"; on the second step: "Industry and good companionship"; on the third step: "A Christian home with a family altar"; on the fourth step: "Ever widening usefulness"; on the fifth step: "A glorious departure from this world"; on the sixth step: "Heaven! heaven! heaven!" Write it three times, and let the letters of the one word be made up of banners, the second of coronets, and the third of thrones! Promise me that you will do that, and I will promise to meet you on the sixth step, if the Lord will, through his pardoning grace, bring me there, too.

And here I am going to say a word of cheer to people who have never had a word of consolation on that subject. There are men and women in this world by tens of thousands, who have a fine natural taste, and yet all their lives that taste has been suppressed, and although they could appreciate the galleries of Dresden, and Vienna, and Naples far more than nine hundred and ninety-nine people out of a thousand who visit them, they may never go for they must support their households, and bread and schooling for their children are of more importance than pictures. Though fond of music, they are compelled to live amid discord; and though fond of architecture, they dwell in clumsy abodes, and though appreciative of all that engravings and paintings can do, they are in perpetual deprivation. You are going, after you get on the sixth step of that stairs, just spoken of, to find yourselves in the royal gallery of the universe, the concentered splendors of all worlds before your transported vision. In some way all the thrilling scenes through which we and the Church of God have passed in our earthly state will be pictured or brought to mind. At a Cyclorama of Gettysburg, a blind man who lost his sight in that battle, was with his child heard talking while standing before that picture. The blind man said to the daughter: "Are there at the right of the picture some regiments marching up a hill?" "Yes." "Well," said the blind man, "is there a general on horseback leading them on?" "Yes," she said. "Well, is there rushing down on these men a cavalry charge?" "Yes," was the reply. "And do there seem to be many dying and dead?" "Yes," was the answer. "Well, now, do you see a shell from the woods bursting near the wheel of a cannon?" "Yes," she said.

REV. MR. ELDREDGE LEADING IN PRAYER—THE SHIPWRIGHTS GATHERING FOR THE SERVICE

"Stop right there!" said the blind man. "That is the last thing I ever saw on earth! What a time it was, Jenny, when I lost my eye-sight!" But when you, who have found life a hard battle, a very Gettysburg, shall stand in the Royal Gallery of Heaven, and with your new vision begin to see and understand that which in your earthly blindness you could not see at all, you will point out to your celestial comrades, perhaps to your own dear children who have gone before, the scenes of the earthly conflicts in which you participated, saying: "There from that hill of prosperity I was driven back; in that valley of humiliation I was wounded. There I lost my eye-sight. That was the way the world looked when I last saw it. But what a grand thing to get celestial vision, and stand here before the cycloran a of all worlds while the Rider on the white horse goes on "conquering and to conquer," the moon under his feet and the stars of heaven for his tiara!

REV. W. C. MARTIN

A Shipyard Congregation

Noank, Conn., the Scene of a Novel Method of Spreading the Gospel Among the Shipwrights

THE largest "wooden" ship-building plant in the country is in Noank, Conn. It is owned and operated by a corporation composed of earnest members of the Baptist church, the president and vice-president being worthy deacons. It goes without saying that no industrial troubles are ever known there. If an employee is injured, even by his own fault, the corporation takes care of him and pays all expenses until he is able to work again, and if his injury is permanent, it employs him at regular wages at something he can do without inconvenience, as long as he lives.

There are five hundred men in the yard, and no more orderly and intelligent class of laborers can be found anywhere. Many are consistent members of Protestant churches, many more are Catholics, and perhaps about a third have no church connections of any kind whatsoever.

About two months ago Rev. W. C. Martin, of the Noank Baptist church, and Rev. C. F. Eldredge of Old Mystic, decided to hold open-air meetings in the shipyard at the noon hour, since more than half the men carry their dinners which they dispose of in less than half an hour, and have therefore, a half hour before a whistle blows for resuming work; time not always profitably employed. About the middle of April, the meetings were started and in three days the attendance had increased from about thirty to over three hundred. From that time until now four meetings a week have been held with preaching by Rev. W. C. Martin, Rev. C. F. Eldredge, Rev. E. E. Knapp and Rev. W. L. Swan, and almost the entire force of men attend every meeting. Frequently over four hundred can be counted in sight and there are others out of sight in shady spots here and there, but within hearing. No more respectful or attentive audience attends the ministry of the Word in any church than that shipyard congregation. They listen as to a message fresh and new and drink it in like thirsty men who have found a satisfying stream. A telescope organ is sometimes used, the instrument having been purchased by money given mostly by the men themselves, and a solo or two sung; but usually the service has consisted of a brief prayer and a strong, hearty, sympathetic address, setting forth man's need and God's plan of salvation. For a pulpit any handy stick of timber is used and the men arrange themselves around in easy unconventional attitudes on huge sticks, and piles of lumber. Frequently after the service Mr. Martin spends the whole afternoon in the yard, going about among the men to find where the seed has taken root, and to offer such instruction and help as may be needed. He has found the result far beyond expectation. A great revival took place in this shipyard three years ago, when nearly a hundred men were converted.

The "Elim Home"

While most pastors of churches and other religious workers who receive stated salaries, are enabled to enjoy, during the summer season, a deserved and well-earned vacation, there is quite a large class of Christian workers who labor in missions and among the poor in the slums of our great cities whose limited incomes do not allow them to enjoy even a few day's outing during the hot weather. For the past three seasons Rev. Mr. James, of New York, has rented a furnished house, known as the "Elim Home" on Long Island Sound, at Bell Island, Conn., near South Norwalk, a little over an hour's ride from New York City, and by the assistance of kind friends he has been enabled to entertain a number of the latter class of Christian workers without charge for board. They have been not only very grateful for the outing but have been greatly benefited physically. He will reopen the home this summer for four months, and will invite a large number of these workers for a short sojourn with him, as in former seasons. Mr. James will be grateful for the co-operation of any of the readers of this journal who are interested in a work of this character, and will gladly answer any inquiries that may be addressed to him at P. O. Box 61, Rowayton, Conn.

An Unknown Friend of Sailors

A gift of $50,000 has recently been made to the United States man-o'-war's men by a donor who makes the condition that his name shall not be made public and that the men themselves give $100,000. The fund is to be administered by the Naval Young Men's Christian Association, co-operating with Rear-Admiral Philip and other naval officers, including Captain Merrill Miller, Chaplains Wesley O. Holway and Robert E. Steele, Captain McCalla and Commander Stockton. The plan is to provide shore homes for sailors at all of the Atlantic, Gulf, Pacific and new territorial naval ports. The English long ago did something of this kind for British tars; and it is held that if the United States is to encircle the world with its naval stations, America must extend its care to our sailors who visit them. This is one of the good things that has grown out of the Spanish war. "The wrath of man shall praise thee, and the remainder of it thou shalt restrain." Rear-Admiral Philip has suggested that New York build the Brooklyn home as a memorial to our sailors who died during the Spanish war. The plan of work has been approved by the government authorities at Washington.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Gracious Invitations

S. S. Lesson for July 2. Hos. 14 : 1-9

Golden Text, Hos. 6 : 1

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

BOTH Israel and Judah had departed from the Lord. The idolatry commenced by Jeroboam, when he set up the golden calves at Dan in the north, and at Bethel in the south of Israel, had increased so much that the holy people of the Lord had become degenerate: there was among them "no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of the Lord. By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery they break out, and blood toucheth blood" (Hos. 4 : 1-2). The priests, no longer priests of the Lord, but devoted to the worship of the golden calves, were foremost in sin. "As troops of robbers wait for a man, so the company of priests murder in the way by consent: for they commit lewdness" (Hos. 6: 9). And this was the people of the Lord, chosen by him to be near to him "as the girdle to the loins of a man," that they might be to him "for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory" [illegible].

And yet God did "not cast away his people whom he foreknew." In the midst of the idolaters and open sinners were those whom he would call "My servants." The people as a whole were "ye that forsake the Lord, that forget my holy mountain" (Isa. 65 : 11): those were given over to idolatry and destined "for the sword . . . because when I called ye did not answer, when I spake ye did not hear." But there was a godly remnant which God would not destroy: "Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it," and these he calls "a seed out of Jacob," "an inheritor of my mountain," "my chosen." And why? They are "my people that have sought me." Just as in the midst of a worldly, corrupt Christianity in our own day, God has "a people for his name" who are addressed as "him that overcometh," and "he that hath an ear" in the epistles to the seven churches, so there existed, in degenerate Israel and Judah, a people that were true to him.

The chapter we have before us was addressed to the sinful people as a call to return to the Lord, to leave the company of them which forsake him, and join the godly remnant which were true to him. Applied to Gentile, so-called Christians in the present day, to whom it is not addressed in the text, it may touch not so much unconverted professors as backsliders. O Israel, return unto the Lord, for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. Distance from the Lord can never be excused by any outward circumstances, however unfavorable. No "things present" can separate us from the love of Christ, they all "work together for good to them that love God." Nothing but sin can really separate us from the Lord. "Thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." There is no probability of return until the sin, whatever it may be, is recognized, judged, confessed and forgiven. Then it can be cleansed and conquered. But the return to God may be as soon as it is confessed and forgiven.

But how shall that return take place? Bitter experience has told a backslider that he has lost power over his own heart and his own will. It was a comparatively easy thing to come to the Lord in the first instance, but now he has trifled with light and sinned against it; he has played with his conscience, he has lost control of his will. His feelings have no longer the sensitiveness which they once had about that which touched God, and he has become hypersensitive about all which touches himself: how shall he return unto the Lord? As a father will place large stepping-stones in the bed of a brook that his child may cross it without danger, so the God of Israel has prepared a way of return for his backsliding people. "Take with you words and return unto the Lord." Take the true position and he will meet you.

Take with you words, but not your own words. They might be full of excuses, and such words would not be accepted. Take with you words, but they must be words about your sin. "Come now, and let us reason together saith the Lord:" not about your righteousness, your good resolutions, your promises of amendment, but "your sins." So do now. Say unto him: "Take away all iniquity and receive us graciously." By grace! Yes, by the unmerited mercy of him who died for us "while we were yet sinners" (Rom. 5 : 8); of him who was "made sin for us," though "he knew no sin," "that we might be made the righteousness of God in him" (II. Cor. 5 : 21). "So will we render the fruit of our lips" (R. V. margin). "The fruit of our lips giving thanks unto his name" (Heb. 13 : 15 : or R. V. "the fruit of lips which make confession to his name"). The returned backslider has learned to be ashamed of his own name: he hides himself under Another, and confesses to his name.

"Neither will we say any more to the work of our hands ye are our gods." The idols of the heathen are the work of their own hands: but in every sense dependence upon what we can do—the work of our hands rendering us independent of God—is displeasing to him: he wants us to depend upon him in everything. And why? "In thee the fatherless findeth mercy." The fatherless who are without protector or defender, who know their weakness and are thankful for and touched with the love of him who has a father's care for those whom man despises. To such an invitation what shall be the answer? Shall we, in the words of the prophet, say: "Come and let us return unto the Lord, for he hath torn and he will heal us: he hath smitten, and he will bind us up" (Hos. 6 : 1).

What is his answer to the words he puts into the lips of his returning people? "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely, for mine anger is turned away from them." Oh, poor backsliding child of God, do not keep away from such a God with the idea that in some ways you can make amends for the past, and do something to win his favor before you return. "Thus saith the Lord, Thy heart is miserable, and thy wound grievous. There is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up: thou hast no healing medicines" (Jer. 30 : 12, 13). Only One can heal sin: it is he who bore our sins in his own body on the tree. "I will restore health to thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds saith the Lord" (Jer. 31 : 17). "I will heal their backsliding." How? "He was wounded for our transgressions: he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him and with his stripes we are healed" (Isa. 53 : 5). Thus is his anger turned away.

THE CEDARS OF MOUNT LEBANON

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

HOSEA'S prophecy was delivered in the latter years of Israel's existence as a nation. It was a period of national prosperity. Jeroboam II. had so extended his borders by conquest that the northern kingdom was almost as large as the united kingdoms over which Solomon ruled. But Hosea did not rejoice in the prosperity. He saw in it elements of decay, and he was sure, as Amos had been before him, that if those elements went on developing, they would bring ruin to the nation. He therefore utters an earnest warning, hoping against hope that his people would listen and amend their ways. The passage set for our consideration in the lesson is the close of his solemn and pathetic appeal to his people. He was specially qualified by a painful domestic trouble for his task. In his relations with his wife he learned how God might be supposed to feel in his relations with Israel. Hosea tells his sad domestic story early in his work. He married a woman named Gomer, whom he tenderly loved. But in those days of Israel's moral corruption, she was like other women of the time. After becoming the mother of three children, she either deserted her husband or was discarded by him, when her unfaithfulness was discovered. But his heart yearned after her still. Hearing that the men who had lured her astray had deserted her, and that she was to be sold as a slave, he bought her and took her back as a servant into his home. There she was put on a period of probation, and we may infer that, proving repentant and humble, she was reinstated in her position as a wife. Hosea, dwelling on these domestic sorrows, sees in them a reflection of the relations between God and Israel. God had loved the nation: had espoused it to himself: had borne with its unfaithfulness and idolatry, and had finally given it up in despair. But God would yet redeem Israel as Hosea had redeemed Gomer, and he imagines—his own unhappy experience being his guide—the kind of talk which would introduce renewed endearing relations. This, as Professor Moulton divides the chapter, is the conversation:

The Prophet: O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God, for thou hast fallen by thy iniquity. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord.

[illegible] Say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we [illegible] bullocks [illegible] Assyria shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses; neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy.

The Lord: I will heal their backsliding, I will [illegible] all be as the olive tree, and his smell as [illegible]

The Prophet: They that dwell under his shadow [illegible] return: they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the scent thereof shall be as the [illegible]

[illegible] say: What have I any more to do with [illegible] heard him and observed him. I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found.

Israel: [illegible]

The Lord: [illegible] and he shall cast forth his roots as Lebanon.

The Comment: [illegible] and he shall know them: for the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them: but the transgressors shall fall therein.

Thus we get from Hosea, the first of all the prophets to perceive it, the grand keynote of Christianity, which Isaiah, and Jeremiah, and Ezekiel were afterwards to sound more elaborately, but not more clearly—the keynote of the redemption of the lost. Amos had denounced the people and made them see their own sinfulness, but he went no further. It was left for Hosea to show, in his own life and home, and by his preaching, how the lost might be found and the ruined restored, by long suffering, all-enduring, persistent love. As he redeemed his erring wife from slavery and wooed her again to repentance and faithfulness, so, he taught, would God redeem his people to a fidelity never more to be violated. It was in Galilee that all this happened, in the very land where, seven centuries later, the greatest of all teachers taught the same truth in the Parable of the Prodigal Son. Like Hosea, too, but with infinitely deeper meaning, he lived the message he proclaimed.

Cast forth his roots as Lebanon. The reference is doubtless to the famous cedars which grow on Mount Lebanon. They are noted for the wide space around the trunk of the tree, through which the roots spread. As they grow at a height six thousand feet above the level of the sea, and as their branches stretch out over a wide reach, they could not stand the storms which rage over the mountain if the roots did not take firm hold and extend to a long distance. When Israel was restored, as the prophet predicts, it would, like the cedar, be firmly rooted, and would no more be easily overthrown.

I will heal their backsliding. This is something more than forgiveness. The wanderer from God gets trouble to himself. He comes back wounded and sore. God promises him sympathy and healing. Three young men were employed a few years ago in the same house of business. One of them, who was called Fritz, was a merry fellow who was inclined to be dissipated. On the monthly pay-day, Fritz put on his best clothes and was going out to have "a good time." "Come with me," said Arthur, another of the trio. "We will go down to the Y. M. C. A. and see what is going on." Fritz said that was too slow, and the third young man, coming in at the moment and hearing the effort Arthur was making to keep Fritz out of temptation, joined in the conversation and advised Fritz to tell Arthur to mind his own business, and not to interfere with another man's amusements. Unhappily, Fritz took this advice, and would listen no more to the pleading of his friend, who was trying to save him in spite of himself. His other companion treated him more as a man. But when the next morning Fritz came back with his arm in a sling and his head bound up, it was Arthur who nursed him and helped him, and the other still minded his own business and left the unhappy young man to get out of his trouble as he could.

The calves of our lips. Even at that early day there was one man who perceived how useless sacrifices were. He advised that the people should come to God confessing their sins, entreating forgiveness and asking strength for the future. Better than bringing calves to offer in sacrifice, was it to bring these prayers which were more acceptable to God than the offering of calves. How would it be in our own families if a child had done some wicked thing? Would the father's anger be appeased by the child bringing him a present? He would far rather have the child come penitently, confessing his fault and asking to be forgiven.

Reception to a French Hero

THE reception given to Major Marchand by his countrymen, on his return from Africa, must have in part consoled him for his recall. They acclaimed him in the streets of Toulon where he landed from the ship, and went wild with exultation when he drove through Paris. A more enthusiastic welcome has seldom been accorded to any traveler. At Toulon the Mayor of the city and all the French Generals in the neighborhood assembled on the pier to greet him and the public buildings were gayly decorated with flags and mottoes. On his arrival in Paris an enormous crowd was waiting for him at the railroad depot. They smothered his carriage with flowers and shouted themselves hoarse in their excitement. He was conducted to the Ministry of Marine, where a sumptuous lunch was provided. After congratulatory speeches by statesmen and generals a medal and sword of honor were presented to him. Thence he drove to the Palace of the Elysee to wait on the President. After the interview he was taken to the Military Club. There the Minister of Marine, M. Lockroy, General Zurlinden, Military Governor of Paris and other eminent personages were assembled to greet him. Fully thirty thousand persons are estimated to have thronged the sidewalks of the streets through which he passed. They shouted "Long live Marchand! Long live the army!" and "Long live the Republic!" And the dense crowd around the Military Club sang the Marseillaise. Major Marchand was obliged to respond to the cheering. He spoke from the balcony to the crowd, pointing out that France's weakness was caused by divisions among her own people, and urging all to unite in support of the national honor. It is evident that the enthusiasm of the reception was an embarrassment to the government. In acclaiming Major Marchand, the populace showed disapproval of the powers which had failed to support him. His achievement in crossing Africa with a little band of one hundred and fifty followers and reaching Fashoda on the Nile, had proved futile. The Major had been brave even to rashness, and had refused to lower his flag at the bidding of the victorious Sirdar, but the French government had yielded to the demand of England and had ordered him to retire. Praise to Marchand was therefore a reproof to the government. But the course that was taken was clearly the wise one, for it averted a disastrous war, which would have been inevitable if the government had obeyed popular clamor:

Scornful men bring a city into a snare: but wise men turn away wrath (Prov. 29:8).

WELCOME TO MAJOR MARCHAND IN PARIS

MAJOR MARCHAND

ON THE WAY TO THE PALACE ELYSEE IN PARIS

An Exile's Appeal

The good offices of the State Department at Washington have been invoked by a naturalized citizen who has suffered at the hands of the government of his native land. He came to this country from Russia in 1858. On the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in the Union army and served through the four years of conflict. He was wounded several times, and earned distinction by his courage and intrepidity. At the close of the war his services were recognized by conferring upon him the brevet rank of first lieutenant. In 1886 he heard that his father was dead in Russia, and he went there to receive his share of the family estate. He was promptly arrested and tried for abjuring his allegiance to the Czar. Mr. Bayard, who was then Secretary of State, interfered on his behalf and secured his liberation, but could not prevent a sentence being passed on him, decreeing him to perpetual exile, and confiscating his property. He was glad to escape with his life, and he has since lived here. He thinks the meeting of the Peace Conference an opportune time to plead for a remission of the sentence, and has asked the President to appeal to the Russian government on his behalf. It may be hoped that the appeal will be successful, but there is not much hope. There are many who have had to endure similar losses when they have abjured their allegiance to Satan and have entered the kingdom of God. But none ever regret that step, for, like Paul, they can say:

I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things (Phil. 3:8).

A Neighbors' Quarrel

Members of the aristocratic circle of society at Yonkers, N. Y., are taking an amused interest in the outcome of a quarrel between the owners of adjacent properties. Sometime ago a gentleman purchased some land and erected a handsome residence overlooking the river. His neighbor on one side complained that the new house was one foot nearer to his house than it should have been. He carried his complaint to the courts; but they decided against him. Thereupon he erected on his own land a high fence which he said would eventually form one side of a conservatory and would be covered with trailing vines. Neither the conservatory nor the vines have appeared, as yet, and the unsightly fence stands in naked ugliness. It shuts his neighbor out of his view of the river from the windows of his house, which the Yonkers people think was the purpose for which the fence was erected. A few days ago, workmen were again employed on the fence, extending it westward. This has the effect of preventing the neighbor seeing the river from his piazza. So far the fence seems to be useless to the man who erected it, unless the blocking of his neighbor's view may be called a use. It is sad to think that any man would deliberately set himself to deprive another of pleasure. There are some, however, who do a more serious injury. By inconsistent conduct, professing Christians sometimes so obscure the view of Christ and heaven that people are prejudiced against religion. Nehemiah's reproof to his people applies to many in our day:

It is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God because of the reproach of the heathen, our enemies (Neh. 5:9).

An Ex-Convict's Inheritance

A man who was pardoned out of the penitentiary of Frankfort, Ky., last March, has just learned that he is heir to an estate valued at a million and a half dollars. He is an Englishman who came to this country about nine years ago and led a wandering life. He was infatuated with horse-racing and was in the habit of betting heavily. For a time he won more than he lost, but eventually he grew reckless and lost large sums. Finally he lost all he had, and adopted various expedients to raise money. After several narrow escapes he was arrested for obtaining money under false pretences and sent to the penitentiary. Before his sentence expired his health broke down, and the Governor, hearing that he was likely to die if he remained in prison, pardoned him. After his release letters began to arrive for him from England, but he had disappeared and no one knew where he had gone. Advertisements were published offering a reward for his discovery and an agent came to search for him. The ex-convict knew that he was wanted, but apparently believing that he was in danger of another arrest, he kept himself hidden. At last he has been found and has learned the good news that an uncle who died recently made him his heir. He now regrets that he did not disclose himself sooner and so avoid the poverty and hardship he suffered while the search for him was going on. There are many men who have found out that they were similarly mistaken about their spiritual interests. They have regarded religion as a bondage and a misery, but after they have been found of God they have learned that it is a joy and has the promise in it of an eternal inheritance.

Godliness is profitable to all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come (I. Tim. 4:8).

A Hero at a Fire

The driver of a Hook and Ladder Company, in New York, performed a heroic act of rescue at a fire in Harlem recently. The truck-driver, whose name is John Fridenberg, had his truck at the fire first after the alarm was turned in. It was his duty to stand by the horses and take care of the tools and apparatus; but when he arrived he found a man and his wife on the sidewalk, begging that some one would save their two boys, who were asleep on the third floor. Fridenberg could not resist their pleading. He ran to a house further down the street and made his way over the roofs to the burning building. There he tore open the scuttle, but the smoke was so dense he could not descend. He pulled up the iron ladder and put it over the outside of the house. Directing his aides to hold it fast, he went down upon it to a third floor window, by which he entered and found the two boys. They were both unconscious, but he brought them out, one at a time, and climbed up the ladder that the men were holding for him with his burden on his shoulder. Twice he made the perilous ascent, while the crowd below cheered him for his desperate heroism. When he had landed the second boy safely his strength was exhausted. He had to be carried to the sidewalk and brought round by restoratives. The Chief, who witnessed the daring rescue, was loud in his praises, and has recommended that his name be inscribed on the roll of honor. Had the men who held the ladder, through carelessness or weakness, lost their hold upon it, nothing could have saved the hero's life. He must have fallen headlong to the sidewalk. But he knew them and knew that he might safely trust his life in their keeping. That is the kind of faith that Christ asks. All who trust him have the assurance of safety, which Paul expressed:

I know in whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him. II. Timothy 1:12.

A JOURNEY ON THE "FATHER OF WATERS"

On the Smooth-Flowing Mississippi

Illustrated Specially for "The Christian Herald"

ONE of the most delightful journeys imaginable, at certain seasons of the year, is down the Mississippi River, from St. Louis to New Orleans. With several companions, the writer engaged passage on the palatial steamer City of St. Louis for a voyage down the river for the purpose of enjoying its scenic attractions and of studying more of that peculiar character understood but little in the East—the Mississippi River roustabout.

WATCHING AN APPROACHING STEAMER.

MISSISSIPPI ROUSTABOUTS.

As soon as we boarded the steamer that nonchalant character was greatly in evidence. Scores of roustabouts were storing barrels and boxes of all sorts in the vessel's commodious hold, and the mates were continually urging them to greater efforts. These negoes seemed to be unusually free from care and worry; numbers of them were singing as they worked, seeming to enjoy their task immensely. A great quantity of freight was put aboard in an incredibly short time, and as soon as the last package was stowed away, the steamer backed out into the swift current. We went to the upper deck to get a better view of the fast receding city, and presently a panorama of great beauty was spread before us. On one side were steep bluffs covered with dense foliage; on the opposite side (i. e., Illinois), the flat country, where, as far as the eye could reach, were to be seen farms and orchards in a high state of cultivation. Jefferson Barracks, a finely located U. S. military post, was reached in a short time. We were struck by the substantial look of the buildings, which have been erected within the last year or two. The ever-changing scenery was a constant delight. Presently, as we reached a shallow part in the river, the sounding line was thrown overboard and the depth of water sung out to a man standing on the upper deck; and by him communicated in the same melodious refrain to the pilot. Along the banks were dotted large piles of corn, ready for shipment to the South. These were soon put aboard by the never-tiring roustabouts. The manner of loading flour was interesting. Thousands of barrels were taken on at various places; at one mill, where there was a sharp incline toward the river, the barrels were shot aboard by means of a long skid or toboggan. At Cairo, Ill., a view of part of three [illegible] once: Illinois, Missouri, and Kentucky. The different color of the water in the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers is very pronounced here.

It was noticeable, as soon as the negroes were off duty, that a [illegible] on the lower deck, and we soon discovered that they were inveterate gamblers. It often happens that some lose their entire wages on the trip before the boat arrives at its destination. The captain courteously pointed out to his passenger-guests many historical places and scenes of interest, such as the battleground of Belmont, Mo.; Fort Pillow, Tenn.; wrecks of gunboats; Fort Adams; the ruins caused by the great earthquake at New Madrid, Mo., in 1811, etc., and all enjoyed his entertaining descriptions.

Below Memphis we started to unload flour at several small landings and plantations. A peculiar fact is that here there are no houses visible from the river, except the landing warehouse, which is generally in charge of some old darkey, the settlements being behind the levees. Some of the landing-keepers are very picturesque and densely ignorant, but very polite, nevertheless. These levees are costly affairs for the government and the different states, but they are absolutely necessary to protect the lowlands from the annual spring floods. Enormous damage occurs to property for miles around when the levee has a break or "crevasse," owing to the great pressure of the water when the river is high. From Baton Rouge to New Orleans is known as "The Coast." Sugar plantations line

"SKIDDING" FLOUR.

LOADING CORN ON A MISSISSIPPI STEAMER—AT A PLANTATION LANDING.

UNLOADING SCENE.

THE CAPTAIN.

AFLOAT ON THE GREAT RIVER.

HEAVING THE LEAD.

AN OLD-TIME LANDING-KEEPER

both sides of the river almost to the outskirts of New Orleans. As the latter place is the journey's end, visitors usually spend several days seeing the sights. A few of the more important places to be visited are the old French market and U. S. Mint. A standard attraction is a drive on the Shell Road, which runs parallel to the Canal. One of the finest cemeteries in the country is located on this famous driveway—the Metairie—and is well worth a visit from one who happens to be in New Orleans. C. B.

JEFFERSON BARRACKS, VIEWED FROM THE RIVER

ON THE LANDING AT HOLLY BROOK, ARK.

There are few more spacious or comfortable craft afloat than the Mississippi packets of the first and second class. Light and almost frail in appearance, they give the observer an impression of inflammability and weakness; but this is a mistake. They are stanchly though elegantly constructed, and the completeness and finish of their cabinet-work does not in any particular interfere with their strength and availability. Each boat is a floating hotel, with all the equipment necessary to the fullest enjoyment of the journey. The saloons are spacious, high-ceilinged, white and gold decorated, brilliantly lighted and furnished with artistic regard to the demands of cultivated taste; the staterooms much larger than those ordinarily found on coastwise or ocean steamers. In the great dining-rooms of these floating leviathans, the napery, menu and attendance are usually of a high order of excellence, the viands well cooked and capitally served.

MUSIC ON DECK

IN THE STEAMER'S DINING-SALOON

In an interesting account of a trip down the river, Julian Ralph gives this pen picture of the scenery: "The Mississippi is not so unlike a northern river as might have been expected. Fields of grain run to the edge of the bluff and here and there are houses and patches of trees. The Illinois side is a long reach of wooded bluff. The water itself was mud. Everywhere it was dotted with logs, twigs and little floating islands of the wreckage of the cotton-wood thickets of Dakota and Montana, perhaps of the forests at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. Here and there we saw a government light—a little lantern on a clean white frame-work, suggesting an immaculate chicken-coop. Men who live in nearby houses get $10 or $15 a month for lighting them every night and putting them out every morning . . . For miles and miles we floated out in the channel and were alone in the world—we and the distant blue hills, the thin, bare forests and the softly speeding stream. Not even a fence or a ploughed acre was in sight . . . . The river (at certain points) runs between banks that cave in and hollow out and turn into bars and islands in a way that is almost indescribable. Islands which were on one side one year are on the other side another year. Channels which the steamboat followed last month and for years past are now closed. Bars no one ever saw before suddenly lift above the surface. Piloting on the Mississippi is a business no one ever learns. It is a continual subject of study."

THE CAPTAIN INDICATES A POINT OF INTEREST

Our photographs, taken specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, afford a realistic idea of a Mississippi River journey. As the traveler approaches New Orleans, and the evidences of a great city near at hand become increasingly apparent, the scenes along the shores have an added interest. New Orleans became known as the "Crescent City" from the fact that the older portion was built on the curving shores of the Mississippi. Near the river the land is somewhat elevated, and slopes gradually backward to the swamps and Lake Pontchartrain, which lie in the rear of the city.

In spite of the elevated banks and the protecting levees, the city has repeatedly been inundated by the river. Less than ten years ago, during a flood, the water poured into Lake Pontchartrain at the rate of 3,000,000 gallons per minute, and at the same time a very strong easterly wind was driving the waters of the Gulf inland and over the defences. In late years, owing to the extension and fortifying of the levee system (the principal levees now being made of concrete instead of earth), the city has not suffered quite so heavily as in the past.

IN THE CAPTAIN'S OFFICE

A STOP AT LIMA, ARK.

THE SHELL ROAD AT NEW ORLEANS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR
T. DeWitt Talmage
EDITOR.
E. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald ...

Subscriptions may commence ...

Remittances ... manner available to the remitter. Post-office and ... be sent at our own risk.

Register ...

Foreign Postage ... 100, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. ... before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted ...

Back Numbers. ... back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. ... the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper is ... less promptly renewed.

Change of Address. ... and your new address when you ask us to change ...

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald ... the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters ...

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
... B'way, N. Y. City.

SELF-EXPLANATORY

Question

On the face of the coupons recently sent out you say: "Good if RECEIVED before July 1st, 1899."

On the back of the same coupon you say, "This coupon must be MAILED not later than June 30th, 1899."

Please state which of these statements is to be accepted as final by intending subscribers?

Answer

If coupons are mailed on or before June 30, 1899, they will be accepted regardless of the date on which they reach this office. Thus, we give our friends the full advantage of the latest date.

Honest Praise

HOW some of the secular newspapers love to pounce upon clergymen, when they are reported to have gone astray or made serious mistakes! What a big tax upon the capital letters of some printing establishments is made by the default of some ecclesiastic! No doubt there are ministers who amount to nothing or worse than nothing, sacred homunculi, and ordained specimens of putty, and theologians manufactured by the schools; but, take the ministers of religion as a class, and there are no grander men. I know many thousands of them, and I do not know one man among them who is unworthy of confidence. Do not withhold from them while they live proper gratitude and admiration. They suffer enough rebuffs and knockdowns during their lifetime to keep them humble, and to create a proper equilibrium they need your commendation. When they do you good, say so. When they have come through long years of toil and still continue their industries of consolation and helpfulness, speak out the words of honest praise.

And let us establish the habit in our treatment of faithful persons in all occupations and professions. There are ten thousand men and women in this country to-day who deserve congratulation and approval. For all these merchants, mechanics, lawyers, doctors, the world will for the most part reserve expressions of appreciation until they are dead, and cannot hear a word that is said, or see a garland on their casket. Praise them while they live. It will cheer them on to still better achievement. The cup of life has in it so many acids that it needs a good deal of sweetening. Put on your table the cruet of sweet oil as well as the cruets of vinegar and cayenne pepper. The vast multitudes have more burdens than they can carry. If you can unbuckle the strap one hole so as to make it less tight, do so. If a mechanic does for you a nice job of work, let him know that the bannister is well turned, or the wall is well papered, or the carriage is well constructed. If the goods that come from your grocer are superior, when you settle the bill let him know what thorough satisfaction he has given you. If after long endurance from shoemaking you get sandals that neither pinch nor chafe, let the man who sits wearily pulling the wax threads through the leather know that he has saved you from pedal martyrdom. If a book that you read, consoles, instructs or inspires you, inform both author and publisher of the fact. If a musical instrument charms your houshold, so inform your tuner and the manufacturer. If your coat fits you, thank your tailor. Be more economical with your censure and more lavish with your encomiums. Take warning from Thomas Carlyle, who passed most of his married life in making his wife Jane miserable. He tried to sweeten her temper by taking her out in the country, fifteen miles from any settlement, where there were no persons but themselves, and then did not speak to her for two weeks. I believe in appreciation while living. Let this principle run through our every-day lives. When the coffee is clear, the bread is light and the steak is masticable and the dessert is tasteful to the palate, let the husband compliment the wife, and the wife praise the cook, and the cook praise the baker. When your child rapidly advances in schooling, pat him on the shoulder and send him a commendatory letter with him to his overworked teacher. In this way we not only cheer others, but we help ourselves.

Give commendation instead of hypercriticism; compliment rather than disparagement; sociability rather than ostracism; pean instead of curse; gentleness instead of coarseness, and request rather than command. So I am in favor of all testimonials, receptions or assemblages to do honor to faithful men and women, but many of the faithful will not get the encouragement they deserve; indeed, until Christ, in the presence of the assembled universe, shall hand them everlasting reward and pass them into a blessed immortality.

Christ in the House

SUPPOSE Christ should come into your house. First the wife and the mother would feel his presence. Religion almost always begins there. She may not make any fuss about it, but somehow, everybody in the house knows that there is a change in the wife and mother. She chides the children more gently. Her face sometimes lights up with an unearthly glow. She goes into some unoccupied room for a little while, and the husband goes not after her, nor asks her why she was there. He knows without asking that she has been praying. The husband notices that her face is brighter than on the day when, years ago, they stood at the marriage-altar, and he knows that Jesus has been putting upon her brow a wreath sweeter than the orange-blossoms. She puts the children to bed, not satisfied with the formal prayer that they once offered, but she lingers now, and tells them of Jesus who blessed little children, and of the good place where they all hope to be at last. And then she kisses them good-night with something that the child feels to be a heavenly benediction—a something that will hold on to the boy after he has become a man forty or fifty years of age.

Timely Facts About Cuba

Mr. Pepper Answers and Advises many Inquirers who Contemplate Settling There

S... about the article published in THE ... means to give the information sought.

... anybody to realize one hundred per cent. on his investment in Cuban lands within a short time after the investment is made. The land is there, its richness is inexhaustible, and people who buy it and settle on it and work it, will, in a short time, be making a good living. But they won't have earned their hundred per cent. within twelve months, and they may lose a hundred per cent. if they count too much on town lots and other artificial means of increasing the value of farm lands.

An intending Cuban settler should by all means look to the land, and he should look to it as he would at home. Rich as the soil is in Cuba, there are some lands that are not worth paying postage stamps for without a knowledge of their location and immediate surroundings. Everybody who is thinking of settling in Cuba should first make a personal investigation. From the letters received, I judge that in many places in the United States ... tlements. That is an excellent idea; but before a dollar is invested, they should send some experienced member to locate the land, and get all the information which can only be had on the ground.

Next winter, the railroad and steamship companies will be getting up excursions to Cuba at a low rate. Opportunities of this ... instance, it will be cheaper to spend $150 pros... than to invest from $200 up to $1,000 before anything is known of the land.

Americans can raise any product in Cuba that Cubans and Spaniards have been in the habit of raising, and they will probably do it more systematically and get better results. But the small investor has no show in raising sugar-cane, and any of the alluring prospectuses which promise sugar plantations should be avoided. The reason is the simple one that sugar production in Cuba requires large capital. Tobacco raising is not out of the reach of those who have been engaged in it in the United States, but it requires knowledge and experience. With these, and a small capital, it is a safe business for Americans. General farming, however, is the chief thing, and by this I mean raising fruits of all kinds ... cocoanuts, oranges, lemons and a dozen other fruits which find a ready market, are capable of cultivation by those who have learned something of fruit-raising in a temperate climate. To my mind, the most profitable opening in Cuba is going to be market-gardening or truck-farming. There is not only the home-market, but there is, at some seasons, the market in the United States. Within easy distance of most of the large towns there is good land which can be leased for this pur..., or occasionally, can be purchased outright. Little attention has been given to systematic truck-farming by the Spaniards or the Cubans. Americans can teach them a great many things in that line. As all these crops are produced twice a year, the possibility of doing well with a small capital is easily seen; but there must be some capital, and some experience with which to start.

Dairy-farming is also going to be profitable. In Havana, most of the dairies existed right in the city, where the cows were fed in their stalls, until the American authorities moved them out for sanitary reasons. But there is not much real dairy-farming. For persons with larger capital, I think the best opportunity in the island is to engage in grazing. It will be several years before there are enough cattle on the island to supply the home demand, either for beef or for oxen to work on the plantations. There are no grazing ranges of government land, such as exist in the Western part of the United States; but there are good ranges in the interior which can be leased.

Personally, I am not over-sanguine of the immediate creation of new American villages in Cuba. For that reason, if I had a little money and were going there to settle, I should not get too far away from the older towns, which are either on the railroads or on the coast. Land can be bought relatively almost as cheap in these older communities, as in the regions where it is proposed to create new settlements. The chief thing, however, in Cuba, is to use the same prudence that would be shown at home when it comes to ... land. I ... land owner for $100. He had a hundred lots to sell, somewhere out in the sandy part of California; but the lots weren't worth a dollar each, although certificates for them were nicely printed and would have done to paper the walls of my office. A friend who had been out there told me about them, and I saved $100. But if I had been intending to invest in California lands and settle there, I should have gone out first to see for myself, or have sent somebody who knew the value of land, and that is the whole thing in relation to Cuban lands. First, know what you are buying, and then go ahead, but don't go ahead simply on the strength of printed prospectuses.

Now, again, about the chances for young men who want to engage in commercial and industrial enterprises. There will be a chance for them when American capital begins to develop the resources of the island. That will mean railroad building, electric lighting, road-making and a great many other things; but there will be very little manufacturing, because Cuba, from its nature, cannot become a manu... better advice than to find out what firms are engaged in Cuban trade, and seek through them the means of making an opening for themselves in the commercial and industrial development of the island. They can get this information, I presume, through the regular commercial agencies, or at any of the shipping ports. New York, Boston, Portland, Baltimore, Savannah, Jacksonville, Tampa, New Orleans, Galveston and Mobile all have shipping trade ...

Now about learning Spanish. A smattering picked up at home, even without a Spanish teacher, is better than nothing. No one ever learns to talk a foreign tongue except by being among the people who speak it. However, there is less of Spanish to unlearn, when among Spanish-speaking people, than of most languages. Every syllable is sounded and every word pronounced, so that while the exact pronunciation may not be secured, some idea may be gained of the sounds. Besides, it is very useful to read the papers, and a reading knowledge can be acquired within a few months. If I were going to learn Spanish in order to visit Cuba, I would not spend money buying a big dictionary or expensive books of any kind. A dollar ought to be sufficient to get a good grammar and reader with a vocabulary. My own notion is that this is a better way than to try the various manuals which profess to teach Spanish by throwing together a lot of supposed conversations. It has been my experience that these phrase books are not of much benefit. CHARLES M. PEPPER.

Washington, D. C.

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, pastor of the Fifth ... sity, of Providence, R. I.

Rev. A. Pen Oliel, according to a letter published by The Congregationalist, has closed his ... permanently.

Mrs. Jane L. Stanford has conveyed nearly the whole of her fortune to the Leland Stanford University. The president of the university says that the real estate and securities comprised in the gift could now be sold for fifteen million dollars.

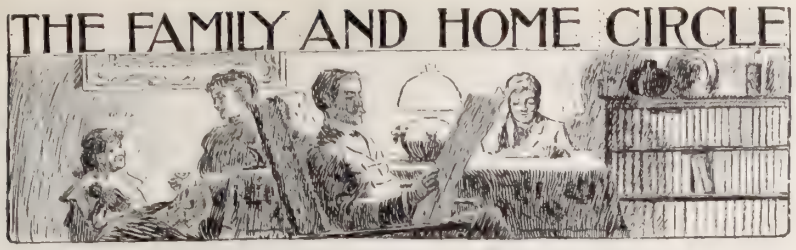
The statistics of the United Presbyterian Church, as published by the Independent, show that there are this year 12 synods, 66 presbyteries, ... members. The church held its forty-first general assembly in Philadelphia recently.

The pastor of a church at Leavenworth, Kans., has organized a people's evening college in connection with his church. He has sixty students and has a faculty of ten professors. There are ...

The newly-elected chairman of the Congregational Union of Great Britain is Mr. J. Carvell Williams, M. P. It is very unusual for a layman to be elected to this office. Mr. Williams is seventy-eight years old, and has been for over fifty years a champion of Congregationalism in the political field.

A noble utterance is that of the Jewish wife of Capt. Dreyfus. Speaking of Du Paty de Clam, now in prison, who had more to do than any one, ... Dreyfus to prison, she said: "I do not want him punished. I shall forgive every one when my husband is liberated. There shall be oblivion so far as I am concerned."

At the recent meeting of the American Baptist Education Society, a report was presented ... colleges for women with 4,000 students; thirty-three negro and Indian schools with 5,000 students, ... dents, and sixty-four academies and schools with 1,200 students—a grand total of 160 schools with ... learning have regular Bible study.



Some Brazilian Homes

Indian Huts on the Amazon—Domestic Implements—Features of City Life

THE ways and customs of the United States of Brazil are not so familiar to us of her sister republic as are those of European countries, yet our morning cup of coffee often breathes, if we could understand it, a story of Brazilian valleys and plateaus, where laborers, sad and merry, pick berries from hundreds of trees. Brazil is the greatest coffee-growing country in the world, and most of this product she sends to us. The great international railway, so much talked of in late years, may bring us in closer touch with our South American sister, who liked our government so well that she modeled hers on it; we will then know each other better.

Brazil may be considered very progressive, since she is the only country that ever made a radical change in her form of government except through war and bloodshed, and since she voluntarily, and by a wise system of emancipation, freed herself of the curse of slavery. Yet centuries of Portuguese domination left much to overcome, and in some respects she is an undiscovered country, and many peoples on the Amazon live in as primitive fashion as the natives of Africa.

The aboriginal Indians of the interior are an interesting folk, and, to a large degree, civilized. The little, brown-skinned, dark-eyed children are observant, quiet, and almost stolid according to our ideas of child-character. If hurt, they do not cry out; if delighted, they do not clap their hands and skip and shout. The Indian women are industrious. The men go fishing and turtle-hunting, and the burden of agricultural, as well as domestic, labor devolves chiefly upon them. They manufacture their own pottery, make mats, and weave hammocks on slow and primitive looms for family use and for sale. Some are lace weavers. They are early risers, beginning each day, it is said, with a bath in lake or river. Our Amazonian laundress has certainly no excuse for not getting the clothes clean; her washtub is fifty miles wide. They live in adobe huts, and the furniture of a typical dwelling consists of benches, baskets, trunks, hammocks, and low, odd-looking stools made of the hard skin of an alligator's breast twisted into shape, or of a large terrapin shell.

Among cooking and eating utensils, there might be an iron kettle from the nearest town; and there would surely be home-made pots and bowls of clay, calabashes, turtle-shell pans, gourd bottles, wooden spoons, baskets and clay-lamps for burning fish-oil. The principal foods are fish and manioc. The latter is to the Brazilian what wheaten bread is to us or the potatoe to the Irish. The itinerant bakery, shown in our picture, doubtless contains dainties made of manioc meal; although, of course its principal stores are bread and cake, for Parahyba is a coast city where people have the conveniences and luxuries we ordinarily find in such towns. The itinerant peddler is a marked feature of all Brazilian cities. Negro women selling sweetmeats or pots of tapioca soup (also made like manioc meal from the manioc root), or with baskets of luscious fruit on their heads, coal-venders, merchants with cloth and yard-stick, newsboys, candy-boys, and dealers in all sorts of things, throng the narrow streets crying their wares.

A BAKER'S CART, PARAHYBA, BRAZIL—WASHING CLOTHES IN THE AMAZON

Little Kenneth's Prayer

When the steamship Paris ran on the rocks near Falmouth, with a shock that drove strong men frantic with fear, a little seven-year-old boy met the disaster in a way that beautifully demonstrates the value of Christian faith and pious training. His mother says:

I was wakened by the fearful shock as we rushed on the rocks, and got up at once feeling that some awful calamity had come upon us. Then my little boy, Kenneth, turned to me—for I had wakened my two eldest children at once. "Are we drowning, mother," he asked. "I don't know, dear," I said. "Oh, mother," he said, "something has happened. I must pray," and then and there the dear little soul got down on his knees, and amid the tumult and excitement, the hurrying of people past our room, and the shouting and crying, he said the Lord's Prayer as he had been taught to say it almost from the day he could talk. Then one of the stewards came to my room and told me to take the children and come up on deck at once. That was an awful moment for me. I had three children, and I didn't know which to take first. Just then I looked out of my door and saw that the stairs were blocked and that people everywhere were standing about with life-preservers on. That decided me. I thought there could be no hope for me in such a crowd at such a time with my three children, and so, rather than desert any one of them, I sat down in my cabin and waited—simply waited. Finally the steward came down to me again and told me there was hope that we would all be saved and for me to come on deck now. The stairway by this time was cleared, and I was able to get all my children up.

A New "School Commencement"

It's the cooking-school commencement. The graduating class does not stand up in frills and furbelows and cap and gown (nice as these things are in their way) and read essays tied with long streamers of satin ribbon. Not they! Quaint mob-caps, newly-laundered white sleeve-guards, great snowy bib-aprons constitute their regalia. Instead of reading essays, they mix, mingle, bake and broil all sorts of good things to eat right before your eyes, and serve them to you toothsome, piping hot or frosty cold, dainty as a poem, and economical, too. Instead of applauding a literary production, you are expected to partake of a wonderful soup, a marvelous chicken-pattie, or a refreshing salad, and for dessert such flake wafers or almond crisps, or crust pie, or caromel ice cream, or charlotte russe as never was. Everybody goes away wishing the commencement exercises had been longer, and promising themselves unfailing attendance on all that come off in June a year hence. The cooking school commencement is in growing favor in all our large cities, and the classes are made up alike of poor and wealthy girls. So the home-making arts that our grandmothers valued are by no means being despised.

Nature Studies for Children

Longfellow wrote of the childhood of Agassiz, the great and pious student of nature:

> And Nature, the old, old nurse,
> Took the child upon her knee,
> Saying: "Come, read in the story-book
> Thy Father hath written for thee."

One way to guard against infidelity and agnosticism is to train children to study brooks, bees, flowers, plants, sun, moon, stars and clouds, as if they, even as the Blessed Bible, bore a message to them from the Divine Creator. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." "Consider the lilies of the field . . . how they grow. . . . Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." As your child studies the wonderful structure of a flower as, working in his little garden he helps in the creation of plant-life, whisper to him: "Behold the Father's wisdom and goodness. Think of the beauty that he brings to pass."

For Porto Rican Women

The Colonial Aid Society is a new and timely organization. Its officers are Mrs. Guy V. Henry, president; Mrs. Janvier Le Duc, secretary, and Mrs. Horace See, treasurer. At a recent meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City, Gen. and Mrs. Guy V. Henry talked about the needs of the Porto Ricans, and definite lines of helpfulness were discussed, among them the establishment of branches of the Porto Rican woman's exchange here next fall for the purpose of showing Americans what their West Indian sisters can do. Porto Rican women do exquisite needlework, and make quaint fans and pretty gourd-baskets. Specimens of their craft were exhibited at the meeting, and it is believed that they can be helped effectively through sales of their products here. The exchange lately established by the Aid Society at San Juan is doing well. A dispensary is needed at San Juan, says General Henry, and the ladies of the society have that matter in hand. Many branches of this worthy organization are being established in different places.

Come to the Home

Flowers for the children bloom on the hills;
And the birds sing, "Children, come!"
And the coaxing voices of laughing rills
Call our little ones to their home.

Come from the crowded, sweltering street,
Where children droop and die,
To river and mountain, where breezes sweet,
For playmates seem to sigh.

Come to your Home, where loving care,
Guarding playtime and rest,
Leadeth the lambs with faithful prayer
To Him who the children blest.

GOODLOE HARPER.

The Nurse-Girl Problem

THE kidnapping case recently described in this paper, where little Marion Clarke was carried off by her nurse and kept in hiding for ten days of terrible suspense to her parents, shows one phase of the power that we mothers inevitably put in the hands of the caretakers to whom we confide our children. It shows one phase only, and one so unusual and of such peril to any attempting its exercise as to hardly merit disturbing thought. How about our baby's disposition, its budding character, that we continually place in unrestrained, and perhaps not true and holy, hands? Everybody knows when the little body is stolen there is a hue and cry, and nobody rests till the baby is restored to its mother's arms. But how about the little soul led astray imperceptibly, day by day, through impressions made upon it by an ignorant, thoughtless caretaker, unconscious of the harm she does, and unable, in the nature of things, to appreciate the sacred responsibilities reposed in her?

"The most difficult place to fill in my household," says many a mother, "is that of nurse-girl. To replace cook or house-maid is not so serious a matter as selecting the girl or woman into whose hands I confide my precious baby." It is so serious that many mothers give it up in despair and take upon themselves the whole care of baby, putting out the sewing and all other work that they may do so. If a woman is head of a large household, it is impossible for her to devote herself wholly to the baby. Perhaps, too, she is not strong enough to do the little one justice. The nurse-girl is a necessity. In New York City one philanthropic lady, a kindergartner of distinction, has a class for training nurse-girls, in which free instruction is given. Her example might be followed elsewhere with advantage to mothers and babies. This branch of education is, if anything, more important than that of training nurses for hospital work, which is one humanity will forevermore insist upon, now that it has realized what blessings it brings.

The "Black Heart"

None of our little readers have, we trust, such a heart as the poor anemone bewailed in this allegory, but we tell the story hoping that it may help them to guard against such an affliction:

An eastern legend tells how when the earth was created and the flowers appeared in all their glory, they were without a ruler. One day they met and had a discussion as to who should be queen. The lovely Damascus rose was chosen. All the flowers were satisfied except the gorgeous scarlet anemone. She was so full of envy and hatred that she was not chosen queen, as else she might have been. Her beautiful red heart turned black, and has remained so ever since. Now in the happy flowering time, she sighs as the breeze blows over her, and says, "It is time I have a very gorgeous dress and many people admire me—but my heart is black, my heart is black!" Surely envy is the root of much evil. "In honor preferring one another," says God's Word; a loving spirit will keep the heart free of evil.

THE : : : UNEXPECTED

Or, Aunt Jane's Fresh Air Experiment, and how it Resulted

... By HELEN HALL FARLEY ...

CHAPTER III.

I SAT and gazed upon my sunny home;
All pleasant things were there;
Bright things to look at, and sweet, soothing sounds
That came and went upon the perfumed air.
The sunbeams glanced and quivered
Through the many-colored pane,
And the marble floor at the open door
Mirrored it back again.
The flowers blushed in beauty;
The birds sang forth their glee;
I looked and listened, and I thanked my Father
That 'twas all for me.

And then I thought of One who had been here in days of yore,
Wearily walking on the world he made;
The Son of man, and yet the Son of God—Despised and poor!
I thought of him when first his infant form
Needed a resting place, and there was none:
The King of Heaven was waiting to be housed
Earth's dwellings had no room!

I thought of him upon the mountain-side,
When all night long
The silent stars looked down upon his loveliness
For Jesus had no home!

I thought and thought until my gushing heart
Groaned forth its longings:
"Oh, had I been there!
What tender ministry, what fostering care
Wouldst thou have known,
Thou blessed One!
What kindly words!
What thoughts and deeds of love'"
The hot tears gathered fast
I laid me down and wept.

* * *

Was it a breeze that stole into my room
So like a voice?
That came quite close—close to my burning brow,
And whispered: "Why not now?"
It came again: I brushed the tears away,
And, as I bent my head down very low,
I thought I heard him say:
"But why not now?"

Whatever Miss Temple had lacked, she had always possessed an unusual amount of executive ability. She would have made an admirable general had her work been along that line. Before she closed her eyes in sleep that eventful night she had planned her siege, and at early dawn she was up and dressing. Oh, what a day that was, from the beginning to the end!

The improvement in the children's faces was already perceptible. A night's rest in comfortable, clean beds, with fresh air to breathe, had done its good work. Little faces were not as pale as they had been, eyes were less weary. And such a breakfast!—"topped off" with deliciously brown pancakes and maple syrup, and partaken of in a pretty room with an open doorway, through which they could get a peep at the "green things growing."

A bluebird alighted for a moment and then flew away, its wings glistening like jewels in the sunlight. Job, the man who took care of Miss Temple's farm, was already at work with a team of red oxen in a green meadow within sight. The sweet fragrance of summer in the country filled the air.

There was bread to bake that morning, and, as the family had so greatly increased, there must be a large quantity. Job's wife, Sally, was sent for to do the baking and assist Peggy with other matters.

"I want brown bread and white," said Miss Temple to Sally, "and make sugar-and-molasses cookies. We will probably be back by half-past eleven, so please have dinner ready at that time, for the children will be hungry after their long drive."

Bartholomew was waiting for her at eight o'clock at the gate with the bay horses and the three-seated carriage. "Come," called Miss Temple to the children, who had not been told they were going for a drive.

They came at once, but with evident reluctance. Little Bennie, the cripple, was the last one to reach the gate, and there were tears in his eyes. He caught hold of Miss Temple's dress, looking up into her face appealingly.

"Me doesn't 'ant to do away," he said. "Me finks it's bufull here—me 'ants to stay wid 'ou."

He was afraid they were to be taken to Cross Roads station.

"But, my dear," she said smilingly, "I'm going with you, don't you see? We're going to the town of Murray to get some nice clothes for all of you. We will be back in time for dinner, and then you can spend the whole afternoon in the yard if you want to."

A look of seraphic joy came into the little face. A drive through the beautiful country! A good dinner afterward! And the whole afternoon in that wonderful yard, where the birds sang and the roses were in bloom! Oh, what joy! Oh, what joy! And the carriage rolled on.

Bennie sat next to Miss Temple on the back seat, with Tom on the other side of him. Her eyes grew misty occasionally, as they rested upon one and another of her guests with their wretched clothes. She wondered how Bennie would look when his tattered, outgrown coat and miserable little shapeless trousers and clumsy, toeless shoes were exchanged for new things. She wondered what they would say when she filled the girls' arms with pretty dolls and the boys' with toys. She felt happier than she had ever been before.

Long before they reached Murray the children began to feel at home with Miss Temple and Bartholomew. They talked and laughed softly together, their eyes wandering here and there over the beautiful landscape.

The world that had been hitherto all wretchedness to them had suddenly filled with unutterable joy. It was a balmy day. There had been rain the previous morning, and all nature looked fresh and fair. The cherry trees were loaded with white and crimson fruit. The silvery-leaved maples softly rustled their branches, like brooding, gleaming wings. The wild bushes along the driveway were gay with pink and purple blossoms. There was sweetness and beauty everywhere.

Miss Temple and her guests created considerable excitement when they entered the largest dry-goods store in Murray, but the former kept her own counsel. They were a long time in the store, which was rather hot and close, but when they emerged once more into the open air Miss Temple's face beamed with undisguised satisfaction. There was a certain air about her which was extremely becoming. It bore a resemblance to what one would expect to see in the countenance of a victorious general.

Every little face was radiant. Every little body was clothed from head to toe in new and becoming clothing. Each little girl carried a pretty doll in her arms. Each boy had something he had chosen. Bartholomew drove the bays up to the curb-stone just in time to get the full benefit of the glory of the transformation. He laughed merrily and clapped his hands in hearty congratulation, at which there were murmurs of delight from all of them, and a soft gurgle of mirth from Bennie.

"'Ou didn't know us, did 'ou?" he said innocently. "We look bufull, don't we?"

Bartholomew gave his aunt a look of unmistakable admiration. "Strange how her face has changed," was his thought.

He had always considered her features severe, but they were softened now to an almost youthful bloom.

The clerks brought out large bundles of goods and put them under the carriage seats. On the way to Murray, Miss Temple had stopped at Rachel Newcomber's to ask her to come and sew for a few days. On the way back, she, with her bag and bundles, was taken in.

A chicken dinner awaited them at home. Not one, except Tom, had any remembrance of ever having tasted chicken before, so you can imagine the enjoyment of the six guests. The desert was strawberries and cream.

During the long, sweet summer afternoon while Miss Temple and Rachel Newcomber chatted together while they sewed busily for the "least of these," the latter were allowed to wander about the charming grounds at their own sweet will. Bennie did not stray far away, being altogether too frail to be on his crippled limbs long at a time. But he took many happy little journeys down and around the pebbled walks and over to the sweet syringa tree, around which gay little humming-birds flitted to and fro. Then he would come back and rest upon the piazza where it was cool and sweet, and where he could see the face of the dear lady he had already learned to love. Miss Temple often looked up from her sewing and smiled upon him. Noticing after awhile that he looked weary, she dropped her sewing suddenly and went out to his relief. She swung up a hammock on the piazza, put some pillows in it, and then called Bennie.

"Here, my dear," she said, "is a lovely place to rest."

She lifted him in, brought him a glass of milk and one of Sallie's fresh cookies, then she went back to her work. The birds sang to him, the soft breeze fanned him, the fair, blue sky smiled upon him. Presently his eyes grew heavy and he murmured something.

"What did you say, Bennie?" asked Miss Temple from the window.

"Did me—say—somefin'?" he said sleepily.

"Yes, I thought so."

"Me was finkin' dat dis is heaven."

The blue eyes closed. On the sweet little face there was a smile of ineffable peace. Soon after Bennie fell asleep, Sylvia came slowly up the garden walk. Sylvia was the crippled girl. She was only seven years old and small and slight for her age. Her eyes were dark and the clustering rings of soft hair around her delicate face were golden brown. She looked really beautiful that day with her face all aglow and clad in her becoming new clothes—a crimson dress and a ruffled, white apron. She saw Bennie asleep in the hammock as she reached the piazza. With a thoughtfulness not often seen in such a little one she walked as gently as possible, so as not to disturb the sleeper. Her crutch was under one arm, her doll held close in the other. She went close to the window where Miss Temple sat.

"Bennie was tired, wasn't he?" she whispered softly.

"Yes," said Miss Temple, "and you are a little tired, too, aren't you, dear?"

"I guess I'm just a little tired," admitted Sylvia honestly, "but I shouldn't want to go to sleep in the day-time."

"Why not?"

"'Cause what?"

"'Cause its so—so—lovely here. If it didn't get dark I don't believe I'd want to go to bed at all. There's so much to see everywhere—so much. I never knew there was so much to see in all the world."

"Don't whisper any more, my dear, it tires you. Just talk in your natural tones; it will not disturb Bennie. And, if you do not want to go to sleep, come in here. Take this big arm-chair beside me."

(Continued on next page).

ROYAL
Baking Powder
Makes the food more Wholesome and Delicious.

$6. per Day Agents make it selling our adjustable Hammock Rope. Send 10c. for sample. Central Hardware and Manufacturing Co. Box 1326, New York City.

$300 to $10.00 a day can be easily made working for me. People preferred who can furnish their own team. Applicants must furnish satisfactory reference as to character and standing. B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

"Keep to Your Place and Your Place will Keep You."

Without good health we cannot keep situations or enjoy life. Most troubles originate in impure blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood rich and healthy, and will help you "keep your place."

Built Up — "Was tired out, had no appetite until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla. It built me right up and I can eat heartily." ETTA M. HAGER, Athol, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

For the home, library, sick room, studio, office, school room. THE STANDORETTE MADE An Invalid's Stand, Easel, Reading Stand, Book Rest, Music Stand, Card Stand, Sewing Stand, Drawing Board, all in one handsome piece of furniture. Compactly folded; shipped in box 26x21x2¾. Thousands in use giving the best of satisfaction. Shipped on approval, freight paid. If not as represented, money refunded. Light, durable, ornamental. Made of steel tubing, enameled in black. Trimmings nickel plated. All adjustments are automatic. Our catalogue mailed free. O. H. ALLEN & CO., Miamisburg, O.

$60 Sewing Machines for $18. We sell every machine Sewing Machine Dealer. We expect no agents, pay no commissions, sell goods to you from $15 to $60 cash. Sewing Machine you may select. All machines brand new, guaranteed latest improved, with all attachments, and warranted for 10 years. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Our illustrated catalogue gives full particulars, and will be mailed free. Address J. N. HOOK & CO., A 1351 Central Ave. CINCINNATI, O

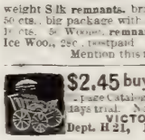
Your Dinner can be cooked all at one time on one burner of any kind of stove if you use THE IDEAL Steam Cooker. Prevents steam and odors. Will reduce fuel bills 50 per cent. Whistle blows when cooker needs more water. Will hold 12 one qt. glass jars in Canning Fruit. Agent wanted. Toledo Cooker Co., Box 16, Toledo, O.

$14.50 to $18. 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL. Buy direct from factory. Save Agents large profits. Save money in advance. WARRANTED 10 YEARS. $45 Arlington Machine for $14.50. $35 Arlington Machine for $12.50. Other Machines $8.00, $9.25 and $11.50. All attachments free, over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write today for special freight offer. CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 W. Van Buren St., B-18 Chicago, Ill.

WONDER EGG BEATER & CREAM WHIP. Will beat eggs in half a minute. Will whip cream in three minutes. Guaranteed perfect, and a different beater made. Sent postpaid on receipt of retail price 15c. We are the largest manufacturers of Pure Aluminum, Scotch Granite and Tin Ware in the world. AGENTS, write how to get 12 sample pieces of our best selling household novelties—Profit worth $2.00—FREE. All goods guaranteed to give satisfaction. Address Dept. T HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, 25 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

COMMON SENSE KETTLES. Self-stirring—trains vegetables with one unprotected hand. Ordinary cover—cannot support itself—boils never get hot. Agents wanted. Sell every family. Others make $2.00 weekly, so can you. Send 40c for 5-qt. sample. The deposit is deducted on first order, making the sample free. Write at once. COMMON SENSE KETTLE CO., 60 Wabash Av., Chicago

CRAZY WORK 125 Velvet and Plush remnants, assorted colors with Embroidery Chenille, 42 cts. 400 beautiful, heavy weight Silk remnants, bright colors, enough for a large quilt, 50 cts., big package with entire nursery, dress and quilt pattern, 10 cts. 50 Woven remnants, assorted colors with embroidery, Ice Wool, 25c., postpaid. Lemarie's Silk Mill, Little Ferry, N. J. Mention this magazine when you write.



$2.45 buys a MAPLE AND REED BODY Baby Carriage. Sparc Catalogue Free. We Pay Freight and ship on 30 days trial. No money required in advance. Address VICTOR MANUFACTURING CO. Dept. B 21, 161 to 167 Plymouth Pl., Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS WANTED! We furnish free sample case and outfit to agents. Fine French Lustre, Metal Sign, Size 28x36, retails for 5 days. Write for Catalog, new goods, rapid sellers. Richardson Mfg. Co., 6th St., Bath, N.Y.

$500 QUICKLY EARNED selling our authentic Life and Wars of ADMIRAL DEWEY. 700 pages, superb illustrations, only $1.50. Dewey coming home, creates enormous demand, agents coining money, credit given, freight paid, Outfit free. Consolidated Book Co. Cincinnati, O.

The Unexpected

(Continued from preceding page)

Sylvia smiled. That was what she wanted—to get very near this dear lady, who had done so much for her. She went inside and climbed into the big, soft chair, with its downy pillows, and sat down with a restful sigh.

Miss Temple called to Peggy to bring the child a glass of milk and a cookie. While the latter ate and drank, she talked. The pretty blue cambric that Miss Temple was sewing on attracted her attention at once.

"Oh," she cried, "how pretty that is! Just the color of the sky, ain't it?"

"It is your dress, Sylvia. I'm glad you like it."

"My dress?"—wonderingly.

She lifted up her pretty white apron, contemplating her crimson dress with serious eyes.

"This is my dress, ain't it? You bought it for me, didn't you?"

"Yes, my dear; that is yours and this is yours."

"And this is yours, too," said Miss Rachel Newcomber, holding up a breadth of dainty pink gingham.

Was it really true? Were all these pretty new things hers? Miss Temple was smiling reassuringly. There was a quiver around the little mouth, a mist before the sweet, dark eyes. Suddenly the child slid softly down from her chair and went close to Miss Temple.

"Are they really and truly mine?" she said, wistfully.

Miss Temple felt a lump in her throat, but the smile still lingered on her face.

"They are really and truly yours, little one," she answered.

A light crept into the child's eyes; a smile that one might call cherubic stole over her face. Suddenly her little arms found their way around Miss Temple's neck.

"I love you!" she said. "Oh, how I love you!"

(To be continued).

Our Country for Christ

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for July 2. Ps. 33: 10-22

ONE of the most benumbing and paralyzing theories that can get into a man's mind, is that God has wound up this world and set it going, as a man does a clock, and then left it to its own way without taking further interest in it. The theory is the natural result of our discovery that the universe is more like a machine than had been supposed. God was nearer to the ancients than he appears to us, because they believed that the thunder was his voice and that many other phenomena of nature were the direct operations of his hand. We know, now, that they are the result of natural causes and are produced by natural laws, and we can trace the operation of these laws and do not find God's hand interfering in nature. For everything there is a cause, and even the curse, causeless does not come. But though we recognize the method, and are ever detecting the laws which produce phenomena, we shall be very short-sighted if we do not look beyond and behind the law, to see the God who established it and admire anew the wondrous wisdom which planned everything in its beautiful order and set the springs of action in their places. Nor shall we do justice to him, if we do not realize that he takes a keen interest in human affairs, and, as the Psalmist says: "He looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth and considereth all their works."

All that we learn of God from his works and his Word indicates a thorough knowledge of us and of what we do. It seems strange to us that he does not interfere more in human affairs, that he should let wickedness triumph and the good be oppressed, but all that mystery will be explained some day. At present, from all we see, we come to the conclusion that man must work out his own salvation and that it rests with him whether this world shall become better or worse as it grows older. But though God has placed this responsibility on man, and is trusting him so fully with his own destiny and the destiny of the world, he has not left him unequipped for the gigantic struggle. He knows what his creature needs and is aware that of himself he cannot win the victory. That is why Christ came and brought into the world the divine strength, and by infusing his nature into ours, gave us the power to conquer. God has shown his sympathy with men in this practical way and has placed help within their reach. It is therefore with hope and confidence that Christian men may enter the arena to win the world for God. There is no object so noble or so glorious. If, when we lie down to die, we can congratulate ourselves that the world is better than it was when we were born, we have the highest satisfaction that can be in the human breast. Still better is it if we can feel that we have done our part in winning this step upward, slight though it may be, that it may be said of us, as it was of David, that "having served our generation, we fell on sleep."

There is much to encourage us in the struggle. No intelligent man can have read the daily history of our own land, as it is recorded in the press, without seeing that the situation is better than it was. True, there are times of ebb, but as a man standing on the beach watching the rising tide, can see that the waves are steadily advancing, though some seem to fall short, we can see there is a better tone and a higher public spirit abroad than formerly. Public opinion is more surely on the right side than of yore. The distinction between right and wrong is more generally recognized and self-interest is not now the all-compelling and conclusive argument that it once was. Iniquity is more disgraceful and needs to clothe itself in disguises, and hide itself under cover, because the conscience of men would condemn it if it showed itself in its naked deformity. For so much we are thankful. It is a step gained; but that step is only a trench nearer to the enemy's works from which a further advance should be made. There is much land still to be possessed; gigantic evils still flourish which must be abolished before we can claim our country for Christ. While drunkenness is prevalent; while vice still parades our streets; while capital and labor still stand opposed, instead of joining hands for the general good; while so large a part of our population cannot tell from one week to another when grinding poverty may crush them, the very outworks of the citadel are in the enemy's hands. And beyond all these lies the spiritual triumph for which we long, when Christ's rule will be acknowledged everywhere within our borders and men will bow to him as their king and serve him with full purpose of heart.

Faith, Hope and Love

TRUST on, though in the tempest
That goads the maddened main
Thy bark be flung toward leeward shore,
Where wrecks before have lain.
The Master of the raging sea
Will bring His own to land.
Then trust the helm that guides thee to
His hand.

Hope on through all thy shadows;
Hope on through all thy tears,
And, though the clouds may hide the sun,
Subdue thy doubts and fears.
Sometime thy feet beyond the flood
Shall press the golden strand.
Till then, thy truest friend will hold
Thy hand.

Love on, though none deserve it;
Though men thy foes shall prove.
No soul should be beyond the pale
And power of thy love.
Thy Saviour's love envelopes all,
Though men his love withstand.
Love on, wouldst thou go with him hand
In hand.

Noank, Conn. —W. C. MARTIN.

CONVENTION NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Reduced Rates via Pennsylvania Railroad.

For the National Educational Association Convention, to be held at Los Angeles, Cal., July 11 to 14, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell excursion tickets via direct routes from points along its line, to Los Angeles, Cal., and return, at rate of single fare for the round trip, plus $2.00 membership fee. These tickets will be sold, good going, June 24 to July 7, and, when stamped by Joint Agent at Los Angeles, good to return, arriving at final destination, until September 5.

For further information apply to Ticket Agents.

The Shepherd

(See illustration on first page)

In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD there appeared an article descriptive of the shepherds of the Orient. Even to-day a very large proportion of the population of Palestine earn their living on the land, and many are shepherds, as their forefathers were before them. The calling has been honored above all others, for Jesus himself hath said: "I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep and am known of mine. . . . I lay down my life for the sheep." Clement of Alexandria thus addresses the Saviour:

Shepherd of tender youth,
Guiding in love and truth
Through devious ways;
Christ, our triumphant King,
We come thy name to sing
Hither our children bring
To voice thy praise.

Ever be thou our Guide,
Our Shepherd and our pride,
Our staff and song;
Jesus, thou Christ of God,
By thy perennial Word,
Lead us where thou hast trod;
Make our faith strong.

DO YOU BAKE BREAD?

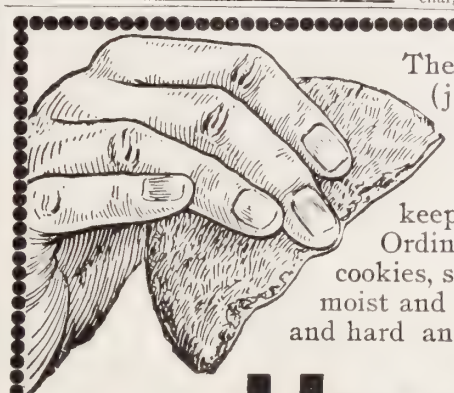
Franklin Mills Flour of the Entire Wheat Makes Better Bread, More Nutritious Bread, Less Expensive Bread

Franklin Mills Flour of the Entire Wheat does not make "white" bread. It makes bread that contains all the nutriment that the Creator put into the wheat. That is just what cannot be "white."

The strength giving properties and natural food-giving properties of the wheat are of a dark color, hence must be removed in the whitening process. Remove them, and the remainder is too largely starch, which is less digestible and of less food value.

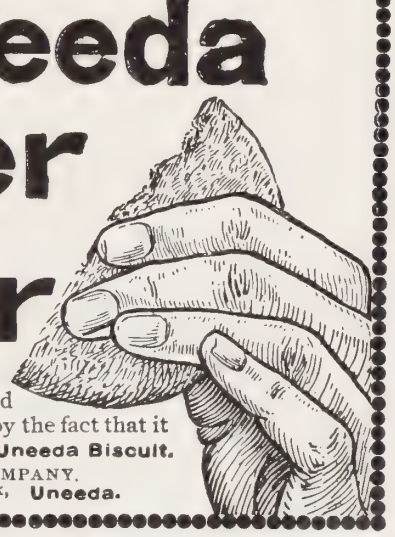
Franklin Mills flour, on the other hand, contains all the nutriment of the wheat berry ground whole, nothing but the outer husk being removed. One pound of it is equal in real food value to four pounds of ordinary "white" flour, and one barrel of it will go as far in bread-making as two barrels of ordinary "white" flour. Therefore it is the most economical flour made.

In addition, it makes delicious bread of a beautiful golden color—just to look at it will make one's mouth water; to eat it is to want some more. If you want to bake the most nutritious bread, the most delicious bread, the best-looking bread, the least expensive bread, the best bread in every way, you will use Franklin Mills Flour of the Entire Wheat. It is sold by nearly all up-to-date grocers, who sell "the best" rather than "the most profitable." If yours should not have it in stock, write Franklin Mills Company, Lockport, N. Y., who will see that you are supplied, and who will gladly send you a handsome illustrated booklet free of charge, upon request.



The new wafer is just right (just crisp enough, just sweet enough, just gingery enough) and the sealed, air tight package keeps it just right until eaten. Ordinary ginger cakes and cookies, sold in the usual way, get moist and soggy in damp weather and hard and tough in dry weather.

Uneeda Jinjer Wayfer



keeps fresh and deliciously crisp and tender. Its high quality is assured by the fact that it comes from the ovens which bake Uneeda Biscuit.

Made by NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY, which owns the registered trade-mark, Uneeda.

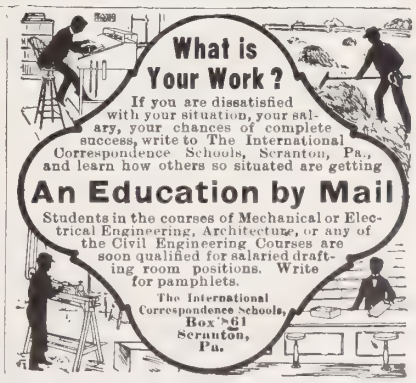
A tree is known by its fruit, and we are willing that the

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

should be judged by its graduates. Many—very many—of the leading vocal and instrumental artists in the public eye to-day were instructed here.

GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.

Send for our catalogue to
FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Mangr., Boston, Mass.



What is Your Work?
If you are dissatisfied with your situation, your salary, your chances of complete success, write to The International Correspondence Schools, Scranton, Pa., and learn how others so situated are getting
An Education by Mail
Students in the courses of Mechanical or Electrical Engineering, Architecture, or any of the Civil Engineering Courses are soon qualified for salaried drafting room positions. Write for pamphlets.
The International Correspondence Schools, Box 861 Scranton, Pa.

FOR ALL RELIGIOUS SERVICES

CHURCH HYMNS AND GOSPEL SONGS.

$25, $30 and $35 per 100, according to binding. Samples of either, post free, 25c.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs, S. S. and every good purpose. Books, Sheet Music, Octavos, Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments, New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free. FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

DO YOU WANT More than Savings Bank Interest? To Sell Land or Mortgages? If so, write FIDELITY INVESTMENT CO., TACOMA, WASH.

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT

And on Lake Champlain

$4.00 to $10.00 per week. Send 4c postage for Illustrated Book

A. W. ECCLESTONE, S.P.A., 353 Broadway, N.Y.

WANTED A MANAGER.

A Subscription Publishing House of nearly 20 years' standing, highest reference and rapidly increasing business, desires to employ Field Managers to drill and appoint agents in different localities. Liberal salary with commissions given, opportunity for advancement. Address MANAGER, 10 W. Saratoga St., Baltimore.

IN VERANDA CHAIRS

Morning in the Country—The Terror of Kidnapping—A Word as to Mothers-in-law

IT is not only in the moonlit and starlit evenings that one likes to sit in the verandas in summer. I am seated in one of the pleasantest nooks in the world on a bright summer morning as I write to my friends, who are at this moment engaged, some in dressing the babies for the day, others in their Saturday's baking, others with their sewing and mending: still others, with an artistic occupation, as painting on China, or embroidering a doily or centerpiece. It is early, and the June morning is full of sweet odors and music, for the birds are singing all about, and, as sound as sweet as theirs, a sweet seven months' old baby is cooing and laughing in his cradle in the shadow of the vines. The whole family life goes on the summer long in this little loggia. The children's play, the shelling of peas for dinner, the reading of the last new book and paper, the entertaining of guests, and perhaps the mid-morning luncheon of milk and gingerbread, or the afternoon cup of tea, may be socially served here. The veranda is large enough for very comfortable furniture: it is not crowded, though there is a good-sized table with a blue cloth cover and a half dozen chairs at one end, and though a hammock is swung across the other end, while rocking chairs are conveniently standing about in the space between. When my friend built this house in which I am paying a visit, he planned piazzas first and the house afterwards. My own idea of house-building resolves itself into three features—plenty of closets (a woman always wants closets), plenty of fireplaces, plenty of porches. As for the rest of the house, I don't mind so much, though, of course, I like conveniences.

One of my acquaintances says that if her dining-room is spacious and cheerful she has nothing left to wish for. a sister of hers is satisfied with a dining room no bigger than a hencoop, and a cousin of both concentrates her attention on her parlor, indifferent to the comfort of bedrooms and kitchen. A kitchen, by the way, should be comfortable, well appointed, with conveniences of every kind—water on tap if possible, or else with a pump in the sink, and a reservoir on the stove large enough to keep a quantity of hot water always ready for use. Women should not just get along with any sort of kitchen: too much of their lives are spent there and too much of their strength. They should insist and contrive and manage until they have a kitchen where they can do their work easily and happily. A kitchen is not an unworthy or an undignified part of a home: it is its heart, its engine-room—the "very pulse of the machine."

* * *

TALKING of the cooing baby, blue-eyed and flaxen-haired, who laughs as I lay a finger on his satin-smooth cheek, I am reminded of the horrible fact that occasionally babies are kidnapped. Can there be a more fearful trial in life than to have one's baby stolen away, day after day to search blindly here and there, groping after vague clues, seeking wildly in the night and the darkness for the precious child who is in the custody of wretches too vile for thought? The baby who lies asleep in its little coffin, with waxen hands folded, is happier far than the infant reft away by mercenary ruffians from its proper home, and the mother weeping over a newly-made grave is not to be so compassionated as the mother whose empty arms reach out in vain for her stolen darling.

I saw a very sad little story in my morning paper one day this week. Tommy, aged five, had been naughty, and to punish him his mother took off his trousers and jacket, the pride of the small boy's heart, and put on his outgrown petticoats, condemning him to this degradation for the day. To put a little fellow of five or six into a frock after he has once known the promotion of a real boy's toggery is equivalent to degrading an officer to the ranks—a thing simply not to be borne. The child smarts under such a mortification as keenly as under the blows of a whip. The particular small boy in question, walking away in despair, had the misfortune to step upon a match: it ignited and set the offending skirts on fire. The mother gathered the child up in her arms and tried to smother the flames in a quilt, but the little one was so badly burned that he died in an hour. If this pathetic tale has any moral, it is that matches should not be left lying loosely around, nor, indeed, within the reach of children. Matches have no business on the floor. But, though it is not a moral, I wish just now to put in my plea for gentleness in the management of children and for the minimum amount of punishment in their cases. Young mothers and fathers are generally too ready to resort to penalty. You must not get tired of me if I say this over and over. You need to hear it, and you will never be sorry if you will only heed it.

* * *

THE death, late in May, of the great French artist, Rosa Bonheur, added another lustrous name to the list of those forever starred on the roll of fame. This gifted painter of animals began her career early in life, and her most wonderful picture, "The Horse Fair," has been so often reproduced that most of us are familiar with it. The artist had a masculine cast of countenance, wore her gray hair short and parted at one side, and never adopted the beautiful in her attire, preferring short skirts and a workman's blue blouse. I wonder whether Rosa Bonheur in a corset and a flounced and lace-trimmed robe could ever have gained the triumphs she won in her special domain.

* * *

A CORRESPONDENT writes that she has been very much outraged by witnessing the indecorous behavior of a daughter-in-law whose home is in the family of her husband's aged mother. Far from treating the venerable matron with consideration, the younger woman openly flouts her opinions, upsets and interferes with her cherished domestic arrangements and scorns her in the most open way: this, too, when she and her husband are under many obligations to the kindness of his mother. Well, if I could do what I would like in such a situation, it would be this: I would whisk that ill-natured daughter-in-law on some bit of an enchanted carpet, after the fashion of the "Arabian Nights," far over land and sea, and I would set her down—hard and suddenly—in a zenana in India. She would learn her lesson of how to keep her place in that bitter school, a heathen home. Her mother-in-law should rule her with a high hand and much severity of discipline, and she should be taught politeness and discretion and repression of speech, and never be brought back to America until she had repented and resolved to behave sweetly and gently in her American home. Throughout the Oriental world the mother-in-law holds the reins of household government, and she is often far from kind to the sons' wives, who, in countries where the patriarchal system obtains, must all be brought home to the paternal roof, there to reside. In our own country I do not think it is common to find quarrels and disagreements between relatives-in-law, except among low and illiterate classes of society. The son's wife defers to her husband's mother and loves her, and the wife's mother is highly honored by her son-in-law. Misunderstandings, wrath and friction belong to the people who have neither traditional elegance of manner nor religious principle back of them.

If it can be avoided, however, families should not double up in such close quarters that they can jar on each other. The young people who are beginning life would better have two or three rooms somewhere by themselves than form an integral part of a finer home belonging to parents on either side. Every young married couple have their own puzzles and problems: they will work out their own solutions better if they are without spectators or critics.

* * *

THE Board of Education of the town of Lynn, Mass., have forbidden public school teachers to appear before their classes in bicycle costume. This seems rather despotic, though I can imagine that a pretty young lady in a very short skirt might look rather childish and be less awe inspiring than is desirable in the circumstances. As, however, the young teachers are not prohibited from riding to and from the school on their wheels, they can exercise ingenuity enough to have a long gown in their school-room closets, which may be duly donned before the bell rings. I am inclined to think that a truly commanding personality can overcome even a bicycle skirt, and that children care less than their elders about the teacher's style of dress: but from time immemorial it has been customary for law to modify the dress of women, or at least to make the attempt occasionally. I shall look with curiosity at the little schoolmarms of Lynn, hoping that they may hit on a happy medium in their toilettes, agreeable to all concerned.

Margaret E. Sangster

Blood is life, if it is pure, rich and healthy. It means suffering if loaded with impurities. Hood's Sarsaparilla is nature's true blood purifier. Get only Hood's and insist upon having Hood's.

Health Soap

Don't let your skin take chances; better use pure, white, clean Wool Soap. Your skin likes it.

Swift and Company, Makers, Chicago

AGENTS WANTED

DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC CORSETS.

[illegible] styles. A valuable book free.

GEO. A. SCOTT, Room 7, 842 Broadway New York.

WANTED—A [illegible] RIPANS [illegible] RIPANS [illegible] RIPANS [illegible] RIPANS [illegible] No [illegible] New York.

It Is a Certainty That Catarrh [illegible] sample of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Mailed free. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Blosser Building, Atlanta, Ga.

IS YOUR FACE WORTH ANYTHING?

We believe it is, and for 40 years have been manufacturing, for Ladies who value their complexions.....

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER.

You are perhaps using some cheap powder, or more worthless, prepared chalk. Chalk is for blackboards, not faces.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER

is not chalk. It is absolutely pure, healing to the skin, invisible when rightly used. Packed in a wooden box, which preserves the perfume and medicinal qualities. You can smell the perfume in most face powders before the box is opened for it evaporates through a pasteboard box. Pozzoni's don't; it stays fresh.

At all druggists, or from J. A. POZZONI CO., St. Louis, Mo. upon receipt of 50 cts. in stamps.

GOLD DUST

THE BEST Washing Powder

Suffering in the Tenements

The Torrid Heat Claiming Its Victims—Help for Little Ones—The Home Opens Soon

JUNE came in with a temperature breaking all previous Weather Bureau records. On the sixth day, the mercury made a leap of twenty degrees between morning and afternoon. Late in the evening, it was still suffocating; and even in the uncrowded uptown districts, many people were unable to sleep during the torrid night that followed this hottest of June days for twenty-nine years. Twenty-seven cases of prostration and two deaths among adults were officially reported, and similar announcements followed for several succeeding days.

TAKING AN AIRING IN THE CELLAR DOOR

If grown people in the uncrowded districts were prostrated, and living plants in city parks began to fade, what about the tenement children? If the thermometer in open, well-ventilated places registered 107, how about the cramped tenement rooms, with the many dwellers cooking, eating, sleeping, washing and ironing in narrow quarters? During those first days of awful heat, all the more trying for its suddenness, many little ones, tired of the terrible struggle for life, closed their weary eyes, to open them no more on earth. In a number of instances, children placed on fire escapes and in windows by poor mothers seeking to give them a breath of air, fell to the street and were killed. In addition to the many published cases of child-death from the heat, many little ones, already weak and ailing, became, without doubt, too enfeebled by the sufferings of that phenomenal hot week to withstand repeated trials in this direction, unless, through the kindness of Christian friends, relief is administered. To every liberal reader of this paper, co-operating in our beneficent fresh-air work, it must be a blessed thought that they are actually saving many child-lives by their generosity. This year the work will be more perfectly conducted than ever. The Housemother's experience and that of her trained helpers is enlarged. The proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been most careful in his selection of workers; only spiritual, consecrated women are put in charge of our children. The oversight and the leading of thousands of little bodies and souls for three months every summer is no light responsibility. Only by the Master's help could it have been carried out with such happy results. With nearly 10,000 children who have been cared for at the Home, not one death has occurred, although many little ones were so feeble when they came that such an end seemed inevitable.

Not one serious accident has happened, although a large proportion of our guests have been drawn from neighborhoods where rock-throwing and kindred devices are not unknown. Fathers and mothers have been brought under regenerating Christian influences through the kindness shown their children at the Home, and the moral improvement wrought in them by an outing there. Our aim is not only to build our children up physically, and to send them home ruddy and well-clad, but to lead them to their Saviour, and thus endow them with a spiritual gift and strength that will help them to overcome the temptations they must meet in saloon-cursed streets. In this work we have been nobly sustained by the prayers and co-operation of our readers, without which we could not have accomplished so much for the tenement waifs and their overworked mothers.

Everything is being put in readiness for our little guests, and the hospitable doors of our lovely new Home at Nyack will soon swing wide open for our happy little children. The following contributions have been received:

Prev. ack'd	$564 02
Bradner, Mrs Jane	6 00
Bruce, Mrs L A	3 00
Cameron, Mrs D A	5 00
Carlson, Mrs	3 00
Carver, Mrs S S	50
Case, Mrs O P	5 00
Chapman Emma	6 00
Coombs, Mrs M J	1 50
Craven, J & E	2 00
Debnam Mrs H H	1 00
Dore, Melissa L	1 00
Dwyer, Miss S D	12 00
Edwards, A R G	1 00
Franklin, Mrs W E	1 60
Gates, Mary J	70 00
Gibbs, Robert	25
Gille-pie, Joseph	1 00
Girod, I	3 00
Hanna, Hattie F	1 00
Hart, Mr & Mrs H L	3 00
Hicks, Mrs N M	1 00
Hill, Mrs	1 00
Hulskamper Mrs J A	5 00
Hutchinson, Mrs W R	50
Jardine, Mrs J	1 00
Johnson, Mrs L H	3 00
Jones, Charlie	25
Jones, Emma	25
Jones, John	25
Kintigh, Mr & Mrs W R	7 00
McPherson, Mrs I. W	20 00
Needham, Anna	1 00
Needham, Mrs E G	50
Norton, Miss C	1 00
Oneal, Sarah	1 00
Ort, Eliza	1 00
Paris, Catherine	1 00
Pearson, T R	3 00
Rettig Mr & Mrs C J	10 00
Ribbans, Mary	50
Ribbans, Minnie	25
Ribbans, Robert	25
Richmond, A F	1 00
Sawyer, Frank	50
Schweizer, Miss R	50
Sidders, Mrs H W	2 00
Simmons, Mrs G	3 00
Simpson, H A	6 00
Smith, Miss A	1 00
Smith, Mrs J M	2 00
Smith, Mrs J P	3 00
Stebbins, A C	6 00
Stevens, G D	3 00
Stowell, Mrs F L	3 50
Sumner, H M	2 00
Swanson, Hannah A	6 00
Switzer, Mrs A E	6 50
Tefft, Mrs L E	2 00
Truxton, Paul P	1 00
Tuttle, Esther L	3 00
Verdin, Mrs J B	3 00
Walker, Mrs C L	3 00
Walter, W C	1 50
Watt, A E	3 00
Williams, Helen	3 00
Williams, Mary	12 00
Wilson, Mrs J B	2 00
Wilson, Mary E	1 00
Wood, Mrs W	10 00
Woolfolk, Miss S M	50
Winnie, Beverly	3 00
C P F, Georgetown	5 00
E E D, Waco	6 00
E M D, Waco	3 00
E M F, Bloomfield	1 85
E V S, New Jersey	3 00
H M T, Cambridge	3 00
I A, Honesdale	3 00
J A W, Tidioute	30 00
J T W, Huntingdon	5 00
L H N, Silver Springs	6 00
M A J, Newburgh	30 00
M E S	3 60
M R, Honey Creek	3 00
N U N, True Blue	1 00
T W, Mifflinburgh	3 00
—, Marquette	3 00
—, Santa Cruz	3 00
—, W Kennebunk	3 00
For Jesus Sake, No Byron	1 16
For the Master's Sake, Shawhan	3 00
Friend in May	3 00
Friend, Dobb's Ferry	3 00
" Perryville	50
" Quincy	1 50
" San Francisco	100 00
" Soudan	10 00
" Stafford Springs	1 00
Friend L T C, Woodlake	3 00
Inasmuch, Ozone Park	12 00
IHN	3 00
" Chicago	1 00
" Ft Fairfield	3 00
" Shiloh	1 00
In Jesus Name	1 20
Lover of Christ, Frontier	5 00
Lover of the little waifs, Valdosta	3 00
Mother, Ft Plain	2 00
Mother, N Y City	3 50
Reader, Pawtucket	1 00
Sub'r	3 00
" Amawalk	1 00
" Dresden	1 00
" Iowa City	3 00
An old sub'r, Saratoga Springs	6 00
" Sioux Rapids	2 00
In memory of Sadie E, Haydenville	5 00
One who is interested in children, Meeker	25
Unnamed, La	35 00
Class of 12 little girls, E Liverpool	3 25
Prim Dept S S 1 Cong ch, Danvers Ctr	5 00
The Buds of Promise, Olivet Mem ch, Brockton	3 00
Willing Helpers Soc Pres ch, Johnstown	10 00
M S R, Brooklyn	1 00
Mrs E H N, Perkinsville	3 00
Total	$1,203 23

All contributions will be promptly acknowledged in these columns.

Trial Package Free!

If any reader, suffering from rheumatism, will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This is an honest remedy that you, can test before you part with your money. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 219 Summerfield Church Building Milawukee, Wis.

Result: Above are samples of "Soft Soap" or "Soap Paste" made with PEARLINE, and with two of the leading powders which are claimed to be "Same as" or "Good as" PEARLINE.

The bottle to the right contains a solid mass of pure, white "Soap Paste" or "Soft Soap," made with PEARLINE—thick enough to stand alone.

The bottle in the middle is one of "Same as" and contents is one-quarter poor, thin, mushy soap—balance (three-quarters) discolored water.

The bottle to the left is a poorer "Same as," and contains simply discolored water, with a sediment (not soapy) at bottom. The middle and left-hand bottles are fair samples of the many powders offered in place of PEARLINE. Try the experiment yourself—directions on back of each package.

Some powders are worthless, some inefficient, others dangerous. Pearline is the standard. The Millions of Packages of PEARLINE used each year proves

Pearline Best by Test

Note. The difference in price between Pearline and the most worthless Soap Powders is nominal. A year's supply would not equal the value of one ordinary garment ruined.

IMITATIONS OF OXYDONOR ARE DANGEROUS TO USE

The Original is made by the Discoverer and Inventor—
DR. H. SANCHE
Which is the only safe instrument.

The Supreme Court at Washington, D. C., has decided in favor of Dr. H. Sanche against imitators. We are operating under the Only Patents that have been granted on this Process and these Instruments.

One OXYdonor will keep an entire family in good health, and will last a lifetime if taken care of. A 170-page book of Directions with each Oxydonor.

From Rev. JOHN A. THOMPSON, D.D.,

Presiding Elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the Savannah, Ga., District.

THOMASVILLE, Ga., Feb. 8th, 1899.

I have used the OXYdonor for Insomnia, and gladly state that a perfect cure was the speedy result. This is the first and only certificate or commendation of the kind the writer has ever given, and in this instance he is moved to do so because of his faith in the cure, and to do what may be in his power to render service to the afflicted.

JOHN A. THOMPSON.

PRICE NOW $10

for the Original Instrument which we sold from 1889 to 1895, for $30 and $25.

Further information and book, "Grateful Reports," mailed FREE on request.

DR. H. SANCHE & COMPANY,
261 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
57 State Street, Chicago, Ill.
61 Fifth Street, Detroit, Mich.
Canadian Office: 2268 St. Catherine Street, Montreal, P.Q.

There are none so deaf as those who won't buy

Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums

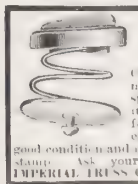
The only scientific sound conductors. Invisible, comfortable, efficient. They fit in the ear. Doctors recommend them. Thousands testify to their perfection and to benefit derived.

Information and book of letters from many users, free.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
223 Trust Bldg. Louisville, Ky.

NO DIRT LEFT in clothes washed with the "BUSY BEE WASHER" 100 pieces in one hour and no hard work done. That is the record. AGENTS WANTED. Exclusive sale. Write for terms,

Lake Erie Mfg. Co., 119 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.



RUPTURE

EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS.

[illegible] the spiral spring and graduated pressure does away with [illegible] comfort and [illegible] ordinary trusses fail. It [illegible] in good condition and [illegible] stamp. Ask your druggist or send direct to EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS CO., 104 N. Fourth St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

Bottled Fun

Cut the string
And let it run;
Nothing like it
Under the sun.

There's delight in the flavor, there's health in the pure ingredients of HIRES Rootbeer. The great temperance drink. When the day is hot, there is no drink so satisfying; when the vitality is low no drink is so invigorating; when you are overheated no drink is so cooling as

HIRES

Rootbeer

A temperance drink for everybody.

Make it yourself at home. A package of Extract makes five gallons. Hires Rootbeer, Carbonated ready for drinking. Sold everywhere by the bottle and case. Write to THE CHARLES E. HIRES COMPANY, Philadelphia, and ask how a boy can make from 40 cents to $4.50 per day.

O'Neill's

SIXTH AVENUE, . . .
. 20th to 21st Street, . .
. . . . . NEW YORK

Importers and Retailers

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Cloaks, Costumes, House-Furnishing Goods, Etc.

SOME SPECIALLY ATTRACTIVE BARGAINS
Reserved for Our Mail-Order Customers!

WOMEN'S CHEVIOT SERGE SUITS with Fly Front, Walking Coat lined throughout with black Taffeta. The Skirt is Percaline-lined, full circular shape. These Suits are made and finished entirely by men tailors $9.98

WOMEN'S WASH SKIRTS. Linen Skirts, four yards wide and finished with deep hem. A great bargain at . . . $1.98

WHITE PIQUE SKIRTS, full circular shape, finished with three rows of insertion and deep hem $4.98

SUMMER SILKS. Black Satin Duchesse, 27 inches wide. Regular [illegible] quality $1.50

Black Peau de Soie, 22 inches wide. Regular $1.40 quality. $1.00

Samples of these or any other silks that you may require may be had upon application.

Mention this paper when you write "The Christian Herald."

H. O'NEILL & CO., Sixth Avenue 20th to 21st Street, NEW YORK

GAME

IS MANY TIMES TOO "GAMY"
TO GIVE THE NICEST TASTE TO ALL GAME USE

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

The Original & Genuine Worcestershire.

IF YOUR GROCER ATTEMPTS TO SUBSTITUTE AN IMITATION SEND IT BACK NONE SO GOOD.

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, NEW YORK.

Rheumatism...

[illegible] uric acid in the blood, which causes [illegible] rheumatic pains and aches, and reduces inflammation. It does not upset the stomach, and can be taken by the most delicate. Prescribed by many leading physicians.

Regular package $1.00.
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

Artistic Monuments...

COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES in White Bronze

[illegible] crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze [illegible] is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligation. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

The Monumental Bronze Co., 70-90 Howard Ave., Bridgeport, Conn.

Tartarlithine...

[illegible] regulates the action of the kidneys, [illegible] and removes the poisonous deposits, and reduces inflammation. It does not upset the stomach, and can be taken by the most delicate. Prescribed by many leading physicians.

Regular package $1.00.
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

FREE SAMPLE

consisting of two bottles—enough of

"OUR FAVORITE" GOLD ENAMEL

(Washable)

[illegible] to a smooth surface and a smooth lustre appears. [illegible] Has a [illegible] and [illegible]

As brilliant and smooth as gold-leaf. Ready for use. A child can apply it. Shows no brushmarks. Can be washed without tarnishing. Gilds everything, [illegible] frames, [illegible]

Also made in ALUMINUM SILVER.

Send [illegible] cent for [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] than [illegible] the quantity [illegible] enough [illegible]

Cerstendorfer Bros,
NEW YORK, 42 & Park Place. CHICAGO, 175 & Randolph St.

$16.50 NO MONEY IN ADVANCE!!

Bettter Wheels at Lower Prices than Ever Before Offered.

Arlington No. 69.

1899 styles shipped C. O. D., subject to examination to anyone, anywhere, in lots of one or more. Our Arlington No. 69 is a high grade, honest made wheel, as near perfection as it can be made and equal to others sold at $25 to $35. Equipped with a first class tire, two piece hanger, choice of handle bars, padded saddle, ball bearing throughout, first class in every respect, a wheel fit for a King at the exceedingly low price of $16.50. A one year written guarantee goes with it.

If You Want a Good Low Priced Wheel Buy the "Brunswick" at $14.50. Others at $12.50, $11, $10 all good wheels and everyone a bargain and stripped as low as $7.50

As to our reliability we refer to the First National Bank of Chicago or any Chicago Bank, Express Company and Dun's or Bradstreet's Commercial Reports. Large Illustrated Catalogue FREE, explaining all about our "No Money in Advance Plan." Write today for Special Offer and testimonials.

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. Van Buren St., Dept. 18 Chicago, Ills.

A Pound of Tea

—the most delicately flavored ever grown—the famous Caricol Blend —will be mailed to any address

FOR

50 cents

TRY IT!

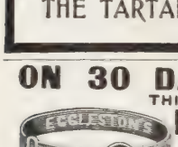
Double the price will not buy as good at your grocer's. Over a million pounds sold!

THOMAS MARTINDALE & CO.
1000 Market Street,
Philadelphia

ON 30 DAYS TRIAL

THIS NEW

ELASTIC TRUSS

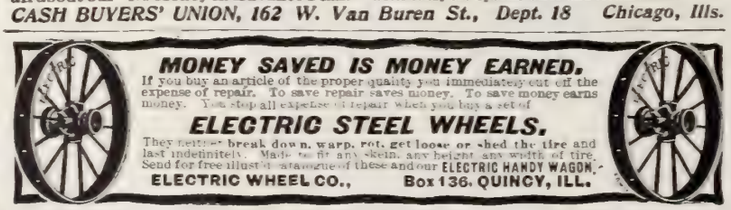


[illegible] Has a Pad different from all others, is self-adjusting, and can be worn in any position. [illegible] The Ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the [illegible] and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. [illegible]

[illegible] I feel that I am no longer that object of pity a ruptured man.

Yours sincerely H. S. Johnston

C. H. EGGLESTON & CO., 1201 MASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO.



MONEY SAVED IS MONEY EARNED.

If you buy an article of the proper quality you immediately cut off the expense of repair. To save repair saves money. To save money earns money. You stop all expense of repair when you buy a set of

ELECTRIC STEEL WHEELS.

They neither break down, warp, rot, get loose or shed the tire and last indefinitely. Made to fit any skein, any height, any width of tire. Send for free illustrated catalogue of these and our ELECTRIC HANDY WAGON.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO., Box 136, QUINCY, ILL.

8000 BICYCLES

Overstock [illegible] must be closed out. '98 MODELS $9 to $10. Shopworn and second hand wheels, good as new, $3 to $10. NEW '99 MODELS $11 to $30. Great factory clearing sale. We ship to anyone on approval and trust without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE

by helping us advertise our superb line of '99 models. We give one Rider Agent in each town FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.

E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO., CHICAGO., ILLS.

YOU WANT FENCE— WE WANT MONEY.

We Make an Honest Fence at a reasonable price.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FARMERS AT WHOLESALE PRICE. [illegible] the fence is perfect which will [illegible] a nice thing in a bad fencing. No loose ends—can't slip, untwist or unravel. All wires are interwoven. Prices cut to rock bottom. Get our special discount terms before you buy. They are Free.

ADVANCE FENCE CO., 1906 Old St., Peoria, Ill.

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only Truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and it retains the rupture under the hardest exertions of severest strain, and with effect a permanent and speedy cure. Comfortable Belts made to reduce corpulency. The use of these belts reduces your size and leaves no room for surplus fat to accumulate. They can be used after any operations. Our goods are [illegible] by agents of druggists. Send for free pamphlets to the Improved Elastic Truss Co., 768 Broadway, N. Y.

LARKIN SOAPS

AND PREMIUMS.-FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.

LIGNITE

For cleansing and polishing all kinds of Hard Wood Work, such as Furniture, Hard Wood Finish, Hard Wood Floors, etc. It is superior to all others, and the only article which successfully does the work.

FOR PARTICULARS AND CIRCULAR SEND TO THE TAYLOR PAINT & OIL CO.,
38 Burling Slip, N. Y. City.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

SPECTACLES at wholesale. Send for catalog. Agents wanted. COULTER OPTICAL CO., Chicago, Ill.

STARK BROS PAY CASH every WEEK if you sell STARK TREES. Outfit free. STARK NURSERY, LOUISIANA, MO., Rockport, Ill., Dansville, N.Y.

The Latest Improved McCREERY FOLDING VAPOR BATH CABINET. Has a Door and all the latest improvements. A home treatment that will cure la grippe, rheumatism, all blood, skin & kidney troubles, reduces superfluous flesh. Price $5. Face steamer $1.50 extra. Folds neatly in small space. Free descriptive book and testimonials. Special inducements to salesmen. MOLLENKOPF & McCREERY, 138 Summit St. Toledo, O.

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES: no experience needed; position permanent; self seller. PEASE MFG. Co., P.O. BOX A [illegible], O.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

NEW YORK, JUNE 28, 1899

VOLUME 22—NUMBER 26

PRICE FIVE CENTS

THE HEATED TERM IN NEW YORK—AN EVENING SCENE ON THE ROOF OF A CROWDED TENEMENT (See page 512)

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Mrs. James A., Washington, O. Where is the Porte Dorée? I have a picture given to me by a missionary in Turkey, with the title mentioned. It is the ruin of a beautiful building.

The Porte Dorée or "Golden Gate," is a double-arched passage in the outer wall of the Haram in Jerusalem, now closed up. It is evidently a work of antiquity, probably of the time of Herod.

Subscriber, De Groat, N. D. Why do not all churches adopt the ceremony of foot-washing?

Because they have too much sense. The passage you quote (John 13: 14) would not be fulfilled by foot-washing. Like all Christ's commands and teachings, his words on this subject conveyed a general instruction. He taught humility, and in that day the man who washed the feet of another showed his humility. He could not show it more conspicuously. It was a common habit, as common as washing the hands is with us. It was done by a servant, and therefore when Christ washed the disciples' feet, he took the place of a servant. That was the principle he laid down. The washing of the feet was merely an illustration of a man being ready to do menial, or any kind of work that was needed. If we were accustomed to going around barefoot, or with sandals and no stockings, the practice of having servants to wash the feet might again become common, and then the Christian might do that or any other menial work. But to do it now, argues a singular lack of understanding, an observance of the letter instead of the spirit, which Christ condemned.

L. M. W., Terry, S. Dak. If other planets are inhabited, in what way do they become heirs of eternal glory, when this world required a Jesus Christ to atone [illegible]

Your question is one wholly outside the domain of human speculation. We do not know that other worlds, assuming them to be inhabited, are sin-cursed and fallen, like ours. Again, while they may be the abodes of intelligent beings, their seasons, climate and general conditions are probably so very different from ours that no comparison can be established between the inhabitants, on moral or physical grounds. They are all parts of God's vast universe, whose extent, character and development are incomprehensible to finite minds. Astronomical writers have reckoned that the stellar host exceeds two thousand millions, and each new telescopic improvement reveals new worlds. Whatever may be the condition of the people of other spheres, you may depend upon it that the Divine Father's love and care are experienced universally, and that whether those distant worlds have ever had a revelation such as ours or not, there is no world where intelligent creatures exist that does not enjoy a sense of the Divine protection and a recognition of the beneficent government of the all-wise Creator.

R. A., Rising Sun, Ia. What is the meaning of [illegible] Matt. 5: 22?

The people who listened to him thought that he was making things easier by abolishing law. He showed them that in his dispensation the requirements were even more radical than in the old. He therefore quotes in the previous verse, as an illustration, the law against murder and then shows that his demand went far deeper. His followers must not only refrain from murder, but from the angry feeling which leads to it.

W. S., Manston, Wis. 1. Is it possible for men to become perfect as Christ was perfect? 2. Will God be satisfied with anything less?

1. It is possible, but we have never heard of any man who attained it. Many have claimed to have done so, but in no instance has the claim been admitted by the persons around them, who were qualified to judge. As a rule, the persons making the claim, exhibit the fatal defect of not having the humility of Christ, and they often show a lack of the kindliness and charity which characterized him. But we ought to strive after that ideal, and those who keep their ideals high, have the highest attainment. 2. We think God will not be satisfied with anything less than perfection, but we believe he will be merciful and will not exclude from his presence those who have tried to attain it and have failed. "He considereth our frame and remembereth that we are dust."

J. W. R., Pony, Mont. In what respect will the resurrected body differ from our natural body?

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he appeareth we shall be like him" (See I. John 3: 2).

C. D., a soldier correspondent at Camp Vedado, Cuba, sends this interesting letter:

Please allow us, through your paper—which has been weekly found upon our Y. M. C. A. reading table—to express the hearty appreciation of the men of the artillery for the faithful and earnest work of Mr. H. A. Howell, who has had charge of the Y. M. C. A. work among us here in Cuba. His labors have been crowned with success, and have proved a blessing to many of our boys. I can always look back with great delight and pleasure to the night of Feb. 22, when, after listening to a short, earnest and heart-touching sermon on the [illegible] "What will you do with Jesus?" in our [illegible] within [illegible] very depths, and I found myself one of eleven who arose. After the meeting I spent two hours with the speaker in his little sleeping tent, in prayer and searching God's Word, for I could not go to sleep that night till I had found peace and favor with my God. The International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. has no more earnest worker in the field, or to whom the men took to more kindly than Mr. H. A. Howell.

C. A., Philadelphia, Pa. The arguments for conditional immortality appear to me so cogent that, but for certain explicit statements in the Bible, I should reject the idea of eternal punishment. Is there any way of explaining them? Will the soul grow or develop after death?

Many Christian men, some of them eminent, hold the belief in conditional immortality; but the most learned of them have your difficulty in reconciling those passages of Scripture with the belief. But you must remember that conditional immortality does not exclude the idea of future punishment. It rather intensifies it by regarding it as so extreme as to be destructive. It really does not concern the man who trusts in Christ whether the impenitent live and suffer after death or pass through so fierce a fire that they really lose their existence by a second death. You cannot prove that the soul develops in the future life, but what would be the use of a future life if it did not develop?

Reader, Albany, N. Y. Canals date from a period long before the Christian era. The Chinese work in this line is said to be unrivalled, the Imperial canal having a length of about 1,000 miles. These early canals were made very largely on level ground and required no great skill. It was not until the fifteenth century that the lock was invented, the Italians and Dutch both claiming the invention. In 1681, the Canal of Languedoc was completed, and was one of the greatest undertakings of the kind on the continent. It is 148 miles long, and has more than 100 locks and about 50 aqueducts, and the highest point is [illegible] Canal dates back to antiquity, but was re-made in modern times.

R. S. Bosworth, Brownville, N. Y. One of the [illegible] That these scales were not made to weigh sugar [illegible]

* * *

Which contained all the wit that had ever been [illegible]

As a weight he threw in the [illegible] scrap of a leaf
Containing the prayer of t[illegible]
When the skull rose aloft [illegible]
That it danced like a ball [illegible]

Seventy years have nearly swept it from my mind. Can any of your readers furnish it for reproduction in your valuable journal?

Rev. Frederic Bayliss, pastor of the "Prairie Church," at Imperial, Neb., writes:

My people wish to thank THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers for their kindly interest and support in procuring the necessary funds for a [illegible] you all.

N. Y., Decker's Road, Pa. Is it right for women to speak in Christian Endeavor meetings and other meetings, when Paul directed them to keep silence in church?

Yes, quite right. Paul explained why he gave the injunction. The circumstances of the Corinthian church were peculiar. It would have done irreparable mischief to have allowed women to speak there. But our circumstances are very different, and if Paul were here now, he would be glad to have them speak, as they do so much good.

Mrs. Etta Sargent, So. Starksboro, Vt. 1. I wish some of your readers would send me the full poem of which this verse is an extract:

"We have been without a pastor some eighteen months or more.
And though candidates are plenty—we've had at least a score.
All of 'em tip-top preachers, or so their letters ran—
[illegible]"

2. What is the Via Dolorosa? 3. What does I. N. R. I. (the inscription over the Saviour's cross) mean? 4. Also the letters S. P. Q. R. in the picture of Christ before Pilate?

1. Some reader may be able to supply the missing verses. 2. It means the "Sorrowful Way," the route by which the Redeemer was led from the Praetorium to Calvary. 3. They are the initials of Jesus Nazarenus Rex Iudæum (Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews). 4. The letters are the initials of the words "Senatus Populusque Romanus" (the Roman Senate and People).

Distressed Reader, ——, Ia. Ought a wife whose husband is living in sin to ignore his life and treat him as if he was doing right, or should she reprove him, or leave him?

It is difficult to advise, without knowing more of the circumstances. First of all, in any circumstances, she should pray earnestly for him. We doubt if much is to be gained by reproof. Husbands do not take that kind of talk docilely from their wives. Perhaps pleading and entreating might be more effectual. Leaving him would be the last and extreme [illegible] saving him which, of course, is the object she has in view. We do not know his character, and it is possible that it may require special treatment, but in most cases the most effective means are prayer and a loving, earnest appeal.

Referring to a recent paragraph in THE MAIL-BAG, regarding electro-magnets, Read—, Albany, N. Y., writes:

[illegible] as the door bell requires a direct and steady current to ring it. As to its making an electro-magnet, an alternating current is only used for an electro-magnet in the process of demagnetizing [illegible] magnet.

S. M. Hine, Winsted, Conn., writes us that he has two old Bibles, one printed by Mark and Charles Kerr, His Majesty's printers, 1795, Edinburgh; the other printed by T. Wright [illegible]

L. M. W., Terry, S. Dak., writes:

[illegible] goes rolling ahead of a light breeze and leaves a seed wherever a thorn touches the ground. The [illegible] afterward springs up and chokes all else out. Where it once gets a hold it cannot be exterminated.

J. W. B., Amsterdam, N. Y. Feeling called by the [illegible] course should I pursue to fulfil his command?

Go among your friends and those who are around you and try to win for Christ any who have not given their hearts to him. Gather any children you may know of who do not go to Sunday School and try to win them for Christ. If you know any mission where an effort is being made to reach people who do not go to church, go and help it, and if there is no such mission near you, [illegible] get into a salaried position where you will be paid for working for Christ. Earn your own livelihood and give your work for him freely without any compensation other than that he will give.

R. K. B., Hilo, Hawaii. Was the new Catechism, of which you published the chief parts recently, unanimously adopted by the several churches mentioned? Where can it be procured?

Not by the churches, but by the committee elected by the churches. [illegible] the churches think the [illegible] did not do its work well. The committee itself was unanimous, and so far as we have seen by the comments in the leading religious papers, the work is heartily approved. You can procure the complete catechism by sending five cents to the American Sunday School Union, Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

T. W., Preston, Kans., C. Matz, Lodi, [illegible] reliable Sunday School statistics? If so, what are the chief?

The United States lead with 123,173 schools, 1,305,939 teachers, and 9,718,432 pupils. Next comes Great [illegible] and 5,976,537 pupils. Next is Canada, with 8,386 schools, 69,521 teachers, and 576,064 pupils. Other countries are a long way behind. Russia, for example, has 88 schools, 777 teachers, and 15,524 pupils.

L. W. W., Brooklyn, N. Y. He is still living.

R. R. C., Kresgeville, Pa. We know of none.

A. C., Bristol, N. H. We know of no such place.

J. N. E. McC., Corydon, Ia. We are not familiar with it.

A. W., Arrow River, Man. Send them to the [illegible]

J. A. S., Merrimac, Ill. The article in question was undoubtedly greatly exaggerated.

Anxious, N. Y. Such an indorsement would probably be construed as a renewal of the note.

F. C. F., Wilton, N. H. Write to Rev. Josiah Strong, United Charities Building, New York City.

T. V. F., Avilla, Mo. It opens, we believe, in May, 1900, and will remain open probably six months or even longer.

Constant Reader, Pacific Coast. 1. No. 2. Ditson & Co., New York. 3. Regulated by Government, according to sales. 4. Individual conscience must decide such a question.

I. H. S., Le Roy, Mich. Certainly, but all the schools were under the control of the Roman Catholic Church, and the educational system was anti- [illegible]

A. A. C., Ayrshire, Ind. 1. None whatever. The epistle was written to the people of Philippi, a city of Macedonia, now a part of the Turkish Empire. 2. Either pride and boastfulness or because he wanted to impose a new tax.

Miss L. E. L., Salem, N. C. The beautiful poem entitled the "Unrecognized Christ," which appeared in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, was written by [illegible] P. Rose, of Canada, read the poem with great effect at a recent ministerial meeting in that country.

A COSTA RICA WOMAN MAKING TORTILLAS

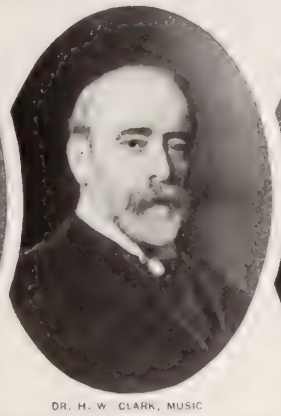
Tortillas are flat cakes made of coarse corn meal and baked on a hot iron plate or a heated stove. They are universally used in South American countries, and are eaten by the rich and the poor.

: : Christian Endeavor's Annual Convention : :

The Great Assembly of the Society to be Held Next Week at Detroit, Mich., for Conference and Fellowship

F. M. THOMPSON, BUILDINGS

F. KENNEDY, PRINTING



DR. H. W. CLARK, MUSIC

G. J. VINTON, B.Y.P.U.

A. G. HIGGINSON, DETROIT Y.P.S.C.E.

F. J. MASON, DECORATIONS

CHAIRMEN OF COMMITTEES OF THE INTERNATIONAL C. E. CONVENTION

THE great red-letter day of the Christian Endeavorer's year is at hand. One week from the date of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD many thousands of earnest young men and women—how many cannot yet be estimated—will be in Detroit, Mich., to attend the first session of the Eighteenth International Convention of the Christian Endeavor Society. From that evening until the evening of Monday, July 10, there will be a succession of meetings that will fill the delegate's time and make his visit to the Convention city a golden memory and a spiritual uplift of his life. On this page are portraits of the men who, for a year past, have been planning and toiling to make the Convention a success. It requires no little administrative ability to entertain such a multitude of guests as the Christian Endeavor Society sends into the city which has the honor of playing the part of host for the annual assembly. But Detroit has enlisted her best men and they have gone to work so energetically and with such forethought and systematic vigor, that they are prepared now to welcome all who come, and the larger the contingent the better they will be pleased.

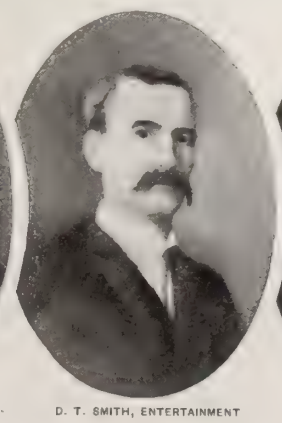
SECRETARY C. R. COOK—C. E. HEADQUARTERS IN DETROIT, MICH.—TREASURER R. G. ANGELL

The city, as we learn from the "Greeting of the Press Committee," promises everything that is delightful to the coming guests. The headquarters are on Campus Martus, to which all street car lines lead, and are therefore easily found. Beautiful spots, resorts and pleasure retreats are close at hand. The Committee has looked up the records of temperature for the last eight years and finds that the mean record is of seventy-three degrees and only four times in the eight years has any one of the days fixed for the convention this year been a rainy one. Near at hand is Belle Isle, a beautiful island of seven hundred acres, covered with woods and lawns, beautiful flowers and sequestred nooks. At night it is a veritable fairy land, with its electric lights and its witchery of wave and foliage. Besides this, Detroit boasts of twenty-seven other parks and lovely wide breathing-places, which soothe and delight the senses of the lover of nature. The visitor to Detroit next week will therefore find delights for the body as well as the soul provided for his delectation.

The Convention will open with a prayer-and-praise meeting on Wednesday evening, at which Dr. F. E. Clark will preside. Addresses of welcome will be given, and the due responses made. On Thursday morning, at 8.15, and every morning during the convention, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman will conduct a quiet hour in the Light Guard Armory. At 9.30 the chief session will be held in Tent Endeavorer, under the presidency of Dr. Nehemiah Boynton. At this session, Secretary Baer will read his annual report, and President Clark will make his annual address. In the afternoon, about thirty denominational conferences will be held in various churches. In the evening, simultaneous services will be held in Tent Endeavorer, Tent Williston and the First Presbyterian Church, in which last Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, of Topeka, Kan., will read a story he has written specially for this Convention. Friday will be given up to work and conferences and addresses on practical Christian Endeavor work. On Saturday the motto is to be, "Saved to Serve," and addresses will be given by Dr. Clark and other eminent speakers. In the afternoon there will be an excursion to Belle Isle, and in the evening the State rallies will be held. Two evangelistic meetings will be held on Sunday afternoon, and in the evening twenty-six simultaneous Consecration meetings will be held in as many churches. Monday is Home and Foreign Missionary day. In the afternoon the rally of the Juniors takes place, which will for many be the great event of the convention. The farewell meetings in the evening will be addressed respectively by Bishop Vincent and Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman.

Among the speakers besides those already mentioned are: Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, the new pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn; Rev. A. C. Crews, of Toronto; Rev. S. A. Noble, of Chicago; Dr. S. P. Henson, of Chicago; and Dr. Wilton Merle Smith and Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of New York.

DR J. E. DAVIS, EXCURSIONS



D. T. SMITH, ENTERTAINMENT

REV. A. H. BARR, PULPIT

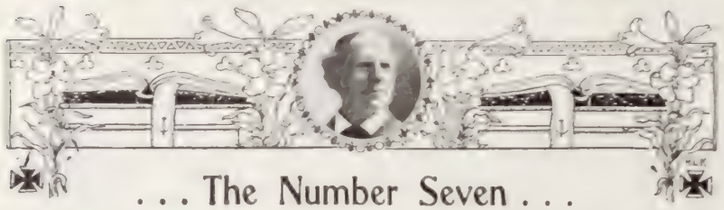
DR. NEHEMIAH BOYNTON, TRUSTEE C. E.

W. H. STRONG, GENERAL CHAIRMAN

H. H. BURR, RECEPTION

OFFICERS OF THE GREAT CONVENTION OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES

· THE · METROPOLITAN · PULPIT ·



. . . The Number Seven . . .

A Sermon by The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Genesis 2: 3, ... God blessed the seventh day

THE mathematics of the Bible is noticeable: the geometry and the arithmetic: the square in Ezekiel: the circle spoken of in Isaiah: the curve alluded to in Job: the rule of fractions mentioned in Daniel: the rule of loss and gain in Mark, where Christ asks the people to cipher out by that rule what it would "profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul." But there is one mathematical figure that is crowned above all others in the Bible: it is the numeral seven, which the Arabians got from India, and all following ages have taken from the Arabians. It stands between the figure six and the figure eight. In the Bible all the other numerals bow to it. Over three hundred times it is mentioned in the Scriptures, either alone or compounded with other words. In Genesis the week is rounded into seven days, and I use my text because there this numeral is for the first time introduced in a journey which halts not until in the close of the Book of Revelations its monument is built into the wall of heaven in chrysolite, which, in the strata of precious stones is the seventh.

In the Bible we find that Jacob had to serve seven years to get Rachel, but she was well worth it: and, foretelling the years of prosperity and famine in Pharaoh's time, the seven fat oxen were eaten up of the seven lean oxen: and wisdom is said to be built on seven pillars: and the ark was left with the Philistines seven years: and Naaman, for the cure of his leprosy, plunged in the Jordan seven times: the dead child, when Elisha breathed into its mouth, signalled its arrival back into consciousness by sneezing seven times: to the house that Ezekiel saw in vision, there were seven steps: the walls of Jericho, before they fell down, were compassed seven days: Zechariah describes a stone with seven eyes: to cleanse a leprous house, the door must be sprinkled with pigeons' blood seven times: in Canaan were overthrown seven nations: on one occasion Christ cast out seven devils: on a mountain he fed a multitude of people with seven loaves, the fragments left filling seven baskets: and the closing passages of the Bible are magnificent and overwhelming with the imagery made up of seven churches, seven stars, seven candlesticks, seven seals, seven angels, and seven heads, and seven crowns and seven horns, and seven spirits, and seven vials, and seven plagues, and seven thunders.

Yea, the numeral seven seems a favorite with the divine mind outside as well as inside the Bible, for are there not seven prismatic colors? And when God with the rainbow wrote the comforting thought that the world would never have another deluge, he wrote it on the scroll of the sky in ink of seven colors. He grouped into the Pleiades seven stars. Rome, the capital of the world, sat on seven hills. When God would make the most intelligent thing on earth, the human countenance, he fashioned it with seven features—the two ears, the two eyes, the two nostrils and the mouth. Yea, our body lasts only seven years, and we gradually shed it for another body after another seven years, and so on, for we are, as to our bodies, septennial animals. So the numeral seven ranges through nature and through revelation. It is the number of perfection, and so I use it while I speak of the seven candlesticks, the seven stars, the seven seals and the seven thunders.

The seven golden candlesticks were and are the churches. Mark you, the churches never were, and never can be, candles. They are only candlesticks. They are not the light, but they are to hold the light. A room in the night might have in it five hundred candlesticks, and yet you could not see your hand before your face. The only use of a candlestick, and the only use of a church, is to hold up the light. You see it is a dark world, the night of sin, the night of trouble, the night of superstition, the night of persecution, the night of poverty, the night of sickness, the night of death: aye, about fifty nights have interlocked their shadows. The whole race goes stumbling over prostrated hopes and fallen fortunes and empty flour barrels and desolated cradles and deathbeds. How much we have use for all the seven candlesticks, with lights blazing from the top of each one of them! Light of pardon for all sin! Light of comfort for all trouble! Light of encouragement for all despondency! Light of eternal riches for all poverty! Light of rescue for all persecution! Light of reunion for all the bereft! Light of heaven for all the dying! And that light is Christ, who is the Light that shall yet irradiate the hemispheres.

But mark you, when I say churches are not candles, but candlesticks, I cast no slur on candlesticks. I believe in beautiful candlesticks. The candlesticks that God ordered for the ancient tabernacle were something exquisite. They were a dream of beauty carved out of loveliness. They were made of hammered gold, stood in a foot of gold, and had six branches of gold blooming all along in six lilies of gold each, and lips of gold, from which the candles lifted their holy fire. And the best houses in any city ought to be the churches—the best built, the best ventilated, the best swept, the best windowed, and the best chandeliered. Log-cabins may do in neighborhoods where most of the people live in log-cabins; but let there be palatial churches for regions where many of the people live in palaces. Do not have a better place for yourself than for your Lord and King. Do not live in a parlor and put your Christ in a kitchen. These seven candlesticks of which I speak were not made of pewter or iron: they were golden candlesticks, and gold is not only a valuable but a bright metal. Have everything about your church bright—your ushers with smiling faces, your music jubilant, your hand-shaking cordial, your entire service attractive. Many people feel that in church they must look dull, in order to be reverential, and many whose faces in other kinds of assemblage show all the different phases of emotion, have in church no more expression than the back wheel of a hearse. Brighten up and be responsive. If you feel like weeping, weep. If you feel like smiling, smile. If you feel indignant at some wrong assailed from the pulpit, frown. Do not leave your naturalness and resiliency home because it is Sunday morning. If as officers of a church you meet people at the church-door with a black look, and have the music black, and the minister in black preach a black sermon, and from invocation to benediction have the impression black, few will come: and those who do come will wish they had not come at all.

Golden candlesticks! Scour up the six lilies on each branch, and know that the more lovely and bright they are, the more fit they are to hold the light. But a Christless light is a damage to the world rather than a good. Cromwell stabled his cavalry horses in St. Paul's Cathedral, and many now use the church in which to stable vanities and worldliness. A worldly church is a candlestick without the candle, and it had its prototype in St. Sophia, in Constantinople, built to the glory of God by Constantine, but transformed to base uses by Mohammed the Second. Built out of colored marble; a cupola with twenty-four windows soaring to a height of 180 feet; the ceiling one great bewilderment of mosaic; galleries supported by eight columns of porphyry and sixty-seven columns of green jasper; nine bronze doors with alto-relievo work, [illegible] and vestments encrusted with all manner of precious stones. Four walls on fire with indescribable splendor. Though labor was cheap, the building cost one million five hundred thousand dollars. Ecclesiastical structure, almost supernatural in pomp and majesty. But Mohammedanism tore down from the walls of that building all the saintly and Christly images, and high up in the dome the figure of the cross was rubbed out that the crescent of the barbarous Turk might be substituted. A great church, but no Christ! A gorgeous candlestick, but no candle! Ten thousand such churches would not give the world as much light as one home-made tallow candle by which last night some grandmother in the eighties put on her spectacles and read the Psalms of David in large type. Up with the churches, by all means! Hundreds of them, thousands of them, and the more the better. But let each one be a blaze of heavenly light, making the world brighter and brighter, till the last shadow has disappeared, and the last of the suffering children of God shall have reached the land where they have no need of candlestick or "of candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever." Seven candlesticks the complete number of lights! Let your light shine before men, that they seeing your good works, may glorify your Father which is in heaven.

Turn now in your Bible to the seven stars. We are distinctly told that they are the ministers of religion. Some are large stars, some of them small stars, some of them sweep a wide circuit and some of them a small circuit, but so far as they are genuine, they get their light from the great central Sun around whom they make revolution. Let each one keep in his own sphere. The solar system would be soon wrecked if the stars, instead of keeping their own orbits, should go to hunting down other stars. Ministers of religion should never clash. But in all the centuries of the Christian church some of these stars have been hunting an Edward Irving or a Horace Bushnell or an Albert Barnes: and the stars that were in pursuit of the other stars lost their own orbit, and some of them could never again find it. Alas for the heresy hunters! The best way to destroy error is to preach the truth. The best way to scatter darkness is to strike a light. There is in immensity room enough for all the stars, and in the church room enough for all the ministers. The ministers who give up righteousness and the truth will get punishment enough anyhow, for they are "the wandering stars for whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever."

I should like, as a minister, when I am dying, to be able truthfully to say what a captain of the English army, fallen at the head of his column and dying on the Egyptian battle-field said to General Wolseley, who came to condole with him. "I led them straight: didn't I lead them straight, General?" God has put us ministers as captains in this battle-field of truth against error. Great at last will be our chagrin if we fail leading the people the wrong way: but great will be our gladness if, when the battle is over, we can hand our sword back to our great Commander, saying: "Lord Jesus! We led the people straight: didn't we lead them straight?" Those ministers who go off at a tangent and preach some other gospel are not stars, but comets, and they flash across the heavens a little while and make people stare, and throw down a few meteoric stones, and then go out of sight if not out of existence. Brethren in the ministry, let us remember that God calls us stars, and our business is to shine and to keep our own sphere, and then when we get done trying to light up the darkness of this world, we will wheel into higher spheres, and in us shall be fulfilled the promise "they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

[illegible] you think! Forgive me, if having at other times glorified the medical profession, and the legal profession, and the literary profession — I glorify my own. I have [illegible] men never breathed, and the Bible figure is not strained when it calls them stars: and whole constellations of glorious ministers have already taken their places on high, where they shine even brighter than they shone on earth: Edward N. Kirk, of the Congregational Church: Stephen H. Tying, of the Episcopal Church: Matthew Simpson, of the Methodist Church: John Dowling, of the Baptist Church: Samuel K. Talmage, of the Presbyterian Church: Thomas DeWitt, of the Reformed Church: John Chambers, of the Independent Church: and there I stop, for it so happens that I have mentioned the seven stars of the seven churches.

I pass on to another mighty Bible seven, and they are the seven seals. St. John in vision saw a scroll with seven seals, and he heard an angel cry: "Who is worthy to loose the seals thereof?" Take eight or ten sheets of foolscap paper, paste them together and roll them into a scroll, and have the scroll at seven different places sealed with sealing wax. You unroll the scroll till you come to one of these seals, and then you can go no further until you break that seal: then unroll again until you come to another seal, and you can go no further until you break that seal: then you go on until all the seven seals are broken, and the contents of the entire scroll are revealed. Now, that scroll with seven seals held by the angel was the prophecy of what was to come on the earth: it meant that the knowledge of the future was with God, and no man and no angel was worthy to open it: but the Bible says Christ opened it and broke all the seven seals. He broke the first seal and unrolled the scroll, and there was a picture of a white horse, and that meant prosperity and triumph for the Roman Empire, and so it really came to pass that for ninety years virtuous emperors succeeded each other—Nerva, Trajan and Antoninus. Christ in the vision broke the second seal and unrolled again, and there was a picture of a red horse, and that meant bloodshed, and so it really came to pass, and the next ninety years were red with assassinations and wars. Then Christ broke the third seal and unrolled it, and there was a picture of a black horse, which in all literature means famine, oppression and taxation: and so it really came to pass. Christ went on until he broke all the seven seals and opened all the scroll. Well, the future of all of us is a sealed scroll, and I am glad that no one but Christ can open it. Do not let us join that class of Christians in our day, who are trying to break the seven seals of the future. They are trying to peep into things they have no business with.

Do not go to some necromancer or spiritualist or soothsayer or fortune-teller to find out what is going to happen to yourself or your family, or your friends. Wait till Christ breaks the seal to find out whether in your own personal life or the life of the nation, or the life of the world it is going to be the white horse of prosperity, or the red horse of war, or the black horse of famine. You will soon enough see him paw and hear him neigh. Take care of the present, and the future will take care of itself. If a man live seventy years, his biography is in a scroll having at least seven seals: and let him not during the first ten years of his life try to look into the twenties, nor the twenties into the thirties, nor the thirties into the forties, nor the forties into the fifties, nor the fifties into the sixties, nor the sixties into the seventies. From the way the years have got the habit of racing along, I guess you will not have to wait a great while before all the seals of the future are broken. I would not give two cents to know how long I am going to live, or in what day of what year the world is going to be demolished. I would rather give a thousand dollars not to know. Suppose some one could break the next seal in the scroll of your personal history, and should tell you that on the next 4th of July, 1901, you were to die, the summer after next, how much would you be good for between this and that? It would from now until then be a prolonged funeral. You would be counting the months and the days, and your family and friends would be counting them: and next 4th of July you would rub your hands together and whine: "One year from to-day I am to go. Dear me! I wish no one had told me so long before. I wish that necromancer had not broken the seal of the future." And meeting some undertaker, you would say: "I hope you will keep yourself free for an engagement the 4th of July, 1901. That day you will be needed at my house. To save time, you might as well take my measure now, five feet, eleven inches." I am glad that Christ dropped a thick veil over the hour of our demise, and of the hour of the world's destruction when he said. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man; no, not the angels, but my Father only." Keep your hands off the seven seals.

There is another mighty seven of the Bible, viz., the seven thunders. What those thunders meant we are not told, and there has been much guessing about them; but they are to come, we are told, before the end of all things, and the world cannot get along without them. Thunder is the speech of lightning. There are evils in our world which must be thundered down, and which will require at least seven volleys to prostrate them. We are all doing nice, delicate, soft-handed work, in churches and reformatory institutions, against the evils of the world, and much of it amounts to a teaspoon dipping out the Atlantic Ocean, or a clam-shell digging away at a mountain, or a tack-hammer smiting the Gibraltar. What is needed is thunderbolts, and at least seven of them. There is the long line of fraudulent commercial establishments, every stone in the foundation, and every brick in the wall, and every nail in the rafter made out of dishonesty: skeletons of poorly paid sewing-girls' arms in every beam of that establishment: human nerves worked into every figure of that embroidery: blood in the deep dye of that refulgent upholstery; billions of dollars of accumulated fraud entrenched in massive storehouses, and stock companies manipulated by unscrupulous men, until the monopoly is defiant of all earth and heaven. How shall the evil be overcome? By treatises on the maxim: Honesty is the best policy? Or by soft repetition of the golden rule that we must 'Do to others as we would have them do to us?" No, it will not be done that way. What is needed and will come is the seven thunders.

There is drunkenness backed up by a capital mightier than in any other business. Intoxicating liquors enough in this country to float a navy. Good grain to the amount of 67,950,000 bushels annually destroyed to make the deadly liquid. Breweries, distilleries, gin shops, rum palaces, liquor associations, our nation spending annually seven hundred and forty millions of dollars for rum, resulting in bankruptcy, disease, pauperism, filth, assassination, death, illimitable woe. What will stop them? High license? No. Prohibition laws? No. Churches? No. Moral suasion? No. Thunderbolts will do it: nothing else will. Seven thunders!

Yonder are intrenched Infidelity and Atheism with their magazines of literature scoffing at our Christianity; their Hoe printing-presses busy day and night. There are their blaspheming apostles, their drunken Tom Paines and libertine Voltaires of the present as well as the past, reinforced by all the powers of darkness from highest demon to lowest imp. What will extirpate those monsters of infidelity and atheism? John Brown's shorter catechism about "Who made you?' or Westminster Catechism about "What is the chief end of man?" No. Thunderbolts! The seven thunders! For the impurities of the world, empalaced as well as cellared, epauletted as well as ragged, enthroned as well as ditched; for corrupt legislation which at times makes our State and National capitals a hemispheric stench; for superstitions that keep whole nations in squalor century after century, their Juggernauts crushing, their knives lacerating, their waters drowning, their funeral pyres burning, the seven thunders!

Oh, men and women, disheartened at the bad way things often go, hear you not a rumbling down the sky of heavy artillery, coming in on our side, the seven thunders of the Almighty? Do not let us try to wield them ourselves; they are too heavy and too fiery for us to handle; but God can and God will; and when all mercy has failed and all milder means are wholly exhausted, then judgment will begin. Thunderbolts! Depend upon it, that what is not done under the flash of the seven candlesticks will be done by the trampling of the seven thunders. But I leave this imperial and multipotent numeral seven, where the Bible leaves it, imbedded in the finest wall that was ever built, or will be constructed, the wall of heaven. It is the seven strata of precious stones that make up that wall. After naming six of the precious stones in that wall, the Bible cries out—"the seventh chrysolite!" The chrysolite is an exquisite green, and in that seventh layer of the heavenly wall shall be preserved forever the dominant color of the earth we once inhabited.

I have sometimes been deeply saddened at the thought that this world, according to Science and Revelation, is to be blotted out of existence, for it is such a beautiful world. But here in this layer of the heavenly wall, where the numeral seven is to be embedded, this strata of green is to be photographed, and embalmed and perpetuated, the color of the grass that covers the earth, the color of the foliage that fills the forest, the color of the deep sea. One glance at that green chrysolite, a million years after this planet has been extinguished, will bring to mind just how it looked in summer and spring, and we will say to those who were born blind on earth, and never saw at all in this world, after they have obtained full eyesight in heaven: "If you would know how the earth appeared in June and August, look at that seventh layer of the heavenly wall, the green of the chrysolite."

And while we stand there and talk, spirit with spirit, that old color of the earth which had more sway than all the other colors put together, will bring back to us our earthly experiences, and noticing that this green chrysolite is the seventh layer of crystalized magnificence, we may bethink ourselves of the domination of that numeral seven over all other numerals, and thank God that in the dark earth we left behind us we so long enjoyed the light of the seven golden candlesticks, and were all of us permitted to shine among the seven stars of more or less magnitude, and that all the seven seals of the mysterious future have been broken wide open for us by a loving Christ, and that the seven thunders having done their work have ceased reverberation, and that the numeral seven, which did such tremendous work in the history of nations on earth, has been given such a high place in that Niagara of colors, the wall of heaven, "the first foundation of which is jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite."

When shall these eyes thy heaven-built walls
And pearly gates behold:
Thy bulwarks with salvation strong,
And streets of shining gold?

... To Fight the Drink Traffic ...

The National Anti-Saloon League's Work Progressing with Amazing Results—Organized in 26 States

FIVE years ago a little band of godly men, in the State of Ohio, met for the purpose of considering the best method of combating the drink evil. As the result of that gathering, an Anti-Saloon League was organized. The movement begun so quietly and unostentatiously rapidly developed strength, and found friends in other States. The Anti-Saloon League is now a national organization, with active members in twenty-six States, and with nearly one hundred devoted Christian men and women giving all their time and energies exclusively to the prosecution of the work. About sixty of these workers are ministers of the Gospel, who have withdrawn from local pastorates, owing to an overwhelming conviction that the churches must do more for the suppression of the liquor traffic in the future than they have done in the past. The motto of the League is: "The Saloon Must Go," and its ultimate aim is the total effacement of the open grog-shop, as the citadel of the corrupting and benumbing influences of the city and of the public conscience.

REV. HOWARD H. RUSSELL, D.D., LL.D.
National Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League

REV. J. Q. A. HENRY
Superintendent New York Anti-Saloon League

The League works in, through, for and by the churches, making them, as organizations, responsible for an aggressive temperance reform. It maintains that the church is the original reform institution that alone has the power, and ought to have the disposition to crush the liquor traffic. It holds that Christian people are primarily the custodians of the public conscience, and that they must set the pace of civic reform. It contends that the problem of the open saloon will never be solved until the Christian forces can be organized, consolidated and hurled against this enemy of Christian progress and good government.

The League makes the open saloon the point of attack, and thereby avoids much controversy, concerning issues that have too frequently been used disastrously against temperance work. Its adherents agree to think differently on many minor points. Its seeks to federate all moral Christian forces against the saloon. It is interdenominational and omni-partisan in its methods. It works with all parties and with all creeds, upon the sole condition that they are the foes of the saloon, and stand together on one issue—the destruction of the open dram-shop. It contends that the twenty-six million church-members in this country ought to have more voice in directing the policy and determining the government of the nation, than the two hundred and forty thousand saloon-keepers have. It makes no attempt to build up a new party, nor to favor any party, but to use and work through all parties opposed to the drink traffic. The League seeks to drive the liquor traffic back within the limit of license and law, as the best method to secure a public sentiment that will demand legislation so full and so complete as to destroy the open saloon.

The methods of the League appeal strongly to the business men, so that financial aid has never been wanting with which to conduct a vigorous and victorious crusade. In Ohio, within the past five years, the League has reduced the number of saloons from more than thirteen to nine thousand. Last year more than fifteen hundred saloons were voted out of Ohio. Within three years four hundred towns and villages have voted the saloon out of existence. In North Dakota, forty-five towns recently voted on the question of license or no license. Out of the forty-five, forty-one went dry. Similar results are being realized in Michigan, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and other States in which the League is fully organized. The great results achieved in other States inspire the conviction that the Empire State will offer the widest field for the League of any State in the Union. For nearly three years representative ministers and laymen have been urging the national organization to begin work in the State of New York. The plans are now completed and the work has begun. Already more than fifty meetings have been held in as many different churches, covering much of the Hudson River Valley District, including the cities of Poughkeepsie, Kingston and Newburgh. Wherever presented, the work of the League has received most hospitable welcome, and the representatives are greatly encouraged concerning the outlook. At the present time the newly-elected State Superintendent, Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D.D., of Poughkeepsie, is being assisted by three representatives of the national organization, including Rev. Howard H. Russell, D.D., National Superintendent; Rev. H. A. Tucker, D.D., and the Rev. J. C. Jackson, D.D., Assistant National Superintendents. These men will remain in New York State for two or three months at least, to assist in getting the work thoroughly established.

Already hundreds of ministers and churches in the State are urging an early visit to their churches and cities to assist them in federating the temperance forces for an onslaught against the saloon. Until after the summer vacation, the headquarters of the State League will be at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and the work will be largely confined to the centre and western portion of the State. In the fall, it is expected that permanent headquarters will be opened in the City of New York, and a most aggressive temperance reform will be inaugurated.

"Mustered Out"

At the muffled drum came his comrades gray
And formed into line where the hero lay;
To the silent ranks he had passed away:
He was "mustered out."

They draped the flag above the form
That had stood unmoved 'mid the battle storm;
But silent and cold was the heart so warm
He was "mustered out."

E. Corinth, Me. —MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and [illegible] Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Daniel in Babylon

S. S. Lesson for July 9. Dan. 1: 8-21
Golden Text, Dan. 1: 8

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

DANIEL [illegible] the captives who were carried away into Babylon in the reign of Jehoiakim, probably about 606 or 607 B. C. (II. Chron. 35: 5-7); about eighteen or nineteen years before the final taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, after the protracted siege, when the inhabitants were starved into submission (II. Kings 25: 1-4). Daniel was of noble, perhaps even of royal blood; and was chosen, among others, by the special favor of King Nebuchadnezzar to be educated at his expense in the first schools of learning in Babylon, the then centre of the world. Nebuchadnezzar, heathen though he was, had not the spirit of a cruel, narrow-minded tyrant; there was very much that was large-hearted and noble in his character; it was only when his imperious will was crossed that the unscrupulous vengeance of the natural man in him came to the surface.

Unknown to himself, he was a prepared instrument to carry out the purposes of God in judgment upon his own people and upon the surrounding nations. The captivity of Daniel and his three friends affording Nebuchadnezzar the opportunity to come frequently in contact with a man who knew and walked with God, was no mere chance, but specially ordered of God, for the purpose of making himself known to that generation, and causing himself to be proclaimed among the heathen just when his own people had failed to witness for him. God wanted a special instrument; and just as Moses' education in Egypt, "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and mighty in word and deed" (Acts 7: 22), singularly fitted him, as soon as he was yielded to God, for the high position to which he was called; so also was it with the education of Daniel. God has a purpose in the life of everyone of his children, and our educational advantages are not meant for our own self-exaltation, but to serve him.

We have no means of ascertaining Daniel's age at this time, but it seems he must have known the Lord before the commencement of his education in Babylon, and God permitted his young servant to be put to a test in which he might bear witness for his God. The King had commanded that all the Israelitish students should be supplied from his own table, a mark of distinction which was no small honor done to them. But "the king's meat and wine which he drank" had no attraction for the incipient prophet of Jehovah. Already, in his secret soul, the stamp of his God was upon him; and he knew that he was not his own. The honor which many a student in Babylon would have coveted was nothing in Daniel's eyes, compared to the eternal honor of bearing witness to the King of kings. The young student was already learning to look not at the things which are seen and "temporal;" but at "the things which are not seen," "and eternal" (II. Cor. 4. 18); he also "endured as seeing him who is invisible" (Heb. 11: 27).

"Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat nor with the wine which he drank." Probably the meats at the king's table had all been offered to idols, and the young man and his friends had an opportunity by voluntary personal self-denial to bear witness to their true and living God. It was a new thing in Babylon to hear of a God who possessed the hearts of his worshipers. The heathen worship from fear; they seek thereby to defend themselves against malevolent spirits, which, they think, work evil against them. But a holy God whom they can respect, a loving, merciful God whom they can love, is unknown to them. But the heathen can understand the value of a thing at the price paid for it; and the estimation of a person by that which anyone will suffer for his sake. Daniel knew this; and he requested of the prince of the eunuchs who was president of the college where he studied, "that he might not defile himself." It was a bold request, but something in Daniel (was it not the presence of his God?) made this man see that no insult was intended.

Something in the young man strangely attracted Ashpenaz. God's hand was in it: "God had brought Daniel into favor and [illegible] prince of the eunuchs.

RUINS OF THE PALACE OF THE KING OF BABYLON

But he, too, was placed in a difficult position, and he said to Daniel, "I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink; for why should he see your faces worse liking than the youths are of your own age?" (R.V.). Not gaining ground with Ashpenaz, Daniel addressed himself to Melzar, who had the immediate responsibility of the provision department. Daniel's request was so moderate that Melzar, who must also have been impressed by the young student, gave a ready ear to it. This was his request. "Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us pulse to eat (lentils or the Hindustan "dahl") and water to drink. Then let our countenances be looked on before thee, and the countenance of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat; and as thou seest, deal with thy servants." What a risk! Suppose it had not succeeded? some unbelieving one might say. But it does answer to trust the living God. Thus Melzar "took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they should drink, and gave them pulse." And every mealtime, Daniel and his friends in their eating and drinking served God, and proclaimed thereby that there was a living God, whom they loved and honored and served. And as they bore witness to God, he also bore witness to them. He blessed their simple diet and above all, their absolute trust in him, and he blessed their studies so that he "gave them skill in all learning and wisdom."

The time of the public examination of the students over which Nebuchadnezzar himself presided, came at last. And the king communed with them, and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah; therefore they, captive Jewish youths, stood before the king, i. e., they received government appointments. "And in all matters of wisdom and understanding that the king enquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm."

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

DOUBTS as to the period in which the book of Daniel was written, and as to the writer, will naturally arise in connection with these lessons, but they may wisely be left to learned scholars for settlement, while we attend to the singularly beautiful story that the book tells. It represents Daniel as a youth, probably about fourteen years of age, of princely, if not royal, birth, being taken away from the land of his fathers, to Babylon, the greatest city in the world at that time. How he became a captive, we are not told, but it was probably at the beginning of the conflict, when as related in II. Chronicles 36: 6, 7, the King of Judah first felt the weight of Nebuchadnezzar's hand. Nothing is said there about any prisoners being taken, but as the conqueror was able to bind the King of Judah with fetters and to despoil the temple, he would be likely to carry off some of the choicest of the people to grace his triumph. At a later date, the great mass of the nation was carried off, but at this period probably the number of prisoners was small, and all of them young nobles. Their lot was not a hard one. They were not immured in dungeons, but were treated as honorable exiles to be trained for the holding of high office. If any of them were without patriotism or religious principle, they might regard the change in their lot as good fortune. In this, therefore, there was special danger. The young Hebrews had only to forget their country and their God and adapt themselves to the manners and customs of their new domicile, as the Jews can do to this day more adroitly than men of any other race, and the way was open to place and power. Like Joseph in Egypt in ancient times, and Beaconsfield in Great Britain in modern times, the Jew easily beats all competitors and overcomes all obstacles when he has a fair opportunity. Daniel's success, according to the book, was greater than either, for in his time Babylon dominated nearly all the known earth, and Daniel stood next to the throne in power and influence. That he maintained his position under Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Darius and Cyrus shows how completely he had mastered the details of the art of [illegible] become. This, too, without surrendering his principles. The temptation must have [illegible] great. To be [illegible] a little provincial kingdom like Palestine, to the metropolis of the world was itself a severe test. Then, too, he was saturated with Babylonian lore and moved in the highest society. Everything combined to make the desertion of principle a matter of self-interest. His example in holding firm to his early faith amid environment so trying, is one of the finest in history.

He would not defile himself. What a pity it is that young men do not always take that view of sin. It is defilement, no matter how beautifully it is gilded. When the young man from the country farmhouse comes to the city and is introduced by his companions to the haunts of pleasure, he is urged "to see life," to learn what "is going on in the world," not to be "behind the age," and to give up his "hayseed scruples." If such a young man would adopt Daniel's view of it as defilement, he might be saved. Hawthorne's beautiful story of Beatrice is full of meaning in this matter. A young man is attracted by the beauty of a girl who walks daily in the garden beneath his window. He is, however, surprised, as he watches her to see that insects which fly around her lovely head fall dead to the ground, and that a lizard approaching her is killed by a drop of dew that she shakes upon his head. But he is infatuated and makes her acquaintance and spends hours daily in her company. Not until after many days does he discover that the subtle poison emanating from her has changed his being, and that he, too, is a deadly power. Fresh flowers fade in his hand, a spider on which he breathes falls lifeless, and the insects that come near him are killed. So it is that purity and goodness by contact with evil are transformed into poisonous, malignant influences.

Why should he see your faces worse liking? It is only in modern times that scientists have learned that wine and alcohol are really injurious to the human system even in moderation. It is not so long ago that any person who resolved to abstain from intoxicants, was regarded as a foolish person who put away from him a source of strength and health. When Canon Wilberforce began his ministry he had fainting fits which sometimes seized him even in the pulpit. His doctor prescribed ale and wine. The young clergyman took them, but his ailment continued. After a time, he resolved to become a total abstainer. The doctor heard of his decision and went to him to expostulate. "You will surely kill yourself," he said. "There are people who can do without stimulants, but you need them and will surely die without them." After a year Canon Wilberforce met the doctor in London. "Well, doctor," he said, "I am still abstaining and I am alive yet. More than that, I never have any fainting fits now."

Daniel had understanding. That is more than can always be said of a young man who is under the power of liquor. When he has drunk a certain quantity he will do things from which in his sober senses he would shrink appalled. Van Doren tells a story in point. A young lawyer married a beautiful girl who was the pride of a refined and elegant home. After a few years the man was a drunkard and the wife with her two children felt the pinch of poverty. One bitter winter night the husband came home intoxicated. As there was no coal in the house nor money to buy it, the rooms were very cold. The poor lady lay with her children closely pressed in her arms to keep them warm. The husband inquired why there was no fire. He cursed when his wife told him the reason. He said he would soon have warmth enough. How he set the place on fire neither he nor any one knew. His wife and children died of exposure.

Fighting the Plague

NEVER was medical skill needed more urgently than it has been in various parts of India since the famine. The dread bubonic plague has appeared in Bombay and other great cities, and has claimed its victims by thousands. In some cities the deaths from the plague even now when its worst rigor is abated, average fifty a day. It has been no uncommon experience to see a family sitting at their evening meal, apparently all in good health, and on the following day at the same hour to find them all dead. The victims, in nearly all cases, are those who suffered most from the famine. The lack of food, or the eating of substances unfit for food, appears to act as a pre-disposing cause. Such people are more likely than any others to fall ill with the plague; and are more likely than others, if they do take it, to die. The missionaries, who stood by the people in the famine, are their friends now in this terrible affliction. They have shown no fear of infection and have ministered courageously to the sick and dying. They have also availed themselves of the discoveries of science to avert the dread scourge, when the native Hindoos will submit to their treatment. Our illustration on this page, is a photograph of a scene at Maroda, in which the operation of inoculation is being performed. The principle of this treatment is the same as vaccination, and it is claimed that a person inoculated is unlikely to take the disease, even when exposed to infection, or, if he should take it, will not have it in malignant form. The operator in the picture is Dr. Emma Hodge, a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who has been laboring for several years in the vicinity of Maroda. After consecrating herself to foreign missionary work, she studied under Dr. George D. Dowkontt, General Director of the Medical Missionary Society in New York, and subsequently took a course in the New York Women's Medical College, where she graduated. With Dr. George Hall, who afterwards laid down his life in Corea, Dr. Summers, who died in Africa, and other medical missionaries now laboring in many lands, Miss Hodge practised among the poor in the fourth and seventh wards of New York, while waiting for her appointment to a foreign field. She learned there the lessons of love and sympathy with the suffering that she is now practising in India; and for the plague of sin, as prevalent here as there, she prescribes the same remedy, the only one that in all the ages has proved efficacious:

The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death (Rom. 8:2).

Germinates by Fire

A description in a horticultural journal of a Californian pine tree, whose cones are opened by intense heat, elicits an interesting letter from a former resident of Australia. He says that Australia has a tree which has the same peculiarity. It is the acacia decurrens, familiarly known as "the wattle tree." It was noticed that these trees always grew on land that had been desolated by a bush fire. No clue to the cause of this coincidence was known until a settler who had collected a number of different seeds, put them to dry near a log fire. A burning log rolled from the fire upon the wattle seeds, and instantly they burst open. He mentioned this fact to a scientific farmer who had noticed the tendency of the wattle to grow on burnt ground, and he made an experiment. Wattle seeds which had lain on the ground for more than a year were collected and a fire was built over them. Within a few weeks they had sprouted, and in less than twelve months a small forest of young wattle trees flourished on the spot where the seeds had been under the fire. Another experiment with similar seeds planted in good ground and well watered, but without fire, produced no result, and when the seeds were dug up after being several months in the earth, they were found to be in the same condition as when they were planted. Not one of them had germinated. Ministers and Christian workers have often observed a similar phenomenon. The Gospel message has failed to take root in the heart of a prosperous man, but has burst into life and filled his heart when some fierce trial, like a scorching fire, has desolated his life.

His flesh is consumed away that it cannot be seen. Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave . . . . Lo, all these things worketh God oftentimes with man to bring back his soul from the pit (Job 33: 21, 29).

Mining for Gold in a Sewer.

There was excitement a few days ago in that part of New York known as "Little Italy." An Italian painter had received among his remuneration for decorating a church, a gold eagle, which he showed boastfully to a friend whom he met on the street. They both admired the beautiful coin and the owner kept it in his hand as they walked homeward. He could not refrain from tossing it up to see it glitter in the sunlight. He was doing this when he came to the corner of Canal Street, when he failed to catch the coin and it rolled in the gutter and into the sewer, Then there was consternation. The loser offered two dollars for the recovery of his treasure and immediately a fellow countryman volunteered to go down into the sewer to search. Saucepans and growlers were borrowed from the neighboring tenements and armed with them the Italian removed the sewer trap and decended into the shaft. He handed up the cans full of black mud to the loser of the coin, who with his friend's aid, strained it through his fingers in search of his treasure. The news that there was a ten-dollar gold piece astray soon attracted a crowd, eagerly watching operations. It grew so large that a policeman interfered and ordered the suspension of the work. The man in the shaft refused to come out, but someone turned on the hydrant and he was glad to climb out to escape drowning. The policeman then took the party to a fire-engine house where he turned the hose on them. When they were sufficiently cleansed they were arraigned before the Justice who discharged them and told them to get a permit to open the sewer. When men go into such a foul abomination as a New York sewer to find a ten-dollar gold piece, Christians ought not to shrink from contact with moral filth to save lost souls, which are more precious than gold in God's sight.

If thou take forth the precious from the vile thou shalt be as my mouth (Jer. 15: 19).

To Illuminate the Ocean

An ingenious device has been offered to the Navy Department by Col. W. J. Wilson, its inventor. It consists of a steel cylinder about three inches in diameter and about five feet long. The lower end is weighted, so that when thrown in the water it will maintain a perpendicular position. The lower end is filled with calcium-carbide, which, when wet, generates acetylene gas. Above this is a battery to ignite the gas. When the cylinder is placed in the sea, the water has access to the calcium-carbide through perforations in the cylinder, the gas is generated and ignited. It escapes through a burner in the upper end of the cylinder, and gives a brilliant light, which shines for an hour and more, and neither wind nor waves can extinguish it. The advantages of such a light are obvious. It might serve, if in sufficient number, to protect the mouth of a harbor from torpedo boats. Or in a wreck at night it would indicate the position of a ship to the life-savers, and would make the process of transferring passengers to the boats safer. If the light is really inextinguishable, it will be brought into common use, both for warlike purposes and for the saving of life. The servant of Christ who goes forth into the dark places of the earth to save souls needs such a light, too. God has in his Word provided one for him which exposes the hidden pitfalls for the victims of the powers of darkness.

All things that are reproved are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light (Eph. 5: 13).

A Bridegroom's Misadventure

A citizen of Hoboken, N. J., for whom his friends and the police have been searching for several days, has returned to his home with a strange story. He was to have been married on the previous Tuesday; but when the time set for the ceremony arrived, he did not come and on sending to his home to ascertain the cause of his absence, it was learned that he had not been there for two days. His story is that he set out to visit an uncle who lives some six or seven miles away, and on his way stepped into a saloon to get a glass of beer. After drinking it his mind became a blank and he remembers nothing that occurred until two days after when he was aroused by a policeman. He was then sitting on a bench in a park. He asked the policeman where he was, and learned, to his astonishment, that he was in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, nearly a hundred miles from home. How he traveled there and what he had done after his arrival, he cannot remember. There was no money in his pocket, though he had seventy-six dollars when he left home. As he did not know anyone in Philadelphia from whom he could obtain assistance, he had to walk to New Brunswick, N. J., where a friend lived who would lend him the money to return home. It was a long journey on foot, but he accomplished it and after a few hours rest, he took the cars for Hoboken. It is evident that he had been drugged and robbed. He doubtless wishes now that he had never entered that saloon, as his visit not only led to his losing his money and having to make a long journey, but to his being too late for his wedding, thereby mortifying his bride and disappointing their friends. There are some who have broken their promises to Christ through similarly venturing into danger, in spite of the warning he gave:

Another said: I will follow thee: but let me first go bid them farewell which are at home, at my house; and Jesus said unto him, No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God (Luke 9: 61).

A MEDICAL MISSIONARY INOCULATING PLAGUE PATIENTS IN INDIA

A Child Without a Country

The immigration authorities in New York are puzzling over the status of a twelve-year-old girl who arrived at the Barge Office on a White Star steamer. She is the daughter of a Hungarian tailor who came here with his wife fifteen years ago. He settled in New York and for a time prospered. Two children—this girl and a younger brother—were born. Latterly, misfortunes came. The tailor lost his work and then his wife died. He grew despondent. Finally, placing his boy with friends, he started for his own country, taking his daughter with him. But on the voyage over he lost heart, and, leaping overboard, was drowned. The passengers on the ship took a kindly interest in the orphaned girl, and made up a purse of $250 for her. As she had never seen her Hungarian relatives, she begged to be taken back to New York, where her little brother is. But she had to confess that she had no other relatives here, nor any friends. She was accordingly brought back as she desired. But the immigration commissioners have a rule that they will not admit any one likely to become a public charge. They therefore detained the child while her case was considered. It is inferred from the tailor's returning to Hungary that he was not naturalized, so possibly the child may be a Hungarian subject; but having been born on our soil she may claim American birth. Her situation is a sad one and full of danger. It may be hoped that there will be some one who will encourage her by telling her of the special promise that God makes to such as she:

He doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and loveth the stranger in giving him food and raiment (Deut. 10: 18).

A Miser's Will

A dispute which will shortly come before the courts has arisen over the will of a man who died recently at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He was a tanner by trade, but of late had done little work. Apparently he was in extreme poverty, and was grateful for any little gifts of food or clothing that charitable people gave him in return for doing an errand or some little service. He had relatives, but only one of them took any notice of him. This was a nephew living several miles away, who for many years had made it a habit to visit the old man twice a year and look after his comfort. About a month before his death the old man sent for a lawyer and instructed him to draw up a will, leaving the bulk of his property to his nephew, whom he made his executor. The lawyer, sharing the common idea of his client's poverty, was amused by the terms of the will, but he drew it as instructed, and the old man signed it and paid him. Since his death it has been found that the will was not so ridiculous as it appeared. Securities worth forty thousand dollars were hidden away in the house, and there are other investments. As there are several relatives as near or nearer of kin than the nephew who is made heir, the will is to be contested, but there is little probability of its being broken. This is not the first time by many that disinterested kindness has been unexpectedly rewarded. More frequently such kindness has no direct reward in money, but it never misses the approval of God, which is better.

Do good and lend hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind to the unthankful and the evil (Luke 6: 35).

WITH PHOTOGRAPHS FROM REAL LIFE

Tenement Child-Life in New York

Illustrated Specially for "The Christian Herald"

A GLIMPSE OF BATAVIA STREET, A VERY POOR SECTION — A MERRY LITTLE GROUP — AN AFTERNOON AIRING ON THE CURB

WHEN the Weather Bureau says: "Mercury Hot Wave Coming. New Yorkers [illegible] possess their souls in patience, buy palm-leaf fans from street-venders (of cooling burdens but dripping brows) and make other possible preparations to meet the torrid temperature with comparative grace and comfort. Wealthy families are usually out of town; although the men of such households are often held in the city at the receipt of custom or in the place of duty. Large rooms, electric fans, cooling drinks, fresh linen temper for them the tortures of the heat and humidity. But no amount of personal comfort can make the kindly-hearted among them forget the burden which every humane New Yorker carries upon his heart and purse—the sufferings of brothers and sisters of the slums, especially of the little ones.

Great changes have and are being wrought in tenement districts since missionaries and newspapers—among which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was a leader—began to bring before the public facts as they really exist in sections which prosperous people rarely see. The late Colonel Waring instituted many sanitary reforms which a philanthropic and public-spirited citizenship will surely push to more sweeping and excellent results. Churches, missions, social and religious settlements, business men, and the Health Board are all interested in the question of replacing old rookeries, unwholesome cellars, terrible back tenements, and double-deckers with model dwellings at righteous rentals. Commodious school-houses are rising in every quarter; playgrounds (treeless as yet, for trees do not grow by magic) and recreation-piers are being provided with commendable rapidity. But a city cannot be torn down and rebuilt in a day. This great metropolis on its narrow island is the Mecca for incoming hordes from the four quarters of the globe. A large proportion of these new arrivals get no further than the down-town districts; and so the dense population [illegible] fortable and well when the thermometer runs up to 107 and more [illegible] do the people of Hester, James, Hamilton, Cherry and equally crowded, equally malodorous districts manage to live? Some of them—especially among the children—do not manage it at all: they give up the struggle [illegible] mother of invention, the "teeming thousands" find some interesting ways of mitigating the hard conditions of their lot.

A MAKE-BELIEVE RIDE IN AN IDLE TRUCK WAGON

You would discover some of these ways, as did the writer, by spending some days and nights in a down-town settlement. Go up on your roof at night and see how roofs around you are populated. Look down upon children sleeping upon fire-escapes. Thinking of the stifling, ill-smelling rooms from which these multitudes come, you will thank God that there are roofs and fire-escapes. In the morning, if you can stand the glare, go up again and mark the array of mattresses left behind. Many stay there till the end of the season, except for disappearances in the [illegible] trying to get them in is at once pathetic and amusing. Looking at night upon the sleeping multitude on the roof, the thought occurs: "There is not space up here for all the dwellers of the big buildings." What about those below? Even in cellars—dark, unwholesome, suffocating [illegible] and back tenements, with dormitories [illegible] ing to sleep. After twelve o'clock at night the writer has seen mothers sitting on sidewalks with sleeping children across their knees or in their arms. Many a mission-worker, many a kind doctor, hears the story: "I staid on the street all night with my sick child." Children are curled up on cellar-doors, truck-carts, and dry-goods boxes—anywhere rather than in the sweltering rooms within. The kindly policeman, going his rounds, indulgently refrains from seeing some things: for instance, he does not examine too

THESE CHILDREN [illegible] TRUCK AS FITS IN A RIOT — AN ALLEY DOOR — A GUTTER FOOT-BATH WHEN THE HYDRANT FLOWS

COOLING OFF ON THE FIRE-ESCAPE

CATCHING A BREATH OF AIR IN THE AREA-WAY

A NETWORK OF CLOTHES-LINES

closely the wet sheets on clothes-lines in front of fire-escapes; it is against the law to sleep on fire escapes, but not against the law to hang clothes-lines there. The policeman knows how to sympathize; he is warm himself; and is he not the officer of a merciful and discriminating public, who realize that a relentless thermometer may relax even the law?

If the night is trying, the day with its fierce glare, when pavements blister the feet and the roof is impossible, is worse. But it, too, has its ameliorations. The ice-wagon comes along, and a crowd of youngsters gather about the restaurant or saloon and watch wistfully and thirstily for chips that may haply fall. For the prosperous newsboy or bootblack that "has the price" there is the stand at the corner where a tiny glass of indescribable lemonade, ice-cream, or crushed ice with berry juice on it may be had for a penny; some carts dispense with the glass and ladle the refreshment on to a piece of brown paper; young Cherry St., not being hypercritical, had as lief take it so. Young Cherry St. is generous, too, and will often divide its penny's worth with the child that has no pennies. The real gala time is when streets are flushed from public hydrants; playing in gutters of rippling water is delight almost beyond compare with wee folk who never waded in a running brook, and who, like plants in a drought are parched and drooping with heat. The kindly policeman comes, but does not see; he beholds too many little coffins going out of these doors not to be ready to give the children all possible latitude. Better than the flowing hydrant is a sprinkle from the heavens. The writer stepped into a Cherry street door once to escape a wetting, and was amused to note the number of children, divested of as much apparel as propriety permitted, running out like ducks into the blessed shower-bath from the clouds. Thus much for the meagre out-door ameliorations of the child-life of the poor in the heated term, when many grown people in cooler uptown districts are succumbing to sun-stroke. These ameliorations, as will be seen, make our prospective citizens children of the street perforce. When it comes to improvement of the stuffy, malodorous interiors, the case seems hopeless. Sometimes, when by gift, the dwellers of a home where there is a sick child come into possession of a large piece of ice, they wrap it in newspapers, and closing windows and doors to keep out the heat, effect a small reduction in temperature. Other devices, such as hanging up wet sheets, are resorted to. Childhood, in spite of ill conditions, is ready for fun the world over, when there is a chance and strength to take it. An idle truck will be quickly pre-empted by small folks taking make-believe rides. Where a building is coming down or going up, see-saws on available timbers are in order when the sun goes down. But children too serious and too weak for play are always in abundant evidence in the tenements as soon as hot weather begins to claim its victims. Of all days in the seven, the Sabbath is the day on which to find most children on the streets. The churches and missions do their best, but in the hot weather it is impossible to hold the little ones to that attendance on Sunday Schools which the warmth of the rooms in winter's cold attracts. No public schools are keeping; no kindergartens are in session; working mothers who board their babies at the day nursery on week-days have their little ones home. Children who work in stores, factories and sweat-shops have holidays. Numbers are combed and curled and neatly dressed in their best. The beholder wonders, however, how the patched or ragged best of hundreds could at any time be worse. Workingmen and women, also on holidays, swell the throngs, which on Sunday afternoon more than any other time in the week, suggest the trite comparison, "thick as bees in a hive." In addition to what the city is doing in establishing public baths and playgrounds, institutional churches and missions are aiding in various ways to alleviate the sufferings of child-life in the slums and to lower the fearful mortality rate among little ones. Great as is this mortality rate, it has been markedly reduced in the last ten years—a matter of congratulation to the officers of the Health Department, the city physicians, and the various workers of charitable organizations, who have labored strenuously to accomplish such results; as well as a matter of profound thankfulness to humanity at large. Fresh-air work—which at once gives the children needed outings, with nourishment, care, moral and spiritual training; relieves hard-working mothers of their keep; and reduces the population of the overcrowded home—is conceded to be one of the most effective relief measures under existing conditions. It would not be just to close this article, without saying that no single religious or humanitarian agency has accomplished more good during the past five summers than the beautiful fresh-air work conducted at Nyack on the Hudson by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with the co-operation of its readers. The sufferings of the children of the poor have been lessened, their death rate has been greatly decreased thereby and little lives have been turned to hope and higher purposes by teachings received and benefits conferred.

In 1898, with a population estimated at 1,349,745, 17,358 very young children died; in 1899, with a population of 1,815,878, the number of such deaths was 15,591. These figures do not include children of ten years and over. It will be seen that while the population had increased 466,663, the death-rate of little ones was lessened by 1,767. But the physical is only one side of the question. The proper development of the mental, moral and spiritual side of the thousands of children in the metropolis who must become influences in the political, moral and religious future of our republic is no light responsibility.

A STREET IN "LITTLE SYRIA"

A WELL-CROWDED DOORWAY

IN A DILAPIDATED BACK YARD

HOMES OF THE WASHERWOMEN

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.
T. DeWitt Talmage
EDITOR.
B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald [illegible] per year payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence [illegible]

Remittances [illegible] manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register [illegible]

Foreign Postage. [illegible] outside the United States, the Canadas, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. [illegible] before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. [illegible] the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration [illegible] per indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. [illegible] and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name [illegible] live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald [illegible] the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters [illegible]

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

[illegible] New York [illegible]

What God Expects of Them Now

THOUSANDS of young people are now leaving their respective Alma Maters, with a diploma in their hands. Beautiful young maidens, with proudly beating hearts and flashing eyes; strong young men, ready for whatever encounter with fate. We bid them God-speed. Never was there a better time for young people to enter upon life's work. What does God expect of them? Certainly work commensurate with their opportunities of study: commensurate with their opportunities of work.

The American ideal is not ease with leisure, but work. American youth crave a chance. They inherit nothing. The world all before them, and Providence their guide, they can not fail. In teaching, in clerkships, in the professions, in the army, in the navy, in the great cities, in the country's new provinces, the whole round earth is calling for them, to show what stuff is in them, and whether they understand the spirit of these times.

It is not irreverent to ask again, What does God expect of them? Some of them must enter the pulpit, go to other lands as missionaries, write books, edit newspapers in the interest of all that is good. The world will not stand still for them. They must cast in their lot with the world's movement; fit into their places, asking of their Maker, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" Instead of the father, the children. Make way for the new recruits. Give them a welcome and a chance.

Modern History

A CONTEMPORARY tells of a school-boy who was glad Admiral Dewey's victory did not occur till after his class had finished modern history, because in that case the class would have had to master the history of another war. But Americans cannot dodge the study of modern history. They are in it—school-children and all. The flag of the country floats above their heads in school hours. Not only have we histories of the past, by John Fiske and others; we have history of the present, written up to date, in the magazines and newspapers. Senator Lodge, whose spirit is candid and whose pen is graphic, is giving us the history of the war with Spain, illustrated by pictures taken on the spot. We do not have to depend upon mythical stories for our heroes. Roosevelt and Funston and a hundred others are shown to us, often just as the art of photography caught them.

The effect of this record of heroism will be sure. Every State will have its heroes. Just as after the close of the Civil War the heroes of that period moved forward in their turn to the highest places and honors in the Republic, so it will be in the future. The several States will look after the men who have done them honor. Roosevelt's recognition was immediate. When he was climbing the heights of San Juan; when he saved the day there, he was making a record which America was sure to remember. Modern history can not be shirked; the boys must know it all.

France Redeeming Herself

THE modern world has seen no such spectacle as Republican France submitting to the outrageous treatment of Dreyfus. The possibilities of a combination of army officials in a plot to forge testimony against an innocent officer of the same army, to bring upon him and his family a judgment of infamy, and an imprisonment, such as was almost sure to terminate in death: this seems awful. And when Zola interposes at the risk of exile, asking for only a re-hearing of the case, only for a fair trial, to see the rage awakened against him, rage not short of the madness of a blood-thirsty wild beast let loose in the colosseum, has compelled the wonder of the world.

But, this has all gone by. France has recovered herself. Dreyfus returns and will be permitted a fair trial. His enemies have confessed, have taken their own lives, have disappeared from the arena, have gone beforehand to the judgment. This is true. But, when we recall the confession of Esterhazy that what he did, he did under the direction of his superiors, here is a gulf of military infamy which it will be hard for the world to forget. Military honor! If this goes, what is there left? The military officials requiring testimony to be manufactured, so that an innocent man might be crushed to the earth! And this is the land of Lafayette!

Another Hero at the Front

COLONEL FUNSTON of the 20th Kansas is the new hero. Thirty three! and laurels enough for a man of sixty! Anything he wants. Kansas will give him. A light weight, wiry, active, dare-devil kind of man. In newspaper work, fighting among the Cubans, swimming the Rio Grande under fire, promoted to Brigadier General, by lightning message, what awaits him next? Governorship of Kansas, a senatorial toga—let him speak, the country will applaud him, whatever his new sphere. As yet, no sign that he is in danger of losing his head, or saying foolish things. It is time for him to avoid unnecessary exposures. For plentiful as American heroes are, we do not want to lose them through Aguinaldo's sharpshooters. Let the Colonel keep his mouth closed, say no indiscreet things, and we shall see what we shall see.

IN PRESS ... READY AUG. 1st

The Red Letter New Testament

With all the words recorded as having been spoken by our Lord, printed in Red

Arranged and Copyrighted by Louis Klopsch

Printed from New Large-face Brevier Type
Edition de Luxe Divinity Circuit, Red under Gold Thumb Indexed

PRICE, $1.50

Address The Christian Herald,
Bible House, New York

In the House of Our God

"O THAT I knew where to find him! that I might come into his presence! that I might know the sensible presence of God, and the shining of his clear, discovered face!" This is the longing in the soul of man, when remembering the day which he has made and sanctified. This longing is worship, and the rendering of [illegible] blessings. How shall we render it? The one hundredth Psalm tells us joyfully and distinctly, "O go your ways into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and speak good of his name. [illegible] is everlasting; and his truth endureth from generation to generation."

It is often now said that there is no necessity for any set place of worship. Men and women wander off to the parks, the woods, and the seaside, and profess to look up through Nature, to Nature's God. Some consider that Christ in his conversation with the woman of Samaria, abrogated the obligation for the temple and the temple services. But they assume far too much.

The Samaritan woman's inquiry referred to a point of theology, not of religion. The controversy between Jew and Samaritan turned on an antiquarian point as to the correct reading of the twentieth chapter of Deuteronomy, and the woman though confessedly living in sin, was so deeply interested in this theological question of worship between the Jews and the Samaritans, that her first thought when she met Christ, was to find out whether he was sound on this great doctrinal point.

And Christ pointed out that there was a greater point than where God was to be worshiped, and that was, how God was to be worshiped; that "the right burning of the two kidneys with the fat" was not as acceptable as that "worship in spirit and in truth," which the Father "seeketh," and that neither Jerusalem nor Samaria, nor any other particular place had particular sanctity, because God was not like the heathen deities confined to a wood, or a shrine, or a city, or a nation. He was "the God of all the earth."

[illegible] ed the Sabbath day's worship. He indeed taught that God was larger than all churches, but he also knew that the church was God's trysting-place for sinful, sorrowing men, and the most remarkable scenes of his ministry and his life are associated with his Father's House. And there are many personal reasons for our continued and continual reverence for the rite of public worship. First: its great human fellowship. When we kneel, and pray, and sing, and take our spiritual lessons and consolations together, we come near to each other, and feel in a special manner that we are all the children of one Father, and members of one great Household. An isolated Christian is never a healthy Christian. The thing that most divides us from God is that, for any reason, we isolate ourselves from our fellows. To be separate from man, is to be separate from Christ and God, and to cast ourselves into the abyss of self-consciousness. We must live the life of Christ among our fellows, and be a witness for God among them. Then the sight of our life and efforts will help, and do others good, and we may bless many, even as we fight our own battle.

If we go to the woods and mountains to worship, we are very apt to find only ourselves there. We feel our superiority to trees and stones and water, and our pride, not our humility, is nourished. Without some powerful influence to lead our thoughts and feelings, we are pretty sure to let them drift continually to our own affairs. Nature never said to any erring soul, "Return." She has no Gospel for the weary and heavy laden. She has no temple for spiritual worship. It is with our fellowmen we must find that "worship in spirit" which Christ approved—that doing justice and showing mercy, which is worshiping the Lord in the beauty of holiness.

Again the Church is the place set apart by common consent for the worship of God; and we are all subject to that law of association, by which a train of ideas returns more easily to one place than to another. In a Court House, we naturally think of trials and criminals. In an Exchange of buying and selling, and in a Church, this same law of association, leads our minds to heavenly things. This is the only sanctity of place we acknowledge; for as soon as we transfer our feelings of worship to a place, we verge upon superstition. Paul, Augustine, Wesley, Whitefield, the Salvation Army and the missionaries in all countries, have made temples on hill-sides and in the streets of crowded cities. It is a holy congregation that makes a church building holy; and the altar is not the high place set apart, it is the heart of the humblest, most sincere Christian in it.

Yet, for the great and constant spiritual needs of humanity, a spiritual home is necessary to the highest life of every individual. The Church in the community typifies our Father's House. It is the court to it; and the everlasting doors are always lifted up, that we may enter in. There, we may carry our cares and sorrows and leave them. There, we shall be most likely to experience that swift, inward sense of a present God, and of his honorable, true and only Son. There we have a feeling [illegible] sounds that bring heaven to earth; and there, we realize the sweet [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] fore his presence with thanksgiving, and show themselves glad in him with psalms;" and which send them back to the world, with the [illegible] than the house of God; this is the gate of heaven."

Of course churches are prostituted. There are such blasphemous houses as "fashionable churches" where a humble Christian worshiper wonders whether he is present at a religious or an operatic service. Churches, where in spite of prayer and praise, we are terribly conscious that the old, old difficulty, about the camel and the needle's eye, as stated nearly 1900 years ago, is still painfully apparent. Thousands go to Church, not for devotion, but for vanity. They look as if they thought coming at all was an act of condescension; they wish to separate, and to worship God in some superior and aristocratic manner. Thousands go to church because it is Sunday, and such a dull day, and they have nothing else to do. And quite as many go because it is the proper thing, and so respectable, and they are accustomed to it. But even so, all these are in the way of getting good; and being so, their angels may incline them to listen to the Word of the Lord, and the prayers of the true worshipers in their midst, prolong their day of mercy. For never yet was there a congregation in which God did not have his "reserve," some few, simple, yearning hearts who had come there to meet him; who had come there because they really believe the Church to be the house of their Father; because they really do get the help there, they require; because they really do feel a day in God's courts, to be "better than a thousand."

It may interest some worshipers to ponder a moment or two, the favorite image of the Church in all ages—a ship or a boat. The first preaching in the world was connected with a ship: for Noah, while building his ark, preached repentance to the doomed anti-deluvian world. The holiest object in the Jewish Tabernacle was an ark made like a boat. Christ's sermons, and miracles, and apostles are wonderfully associated with the same figure. The favorite image of the persecuted early Christians was a boat beaten by the waves; and our own churches, up to this very day, preserve this world-long and world-wide idea, by giving to the body of the church—the place where the congregation meets—the name of nave, from navis a ship. Indeed many of the old churches of Venice, are built in the shape of a ship; and there is a royal chapel near Lisbon, built of marble, with pillars like masts, and the sails and cordage carved on the walls.

And is not this life a voyage to the eternal shores? And what could better typify our safety than a Church which is a ship, with Christ the Captain of our salvation guiding it? Yet, if the Church be a ship of life, we are not to be idle passengers. We are to work our way across. We are to be watching that we may help those ready to perish. We are not to creep along in the shadows of the land, but do as our Captain orders—"Launch out into the deep." And though we must meet many storms, and perhaps come to port at last with Rent cordage, shattered deck.

Torn sails, provisions short.
And [illegible] stress.

we shall find our eternal haven in the Spiritual Church, with its invisible rites, and the splendor and music in the souls of the saints.

Amelia E. Barr

BRIEF NOTES

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding services at New Albany, Ind. Hundreds of children were attracted to the services, and have made confessions of faith.

The new Catechism is making its way especially in districts where there are union churches. Its value is heartily appreciated and the firms who publish it are issuing new editions as rapidly as they can be produced.

Dr. John R. Hykes, agent in China of the American Bible Society, reports that the Emperor of China is a believer in Christianity and was preparing to make it the national religion when he was suppressed by the Empress-Dowager.

The American Bible Society received last year from its auxiliaries and from direct gifts and legacies $276,938, and from the sale of volumes $33,815. The value of books sent to foreign agents and missionary societies was $30,772, and of books donated $21,000. The total expenditure was about $255,000.

The death of the Nun of Kenmare is announced. She was Abbess of Knock, in Ireland, and had established convents in this country and England. After a career of thirty years in the Catholic Church, she was converted to Protestantism, and wrote and lectured extensively on the evils of convent life. Her real name was Margaret Anna Cusack. She was seventy years of age when she died.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Egypt's Homes and Gardens

The Saviour's Place of Refuge—Egypt of To-day—The First Girls' School

TO the Bible-reader the word Egypt calls up at once some of the saddest, happiest, and most beautiful passages in sacred history. Into Egypt, little Joseph, Jacobs darling, was sold a slave to become Pharaoh's adviser, to succor his people in their trouble, and to welcome his father to the land where plenty was in time of famine. Out of Egypt went wandering Israel, driven by oppressions, led by Moses, the world's greatest law-giver and meekest of men. Into Egypt, when Herod was "seeking the young child's life," went Joseph and Mary with their precious charge, the infant Christ. It would be extremely interesting to know just the sort of home that sheltered the holy family during that rest in Egypt. The land of the lotus was far more prosperous then than now; but it held many poor and humble people—doubtless some dwelt in such mud huts as the fellaheen (working-people) now live in. Then, there were better houses built of brick, such as the Hebrews made for Pharaoh. Every one who could, had a garden. In the pleasure-grounds surrounding villas of the wealthy, avenues of trees shaded the walks, and "a great abundance of violets, roses, and other flowers was always to be had even in winter. A part also was assigned to vines and fruit-trees." Doubtless there were flowers and singing-birds about the home, however humble, in which our Saviour was sheltered. Perhaps he was in some shepherd's cot; and if so, the dwelling was poor indeed, for shepherds were much despised.

Along the Nile, there were then as now fishermen and sailors; and may be, our little Lord sojourned with sea-faring folk. Perhaps some prosperous home entertained him. The blessed Book does not tell; but we love to linger in thought over Christ's childhood, and wonder what his Egyptian home was like. We know that whatever roof sheltered him was blest; and we feel that better times must come to Egypt than are now hers through the impress of Christian civilization that will in some way reach her more effectually after awhile.

When the Empress Eugenie visited Cairo, Ismail Pasha showed her proudly his European innovations: military, engineering, medical and surgical schools; and she asked: "But where is the girls' school?" There was none. The Pasha ordered at once the construction of a palace where noblemen's daughters could secure a European education: it was built; but not a nobleman would send his daughter. Women are more secluded and less cultured in Egypt now than in Pharaoh's day. The Pasha compelled the neighboring children to come in, and thus initiated "the first girls' school of Cairo, which was gathered from the lame, halt and blind in the crowded quarter of the mosque of Tooloon." Cairo is the seat of Mohammedan learning; at the Azhar, the greatest Mosque college in the world, where from 11,000 to 12,000 students are received yearly, they still teach that the earth is flat, the sun moves and the firmament consists of seven canopies.

There are modern railroads in Egypt, but our illustration shows the most common mode of conveyance. The Israelites said: "We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely, the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leaks, and the onions, and the garlic." Beans, peas, lentils, tomatoes, egg-plants and many other vegetables are carried to the bazaars of to-day on patient donkeys driven by donkey-drivers wearing long blue cotton gowns roped in at the waist. The white donkeys of rich merchants are magnificent, with "saddles of red morocco or yellow velvet, and bridles tinkling with rows of silver chains reaching nearly to the ground."

VEGETABLE-SELLERS, NEAR CAIRO, EGYPT

The Ovenbird Family

Perhaps our little friends living in the country know this little sober-colored feathered body, who builds her home on the ground and makes it like an old-fashioned Dutch oven. It is lined with soft moss and grasses, and is so well concealed that it is not easily found. Mr. and Mrs. Ovenbird are attentive parents to the little Ovenbirds, and do much walking around and scratching on their behalf. Should an intruder appear, says a writer who has studied their ways, they become limp, flutter with fright, and tumble about in such a bewildered fashion that you hurry away rather than increase their alarm. The call-note of "teacher!" gives no promise of its song. Visit the wood some evening at dusk in the height of the nesting season, and you will hear a song so wild and free as to be almost startling. From this call-note of "teacher!-teacher!-teacher!" children often call the Ovenbird family "teacher-birds."

Housewives and Aldermen

Our readers will recall the plans of the German Housewives' Society detailed in these columns for improvement of domestic service by awarding twenty-dollar gold pieces to servant girls remaining in the same family two years; also, accounts from time to time of movements on similar lines instituted by leading women of the Old World—Kaiserin Augusta and Princess Christian for two. At a recent meeting of the Board of Aldermen of Greater New York, the German Housewives' Society presented, through Alderman Goodman, a petition asking the Municipal Assembly to investigate the servant question with a view of creating between mistress and servant more thorough appreciation of responsibilities towards each other and of protecting each against unfairness and injustice practiced by one against the other. It is submitted:

That laws should be formulated providing a system such as is in vogue in Europe, by which each applicant for a servant's position can and must present credentials as to character, etc., duly and officially certified to; that will protect the honest and faithful and minimize the number of dishonest and faithless, that will afford to all domestics every right in equity and law that the mistress enjoys, yet will not give the former more consideration and privilege than is accorded to the latter.

Ice-Homes

Eskimos, who get their living by hunting and fishing, have to move from place to place. Their houses are cooling to think of. They are made of snow—the only material they have in abundance—and it takes about three hours, Lorena Osborn Hunt says, to build one. The snow is so hard it can be cut in blocks; these are laid, circular-fashion, one on top of the other, narrowing toward the centre; and the structure is dome-shaped and just high enough for an Eskimo to stand up in; he must crawl through the door. One block is usually left out and a slab of ice put in for a window. A shelf of ice running around the room serves for table, bed and chair. The baby in his bear skin bag is laid on the shelf for a nap, which it takes quite comfortably there. Everybody sleeps in bear-bags and the ice-hut is not so cold as it sounds.

Little Philanthropists

It was recess and lunch-time at school. A little, pale-faced girl, noted for her lady-like manners and application to her books, was making her usual dry meal of water-crackers: her mamma was dead, her papa drank; she was studying to be a teacher, and so help her little brothers and sisters. She was shy and sensitive, and always tried to eat unobserved. Some of the children paraded enjoyment of abundant baskets before her; but most of them were sympathetic and others wanted her to share their luxuries. But seeming to feel that she could not return favors, she declined them. At last, three little lassies, rather dull at books but quick at more important things, thought out a scheme and said: "If you'll help us with our lessons, we'll give you some of our lunches." "I'll help you without," said the little one proudly. "We'il not take help without," was the quick rejoinder. The compact was concluded; three little girls were more studious, one had more to eat, and everybody's self-respect was saved.

A Child's Prayer

The earth hath closed its weary eye;
Hushed all things round and still.
And to my little couch I hie,
Of sleep to get my fill.

Go with me—wilt thou, Lord, and set
An angel at the door?
Nor let him once the charge forget
The morning light before.

So, in the darkness of the night,
And in its silence, too,
I may be kept from all affright
And sleep the whole night through.

I thank thee for this happy day
This happy day of bliss;
I know not for what else to pray
But for a good-night kiss.

Thou knowest what for me is best,
Thou truest of all friends:
A little wholesome childhood rest
My prayer; and so it ends.

—PROF. RANKIN'S German-English Lyrics.

Victoria and the Girl-Merchant

AMERICAN readers have been interested ever since Victoria of England was a young girl with stories of her simplicity of dress and manners, and her kindness of heart. In throne-room or coach of state she has ever been able to support the dignity of empire, but among the common people, at Windsor and at Nice, she never seeks to awe beholders into any painful consciousness of her position. A French religious weekly tells this story of her recent sojourn at Nice:

"On one of her customary drives in her little donkey-carriage, she stopped at a small place surrounded by a railing and giving a fine sea view. The stall of a young vender of relics named Josephine intercepted this view, and Princess Henry of Battenberg went to the girl and asked her to move the stall a little. Josephine refused. The Princess insisted, saying the kindness would give her mother pleasure. 'Who is your mother?' asked Josephine.

"'That lady in the little carriage.'

"'Tell her that business people do not disturb themselves for any and everybody. You have the appearance of having made your fortunes by following the fairs, you, your mother, your donkey, and your brother who is holding the bridle.'

"The Queen overheard and was amused. The princess conferred with her and returned, asking the little merchant if she would move if they purchased all her stock. Josephine said they evidently did not know what they were talking about, as she had at least fifty francs worth of goods. The princess handed her a hundred franc note. Josephine moved, and asked where she was to send the goods. The Princess said: 'Keep them. We have enjoyed the view. If you think we have overpaid, you can repay us by lending us your place each time the Queen comes here.' 'The Queen? What Queen?' 'My mother. The Queen of England.' 'That old lady in the donkey cart?'

"'Certainly.'

"Josephine remembered hearing how the Queen rode around in a donkey-cart. She rushed to the carriage, threw herself on her kness and said:

"'Madame, the Queen, I ask pardon. How could I know you when you go about in a little donkey-carriage and do not wear a silk dress? You do not look like a Queen, though I must say you have an honest face. Here are your hundred francs. Take them back.'

"'Keep them,' said Victoria. 'They will console you for this little trouble. Good bye, Josephine. I shall certainly see you again before I leave Nice.'"

The Bridegroom Hat

"A European Government servant," says a Singapore paper, "was recently married to a native woman in Samarang by the Mohammedan ceremony. It took place in the mesjid, and it was conducted by the penghulu, but the bridegroom was not present. He had given written notice that he would not put in an appearance, but he sent his hat, which according to custom was sufficient. She married the hat.

THE : : : UNEXPECTED

Or, Aunt Jane's Fresh Air Experiment, and how it Resulted

... By HELEN HALL FARLEY

IT was Tuesday when the children came; by Saturday every one of them was well provided with neat and comfortable clothing. Rachel Newcomber expressed her surprise when Miss Temple [illegible] muslin, with lace for trim[illegible]

"Why, you [illegible] to make white dresses for these little girls, are you?" she exclaimed.

"I thought I would."

"For goodness sake! If that don't beat anything I ever heard of! It's a queer notion—very. What do you suppose they will do with their white dresses when they get back to the slums? Not particularly appropriate to wear there, are they?"

"It will be time enough to think about that later"—calmly. "They will be here for three Sundays, and they will wear their white dresses to church."

"Are you going to take all that raft of children to church?"—in amazement.

"Yes—certainly."

"Your pew won't hold 'em."

"There are other pews."

They all went to the pretty little country church on Sunday. The "overflow" found seats in Deacon Stiles' pew, which was just back of Miss Temple's. Bartholomew and two of the little girls sat with him. Sylvia sat on one side of Miss Temple and Bennie on the other, both leaning on her more or less during the service. Tom sat at the entrance of the seat, and Duncan, the seven-year-old boy, in the furthermost corner. Birds sang outside all through the service, and one, more venturesome than the others, flew in and perched on the window-sill, where he sung a joyful song unmolested, and then flew out again. Some sweet, wild roses peeped into one window, and a honeysuckle climbed around another one, wafting in its fragrant breath.

Deacon Stiles found his attention wandering from the sermon frequently; his mind would dwell, in spite of himself, on other texts, such as "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these . . . ye have done it unto me."

"For I was a-hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me." "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy."

"And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me."

"And Miss Temple has received six," his mind ran on. All these texts and others passed through his mind, and the big white handkerchief was very much in evidence.

"I wonder what ails Deacon Stiles?" whispered Squire Benton's wife to her eldest daughter. "I never knew him to be so restless before."

"He's got the hay-fever, likely," was the answering whisper.

"Then he's got it bad, I must say."

But Amanda Benton was not the only one who laid the deacon's uneasiness to hay-fever. He kept getting out his handkerchief quite frequently to wipe his nose and eyes. It was not hay-fever, however, that caused the frequent appearance of the handkerchief. This was the first time he had seen the "unexpected" since the day they got off the cars at Cross Roads Station, ragged, neglected, pale and sorrowful children from the slums. It was the first time, too, that he had seen Miss Temple since he had asked her if she would care for a couple of "Fresh Air" children for two weeks, and she had replied shortly and most decidedly, "I'd like to oblige you, Deacon Stiles, but I'm not used to children, and I can't possibly take any. They would bother the life out of me."

"Well, she changed her mind," his thoughts ran on, "and she took six—just think of six—and she doesn't look as if they'd bothered the life out of her either. She looks younger and better than I ever saw her. What a marvelous change a few days of ministering and being ministered unto has made in her and them. Lord bless them all, every one."

The sunlight came through the small stained glass window of the head of Christ, and fell upon the little heads of black and brown and gold, as if caressingly, while the choir sang "Nearer My God to Thee."

"Any one can see she is nearer to God than she was," was the Deacon's mental comment.

"—even though it be a cross," sang the choir.

"It was a cross too hard to make up her mind to take those children," he said to himself.

"—that raiseth me," sang the choir.

"Yes, it has raised her," thought the Deacon. "See her face, how sweet it is! It was never so before. And see those little cripples lean on her. Lord bless her! She'd ought to have been a mother. Who would have thought there was all that beauty hidden away in the 'unexpected'? Look at that tiny boy—his face reminds me of Raphael's cherubs—and that bit of a girl clinging to Miss Temple looks like an angel."

The little girl next to the Deacon fell asleep and her brown head touched his arm. He scarcely stirred after that for fear of disturbing her—he even allowed his handkerchief to remain in his pocket. The brown head drooped lower, resting upon him.

A most enjoyable surprise awaited the children upon their return home. By Miss Temple's order the dinner-table was laid out-of-doors on the green grass under the maples, where the birds sang all day long. Miss Rachel Newcomber, who had been invited to remain over Sunday, had arranged the table beautifully. There were delicate vines running here and there over the tablecloth, wherever they could be put without interfering with the dishes, and, in the centre of the table, was a great rare bowl filled with fragrant sweet peas of many hues. At each place there was a fresh half-blown rose.

Sally had cooked the dinner, and she helped Peggy serve it.

"If Miss Temple's best friends from the city was here, she couldn't do any more for 'em than she does for these poor little children." Sally had confided to [illegible]

"I don't know what's got into her," had been Peggy's answer; "she don't seem like Miss Temple any more. She don't scold me at all, an' she don't look cross. She smiles, an' I declare I will say it, Sally, if you do laugh, I think Miss Temple is real sweet."

Sally had no inclination to laugh; instead of that she wiped her eyes. "I think she's sweet, too, I know she is. Job an' I've been talkin' it over. Job says Bartholomew's goin' to the preparatory school in September, and when he gets through there, he's goin' to college. Job says Bartholomew thinks there's no one like his Aunt Jane. I saw a pretty picture last night when I carried some fresh water upstairs, Peggy. Miss Temple was sittin' on a low chair with three of them little ones kneelin' around her a sayin' their prayers. Her eyes were shinin', an' one of her hands was restin' on little Bennie's head and one on Sylvia's, an' if she'd had another hand, it would have been restin' on Duncan's."

Sally had been engaged to work every day in Miss Temple's kitchen. She and Job lived in a pleasant, small house in the back yard, which was joined to the farmhouse by a covered passage-way. They were both fond of children, but had none of their own, and they helped make it pleasant for the "unexpected" in various ways. There had been one rainy day during the week; on that day Sally had invited them all into her own kitchen. She had made "coikenice" for them, and had baked delicious little spicy brown cakes with raisins in them. Job, not being able to work on the farm on account of the rain, had cracked nuts and told stories, and they had had a regular jubilee. And the days passed on.

Towards the end of the second week there was another rainy day. This time Job worked in the large, pleasant woodhouse. He was making a big wooden swing, that he knew would bring great joy to all the young hearts. It would hold them all at once. The children were all with him, watching the progress of his work with happy anticipation. They knew they were to have another week there, and, like most children, they were living in the present, which was just as well. One might better enjoy the sunshine when one has it, and not think about the rainy days that have passed or are coming.

Tom, however, often thought with dread of the return to the city. It seemed now, in the sweet rest and joyousness of the present, like a hideous dream from which he had awakened. But, for all, he knew that it had been no dream, and he woke sometimes in the night with a shiver thinking that he and Bennie were in that dreadful foul cellar with its darkness and filth, its mold and sickening odor of gas. He had held the poor little sobbing and frightened Bennie close in his arms when a rat had run over their faces at night. He had given Bennie whatever clean food he could get—never letting the little fellow know that he himself was starving.

When Tom awoke from such dreams he tolded his hands—as Miss Temple had taught him — and talked to God, thanking him mentally for what was his now, the comfortable bed, the fresh, sweet air coming through the open window, the abundant food, and the dear, blessed lady who had done so much for him. Then he would fall asleep again with a smile of peace upon his face.

Before he had been at the farm-house three days he had begun to make himself useful. He had learned from Bartholomew where the hens' nests were, and he gathered in all the fresh eggs. He fed and watered Billy. He ran the lawn-mower. He cut kindling for Peggy, and gathered the fresh vegetables for Sally—in fact he did all a deeply grateful boy could do to show his appreciation of the goodness and mercy that had been shown his beloved brother and himself.

Charlotte, the oldest girl, was ten. She, too, had made herself useful. She wiped dishes for Peggy and set the table. Where she had learned to work was a mystery, but she seemed to take to it naturally—"like a duck to water"—so Sally said.

She was a plain-faced child, but so willing, so motherly (one might say) to the younger children that Miss Temple's heart went out to her.

Kathie, the little girl, who had fallen asleep in church on Deacon Stiles' shoulder, was Charlotte's sister. She was eight years old. Charlotte took care of Kathie's hair and, also, Sylvia's. One day she begged to brush and comb Miss Temple's pretty brown hair that was always arranged in a severely plain way. The latter consented with this understanding.

"If you will promise not to pull or snarl my hair."

"I'll promise."

So Charlotte combed and brushed gently until the hair was smooth and light, and soft as silk.

"Now, can I put it up?" she coaxed.

"You, put it up! Oh, my dear! I'm afraid you couldn't do that to my satisfaction."

"But please let me try."

"All right, I'm in your hands."

Charlotte was delighted, and as she proceeded with the hair dressing, Miss Temple sat quite still wondering where the child's gift came from. After many soft brushings and rollings and twistings the task was finished. Charlotte's plain face was radiant. Peggy happened in the room at that moment with some clean towels.

"Goodness gracious!" she exclaimed, dropping the towels in her surprise, "who fixed your hair? Oh, how young you look, Miss Temple! How sweet! How pretty!"

Miss Temple laughed.

"I fear you've been kissing the Blarney stone, Peggy," she said, and then, turning to Charlotte, "Bring me the hand-glass, my dear."

Charlotte brought it, and Miss Temple looked at herself. Her hair was arranged in pompadour style, showing her fine forehead to advantage. Two or three stray locks had been curled and fell over her temples. She could see for herself that she looked ten years younger. Peggy had gone out. Charlotte stood looking at her kind friend with love and admiration shining in her face. Miss Temple suddenly held out her arms, her lips were quivering, her eyes, misty.

"Really, my dear," she said, "you are a jewel."

[illegible]

When the rich casket shone in bright array,
[illegible]
When Jesus spake, well might his language be,
[illegible]

(To be Continued)

Good Causes Helped

The following sums have been contributed by our readers for the support of the worthy causes mentioned below:

[illegible] $2 —
[illegible] 50
Mrs Eliza Rose . . . 50
E T S B [illegible] 1 00
A friend, El Paso . 10 00
Ella Holmes 10
[illegible] 50
—, Marquette . . . 1 00
T [illegible] 2 —
[illegible]
[illegible] $4 00
Jno. J Bonnycastle . . 1 50
Mrs G F Kilburn . . . 10
W [illegible] 1 —
James B Roberts 10
F M [illegible] 1 —
Mrs M [illegible] 5 —
E [illegible] 1 —
X X X [illegible] 1 —
A [illegible] 1 —
[illegible] 1 —
M [illegible] 1 —
D W [illegible] 5 —
[illegible]
Frontier 5 00
—, Carratelle 2 00
[illegible] 1 —
[illegible] 4 00
M [illegible] 2 —
Prev. ack . . . $20 50
[illegible] 2 —
T [illegible] $28 50

Jerry McAuley Mission.

[illegible] $ 2 —
Anon, Grafton . . . 2 00
[illegible] 2 —
[illegible]
[illegible] $4 00 00
[illegible] 2 —
[illegible] 1 —
[illegible] 1 —
[illegible] 1

How : : : "Bowery Ike" Found Christ

S. H. HADLEY

The Life Story of a Converted Thief who Became an Earnest Mission Worker

LATE in the month of September, 1894, I was walking up the Bowery about one o'clock in the morning, when my attention was drawn to a wagon, in which two young men were lying. "Mr. Hadley, can I speak to you a minute?" asked one man, anxiously.

"What can I do for you, boys?" I asked.

"I have a friend," said the taller one, "whom I would like to have you interested in."

The idea of a man sleeping in a wagon on a chilly night without even a coat to his back, and having a friend in whom he wanted to interest a stranger, filled me with curiosity.

"Who is your friend?" I asked.

"Oh, it's Bowery Ike—one of the smartest thieves on the Bowery. I'd like to have you get acquainted with him, as he is in trouble. You see, this is the lay: He goes into buildings where carpenters are at work, and swipes the watches from their clothes that's hanging up. Why," said he, enthusiastically, "I have known him to swipe sometimes eight watches at a time! Yesterday he got drunk, and he went into a place and he fell through the joist and made a big noise and he got pinched. 'Twas a dreadful pity, for he had a nice gold ticker in his pocket he was going to get away with. Now, Mr. Hadley, I hear that you are a friend to us fellows, and if some one don't go down and help him out he will get a long term in prison, for he has been arrested many times, and the police know him."

"When is his trial coming off?" I asked.

"To-morrow morning, in the Tombs."

"Well," said I, "meet me at the Tombs Prison to morrow morning at eight o'clock, and I will see what I can do for you."

"Oh, no!" said he, with a little laugh, "I dasn't go there!"

"Why?" said I. "What's the matter?"

"Ah—they know me!"

"Well," said I, "wait at the street corner until I come, and I will take you in with me. What's your name?" I asked.

"My name is Rummy."

"Why do they call you Rummy?" I asked.

"Oh, because I love rum so well, I reckon."

"Who is this chap with you?"

"He is Shorty Hunchback."

"What are you doing here?"

He answered with a little laugh: "Goin' to sleep here."

"Why don't you go to bed?"

"I hain't got the price."

I took the two out of the wagon, gave them a good supper and a comfortable bed. They met me at the Tombs next morning, and I took them into the Court of Special Sessions. There, for the first time, I saw Ira B. Synder, "Bowery Ike." After some conversation with the judge, my man, instead of a long term in Sing Sing, got off with six months in the penitentiary. I got 'Rummy' a job in a lodging-house at $5 a week and his bed. When pay-day came around, he handed me back $3 and said: "Mind that for me."

This went on until I had $15 of Rummy's money. I said: "What are you going to do with this?"

"Well," he said, "winter is coming and it's mighty cold there on the Island where Ike is. I know it, for I have been there myself, and I'd like to get him some warm underclothes and a pair of mittens and a comforter and a good cap, and a piece of carpet for his cell."

"Well," I said, "you've got money enough for that. Let's get them and I'll go over with you."

I visited Ike often during the six months he was there, and found him an unusually bright man. He had, through trouble at home, left when a mere child. He had tried selling papers and blacking boots, but soon gravitated to the Bowery and became a thief. He was arrested many times. All the education he ever received was in the New York Juvenile Asylum. He escaped from that institution and traveled from one city to another, stealing as he went, stopping in cities and towns a day or two, and "beating" his way on trains. When his time was up in the penitentiary, I got him a position. He soon proved valuable help and became cashier. He often handled as much as $2,000 a month belonging to the owners, and also money of the lodgers which I was responsible for. He had stolen from others but he never stole from me. Sometimes he got tired and would say, "Mr. Hadley, I am going to quit." He would throw up his position, board a freight train and start out West. Once he went as far as San Francisco and back—never paying a cent to the railroads for his transportation. He would be gone from three to six months, and some morning I would see him in the office, and he'd say: "Have you got a job for me, Mr. Hadley?" And without more ado, he would begin at the bottom and again work up to the top.

I loved Ike—I had prayed for him, and a great love had sprung up in my heart for this friendless, homeless criminal. I saw that in him the devil had stolen a rare prize from the Lord, and I was bound by his help to win him back to love and righteousness.

One day he said that he was going to leave me "for good." A competitor of mine said: "Now, I'm going to hire Hadley's mascot," and he employed him in a similar business and put him in the office. I never knew of a man who was robbed as he was. Ike stole his clothes, his watch, his money — everything he could lay his hands on—and then disappeared. Detectives were employed to hunt him out, but they might as well have hunted for the nests the partridges had last year as hunt for Ike. It was six months before I saw him. I said: "Ike, why did you rob that man?"

"Oh," he said, "I had to. Mr. Hadley, he watched me."

Ike was finally arrested for drunkenness and sent to the workhouse for six months. It was on the boat Fidelity, while carrying the dead from the Morgue to the Potter's field that God, in his mercy, spoke to him and saved his worthless life. He said then and there: "When I get out I am going to the Water Street Mission." He did so, and came forward for prayer three nights, and finally yielded and gave his heart to God.

"Rummy," (whose name was John Dolan), had come down, prior to this, to the Water Street Mission, and was converted, and the year after died, and was buried from the Mission. He left a bright testimony. Ike was at his funeral and was much affected at the death of his old friend and partner in sin.

After the conversion of Ira (I will call him 'Ike' no longer), he found friends on every hand. One of our missionaries, Mrs. Lida Lamont, was wonderfully drawn to him. My wife had prayed with me ten years for his conversion. His heart was as tender as a child's. In the testimony meetings, which form such an important part of our work in the old McAuley Mission, he never failed to witness for Christ. Many of his old chums came down to hear what he had to say, and could not believe that he had really become a Christian, and had stopped stealing. One night he got up and said: "Mr. Hadley, I lied to-day. I needn't have done so. I didn't make a cent by it. I told a lie, and I am going to come forward to-night and ask the Lord to forgive me." Several times he made confessions like this right before the whole house, when he felt that in some way the devil had got the advantage of him.

His life was clean from the time of his conversion, although he was tempted many times by companions to go back to the old life. He developed into a good worker, and went around among his old companions asking them to come to the Saviour whom he loved so well. Finally, with the assistance of one of our trustees, Mr. Walter M. Smith, we sent him to the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, and he developed a wonderful knowledge and aptitude in learning the Word. He had charge of mission out-door work in Chicago, while there, and after eighteen months of such work, just as he was ready to come East and go to work in Water Street Mission, he was stricken with heart failure and died. He felt that Jesus held him and his death, like his later life, was a miracle of God's love and saving grace. The body was brought to New York and buried from the McAuley Mission, surrounded by loving friends and many of his old criminal companions.

I wish you could see a believer's funeral in the old Water Street Mission. We do not mourn and weep. We rejoice that another soul has passed the dead-lines of sin and has safely made the port of heaven.

S. H. HADLEY.

THE MERCER MEMORIAL HOME, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

Poor Invalids Helped

IN [illegible] sort, Atlantic City, there stands a rambling, [illegible] as the Mercer Memorial House for Invalid Women. Wide verandas almost entirely surround the first and second stories, and in clear weather they present quite an animated scene with their groups of patients out for recreation. All are cheerful because it is against the rules to speak of ailments. Those who are able stroll on the board-walk, or walk or ride to various parts of the city. Others, less fortunate, must content themselves with wheel-chairs. [illegible] vided especially for such cases. On each of the three floors are alcoves, cozy little places where one may converse, play, sew or read. The library consists mainly of old and new periodicals and religious books, and another alcove contains writing materials. Nurses are at hand and may be summoned by any patient instantly. A busy life have these nurses, in night and day duty. There is a resident physician and a doctor-in-charge. The rooms are spotlessly white and prettily furnished. They are assigned by the matron, the location being determined by the patient's ability to walk, or ride in the elevator. There are accommodations for one hundred and twenty women, and the house is generally filled from March to October.

The place is exceedingly home-like. Bells announce the rising hour, and at each meal a blessing is asked by the matron. After breakfast there is a little service of prayer and praise. It was especially established for the hard working, intelligent, but ofttimes suffering poor a seaside home for refined but needy invalid women. Philadelphians were to have the first choice of places, but women from other parts of the country are admitted when there is room, the charge being nominal. In 1884, Mrs. Ann J. Mercer, as a memorial to her deceased husband, built and furnished the main building. Since then an addition has been added.

Those who know the Mercer House best commend it because, while unsectarian, it is yet distinctly an American institution, and reaches in a quiet way a class of sufferers of which the great world knows little.

"Pride Goeth Before a Fall."

Some proud people think they are strong, ridicule the idea of disease, neglect health, let the blood run down, and stomach, kidneys and liver become deranged. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla and you will prevent the fall and save your pride.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

You are sure that
Swift's

Silver Leaf Lard is purity, perfection, and all lard.

Premium Hams make a breakfast fit for royalty, and Americans.

Premium Breakfast Bacon, an appetizer which makes everything else taste good.

Beef Extract, as good as the best—the concentrated strength of the best beef, with a flavor all its own.

Jersey Butterine, you couldn't tell it from the best butter.—healthy, wholesome, clean.

Cotosuet,—the perfect vegetable shortening—digestible and healthy.

Swift and Company, Chicago
Kansas City Omaha St. Louis St. Joseph St. Paul

Beecham's Pills
CURE SICK HEADACHE
and act like magic on a weak stomach and disordered liver.
10 cents and 25 cents, at all drug stores.

WANTED—A case of bad [illegible] RIPANS will not benefit. [illegible] long life. One gives relief. Note the word RIPANS on the package [illegible] RIPANS 10 for 5 cents or twelve [illegible] had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 1 cents forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 50 Spruce St., New York.

Royal Baking Powder is the most healthful leavener in the world. It goes farther.

Preaching Christ in Prison

The Gospel Proclaimed in the Historic Praesidio Prison at San Juan, Porto Rico.

IF any one had asked a Porto Rican to point out the gloomiest, the saddest spot on the whole of that beautiful island, he would have replied that it was inside the walls of the Praesidio Prison. There, so many tragedies have been enacted, so many sorrows have whelmed human hearts, that the very name of the Praesidio became the synonym for suffering and persecution. Such was its condition and character under Spanish rule; but now all is changed. Offenders are treated with humanity and the law of Christian kindness prevails. Under American rule, the cruelties of the past have already been well nigh forgotten.

Our photograph presents a scene in the old prison which well deserves to be remembered. It is the first religious service held by Americans. On this occasion, Gen. Guy V. Henry, Governor General of Porto Rico, United States Consul Hanna, and a little company of their fellow countrymen were present, among them being several American ladies including Mrs. Philip Hanna (presiding at the organ), Mrs Benton (daughter of Gen. Henry), Mrs. Jessie M. Holland, of New York City (President of the Sunshine Society), Mrs. S. Breechmin, wife of Mayor Breechmin and Miss Graves, a guest of General and Mrs. Henry.

THE FIRST GOSPEL SERVICE IN THE PRAESIDIO PRISON, SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO

The services were conducted by Frank L. Smith, of the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A., Rev. Mr. McKim acting as interpreter, and Rev. Mr. Pratt and Dr. Wyborg, of Chicago, also assisting. During the week Gen. Henry had given orders to have the shackles filed from the limbs of the prisoners, the dark cell done away with and all the modes of torture of the Spanish regime abolished. This service was held to mark the passing of the Spanish system for the prisoners of San Juan. The ladies had learned to sing a few hymns in Spanish for the occasion. After the sermon, and when Mr. Smith had made plain to the prisoners all Gen. Henry had done and desired to do for their welfare, Gen. Henry was called on to speak. He arose, and in a majestic way, and as if about to give a command, raised his hand and said, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." No other remark would he make. Senor H. Diaz, the Minister of Justice, then made a short address.

The picture shows the main corridor of the prison. Just back of the railing, the prisoners sleep on a sort of wooden plank laid across two wooden horses. These are placed side by side down the corridor. There are no cots or cells. The prison now has a most humane warden, Marimo Lucinarus. He it was who met Gen. Miles when the latter landed, and who acted as guide for the American army on its arrival in Porto Rico.

Services have been continued at the prison and a marked improvement is noticeable in the inmates. A number work on the streets. For this they are allowed five cents a day for extras.

At the third prison Gospel service a most touching incident took place. It was noticed by the ladies during the first part of the service that there seemed to be a suffused excitement among the prisoners. After the opening service, Mr. Smith said: "Warden Lucinarus is going to make a few remarks." The Warden arose, and said: "The prisoners are very grateful to the ladies and to Gen. Henry, and felt that they would like, in some way, to show their gratitude; so, during the week, they collected among themselves the sum of $4.50, and requested me to purchase some flowers for the ladies, which I now take great pleasure in presenting."

The ladies were deeply touched by this unexpected kindness. Mrs. G. V. Henry, in behalf of the visitors, thanked the prisoners not only for their gift, but for the spirit that prompted the offering.

Gospel Progress at Manila

The workers of the Young Men's Christian Association at Manila, Philippine Islands, have sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a report of the results of their labors during the past month. It says:

"Since last report, our main work has been the continuance of the distribution of stationery and literature. The field is large, extending from Pasai, five miles south, to as far as the Bagbag River, thirty-five miles north, but as far as possible all the troops were reached. Special attention was given to the incomplete regiments which have no chaplains to do such work for them. To enable us to more readily reach the men, Gen. Otis kindly issued us general passes, which also permit us to use the railway, there being two trips daily between Manila and the present terminus at Bagbag River. Some of our trips occupy several days. For instance, when Malolos was taken and the advance halted for several days, a good supply was taken up on the train and temporarily stored at the commissary depot. Three days were spent in visiting the different regiments and disposing of the supplies. On such occasions a blanket and ration outfit was carried. We are always made welcome to the company mess, and to occupy the shelter tent of men who happen to be on outpost duty. For such trips as to the waterworks, Calcoocan or Pasai, the supplies are usually taken in one of the two-wheeled carts or caramatas, and the distribution along the line done on foot.

"Various supplies were sent to the men at Negros, Cebu, Iloilo, Corregidor, and an effort made to supply those at the First Division Hospital. During March and April we distributed 73,500 pieces of stationery; 3,200 papers and magazines; 1,050 Colportage Books, and 350 New Testaments.

"The religious services at the Philipino Theatre on Sunday mornings, at which we have been assisting with our organ, hymn books, etc., still continue. The attendance at the services at the First Division Hospital has been increasing, an average of between 75 or 100 of the convalescents gathering every Sunday afternoon. The influence of the meetings extends far beyond this, however, as many of those confined to the wards can hear the singing and listen attentively as the familiar tunes greet their ears.

"The prospects for the future seem encouraging. Regular troops are constantly arriving, so that when the Volunteers are sent home, there will still be a very large army gathered here. During the rainy season, which is close at hand, many of the troops will no doubt be located in the city, even should peace not be declared. We ask for the continued interest and prayers of those in the homeland for this work in Manila."

Camp Northfield Ready to Open

INDICATIONS point to a season of unusual activity at Camp Northfield. Letters, covering a range from Canada to Alabama, tell of the coming of new and larger delegations this year, which will need from one to five tents for their special accommodation. As usual, a large number of the visitors attending the World's Student Conference, will tent in camp during the Conference. Among the institutions whose delegates expect to be in camp, are: Mass. Institution of Technology, Boston University Medical School, College of Liberal Arts, Cornell, Amhurst, Dartmouth, and Barrington. Mr. Moody commends as an example well worthy of imitation, the pastor in a neighboring state, who has made up a party of the young men of his congregation and will himself lead them in camping out. This seems a very practical method for pastors to maintain the ties of friendship and interest between themselves and their young men, and several are now trying to effect similar arrangements.

The Camp is in no way behind in matters of patriotism, and the Fourth of July celebration will be of stirring interest. Commander Wadhams, U. S. Navy, will give the patriotic address, and it is hoped that Admiral Higginson will also be present.

The speakers have already been announced in these columns. Mr. Moody will be at the camp all summer. Alterations and improvements are being made which will make it possible to accommodate the largest number the Camp has ever held in any year of its existence.

Trial Package Free!

If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address JOHN A. SMITH, 219 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

$18.00 a Week and expenses to good parties. Permanent position. Also local workers and managers can find profitable employment for part time. Give references. R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

$300 to $10.00 a day can be easily made working for me. People preferred who can furnish their own team. Applicants must furnish satisfactory reference as to character and standing. B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

O'Neill's

Sixth Ave., 20th to 21st St., New York

We are Selling a Thoroughly Reliable Bicycle for $15.98

These are all men's wheels 24 inch frames, best "Shelby" seamless steel tubing, flush joints, and all beautifully finished. Never before has a reliable and up-to-date machine been sold at such a remarkably low price. Your choice of three colors—green maroon and black. Don't miss seeing these.

We Guarantee these Bicycles for the Year 1899

The "O'Neill" Bicycle

Women's and Men's 22 and 24 inch Frames

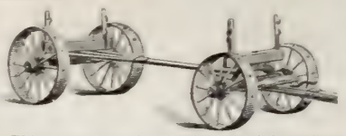
A beautifully finished bicycle having full flush joints and all the latest fittings, including "Kelly" bars with internal expanders at head and seat posts. We guarantee the wheels and all their fittings for the year 1899. $27.00

H. O'NEILL & CO.

Sixth Ave., 20th to 21st St., New York

A Low Wagon at a Low Price.

In order to introduce their Low Metal Wheels with Wide Tires, the Empire Manufacturing Company, Quincy, Ill., have placed upon the market a Farmer's Handy Wagon that is only 25 inches high fitted with 24 and 30-inch wheels with 4-inch tire.



This wagon is made of best material throughout, and really costs but a trifle more than a set of new wheels, and fully guaranteed for one year. Catalogue giving a full description will be mailed upon application by the Empire Manufacturing Co., Quincy, Ill., who also will furnish metal wheels at low prices, made any size and width of tire to fit any axle.

... OBERLIN COLLEGE ...

JOHN HENRY BARROWS, Pres., Oberlin, O.

Academy and College, 34 buildings, thoroughly equipped with libraries, laboratories, gymnasia and separate gymnasia for young men and young women. Schools also offering instruction and training in the Classics, the Sciences, Philosophy, Theology, Art, Elocution, the Conservatory of Music, Normal Course in History, Training for Women, Engraving and Printing. Expenses moderate. Fall term begins Sept. 20th. For full information, address the Secretary.

JAMES R. SEVERANCE, Oberlin, O.

"Shut In Series"

15 Leaflets and Tracts for use by Christian Endeavorers, Y. M. C. A.'s, Sabbath-School Teachers, Mission Workers and all Christians, whether at home or on their outings. 6 cents for sample set of 15, only 35 cents for 25 full sets, postpaid. Address

DR. O. F. PRESBREY, Dr. Strong's Sanitarium. Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

FOR ALL RELIGIOUS SERVICES

CHURCH HYMNS AND GOSPEL SONGS.

$25, $30 and $35 per 100, according to binding. Samples of either post free, 25c.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT — And on Lake Champlain

$4.00 to $8.00 per week. Send 1c. postage for Illustrated Book.

A. W. ECCLESTONE, S.P.A., 353 Broadway, N.Y.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs, Sunday Schools, and every good purpose. Books, Sheet Music, Octavos, Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments. New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free. FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

A Gospel Tent on Broadway

Beginning a Unique Evangelical Movement in New York City

A GOSPEL tent in the heart of the great metropolis is a novel sight; yet this is what greeted the eyes of the multitudes who traveled along Broadway on the morning and afternoon of Sunday, June 18th. There is a large vacant lot on the corner of Fifty-sixth Street and Broadway, upon which there had risen, almost as if by magic, during the night, a great, billowy structure of snowy canvas, beneath whose folds 1,500 persons could be easily accommodated, or even 3,000 when opened out at the sides. The mammoth tent was the first step in what promises to be the most remarkable street preaching campaign New York has witnessed in many years.

Several weeks ago an organization embracing pastors of various evangelical denominations was formed for the purpose of conducting the new summer Gospel crusade. The officers chosen were: William Phillips Hall, president; J. L. B. Holme, of Calvary Church, treasurer; George E. Bemis, Church of the Strangers, secretary; the Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur, the Rev. E. S. Halloway, the Rev. John H. Elliott, the Rev. Leighton Williams, executive committee. Besides these officers the following were elected as directors: Mr. James Talcott, Mr. DeWitt C. Gardner, Mr. J. L. Dawe, Mr. Franklin H. Moore and Dr. J. A. Sanders.

REV. S. HARTWELL PRATT

Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt, the well-known evangelist, who will have charge of the tent services, conceived the idea of a summer campaign during the heated term, believing that the cool shelter of a tent would attract audiences at a time when the usual indoor services in church are poorly attended. Regular services will be held every Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, and on week-day evenings at 8 o'clock, except Saturdays. A number of prominent pastors and evangelists will speak at the meetings. Mr. D. L. Moody has promised to speak at the meetings, and a number of Northfield speakers are expected.

The following pastors, whose churches are in the immediate vicinity of the tent, have expressed their active sympathy with the movement and promised co-operation: Rev. Robert S. MacArthur, D.D., Cavalry Baptist, Fifty-seventh street; Rev. Wilton Merle Smith, D.D., Central Presbyterian; Rev. D. Asa Blackburn, Church of the Strangers; Rev. Franklin H. Moore, Supply of the Church of the Disciples; Rev. Leighton Williams, Pastor of Amity Baptist Church, Fifty-fourth street; Rev. John H. Elliott, Pastor of Reformed Church, Thirty-fourth street; Rev. Edwin S. Holloway, Pastor of the Thirty-third Street Baptist Church. The tent has been named the "Glad Tidings."

At the opening service on Sunday afternoon, over 1,000 were in the audience. Rev. Mr. Pratt, Rev. A. C. Dixon, Rev. W. P. Hall, Rev. John H. Elliott and others delivered strong evangelical addresses. The song service was led by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. C. Stebbins. Many city pastors were among the audience.

♣

A Good Vacation

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for July 9. Mark 6: 7-32

REST, taken periodically, is coming to be more and more recognized as true economy, relieving the strain on the human body, and giving it an opportunity to recuperate. Mind and muscle both profit by laying aside for a time the usual occupations and taking a vacation. It is marvelous, when we come to consider it, that the human constitution wears as well as it does. There is no machine that would bear the constant pressure year after year, that we put on ourselves. Muscles and nerve and brain are expected to keep up their activity day by day and to renew their strength as fast as it is exhausted. Experience has proved, however, that while they will do this in many cases, there is a clear advantage in giving them an interval of repose, during which they gather strength for new and better effort. With some, of course, no such relaxation is possible, but with the large and ever increasing majority, the need is recognized and provision is made for it. At this season of the year, the children in the schools, their teachers, the ministers of churches, the employees in offices and stores, merchants and lawyers leave the scenes of labor and take a longer or shorter period of change and rest. It is often done reluctantly, but with a wise perception of the good that will come of it. As one of our novelists says of his hero, he felt "that he must leave the work he was so fond of and so weary of," that he might return to do it better after the change.

To those who have the good fortune of being able to get this relaxation, the question comes of how best to use it so as to get the most good out of it. Many would find mere indolence and passivity an intolerable experience. Yet even in doing nothing, some good may be obtained. Our life is one of such hurry and rush, planning and executing at breakneck speed, that there is no time for the receptivity which enlarges the field of vision and deepens the reserve of feeling. It is sometimes well that we should pause and think. There must come an end to this labor and incessant occupation, and it is well that we should contemplate it. As the merchant "takes stock," and balances assets with liabilities, we may wisely turn the vacation interval to account, in surveying our lives, and seeing whether they are such as we shall wish them to have been, when we quit our occupations finally, and enter on a new existence. In the absorbing pursuits of ordinary life, when we must give our attention undividedly to concrete questions, there is no time for such reflections, but away in some quiet retreat, alone with God, a review of the way we usually travel may open our eyes to many things which ought to be considered. Resolutions may then be formed which will guide us during the coming year, and mistakes and omissions may be recognized, which may be rectified in the future. It will be a profitable time if the suspension of our customary duties leads to a new plan of life which shall be more self-denying and less sordid than the old.

There is always a danger in vacation times which must be avoided. It is naturally a time for pleasure, but the pleasure we choose should never be of the debilitating order. Some come back from their vacation more exhausted than when they went away. It is not likely that any real Christian will allow himself to give way to dissipation, but it sometimes happens that, away from home, he relaxes the care and vigilance which ordinarily keep him from temptation. The very absence of occupation and the need of amusement lead him to indulgences and into scenes that he would not enter, in his busy home life. There have been instances in which a taste for the theatre and the ball-room have dated from vacation and have survived to cast a shadow on the after life. That is the worst use to which a vacation can be put. There ought to be the same care over the morals, the same watchfulness lest any conduct of ours bring a reproach on the name of Christ that we exercise where we are known. Wheresoever the Christian may go, his conduct should be such as becomes a follower of Christ. He should be able to show that his religion does not deprive him of the best joys of life; but that it does provide him with so much real pleasure, that he has no need to seek for more, in scenes that debase and degrade all who are found in them. The vacation should make the man better, stronger, more earnest than before and it should be planned distinctly for that purpose.

♣

The Bible Inerrant

The recent Assembly of the Presbyterian Church made a definition of its attitude which is likely to still further diminish the roll of its ministers. It declared that it was contrary to the Confession of Faith to hold that the Scriptures are in any respect historically inaccurate.

"A word to the wise is sufficient." But some people wait until "down sick" before trying to ward off or cure illness. The wise recognize in the words "Hood's" assurance of health.

RUBIFOAM

appeals to all good people that give cleanliness a careful consideration. As a cleansing and preserving agent

FOR THE TEETH

RUBIFOAM is perfect.

Price, 25 cents. At Druggists. Sample vial of Rubifoam mailed free on receipt of postage, 2 cents. Address E. W. Hoyt & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Gem Nail Clipper

Every person desiring shapely handsome finger nails, should have one. No lady's dressing table complete without it.

Just the thing for cutting Children's nails.

Trims the nails long, short rounded pointed; manicures, cleans and files them. Excellent for treating ingrowing nails. Made from high-grade tempered tool steel, nickel finish, accurately ground. Ask your dealer, or we will send by mail, postpaid on receipt of 25 cents.

COE MANUFACTURING CO.,
50 E Warren Street, New York.

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

Freedom of motion, freedom of respiration—the freedom of absolute comfort, is enjoyed by wearing Ferris' Bicycle Corset Waist. Every wheel-woman should know from actual experience the grace of form, the peace of mind and health of body given by wearing the

Ferris Bicycle Corset Waist

It is matchless for gymnasium, golf, tennis and all feminine sports.

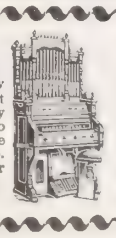
Style No. 261, as here pictured, is made of best ventilating cloth. Ferris Waists are made in various styles—high and low bust, long and short waist, to suit all figures. Ladies', $1.00 to $2.00. Misses', 50c. to $1.00. Children's Waists, 25 cents to 50 cents. Write for our illustrated book, mailed free.

THE FERRIS BROS. CO., 341 Broadway, New York.

FREE ONE YEAR'S TRIAL.

All freight paid by us if not satisfactory. Our new Catalogue tells you all about it. It is free. Send us a postal for it today. A better Organ or Piano for less money than any company in the world. Over 50 styles to select from. It will do no harm to get our catalogue before you purchase elsewhere, and may save you money. It shows you how to get a handsome premium free. We sell on any reasonable terms desired. Special bargains for summer and fall.

BEETHOVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO.
P.O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.



TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only Truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and it retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Comfortable beds made to reduce corpulency. The use of these belts reduces your size and leaves no room for surplus fat to accumulate. They can be used after any operations. Our goods are not sold to agents or druggists. Send for free pamphlets to the Improved Elastic Truss Co., 708 Broadway, N. Y.

If at first you don't succeed," Try . . . SAPOLIO

Stenography Type-writing, Penmanship, Bookkeeping, thoroughly taught by mail or personally at Eastman, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Young men and women carefully prepared for business pursuits. Situations furnished. Catalogue free.
C. C. GAINES, Box 236, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

After Sunrise

And after Sunset, HIRES Rootbeer is the drink you should get.

During the heat of the day HIRES Rootbeer will keep your temperature below the danger point. After the work of the day it will refresh and invigorate you.

HIRES Rootbeer is used and endorsed by the best known advocates of temperance, who recognize in a temperance drink of the highest class. A package makes five gallons. HIRES Rootbeer can be carried to picnic and made for drinking, sold everywhere or can be made at home and easy. Write for booklet and ask how a boy can make from 40 to $50 a day. A beautiful picture of the Temperance Girl, and a sample of HIRES Rootbeer, sent for five cents.

HIRES Rootbeer

The Charles E. Hires Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

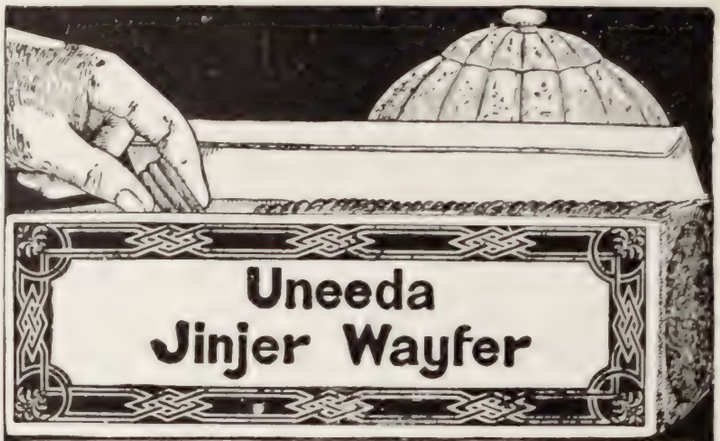
A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM...

DR. J. G. CONNOR, Ionia, Mich., writes:

DEAR SIR:—An old friend of mine handed me a couple of small vials of your TARTARLITHINE some time ago and I tried it on myself, having suffered from rheumatism for several years. I assure you I was astonished with the effects that I procured a full sized bottle, and since taking it I have been entirely free from rheumatism during the past year. I also observed that it is not surpassed by any other preparation as a PROMPT and EFFICIENT diuretic; besides it is pleasant to administer. Please send me a few bottles for use among my patients afflicted with Rheumatism.

Regular package $1.00
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.



Uneeda Jinjer Wayfer

The cracker jar has been supplanted by the Uneeda Jinjer Wayfer box. The box that keeps its contents as fresh as the day they came from the oven. When your appetite craves a fresh, sweet, delicate morsel try a Uneeda Jinjer Wayfer. Keep the box where you can try them often. Where the children can get them as often as they like.

Uneeda Jinjer Wayfer

Is the sweet sister of Uneeda Biscuit. Ask your grocer for them.
Made only by NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY.
Proprietors of the registered trade mark—"Uneeda."

Alcolia Stove Free

A ultimate invention, consisting of a tin container filled with alcohol, with an extension top for heating wicking does. May be used from time to time and will burn continuously for one hour or less, is odorless, and can be carried in pocket.

This stove, ready to light, will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of 10 cents (coin or stamps).

Armour's Beef Extract and Vegetable Tablets.

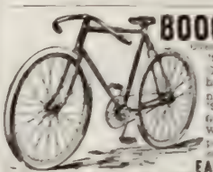
To be had of all druggists and grocers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 25 cents.

The Tablets are Vegetable, and a Pleasant Extract of Beef, compressed and ready for use.

Each Tablet a Meal.

Will keep in any climate and length of time. Recommended by physicians, nurses, mothers, housekeepers, explorers and travelers as the most convenient and economical form in which the nutritious properties of meat can be used. Always reliable. Ask for Armour's Tablets and take no other. Sold by all druggists and grocers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 25 cents.

Armour & Company, Chicago.



8000 BICYCLES

Cleveland Wheels cleared out. '98 MODELS $9 to $16. Shopworn and second hand wheels, good as new, $2 to $10. NEW '99 MODELS $11 to $30. Great factory clearing sale. We ship to anyone on approval, and trust without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE

by helping us advertise our great line of Sundries. We give one Sample Agent's Outfit Free for use to introduce them. FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.

E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO., CHICAGO, ILLS.

It Is a Certainty That Catarrh

can be cured. You will become a victim of catarrh unless you use Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Mailed free. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser, 39 and 40 Broad St., Blosser Building, Atlanta, Ga.

THE CELEBRATED CORNISH AMERICAN PIANOS AND ORGANS.

ONE YEAR'S FREE TRIAL

WE WILL SHIP A CORNISH PIANO OR CORNISH ORGAN ANYWHERE UPON THE DISTINCT UNDERSTANDING THAT IF IT IS NOT SATISFACTORY TO PURCHASER AFTER 12 MONTHS' USE, WE WILL TAKE IT BACK.

Mention Paper.

It would be impossible for us to make positive and unique CONDITIONAL PLAN of doing business were it not backed up by the strongest evidence of our absolute responsibility. The Cornish American Pianos and Organs are warranted for twenty-five years, and with every warrant there is our personal guarantee endorsed by a business reputation of nearly fifty years, and plant and property worth over One Million Dollars. Our success in the past has been mainly owing to the confidence placed in us by the public, and we have a quarter of a million satisfied patrons bearing testimony to the honesty of our methods and to the perfection of the Cornish American Pianos and Organs.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS OF THE WORLD FAMOUS CORNISH PLAN

and for a complete description of the instruments made by us, see OUR NEW SOUVENIR CATALOGUE for 1899, handsomely illustrated in colors—the most comprehensive musical catalogue in the trade. The frontispiece is a masterly reproduction in fac-simile of an interesting oil painting, designed and executed for us by an eminent artist, representing "SAINT CECILIA AND THE ANGELIC CHOIR." This beautiful catalogue is sent FREE CHARGES PREPAID, and we also include our novel reference book, "THE HEART OF THE PEOPLE," CATALOGUE, BOOK AND OUR LATEST SPECIAL OFFERS FREE.

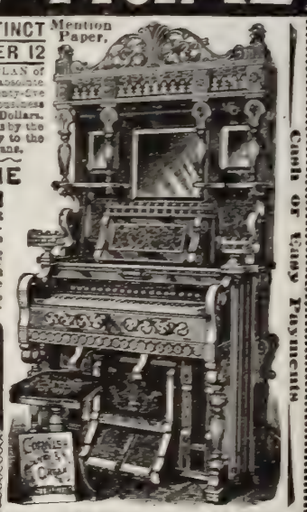
A prompt response to this advertisement will secure a DISCOUNT of $20.00 on the list prices as quoted in our 1899 Catalogue on any CORNISH ORGAN or $20.00 on the list prices if you buy a CORNISH PIANO.

PIANOS FROM 155 DOLLARS

With the Cornish Patent Musical Attachment, which correctly imitates the Harp, Guitar, Banjo, Mandolin, Etc. This patent can only be had in the CORNISH PIANO

REFERENCES. Our bank, your bank, any bank or any of the multitude of patrons who have purchased millions of dollars' worth of instruments from us during the past fifty years.

Send for particulars of the Cornish Co-operative Plan, showing how you can secure a Cornish Piano or Organ FREE.



Cash or Easy Payments

CORNISH & CO., (Established nearly 50 years) WASHINGTON, NEW JERSEY.

MAKERS OF HIGH GRADE AMERICAN PIANOS AND ORGANS.

ORGANS FROM $25.00

Shade Wont Work-

Because it isn't mounted on THE IMPROVED HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLER.

A perfect article. No tacks required. Notice name on roller when buying your shades.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate WHITE BRONZE. Monuments and statuary for cemeteries. Prices to suit all. Work delivered and set. Lettering greatly improved. Write for designs and information. Costs little more.

NO MOSS GROWING. CLEANING. NO CRUMBLING. CRACKING.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

LIGNITE For cleansing and polishing all kinds of Hard Wood Work such as Furniture, Hard Wood Finish, Hard Wood Floors, etc. Is superior to all others, and the only article which successfully does the work.

Send 2c. stamp for pamphlet and SAMPLES TO

THE TAYLOR PAINT & OIL CO., 38 Burling Slip, N. Y. City.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,

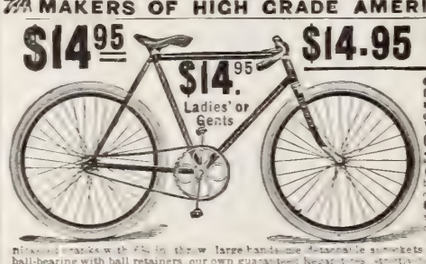
102 Fulton st., New York, sell all makes under half price from factory. Send for illustrated catalogue and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Dealers supplied. Typewriting and Mimeographing done.

$13.25 BUYS A $25.00 BICYCLE

Don't buy a bicycle until you send for our 1899 illustrated and descriptive catalogue. It contains the highest grade bicycle ever offered at the price. VICTOR MANF'G CO. Dept. G 42. 161 to 167 Plymouth Pl., Chicago, Ill.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP for children teething, should always be used for children while teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa.

$14.95 $14.95 Buys a $40.00 Bicycle



Our brand new latest '99 Homer Bicycle all fitted up complete and ready to ride for $14.95. Guaranteed equal to the best $40 or $50 bicycle ever made or no sale. It's a Wonder Offer.

OUR HOMER Bicycle at $14.95 is a wonder, a rare bargain and is insured for one year by our written Binding Guarantee. It's made by the best expert bicycle builders that money can employ from strictly first-class material, beautifully finished and is equal to any $40 bicycle ever built. It has every improvement, all the good points and no defects. Made from best seamless drawn steel tubing with latest Arch Crown Fork, 24 in. drop in center, fine highly nickeled sprockets with 6¾ in. throw, large hands, one detachable sprocket, genuine Westley hubs, hard rims, full ball-bearing with ball retainers, our own guaranteed Nevacuse, strongest steel made. Take your choice of Men's Size 24 in. Ladies' 22 in. or Boys' 20 in. Any style handlebar, 50 to 56 Gear, Black, Green or Maroon colors. Complete Set of Tools Free to fit each bicycle.

SEND NO MONEY but send us a postal stating whether ladies' or gents' is desired and we will send this our latest '99 model Homer bicycle by express C. O. D. subject to examination. When it arrives examine it thoroughly, and if found perfect and the greatest bicycle value on earth and fully equal to other $40 and $50 bicycles, pay to the express agent our special price $14.95 and expressage. Pay nothing if unsatisfactory, but refuse to accept it and it will be returned at our expense.

MORGAN & WRIGHT TIRES our Regan tire is wanted. Write for Big Free Catalogue.

THE G. LOUIS VEHON CO., 155-157 W. Jackson St., CHICAGO, ILL.

LARKIN SOAPS AND PREMIUMS.—FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

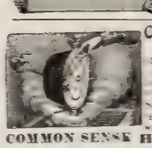
OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.

Beyond Comparison the value of Electric Steel Wheels and Wagons. All about them in free catalogue. Electric Wheel Co., Quincy, Ill.

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES: no experience needed; position permanent: self seller. PEASE MFG. CO., P.O. BOX A, Cincinnati, O

INGERSOLL PRINTERS, 10c.

Complete 3 A Font of Rubber Type, with Holder, Indelible Ink Pad, Tweezers, etc., Postpaid 10c. 5 A Font with Figures, 15c.; 2 for 25c. 5 A Font, 2 Sets Figures and 2 Line Holder, 25c. Send for Big Catalogue FREE. ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BROTHER, Dept. 61, 67 Cortlandt St., N. Y. C.



COMMON SENSE KETTLES.

Self-stirring means vegetables with no unpleasant taste, economy never confined to stuff. Flesh never get sick, acids weaken. Eliminate tenderly keeps more $25.00 money, saves you. Send for free sample. The deposit is deducted on first order, making the sample free. Write at once.

COMMON SENSE KETTLE CO., 60 Wabash Av., Chicago

COSTS AGENTS NOTHING to start in business handling our new fast selling specialties and make big profits. Catalogue free. G. VINING NOVELTY CO., 60 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE to sell Sash Locks and Door Holders. Sample sash, Lock free for 10c. cent stamp. Immense; better than weights; burglar proof. $10 a day. Write quick. Address BROHARD & CO., Dept. 11, Philadelphia, Pa.

STARK BRO'S PAY CASH every WEEK if you sell STARK TREES. Outfit free. STARK NURSERY, LOUISIANA, MO., Rockport, Ill., Bussell & Al.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

VOLUME 22—NUMBER 27

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, JULY 5, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

: : : Shepherding the Lambs in Porto Rico : : :

The Pioneer Sunday School, Founded and Supported by Our Readers in the New Island Colony, Making Excellent Progress

WHEN THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, several months ago, laid before its readers the touching story of the neglected little children of Porto Rico, and invited their cooperation in establishing a Sunday School work there, it had confidence that, despite the many difficulties to be encountered, such an effort could not fail. That this confidence was well-founded, the result has shown. The pioneer Christian Sunday School of San Juan, the capital of the island, is the outcome of our readers' cooperation and of the prompt endorsement and support they accorded to the movement. Mr. Frank L. Smith, in charge of the Y. M. C. A. work in Porto Rico, organized the school nearly two months ago, acting as our representative in the matter. He reports that it is now well attended, well officered, and in splendid condition to effect the best spiritual results. We will let Mr. Smith's letter tell its own story, and we accordingly print it below, believing that our readers, as sharers in this latest labor, lovingly undertaken in His name and for the sake of the little ignorant Porto Rican waifs, will be deeply interested in what he writes:

"PORTO RICO, June 13, 1899.

"The accompanying pictures represent groups of Porto Rican children belonging to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School in San Juan. The sessions are held each Sunday morning at nine o'clock. Tickets of invitation printed in Spanish and English are put into the hands of scholars and scattered through the town. The municipal theatre of the city is hired for the use of the school, and proves a very desirable meeting-place. One of the photographs represents a class of boys taught by Miss Ida Hayes, of the Baptist Home Missionary Society. The group is placed on the stage of the theatre. Each boy, as you may see, is using in the class-work a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S edition of the Gospel of St. John (San Juan), printed in Spanish and English. The lesson for the day is from the eleventh chapter of St. John—the resurrection of Lazarus and the little fellows not only gain the spiritual truths in their own tongue, but can compare it with the language of the 'Americano,' which they are so anxious to learn.

"Another group shows a portion of the girls' class taught by Miss Dodd, a valued employee of the Educational Department of the Insular Government. Her portrait is taken with her class. The little girls are from different degrees of society, but all interested in learning the Gospel verses, and hearing the sacred stories. Miss Dodd is of Scotch parentage, and was born in Porto Rico.

(Continued on page 823)

Specially Photographed for this Journal and Copyrighted

LITTLE NATIVE CHILDREN OF "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S" SUNDAY SCHOOL, AT SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

A. S., Bivins, Tex. What did Christ mean by the two kinds of birth, the flesh and the spirit

He had been explaining the new birth to Nicodemus, who had misunderstood him, confusing the natural with the spiritual birth. In the passage you quote, Christ shows him his error. There is no physical process by which a man can be born again. Not circumcision nor baptism, not confirmation can effect that change. It is spiritual and must be produced by the Holy Spirit. Outward rites affect the flesh, and all that is born of the flesh is flesh, that which is the result of the operation of the Spirit is spirit.

Eleanor S., Bridgeport, Conn. My husband has given me cause to secure a divorce on scriptural grounds, but I have no money to prosecute the suit. Am I justified in regarding our marriage as dissolved by his act, without a decision in the courts? My husband is willing that I should do so.

By no means. If you were to marry, as your letter seems to imply that you are thinking of doing, you would be liable to prosecution for bigamy. The law is made for the protection of home and family, and you must comply with it. The union must be legally dissolved before you are free to marry. You are justified in living apart from your husband, but you must not marry without having a legal divorce.

Constant Reader, Harlem, N. Y. Is a lunatic responsible for his actions? Will God hold him to account?

There are degrees in insanity, so that we cannot answer your question categorically. You may, however, be quite sure that where there is no power there is no responsibility. God will hold no man to account who has not the power to discriminate between right and wrong, unless he has lost the power by his own wrongdoing.

J. H. S., Eagle Rock, Va. 1. Who invented the alphabet for the blind and when? 2. Who invented the alphabet for the deaf and dumb.

1. The first embossed book for the use of the blind was printed in Paris in 1784, by M. Valentine Houg from flat, movable letters, which his pupils had been previously taught to put together and read. Fonts of types were cast, and books printed which were approved by the Academy of Sciences, and exhibited before the royal family at Versailles. The art created at the time a great sensation. Large editions of a few volumes were printed at great expense, but as they were not easily read, and were used only for exhibition in the Paris Institution, the interest soon died away, and the greater part of the edition was long after sold for waste paper. 2. Juan Paulo Bonet, a Benedictine monk, published a work in 1620, which was the first step toward making the education of the deaf and dumb permanent. The first English writer who gives a manual alphabet was George Dalgarno. This alphabet is most probably the one from which our two-hand alphabet is devised.

F. F., Oshkosh, Wis. 1. If Christ was pre-existent, was he in human form? 2. Where do we find total-abstinence enjoined in the Bible? 3. Why is the word for the weekly day of rest sometimes called Sabbath and sometimes Sunday? Which is right?

1. That he was pre-existent is asserted by [illegible] and by Paul (Col. 1: 17). It is difficult to understand his pre-existent nature, but it was certainly not human. He took the human form on himself when he came to redeem man. The natural inference is that previous to his coming he was spirit as God is. 2. Total abstinence is nowhere directly enjoined, but the principles upon which the practice rests are inculcated (see 1 Cor. 8: 13). 3. It is a matter of habit. The title of "the Lord's Day" is better than either. Strictly speaking, Sunday is not a Sabbath, inasmuch as we do not observe it as the Sabbath was observed. The Sabbath was a day of rest, while our holy day is one of activity. Sunday is a heathen name for the day, as is Monday and the other days.

W. S. T., Medford, Mass. 1. What will be the effect, if any, upon the earth when at the new moon next November, the moon, sun, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune are all exercising their attraction in the same direction? 2. When did the like occur before?

The foregoing letter is one of a class which we frequently receive. Unusual events in the celestial world always attract extraordinary attention, and to some are full of the most ominous and harrowing significance. We have submitted this letter to Prof. Young, the astronomer of Princeton University, one of the ablest scientific authorities, and his reply will be read with interest:

"1. The conjunction of the sun and moon on the third of November will, of course, produce the ordinary spring tides, which always follow new moon. The planets, with the exception of Neptune, will at that time be bunched near the place of the sun in a manner which is certainly rather unusual; their attraction upon the earth and sun is, however, too feeble to produce any effect whatever upon the earth, such as can be detected by any ordinary observation; certain slight 'perturbations' in the earth's motion rise at that time to a maximum, and then speedily die away. But practically the bunching of the planets will have no more influence on the weather, or any other human affairs, than the collection of fifty squirrels on one tree in Central Park. During November and December the sky will be substantially 'planetless' to the telescopic observer, Neptune and some of the asteroids will alone be visible, the others all being too near the sun. 2. Exactly the same configuration of the planets with respect to the sun and moon has never occurred before, and never will again. Probably something approximately like it may have happened several times since history began; but it would require a long and very troublesome computation to determine just when and how often. It is not worth the trouble, as the phenomenon is not of the slightest practical or scientific importance.

Princeton, N. J., June 3, '99. "C. A. YOUNG."

Subscriber, Omaha, Neb. What is the meaning of [illegible] and answers regarding the Japanese and Gaelic [illegible] this connection, let me call attention to the Chero[illegible] the Chinese. It is a beautiful language, spoken with the teeth and tongue mostly, very musical, but no gutturals—and only a very few words (probably not more than six or seven that the lips meet on). It is purely phonetic—and we have an alphabet invented by our "Cadmus" Sequoyah, composed of eighty-six characters, each representing a sound of the language. Now the Cherokee has no word in which to swear. When a Cherokee gets mad enough to swear, he has to employ English.

Various commentators and translators have differed concerning the real meaning of the words. Some translators give its equivalent as "light and perfection." "Urim" is synonymous with "Teraphim" ("lights" or "fires"). Josephus identifies the Urim and Thummim with the sardonyxes on the shoulders of the ephod, which were bright when all was auspicious and [illegible] one in forty-two [illegible] that they [illegible] that the Urim and Thummim were [illegible] stones, on one of which was written "Yes," another "No," while the third was [illegible] or neutral, and these were used [illegible] and in the deciding of evidence [illegible] tines them with the twelve [illegible] trance. Lightfoot [illegible] view. It is quite [illegible] at the Urim and Thummim were we [illegible] to the patriarchs as an appointed means of divination.

[illegible] further ever been learned regarding the sup[illegible]

Mr. Theodore Bent's discoveries, made during his explorations in Mashonaland several years ago, have been corroborated and his conclusions confirmed by a recent traveler, Dr. Schlichter. The latter found in Rhodesia a series of ancient mines, fortifications, tem[illegible] ples and astronomical buildings, with evidences of a civilized colonization 1,000 years before the Christian era. Dr. Schlichter identifies these mines as the ancient Ophir, and believes that the people who lived and labored there were Jews, Phœnicians and Western Asiatics.

THE FAMOUS "TRAVELERS' PALM TREE" OF MADAGASCAR

In the lower part of its fanshaped branches it gathers quantities of clear cool water, which is often the means of refreshing thirsty wayfarers.

Rev. John McGregor, Brinley, Mich., writes:

Will some of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers kindly send by mail, prepaid, any religious papers or good books that they can spare to help in mis[illegible] ? They will be gratefully received.

B. H., Vinita, I. T., writes:

I have noticed in THE MAIL-BAG the queries

Mrs. M. A., [illegible], N. J. [illegible] your readers how [illegible] would like [illegible]

A. W. [illegible] the aid of [illegible]

Certain correspondents inquire when visitors are admitted at the different CHRISTIAN HERALD Charities. We give the following for their guidance:

The Bowery Mission [illegible] ery, near Canal street. It occupies the entire building; its mission hall is probably the finest in this country. Services are conducted there every night in the year at 7:30 and every Sunday forenoon at 11 o'clock. Convert Meeting Sunday afternoon, at 4 o'clock. Visitors are always cordially welcome.

The Bethesda Home [illegible] any day after 10 A. M. and any evening at 7:30. Bible Readings every Thursday afternoon, at [illegible]

The Christian Herald Children's Home, which during the past five years entertained nearly 10,000 children of the poor, is located at Nyack-on-the-Hudson. It includes a number of buildings and cottages with twelve acres of beautiful [illegible] trip by ra[illegible] minutes) by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD stages free of charge.

All contributions, however small, will be promptly acknowledged in our columns, and [illegible] all with whom we come into contact.

L. H., Poughkeepsie, N. Y. It is exempt.

J. W. B., Aurora, Mo. Mailed you sketch of [illegible] existence.

Eliza Robe, Alpena, N. J. Thanks for the [illegible]

H. S., Beverly, Neb. Both are true: probably the rope broke.

F. G. P., Dixboro, Mich. See Hebrews 12, 1 and [illegible]

Mrs. M. E. C., Glendale, Wis. We cannot tell why he does not do so.

Constant Reader, Schnectady, N. Y. Write to Superintendent the Zoo, Central Park, N. Y.

N. P., Manasherides, Turkey. It is simply a case of extraordinary precocity, to which no special significance should be attached.

M. I. F., Water Valley, N. Y. 1. It is the Spanish form in which the "F" is used in preference to the "P." 2. Very little indeed.

[illegible] the same in both the old and new versions. It might be freely translated as "populate the earth."

Subscriber, Knoxville, Ia. It is a desecration of the Lord's Day. The only work that may be done on that day is a work of necessity or of mercy.

C. R. C., Key West, Fla. No court or judge has [illegible] injustice.

Mrs. H. R. G., Chatfield, Minn. 1. The accent is on the middle syllable. 2. The "g" is soft. 3. [illegible] you state. 5. End of the cycle or period.

Wm. A. M., Williamsburg, Va. The so-called "letter of Pontius Pilate," containing a description of Christ, is an ancient forgery, which has been fully discredited by the ablest Bible scholars.

Mr. W. F. McKnight, Healdton, I. T., wishes [illegible] for their kind assistance in sending literature and picture cards to the Sunday School of that place.

[illegible] not been overlooked, however, and strong sermons and articles on the drink evil appear in these pages from time to time.

[illegible] a leading newspaper in that section which has dropped all liquor advertisements. It is evident that the war against the drink evil is making [illegible]

G. E. B., Iowa City, Ia. The "M." before the name of a Frenchman is the initial of Monsieur, [illegible] contraction of Mademoiselle, equivalent to our Miss.

[illegible] strictly on their merits, and are paid for according [illegible]

SHEPHERDING THE LAMBS IN PORTO RICO

(Continued from first page)

"The third photograph represents two classes, one of Porto Rican adults, taught by Mr. Andrew McKim, and the other of soldiers, taught by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD correspondent, Frank L. Smith. The Porto Ricans are seated while the soldiers and teachers stand behind them. A glimpse of the theatre is seen in this picture, showing the seats in the auditorium and a portion of the gallery.

"The contributors to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund for Porto Rico may feel sure that everything is being done to forward the interests of undenominational Sunday School work in San Juan. Much opposition has been met with from ecclesiastical quarters, and children have been warned against attending the Sunday School; but God's leading is plainly seen in all the work. The dearth of workers causes us to pray that the Lord may raise up laborers and send them forth into this harvest field. So far all our helpers are from societies in the United States, who have their own distinctive work to accomplish. Mr. Andrew McKim, the agent of the American Bible Society (who has disposed of nearly 2,500 copies of the Scripture already) is our Superintendent. Miss Hayes takes an hour from her valuable time at Rio Piedras, and Rev. A. B. Rudd, of the Baptist Home Missionary Society, who baptized the first fruits of their preaching in Rio Piedras, last Sunday morning, with the writer, who directs the many agencies of the Y. M. C. A. in Porto Rico, all find the theatre a delightful meeting-spot for fellowship and service, without interfering with the claims of their own societies. We would urge the necessity of increasing these agencies on the island in other cities and towns, which can be done if sufficient money is forthcoming. Men and women who understand the Spanish language can be of great service in this work if filled with the missionary spirit.

"F. L. SMITH."

. . .

Accompanying Mr. Smith's letter is a printed "admission card" to the Gospel services (Spanish and English on the opposite sides), which reads as follows:

AT THE THEATRE, SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO.

SUNDAY SCHOOL

under auspices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York City, every Sunday morning at nine o'clock.

BIBLE CLASSES

in Spanish and English for Porto Rican children and adults. Soldiers are specially invited.

GOSPEL HYMNS

sung in Spanish. Mr. Andrew McKim, Superintendent. An Undenominational service is held at 10 o'clock, immediately after Sunday School, conducted by Frank L. Smith, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., under direction of Colonial Christian Association.

This little card gives an idea of the character of the work which is now being carried forward in Porto Rico, among the children of the native population. The photographs forwarded by Mr. Smith show the little Porto Rican girls and boys in their Sunday garments. The dress is largely an approximation of the American and is a great improvement on that shown in former photographs, where the children were half clad and unkempt. This improvement is doubtless largely due to good-hearted and generous American donors, who are deeply interested in the physical as well as the spiritual welfare of these little ones. They are bright and intelligent, and are making capital progress in the study of the Scriptures.

The Gospel message is thus being carried forward vigorously and effectively by the consecrated workers in the Porto Rican capital. May the time soon come when it will be heard from end to end of the beautiful island, which is now a part of our own country, and for whose spiritual welfare we are fully responsible in God's sight and before the whole world.

ONE OF OUR GIRLS' CLASSES
Taught by Miss Dodd, San Juan

NATIVE ADULTS AND AMERICAN SOLDIERS IN OUR PORTO RICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Bible in Porto Rico

Suppressed by Spain, it is now, under American Rule, Finding its Way into the Hands of the People Throughout the Island

To the Editor:

IT afforded me great pleasure to hear Rev. F. L. Smith, in charge of the work of the Y. M. C. A. here, announce that the Sabbath School, connected with the services in the theatre, would hereafter be aided by Dr. Klopsch and be known as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sabbath School. It is superintended by Rev. A. McKim, agent of the Bible Society who speaks both English and Spanish, and is a graduate of Marietta College. The attendance lately has been increasing, specially of natives, many of whom are very small children, The aid of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will provide means for greater efficiency. There is no more promising religious enterprise on the Island or one more worthy of the patronage of your readers. It is succeeding even better than the efforts of the Roman Catholics to establish Sabbath Schools.

It is fortunate for Porto Rico that the several religious denominations proposing to do mission work — Congregational, Methodist, Baptist, Christian, etc.—have agreed in the location of their enterprises, not to conflict with each other; and that their workers in the field on appointed occasions will meet and confer. This harmony of plan cannot fail to have excellent effect upon the natives. The method of work should be both evangelistic and educational, and adapted to the most ignorant, as well as calculated to appeal to the most intelligent. No place will be found for "higher criticism." There will be no converting power in any of the attempts to suit truth to human fancies. The more closely all efforts are like the Master's in doctrine and method the more effective they will be. The truth as it is in Jesus, presented with all fidelity and simplicity, as it came from the lips of the Master, accompanied by the power of the Spirit, is the hope, and the only hope, for the people. The life of the evangelist or preacher should correspond with His doctrine in its honesty, purity, and beneficence. He should, like Paul, know only "Christ and Him crucified" so far as the differences of these people are concerned. His manner must speak and attract when his voice is silent. His life should be a living epistle known and read of all men, testifying of the Divine Spirit which directs it. Work in this way will receive attention, find responsive minds, touch the main-springs of personal action, and there will verily follow a new life in individual character which more and more will dissipate excuses and destroy the fabric of evil, which now includes all forms of human action whether individual or associated.

Inquire into the cause of present evils of whatever form and trace them to second, third and fourth causes, and every time we shall find ourselves coming back to that first cause of all this perversion in the church, state and family, and find that cause in the absence of the Bible, or the written Divine Word. None of these generations have lacked the completeness of man's natural powers, but the Word from the Divine lips has not been spoken to awaken the response from the human soul. The theory that the common people cannot be trusted with the sacred Scriptures has had its legitimate effect. The priesthood have not only kept the Word from the people, but have disregarded it, as a rule, for themselves. They have been the blind leaders of the blind, paid for this perversion from the Spanish treasury. The motives furnished by the Bible for universal intelligence have been wanting, and with other evils there has come ignorance, and eighty per cent., it is believed, cannot read a written word. The public school, therefore, in teaching to read is furnishing one way in which the truth may be found. The school which furnishes this ability becomes a great factor in the changes demanded by these people. Make the ability to read universal and put the sacred Scriptures in every hand, and the destructive belief and customs imposed for centuries and fostered by the union of church and state will begin to disappear.

Rev. Andrew McKim, the Bible agent, represents having disposed of 2,500 Bibles. Every Christian agency should bring the open Bible in its hand. It is surprising in this day and age that any one accepting the teachings of the sacred Scriptures should be willing to exclude the Bible from the attention of any living soul. The power to read the open Bible offers to every aspiring mind the attainment of every virture. The day school under the American theory cannot devote itself to the doctrine or teaching of any church. The return of the cooler season for Porto Rico will see a large number engaged in Sabbath School teaching. The quickening power of this instruction upon all forms of activity in Porto Rico will be speedily manifest. It will furnish motives to industry, and the increase of its skill not previously known among the laboring classes; and where Bible instruction has its fullest effect there will not only be added skill to the hand, but character to the man. Labor will be more steady; its results better assured, thus securing greater confidence for capital and more ready investment. Thus there will be pointed out to the submerged classes the way to a higher life.

JOHN EATON.

The Gospel in Colombia

A number of responses have been received by the American Bible Society in New York, to Mr. Norwood's appeal for funds for erecting a Gospel tent at Bucaramanga, Colombia. Dr. Norwood reports subscriptions in Bucaramanga to the amount of $500, Colombian money, (which is about $140, gold), and a contribution sent from Mexico direct to Colombia of two pounds sterling. Treasurer Foulke acknowledges the receipt of the following additional sums:

Hortense Norwood, 25 cents; five other little girls, 25 cents each, $1.25; Johann Asmuslen, $1.00; Pedro, Maria and Daniel Chambon, 50 cents each, $1.50; Americus, 25 cents; Johnnie J., 25 cents; A Friend, 50 cents; two little boys, 45 cents.

The World's Youngest Organist

PROBABLY the youngest organist in the world is an eleven-year-old child, Reginald Ball, of No. 216 South [illegible] St., Hagerstown, Maryland, who plays the great pipe organ in [illegible] Episcopal Church, one of the leading houses of worship in Central Maryland. Until he was about ten years old Reginald knew nothing whatever of the keyboard or written notes. He is now able to render brilliantly and with the touch of a master, compositions by Mendelssohn, Goupod, Beethoven, Mozart, Handel, Wagner, Liszt, Schubert and others. The rapidity of his progress is surprising. Lately he was appointed musician in St. Paul's, where much attention has always been given to the musical portions of the service.

REGINALD BALL

Besides playing upon the organ (which has three key-boards, and all the latest improvements, in pipe and stop arrangements, operated by water-power), Reginald meets several times a week with his grown-up singers and rehearses with them the various selections to be sung the following Sunday. The burden of the choice of the music usually falls upon the little eleven-year-old's shoulders. So far he has proved fully equal to the duties his position entails. His voice is clear, sweet, and resonant. Whenever his friends are hungry for music, they drop in to see him.

A National Orphanage

Our readers, who are familiar with the good work done at the Whosoever Home, Luray, Va., for destitute children, will be interested to know that the Rev. Dr. H. M. Wharton, its originator and director, is planning an extension of the work which will provide a home and educational advantages for children orphaned by our recent war, and without proper support and guardianship. At the beginning of the Spanish war, Dr. Wharton made an offer to the government of Whosoever Farm, for the reception of soldiers' and sailors' orphans; and letters of acceptance and appreciation were sent him by General Fitzhugh Lee, Surgeon-General Sternberg, J. A. Porter, for President McKinley, Rev. Dr. Talmage and others. By additional buildings, 500 boys and girls can be accommodated. A New Yorker has subscribed $5,000 to the work,

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

...The Sin of Gossip...

A Sermon by The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Romans 1: 29, ...

Full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers.

PAUL was here calling the long roll of the world's villainy, and he puts in the midst of this roll those persons known in all cities and communities and places as whisperers. They are so called because they generally speak under voice and in a confidential way, their hand to the side of their mouth acting as a funnel to keep the precious information from wandering into the wrong ear. They speak softly, not because they have lack of lung force, or because they are overpowered with the spirit of gentleness, but because they want to escape the consequences of defamation. If no one hears but the person whispered unto and the offender be arraigned, he can deny the whole thing, for whisperers are always first-class liars!

Some people whisper because they are hoarse from a cold, or because they wish to convey some useful information without disturbing others; but the creatures photographed by the apostle in my text give muffled utterance from sinister and depraved motive, and sometimes you can only hear the sibilant sound as the letter "S" drops from the tongue into the listening ear, the brief hiss of the serpent as it projects its venom.

Whisperers are masculine and feminine, with a tendency to majority on the side of those who are called "the lords of creation." Whisperers are heard at every window of bank cashier, and are heard in all counting rooms as well as in sewing societies and at meetings of asylum directors and managers. They are the worst foes of society; responsible for miseries innumerable; they are the scavengers of the world, driving their cart through every community, and to-day, I hold up for your holy anathema and execration these whisperers.

From the frequency with which Paul speaks of them under different titles, I conclude that he must have suffered somewhat from them. His personal presence was very defective, and that made him, perhaps, the target of their ridicule. And beside that, he was a bachelor, persisting in his celibacy down into the sixties, indeed, all the way through, and some having failed in their connubial designs upon him, the little missionary was put under the raking fire of these whisperers. He was no doubt a rare morsel for their scandalization; and he cannot keep his patience any longer and he lays hold of these miscreants of the tongue and gives them a very hard setting down in my text among the scoundrelly and the murderous. "Envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers."

The law of libel makes quick and stout grip of open slander. If I should in a plain way, calling you by name, charge you with fraud, or theft, or murder, or uncleanness, to-morrow morning I might have peremptory documents served on me, and I would have to pay in dollars and cents for the damage I had done your character. But these creatures spoken of in my text are so small that they escape the fine-tooth comb of the law. They go on, and they go on, escaping the judges and the juries and the penitentiaries. The district attorney cannot find them, the sheriff cannot find them, the grand jury cannot find them. Shut them off from one route of perfidy and they start on another. You cannot by the force of moral sentiment persuade them to desist. You might as well read the Ten Commandments to a flock of crows, expecting them to retreat under the force of moral sentiment. They are to be found everywhere, these whisperers. I think their paradise is a country village of about one or two thousand people where everybody knows everybody. But they also are to be found in large quantities in all our cities.

They have a prying disposition. They look into the basement windows at the tables of their neighbors, and can tell just what they have morning and night to eat. They can see as far through a keyhole as other people can see with a door wide open. They can hear conversation on the opposite side of the room. Indeed, the world to them is a whispering gallery. They always put the worst construction on everything.

The fact is that one man or woman set on fire of this hellish spirit will keep a whole neighborhood aboil. It does not require any very great brain. The chief requisition is that the woman have a small family or no family at all, because, if she have a large family, then she would have to stay at home and look after them. It is very important that she be single, or have no children at all, and then she can attend to all the secrets of the neighborhood all the time. A woman with a large family makes a very poor whisperer.

It is astonishing how these whisperers gather up everything. They know everything that happens. There are telephone and telegraph wires reaching from their ears to all the houses in the neighborhood. They have no taste for healthy news, but for the scraps and peelings thrown out of the scullery into the back yard they have great avidity. On the day when there is a new scandal in the newspapers, they have no time to go abroad. On the day when there are four or five columns of delightful private letters published in a divorce case, she stays at home and reads and reads and reads. No time for her Bible that day, but toward night, perhaps, she may find time to run out a little while and see whether there are any new developments.

Satan does not have to keep a very sharp lookout for his evil dominion in that neighborhood. He has let out to her the whole contract. She gets husbands and wives into a quarrel, and brothers and sisters into antagonism, and she disgusts the pastor with the flock and the flock with the pastor, and she makes neighbors, who before were kindly disposed toward each other, over suspicious and critical, so when one of the neighbors passes by in a carriage, they hiss through their teeth and say: "Ah, we could all keep carriages if we never paid our debts!"

When two or three whisperers get together they stir a caldron of trouble, which makes me think of the three witches of Macbeth dancing around a boiling caldron in a dark cave:

> Double, double, toil and trouble,
> Fire burn and caldron bubble.
> Fillet of a fenny snake
> In the caldron boil and bake;
> Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
> Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
> Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
> Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing
> For a charm of powerful trouble,
> Like a hell both boil and bubble.
> Double, double, toil and trouble
> Fire burn and caldron bubble,
> Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf,
> Witches' mummy; maw and gulf
> Of the ravin'd salt-sea shark;
> Make the gruel thick and stark;
> Add thereto a tiger's chaudron
> For the ingredients of our caldron.
> Double, double, toil and trouble,
> Fire, burn and caldron bubble.
> Cool it with a baboon's blood;
> Then the charm is firm and good.

I would only change Shakespeare in this, that, where he puts the word "witch" I would put the word "whisperer." Ah, what a caldron! Did you ever get a taste of it? I have more respect for the poor waif of the street that goes down under the gaslight, with no home and no God—for she deceives no one as to what she is—than I have for those hags of respectable society who cover up their tiger claws with a fine shawl, and bolt the heart with a diamond breast-pin!

The work of masculine whisperers is chiefly seen in the embarrassment of business. Now, I suppose, there are hundreds of men here who at some time have been in business trouble. I will undertake to say that in nine cases out of ten it was the result of some whisperer's work. The whisperer uttered some suspicion in regard to your credit. You sold your horse and carriage because you had no use for them, and the whisperer said: "Sold his horse and carriage because he had to sell them. The fact that he sold his horse and carriage shows he is going down in business."

One of your friends gets embarrassed and you are a little involved with him. The whisperer says: "I wonder if he can stand under all this pressure? I think he is going down. I think he will have to give up." You borrow money out of a bank and a director whispers outside about it, and after a while the suspicion gets fairly started, and it leaps from one whisperer's lips to another whisperer's lips until all the people you owe want their money and want it right away, and the business circles come around you like a pack of wolves, and though you had assets four times more than were necessary to meet your liabilities, crash! went everything. Whisperers! Oh, how much business men have suffered.

Sometimes in the circles of clergymen we discuss why it is that a great many merchants do not go to church. I will tell you why they do not go to church. By the time Saturday night comes they are worn out with the annoyances of business life. They have had enough meanness practised upon them to set their whole nervous system a-twitch.

I think among the worst of the whisperers are those who gather up all the harsh things that have been said about you and bring them to you—all the things said against you, or against your family, or against your style of business. They gather them all up and they bring them to you, they bring them to you in the very worst shape, they bring them to you without any of the extenuating circumstances, and after they have made your feelings all raw, very raw, they take this brine, this turpentine, this aqua fortis, and rub it in with a coarse towel, and rub it in until it sinks to the bone. They make you the pin cushion in which they thrust all the sharp things they have ever heard about you. "Now, don't bring me into a scrape. Now, don't tell anybody I told you. Let it be between you and me. Don't involve me in it at all." They aggravate you to the point of profanity, and then they wonder you cannot sing psalm tunes! They turn you on a spit before a hot fire and wonder why you are not absorbed in gratitude to them because they turn you on a spit. Pedlers of nightshade. Pedlers of Canada thistle. Pedlers of nux vomica. Sometimes they get you in a corner where you cannot very well escape without being rude, and then they tell you all about this one, and all about that one, and all about the other one, and they talk, talk, talk, talk, talk, talk. After awhile they go away leaving the place looking like a barnyard after the foxes and the weasels have been around: here a wing, and there a claw, and yonder an eye, and there a crop. How they do make the feathers fly!

Rather than the defamation of good names, it seems to me it would be almost as honorable and useful if you just took a box of matches in your pocket and a razor in your hand, and go through the streets and see how many houses you can burn down and how many throats you can cut. That is not a much worse business. The destruction of a man's name is worse than the destruction of his life. A woman came in confessional to a priest and told him that she had been slandering her neighbors. The priest promised her absolution on condition of her performing a penance. He gave her a thistle top and said: "You can take that thistle and scatter the seeds all over the field." She went and did so, and came back. "Now," said the priest, "gather up all those seeds." She said, "I can't." "Ah!" he said, "I know you can't; neither can you gather up the evil words you spoke about your neighbors." All good men and all good women have sometimes had detractors after them. John Wesley's wife whispered about him, whispered all over England, kept on whispering about that good man—as good a man as ever lived—and kept on whispering until the connubial relation was dissolved.

Jesus Christ had these whisperers after him, and they charged him with drinking too much and keeping bad company. "A wine-bibber and the friend of publicans and sinners." You take the best man that ever lived, and put a detective on his track for ten years, watching where he goes and when he comes, and with a determination to misconstrue everything, and to think he goes here for a bad purpose, and there for a bad purpose, with that determination of destroying him, at the end of the ten years he will be held despicable in the sight of a great many people.

If it is an outrageous thing to despoil a man's character, how much worse is it to damage a woman's reputation? Yet that evil grows from century to century, and it is all done by whisperers. A suspicion is started. The next whisperer who gets hold of it states the suspicion as a proven fact, and many a good woman, as honorable as your wife or your mother, has been whispered out of all kindly associations, and whispered into the grave. Some people say there is no hell; but if there be no hell for such a despoiler of womanly character, it is high time that some philanthropist built one! But there is such a place established, and what a time they will have when all the whisperers get down there together rehearsing things! Everlasting carnival of mud.

Now, how are we to war against this iniquity which curses every community on earth? First, by refusing to listen to or believe a whisper. Every court of the land has for a law, and all decent communities have for a law, that you must hold people innocent until they are proved guilty. There is only one person worse than the whisperer, and that is the man or woman who listens without protest. The trouble is, you hold the sack while they fill it. The receiver of stolen goods is just as bad as the thief. An ancient writer declares that a slanderer and a man who receives the slander ought both to be hanged—the one by the tongue and the other by the ear. And I agree with him.

When you hear something bad about your neighbors, do not go all over and ask about it, whether it is true, and scatter it and spread it. You might as well go to a small-pox hospital and take a patient and carry him all through the community asking people if they really thought it is a case of small-pox. That would be very bad for the patient and for all the neighbors. Do not retail slanders and whisperings. Do not make yourself the inspector of warts, and the supervisor of carbuncles, and the commissioner for street gutters, and the holder of stakes for a dog fight. Can it be that you, an immortal man, that you, an immortal woman, can find no better business than to become a gutter inspector?

Beside that, at your family table allow no detraction. Teach your children to speak well of others. Show them the difference between a bee and a wasp—the one gathering honey, the other thrusting a sting. I read of a family where they kept what they called "A Slander Book," and when any slanderous words were uttered in the house about anybody, or detraction uttered, it was all put down in this book. The book was kept carefully. For the first few weeks there were a great many entries, but after a while there were no entries at all. Detraction stopped in that household. It would be a good thing to have a slander book in all households.

Are any of you given to this habit of whispering about others? Let me persuade you to desist. Mount Taurus was a great place for eagles, and cranes would fly along that way, and they would cackle so loud that the eagles would know of their coming and they would pounce upon them and destroy them. It is said that the old cranes found this out, and before they started on their flight they would always have a stone in their mouth so they could not cackle, and then they would fly in perfect safety. O! my friends, be as wise as the old cranes and let us avoid the folly of the young cranes. Do not cackle.

If there are people here who are whispered about, if there are people here who are slandered, if there are people here who are abused in any circle of life, let me say for your encouragement that these whisperers soon run out. They may do a little damage for a while, but after awhile their detraction becomes a eulogy and people understand them just as well as though some one chalked all over their overcoat or their shawl these words: "Here goes a whisperer. Room for the leper. Room!" You go ahead and do your duty and God will take care of your reputation. How dare you distrust him? You have committed to him your souls. Can you not trust him with your reputation? Get down on your knees before God and settle the whole matter there. That man whom God takes care of is well sheltered.

Let me charge you, my friends, to make right and holy use of the tongue. It is loose at one end and can swing either way, but it is fastened at the other end to the floor of your mouth, and that makes you responsible for the way it wags. Xanthus, the philosopher, told his servant that on the morrow he was going to have some friends to dine, and told him to get the best thing he could find in the market. The philosopher and his guests sat down the next day at the table. They had nothing but tongue—four or five courses of tongue—tongue cooked in this way, and tongue cooked in that way, and the philosopher lost his patience and said to his servant, "Didn't I tell you to get the best thing in the market?" He said: "I did get the best thing in the market. Isn't the tongue the organ of sociality, the organ of eloquence, the organ of kindness, the organ of worship?"

Then Xanthus said: "To-morrow I want you to get the worst thing in the market." And on the morrow the philosopher sat at the table, and there was nothing there but tongue—four or five courses of tongue—tongue in this shape and tongue in that shape—and the philosopher again lost his patience and said: "Didn't I tell you to get the worst thing in the market?" The servant replied: "I did; for isn't the tongue the organ of blasphemy, the organ of defamation, the organ of lying?"

O! my friends, employ the tongue which God so wonderfully created as the organ of taste, the organ of deglutition, the organ of articulation to make others happy, and in the service of God. If you whisper, whisper good—encouragement to the fallen and hope to the lost. Ah, my friends, the time will soon come when we will all whisper! The voice will be enfeebled in the last sickness, and though that voice could laugh and shout and sing and halloo until the forest echoes answered, it will be so feeble then we can only whisper consolation to those whom we leave behind, and only whisper our hope of heaven.

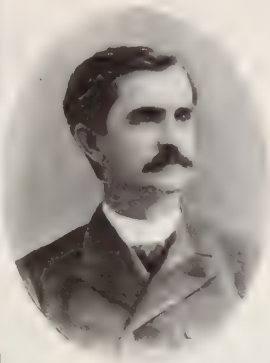
While I speak this very moment there are hundreds whispering their last utterances. Oh, when that solemn hour comes to you and to me, as come soon it will, may it be found that we did our best to serve Christ, and to cheer our comrades in the earthly struggle, and that we consecrated not only our hand but our tongue to God. So that the shadows that fall around our dying pillow shall not be the evening twilight of a gathering night, but the morning twilight of an everlasting day.

This morning, at half past four o'clock, I looked out of my window, and the stars were very dim. I looked out a few moments after, and the stars were almost invisible. I looked out an hour or two afterward. Not a star was to be seen. What was the matter with the stars? Had they melted into darkness? No. They had melted into the glorious light of a Sabbath morn.

: : The Old Gospel Under Canvas : :

Crowds Thronging the "Midsummer Camp-Meeting" on Broadway, New York

REV. R. S. MACARTHUR



REV. A. C. DIXON

GEO. C. STEBBINS

REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN

No mid-summer revival movement in recent years has attracted more widespread attention or been productive of grander spiritual results than that now progressing in New York City, in the big Gospel tent "Glad Tidings," at Broadway and Fifty-sixth street. Long before the close of the first week of these gatherings, the audiences had swelled to such proportions that it became necessary to plan for more extended accommodations. "All classes and conditions of men" and women attended, proving that the Gospel, preached under canvas in mid-summer in New York, has attractions for rich and poor alike. All the services have been marked by an unusually large number of earnest inquirers, and not an evening has passed in which many of those present have not come forward and professed faith in a living Saviour and their acceptance of his free salvation. Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt has been ably aided in the evangelistic movement by many leading city pastors, and a number of distinguished laymen have also taken an active part in the services.

DIVINE SERVICE IN THE BROADWAY GOSPEL TENT

REAR-ADMIRAL J. W. PHILIP

REV. D. A. BLACKBURN

At the meeting on Sunday afternoon, June 25, Mr. Wm. Phillips Hall, (who has become widely known as "the millionaire evangelist"), was one of the leading speakers, while on the platform were Rev. Robert S. MacArthur, Rev. Sam. Small, Rev. W. Merle Smith and others. Rear-Admiral John W. Philip, who commanded the battleship Texas, in the battle of Santiago, addressed the vast audience, all rising to salute the Christian hero as he came forward on the platform. He spoke with much feeling:

"I am afraid," said the Admiral, "that I am expected to make a speech, but I am no speaker. We read in the papers what is going on in the Philippines, and we know how well every soldier there is standing to his duty for the honor of Old Glory. We know that every soldier under Christ's banner must answer the roll. I have been summoned and I have answered 'Present.' I was sent for and I stand here and say, 'Here, sir.' The soldiers under the banner of Our Lord must try to enlist recruits, so that we may down the cohorts of the devil. I do not know under what denomination these services are held. I don't know whether they are Jew, Gentile, Catholic or Protestant, though I think that denominations are necessary. In the Church they are like regiments, and the pastors and bishops are like colonels and brigadiers, but all are under one commander-in-chief, our Master, the Lord Jesus Christ. I see many faces here before me who, I feel sure, are anxious to enlist in our Lord's forces. I cannot command words to fittingly explain to you why and how you should enlist and get other recruits to enlist in the army of God, but there are clergymen on the platform who are ready to explain it."

This simple yet eloquent testimony by one of the nation's heroes visibly affected many in the audience.

Rev. Dr. MacArthur, of Calvary Baptist Church, delivered a short address on Christian patriotism. He said:

"This is the greatest period in history. No man ought to go to heaven for a quarter of a century yet if he can help it, for it is quite certain that we are to have more of heaven on this earth in the next twenty-five years than ever before since Adam. He must be blind and deaf who cannot see the hand and hear the voice of God moving before this nation in its progress. We have passed in this century that is closing from boyhood to a strong and sterling manhood. We are passing now from limitation to universality. There are two great headlights of American freedom and cocivilization, one shown in Santiago Harbor and one in Manila Bay. I am glad to see this flag of America floating in the Orient. It is the evangelist of all that is noblest in our faith, all that is divinest and loftiest in our patriotism.

"A little while ago I received into membership in Calvary Church a grandson of the first great missionary who preached the Gospel in Jamaica, of the man who, working hand in hand with Wilberforce, obliterated slavery in that colony. The Church educated this young man, and he went to Cuba as a missionary. His wife, who accompanied him thither, went down to the beautiful, mysterious land of motherhood, and the babe came back alone.

"He was left there alone in Cienfuegos with his child, the dead body of his loved one and his breaking heart. He sought a burial place for her, but unfortunately for him, he did not belong to the dominant faith. There was no spot of ground where he could lay her remains. He sought the aid of the American and British consuls, but they were powerless. By and by he buried her at the gate of the city upon the heaps of refuse, where was thrown all the dirt and offal of the town. Then he wrote me a letter, stained with tears, and when I had read it I said 'O thou God of liberty! Make bare thy right arm, and let it not rest until the faith shall be free wherever the American flag waves over American waters washing upon American shores!' We have taken up the journey of Columbus which was interrupted four hundred years ago by the American continent. We have changed the front of America. California was once the rear yard of America; it is now the front garden of the Orient."

Throughout the meetings Christian patriotism, the integrity of the Bible, the plain unvarnished truths of Scripture and the sweet old story of the Gospel have been the themes of nearly all of the speakers. Beautiful music, with finely sung solos and stirring choruses, forms a feature of all the services.

Among the speakers who have prominently assisted in these revival services up to the present time are Rev. D. Asa Blackburn, Mr. W. Phillips Hall, Rev. R. S. McArthur, Rev. Franklin H. Moore, Rev. Leighton Williams, Rev. John H. Elliott, Rev. A. C. Dixon and others. It is expected that Mr. Moody will speak at the meetings in the near future.

There are no sensational features at the meetings and the exciting scenes incident to some revivals are not to be witnessed; but the fervor of the worshipers and the sincerity of the inquirers are unmistakable. Already the services have been blessed in the conversion of many, and there is promise of still larger spiritual result as the meetings progress. They are a remarkable illustration of the power of the simple, unaided Gospel to touch the hearts of men, and to change the whole current and nature of sinful lives.

The Street Cleaners of the Great Metropolis

New York's Army of "White Wings"

The Relation of Cleanliness to Public Morals

A DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT

JAMES McCARTNEY, Commissioner

A "WHITE WING" SWEEPER AT WORK

IN all great cities, the problem of disposing of the refuse and garbage, and of keeping the public thoroughfares sweet and clean, is one of the most important that can confront the municipality. In New York, with its vast and constantly increasing population, the question of sanitation is uppermost at all seasons. Every year brings augmented expenditures, necessitated by the application of the street cleaning system to the whole of the city and its corporate suburbs. That New York is to-day one of the cleanest and healthiest of metropolitan cities, is due to the excellent system introduced several years ago by the late Colonel Waring, who was one of the first public officials in this country to make the condition of the streets and the final disposition of their refuse a serious scientific study. His system has been followed in the main by his successors; but it is quite apparent, even now, that the time must soon come when the problems of municipal sanitation will engage the highest abilities of the inventors and mechanical geniuses of our day, and will offer rich rewards for successful effort in that direction.

WORKERS ON THE DUMPS

A CURIOUS LOAD PICKED UP IN THE STREETS

READY TO DROP A LOAD ON A SCOW

Our photographer, in the interesting series on these two pages, has shown us some of the workings of the New York Street Cleaning Department. At the present time the Mechanical Bureau of the Department, though large, is not wholly adequate to the requirements. Nearly all the trades are represented and considerable manufacturing is done, besides repairing and improvements. One feature of the Bureau is a model room, where new street cleaning devices are examined and tested. Suggestions for such devices are received from all parts of the Union, few however, being of value.

As to the work accomplished by the Department, some idea of its extent may be gathered from the statement that last year the Department carts removed 146,116 loads of garbage, while private carts took away 18,200 additional loads. The Department carts also removed 1,131,802 loads of street sweepings, ashes and other refuse, private carts taking 326,920 additional loads. These represent a total of over 1,620,000 loads. The garbage removed from the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx is taken in scows and disposed of at Barren Island, not by dumping into the sea, as formerly, but by being purified separately and manufactured into marketable products. The refuse is either dumped into the sea, or used to fill in bulkheads along the water-front. In the other boroughs of the metropolis, practically the same system is followed, the ashes, sweepings and refuse being largely used to fill in vacant city lots. Experiments in the cremation of garbage, have not thus far proved wholly satisfactory. The experimental plant for the disposal of rubbish has been in operation over a year, the material being "picked" or sorted and the absolutely unsalable refuse burned. It is estimated that, with somewhat increased facilities, the city can secure about $58,000 a year in return for the "picking" privilege. The average quantity of garbage collected in a year is between 140,000 and 150,000 tons. This is transported on wooden-deck barges to Barren Island.

In handling all the refuse of the city, the utmost care is taken to prevent it from becoming a disseminating centre of disease. It is probable that the custom of disposing of very large quantities of it by dumping it in the sea will soon be permanently discontinued, as there have been many complaints of beach-fouling from residents along the sea-shore.

One of the recent innovations in the Street Cleaning system is the introduction of "paper carts"—little, two-wheeled hand-wagons, which the white-suited workers of the Department push before them as they clean the city's thoroughfares. Last year was the first year of their operation

STREET CLEANERS AT MORNING ROLL-CALL

FOREMEN OF SQUADS

A GROUP OF SWEEPERS AND FOREMEN

LOADING A SCOW AT THE DUMPS

A STEAM STEEL BARGE

and the experiment was remarkably successful. These little vehicles, which may be seen at all hours of the day on Broadway and the principal streets, are the most picturesque appurtenances of an otherwise prosaic, but very useful and indispensable branch of the public service. The "white-wings" who push them along (the name applied to the army of workers whom Col. Waring uniformed in white), dodge in and out among the steady stream of trucks, trolleys and carriages of all sorts, and perform their duties often at the risk of life and limb. The annual parade of the Department is an event which ranks next in interest to that of the police, and the little army of street cleaners makes a brave show.

New York's first organized effort at street cleaning dates back to the year 1696, when an appropriation of twenty pounds sterling ($100) was made for that purpose. Two hundred years of growth have brought a wonderful transformation. In the latest budget, the appropriation for cleaning the streets of New York and its annexed suburbs was $4,525,690, part of which was for plant account, but the greater portion of the expenditures were for actual work rendered by the Department and by outside contractors, who are engaged in emergencies. The Department is under a Commissioner at $6,000 a year, appointed by the Mayor, a Deputy Commissioner at $4,000 and a corps of District Superintendents. Nearly 2,000 street cleaners are employed, and the number of carts and other vehicles varies according to the season and its needs. During some of the great snow-storms of last winter, thousands of carts were hired from contractors to aid in clearing the thoroughfares. The average number of cart-loads of snow and ice removed annually from the streets of the city and its annexed suburbs is little short of 800,000. Last year, $290,000 was appropriated for snow and ice removal in the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx alone. A single snow-storm sometimes costs the city $100,000, and the great storm of February 12 last, when 2,500 carts were employed in clearing away the snow, cost considerably more. Such vast expenditures might appal the taxpaying element of a community, were it not for the universally admitted fact that the close relationship existing between public cleanliness and public health and morals justifies the investment. It is in line with the experience of every great city, whether in a temperate or a tropical climate, that in proportion to the completeness of its sanitary arrangements and the energy with which they are carried out, there may be confidently expected a decrease in disease and crime. "Cleanliness is next to godliness," though not found in the Scriptures, is nevertheless an excellent aphorism for a municipality to keep in view. The cleansing of city slums, the purification of the purlieus of a crowded metropolis, is always followed by moral improvement, and results in affording a better basis for that spiritual work which produces a better type of Christian citizenship. On these grounds, every improvement in modern street-cleaning methods should be welcomed with satisfaction by all who desire the moral and spiritual welfare of the communities. One of Colonel Waring's peculiar projects in connection with the city sanitation, had a distinctive educational character. He organized in the different Boroughs, a number of Juvenile Leagues composed of girls and boys, children of the working classes. His idea was to impart to these school children a habit of order and cleanliness, and a greater degree of learning and refinement, than had been enjoyed by their parents, and thus the latter, through the example of their children, would be brought to cherish a desire for pleasant and cheerful home surroundings, and a taste for neatness in their homes and environments, and would thus improve themselves and their morals and consequently the general condition of the city as well. These Leagues have been continued and encouraged in their work, and to their influence no doubt is due in some measure the cleanliness of the streets and the healthfulness of the city itself. In many of the poorer class of homes in New York, the influence of these Juvenile Leagues has been shown in neater surroundings and their young enthusiasm has had its effect upon thousands of older folks, who could not fail to be struck by their ardor for cleanliness. Their training in this respect, unostentatious as it has been, is a blessing to themselves and to others. Men like Colonel Waring are not only forces that make for civilization, but, unconsciously, for spiritualization as well, since the obliteration of dirt, by influencing the reduction of disease and vice, affords so much more opportunity for health and happiness and creates a condition in which the blessings heaven sends us can be better perceived and appreciated.

"WHITE WINGS" AND THEIR LITTLE HAND-CARTS

DUMPING A LOAD AT SEA

TOWING SCOWS OFF THE COAST

A LOADED BARGE GOING SEAWARD

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Fiery Furnace

S. S. Lesson for July 16. Dan. 3 : 14-28
Golden Text, Dan. 3 : 17

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

IT is in the school of trial that the Lord educates his choicest servants. For many generations the bulk of the children of Israel had ignored or disregarded their peculiar and glorious privilege given to them as a nation by Jehovah, to be "a peculiar treasure unto [him] above all people . . . a kingdom of priests and a holy nation" (Exod. 19 : 5, 6); to be unto him "for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory." But there were some who understood their God and responded to him. They laid to heart the failure of their people, but instead of yielding to useless despondency under the plea that the individual could do nothing against the sweeping current of indifference and worldliness in the nation, they rose to the occasion, recognized their personal responsibility, and lived lives of testimony to their God. Their position was especially difficult: they stood against the influence of an unfaithful church as well as against a heathen world. Such is the position of him that overcometh in our own day: the unreality and unbelief of those who call themselves Christians is more difficult to contend with than the open opposition of the infidel or the heathen. Daniel and his three friends were of those who understood their God among the captives in Babylon. They had taken up their position in the schools of learning, and their intimacy with God made them impervious alike to the danger to which the king's favor exposed them, and the unpopularity with their heathen fellow-students which their loyalty to God must have occasioned. Living no more to themselves, but to their God, his interests, and not their own affected them; they were the living sacrifices of the Old Testament.

The enemy of souls, whose work it is always to withstand God, artfully perverted the dream of Nebuchadnezzar, which God had revealed to Daniel, and the recall and interpretation of which had made such a profound impression upon this great king. "Thou art this head of gold" had undoubtedly filled his thoughts not with the deep sense of responsibility which he ought to have experienced in such a mark of favor from the most high God, but with extravagant and sinful pride. He appropriated to himself the whole glory of what the dream represented him as a part, and caused a colossal image, probably of himself, to be made, and universally worshiped throughout his dominions.

He was determined to establish the worship of his new idol, and no one, whatever might have been their personal convictions, might be excused. This was opportunity for God's true witnesses. The dedication of the image was to be attended with the most gorgeous and splendid ceremonial. From every part of the great empire of Babylon the rulers of all ranks were commanded to come together; the musical programme was to be magnificent, and just when the immense orchestra struck up, the whole mighty concourse was to fall down and worship "the golden image which the king had set up." Such was Nebuchadnezzar's design. But an unseen hand was at work, permitting the king to go thus far that he himself might come upon the scene, and that the prayers of four young men for the king of Babylon, for the degenerate Jews, and for the mass of heathen in the empire might be answered. A fearful penalty was attached to the failure in obedience to the king's command, but the friends of Daniel, who were the friends of God, obeyed the second commandment of the law, and would not bow down to the king's idol.

This could not remain hidden. Some Chaldeans, jealous, no doubt of the government position which the foreigners had obtained, accused them to the king, saying: "These men O king, have not regarded thee: they serve not thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up." And they were cited to appear before the king. Was it a moment of terror and of terrible apprehension to the men of God? We think not. They believed; and "we which have believed do enter into rest (Heb. 4 : 3). They had counted the cost, and reckoned that their God was worthy of the testimony they could give to him at any cost to themselves. And then they themselves were safer in his hands obedient to him than in the hands of any creature, though he might be an almost universal king of this world.

There they stood, perhaps in the very midst of the mighty concourse, arraigned for disloyalty to the king who had been their benefactor, and whom they had till now served faithfully. "Is it of purpose, O Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego," asked the king, "that ye serve not my gods, nor worship the gold image which I have set up?" (R.V.) And then giving them another chance, he reminded them of the awful penalty, the burning, fiery furnace, already prepared, which awaited them if they were obstinate: and added: "Who is that god that can deliver out of my hands?" It was directly challenging God, and his servants were confirmed in the position they had to take. "O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful (i. e., not anxious) to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king." Whatsoever happens to us is by his permission and we take it from his hand, not from thine. "But if not"—even if he should let us die, we are ready to die for his sake—"If not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up."

Witnesses of God, they counted not their life dear unto them. His cause was in the balance, what was the suffering, however excruciating of being burned alive, in comparison with the glorious opportunity of declaring before the representatives of so many peoples and tongues that their God was indeed the living God. Nebuchadnezzar was full of fury, unused as he was to be opposed, and he commanded the furnace to be heated seven times more than it was wont. Why? He must have had a secret misgiving that God was stronger than he. But God was against him; he lost his powerful men of war, for they were slain by the fire, while the intended victims went free.

The witnesses of God were indeed "cast down bound" into the furnace; the king and the assembled company had seen it. But as the king continued looking, in the expectation of witnessing the utter destruction of those who opposed him, he saw not three men, but four, not bound, but loose, walking with ease in the midst of the fire, as though it had been their element! The most unheard of tests become our very element as soon as we see God in them (I. Peter 4 : 12, 13).

ASSYRIAN IMAGE AND SACRIFICIAL ALTAR RECENTLY EXHUMED

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

ONE of the most thrilling stories of heroism in all literature, is this of the three Hebrews. At the close of the second chapter we have the account of their elevation to office. They were appointed at the request of Daniel, when he was raised to supreme power. From the records recently discovered and deciphered, it appears that the King, returning in triumph to the City of Babylon from his campaign in the west, determined to rebuild the temple of Merodach, which had fallen into decay. This was in gratitude for his victory over Egypt and Assyria which he ascribed to the help of this God, Merodach. On one of the clay tablets Nebuchadnezzar writes: "When Merodach, the great Lord, created me a king, he commanded me to complete his holy buildings." In a later entry he writes: "For thy glory, exalted Merodach, a house have I made." This was acceptable for the city of Babylon, where Merodach was worshiped, but Nebuchadnezzar wanted more. He wished all the provinces over which he ruled to worship the same deity. But most of them were worshipers of the more ancient god, Baal, or Belus, or Bel, and were disinclined to accept a new religion. This accounts for the summons mentioned by Daniel to the rulers and chief men of the provinces, to come to Babylon to attend the dedication of the great image, and for the threat (Daniel 3: 6) by which the summons was accompanied. The image, a colossal statue, which, when raised on its pedestal, stood ninety feet high and could be seen over a circuit of twelve miles, was set up on the plain of Dura, within the limits of the city. The prophet describes it as golden, by which he probably means that, like other statues of that region, it was a wooden figure thickly plated with gold. The King appears to have spared no effort in making the ceremony of dedication an imposing one. The musical talent of the world was gathered there; and the culmination of all this pageantry was the moment when, at a given signal, the people were to prostrate themselves before the statue. That was the moment in which the king would learn whether his new subjects would obey him and forsake Bel, to worship the local divinity, Merodach. But the rebellion came from an unexpected and a most exasperating source. The three Hebrews whom he had raised to place and power at the risk of offending his own courtiers, were the men to oppose his will. No wonder that the prophet speaks of the king's "rage and fury." Where Daniel was, does not appear. It is possible that the king, being already indebted to him for the interpretation of his dream, which, as Daniel was careful to explain, was revealed to him by God, may have excused him from attending a ceremony which, as he knew, would be repugnant to him. Nebuchadnezzar could ill afford to lose a man who could interpret dreams, and he must have seen enough of Daniel to know that by no threat could he be brought to worship Merodach. It is conceivable, therefore, that Nebuchadnezzar consented to, or connived at, the prophet's absence. But his three friends could not so escape. They were thrown into the great kiln, built, it may be for the melting of the gold, or, as some think, as a crematory for the dead. The story of their miraculous deliverance is full of practical lessons.

Our God is able to deliver us. There was no doubt in the minds of the three men on that subject. Whether he would do so, was another question. About that they were not so sure. It might be that he would allow them to suffer as he has done with other brave men, who went into the fire rather than be false to him. But whether God delivered them or not they would not worship the image. A similar spirit was shown not many years ago by a martyr in China, of whom Dr. L. Leshler writes. He says: "The people of the village took away one of our best native teachers, a man of ability who had been preaching ever since his conversion, and ordered him to burn incense in their temple. When he refused they threatened him with death. Finally, they gave him his choice in blunt language; 'Either you burn incense in the temple or die.' Without a moment's hesitation he answered: 'I cannot deny Christ who died for me. I will never burn incense to an idol again so long as I live.' They took him to a steep precipice, where they cut off his head and flung his body over."

The form of the fourth is like the Son of God. Many martyrs have testified that in their last moments, they had such comfort and support, that it seemed as if Christ himself stood by them to help them. In 830 A.D., a writer records that a persecuting king was astonished at the number of Christians there still were in his dominions in spite of the fact that he had put to death every one whom he could find. One of his courtiers told him that on the very day of a certain execution, more than double the number of those put to death, were converted and that the people who witnessed the execution, declared that a strange man whom they had never seen before or since, was present with them comforting them in their suffering.

One Million Subscribers

Expecting Great Things

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has the faith to believe that there are a million families in this country who would be glad to subscribe for it were they acquainted with its surpassing worth. We further believe that all of our present subscribers are so thoroughly pleased with the paper that they would be glad to see our faith fully realized. They know the blessed influence THE CHRISTIAN HERALD exerts, for they themselves have felt it. Week after week they have scanned its beautiful pages, have read its inspiring messages, have reveled in its literary and artistic wealth, have been deeply interested, edified and instructed, and, after having read it from beginning to end, have sent it to some distant friends that they also might enjoy its perennial riches.

All Love It

Few papers published are read and reread as is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and none affords greater pleasure and delight, or makes warmer and more lasting friends. It is an indisputable fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has a larger percentage of renewals than any other paper, and that, from its very beginning, it has carried more permanent subscriptions than any other publication; and its subscription list is constantly increasing. Nine years ago its circulation was 31,000; to-day it is a welcome visitor in 198,000 families. But what has been done in the past is only an indication of what may be done in the future, provided we all work heartily together with a view to securing the million on which we have now set our heart.

A Financial Sacrifice

To bring this about we have determined to enlist the cordial co-operation of our friends, and ourselves to make such a financial sacrifice as will demonstrate our own sincerity in the matter. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot be produced at less than its regular subscription price, which is $1.50 per annum. But to interest those who cannot appreciate its beauties, simply because they do not see the paper, we have decided to accept, during the month of June, an unlimited number of Half Yearly trial subscriptions at 25 cents each, subject to the easy conditions set forth in the annexed coupons. We could not make this sacrifice but for the experience of the past that a very large percentage of our subscribers renew, and when they renew they are glad to pay the regular subscription price, because they are satisfied that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is well worth all we ask for it.

A Magnificent Record

This year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD attains its majority. It will be 21 years of age in September next. Its history is grand beyond compare. It has collected and expended A MILLION DOLLARS IN CHARITY. The peasants of Russia, the martyrs of Armenia, the orphans of India, the reconcentrados of Cuba, the rescued men of the Bowery, the unfortunate girls of the Bethesda Home, the ten thousand hapless waifs of the tenements, all rise up and call it blessed. God be thanked for the opportunities and the privileges which were ours in the past; and may He graciously continue to pour out His blessing upon THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, its editors and proprietor and its readers, and make us one and all increasingly useful in His service.

Time Extended to July 31st

To enable our friends to make one long, determined and successful effort to double our subscription list, we hereby extend the date for sending in coupon subscriptions to July 31, 1899, and

To every person who sends us six coupon subscriptions terminating Jan. 1, 1900, at twenty-five cents each, we will send, all charges prepaid, and absolutely free of all expense, a Red Letter New Testament, printed from new type, bound in divinity circuit, red under gold edges, with book mark, worth $1.50. For Genuine Leather and Gold Thumb Index send twenty-five cents extra.

This New Testament, specially designed by the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and copyrighted by him, contains the authorized version, printed in black, except that every word recorded therein as having been spoken by our Lord is printed in red. As the Sunday School lessons for eighteen consecutive months, from January 1st, next, concern themselves with the life of our Saviour and are all taken from the New Testament, this Testament, now in press, will prove invaluable to all Sunday School workers and scholars. The names of all who send in six coupon subscriptions will be printed in the Roll of Honor mentioned in the last paragraph on this page.

The Best Home Paper

But, in addition to these great monumental charities, there is the mission of blessedness and usefulness of the paper itself which results in light, cheer, hope and happiness in the home circle. And it is this which we now wish to extend. We are engaged in a great Home Missionary effort. You can help us. We know you will help us, and thus have part and parcel in all the good which, under divine blessing, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shall accomplish in years to come.

We Look to Our Friends

Let us begin this work by doubling the present number of its subscribers. While this is a great undertaking, an unprecedented task, it is nevertheless an easy one, for it means just one new subscriber for each and every one now on our list. Surely every subscriber can do this, and we believe you will do your share, while we will gladly do everything within our power to help you.

How to Do It

Our plan is as follows: On the following page you will find six coupons. Please tear them apart at the perforated lines, then distribute them among such of your Church and Sunday School friends as will be likely to subscribe. They will thank you for doing so. Explain to them the beauties, the riches, the great attractiveness of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and urge them to give it a trial. Tell them that each coupon saves half a dollar on this semi-yearly trial subscription, and you will be surprised how quickly they will avail themselves of the exceptional opportunity thus offered. If six coupons are not enough for your purpose, write us and we will send you as many more as you may require, absolutely free of all charge. Do not forget, however, that the coupons are good only until July 31, and must not be mailed after that date.

Your One Opportunity

Or, if you prefer, you may make a regular canvass among your friends and solicit, by mail or in person, their subscription at our regular price—75 cents for six months. Then retain half a dollar from each subscription and send us a coupon and 25 cents in cash. Thus, while doing good by spreading the glorious influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, you are actually benefiting yourself. As a further inducement, we make the following extraordinarily liberal proposition:

Red Letter New Testament Free

Every person who sends us, during the month of July, six coupon subscriptions, at twenty-five cents each, will receive one of the beautifully bound Testaments, worth $1.50, described in the centre of this page, and the names of all who are entitled to one of these Red Letter New Testaments will be published in which will appear from week to week in alphabetical order in the columns of "The Christian Herald." Here is an opportunity for everybody. Every man, every woman, and every child may win a Red Letter New Testament, worth $1.50, by sending in six coupon subscriptions at 25 cents each, and thus helping us get our million subscribers.

Our Roll of Honor

All new coupon subscriptions sent in during July will begin with this number and end January 1st, 1900. Please bear this in mind.

Ellis Mapleson

To Our Subscribers

At the present time new subscriptions, under our unprecedented Coupon offer, are coming in at a rate exceeding even that. Our subscribers are doing nobly, and many of them are asking for additional coupons and additional time. In response to these requests we venture to send out another consignment herewith, and we take advantage of this opportunity to say a few words of encouragement to those who know the value of The Christian Herald, and who, with us, are interested in the distribution of good, healthy literature.

The monoply of large circulations need not, in a Christian community, be necessarily accorded to secular papers, and there is no valid reason why a clean, beautifully illustrated, carefully edited, well-printed journal like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should not stand in the front rank or, even, take the lead. Several of the popular magazines of the day are nearing the million mark. Why should we not have our million? We represent the best Cause in the world! With a million subscribers we could do more for this cause in this country than any other known agency.

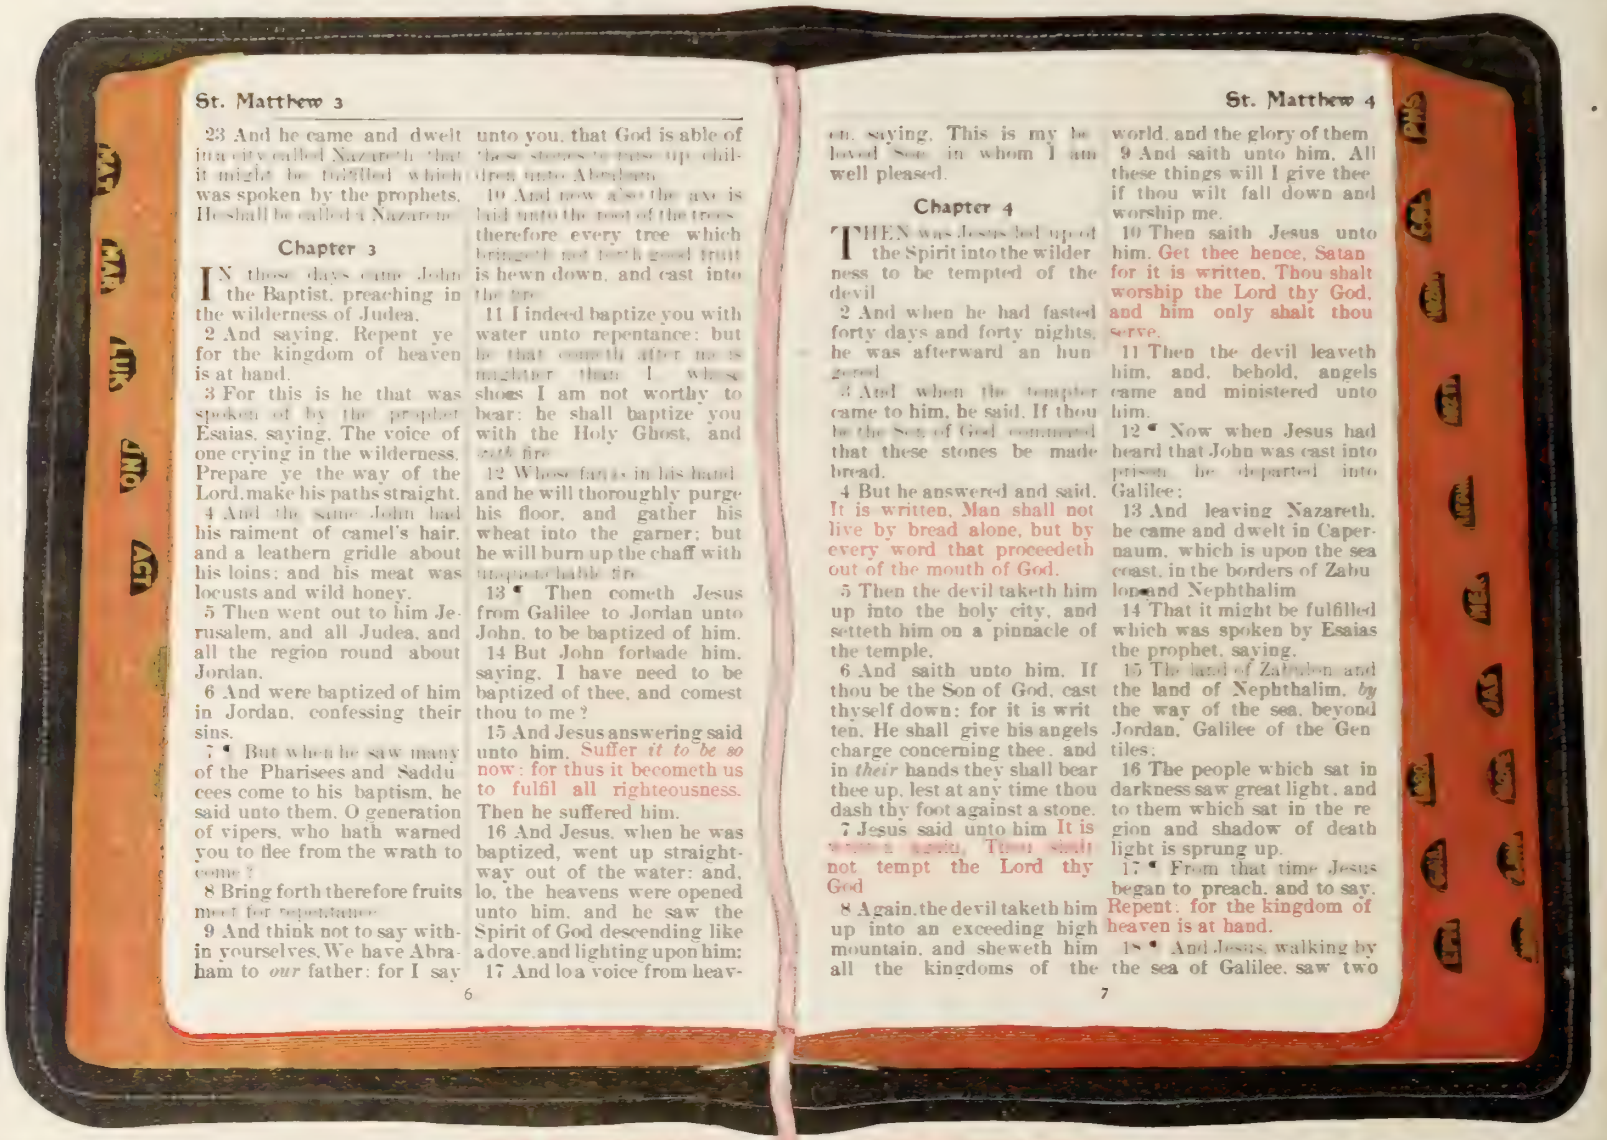
This nation can work wonders. It can be the means of converting the whole world. The eyes of other nations are upon it as at no previous time in its history. If it upholds the Banner of the Cross its beneficent influence will be felt to the very ends of the earth. A larger circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will contribute to this result, and the present movement is, consequently, in the right direction. The friends we are now putting on our list will soon appreciate the fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is indeed what has long been claimed for it, the brightest and best family paper in the world, and that it is cheaper at any price than many other publications which they must hesitate to introduce into their homes. In due time they will feel in their hearts the effect of the soul-inspiring messages from all parts of the earth, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD voices each week, and before long their interest will be thoroughly aroused in behalf of the Master's cause, and their active cooperation secured for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.

This is a glorious opportunity, and we appeal with great confidence to the many friends whose letters of hearty encouragement have cheered us in this aggressive campaign, and who have already sent us over 45,000 new subscribers within the last thirty days, to make one more united effort to increase this magnificent result so that a full round one hundred thousand may be added to our list.

* * *

Then let the Doxology be sung, for the greatest victory religious journalism has ever achieved will be an accomplished fact, and conditions will be favorable for giving the Twentieth Century at its very start an impetus of religious education that will be felt from A. D. 1901 to 1999, when stronger hands and abler minds may, under Divine blessing, succeed in building up a circulation of ten millions, and thus prepare, on a larger and more effective scale, and among generations yet unborn, the way for the coming of our Lord.

THIS PICTURE REPRESENTS THE EXACT SIZE OF BOOK, OF PAGE AND OF TYPE



St. Matthew 3
23 And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene.
Chapter 3
IN those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea,
2 And saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.
3 For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.
4 And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and wild honey.
5 Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan,
6 And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.
7 ¶ But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?
8 Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance:
9 And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.
10 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.
11 I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire:
12 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.
13 ¶ Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.
14 But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?
15 And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.
16 And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:
17 And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.
6
St. Matthew 4
Chapter 4
THEN was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil.
2 And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered.
3 And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.
4 But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.
5 Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple,
6 And saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.
7 Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.
8 Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;
9 And saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.
10 Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.
11 Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him.
12 ¶ Now when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee;
13 And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim:
14 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,
15 The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles;
16 The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up.
17 ¶ From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.
18 ¶ And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two
7

ENTIRELY NEW, READY AUGUST 1st. THE RED LETTER NEW TESTAMENT. WORDS SPOKEN BY CHRIST IN RED

Beautifully Bound in Divinity Circuit, Overlapping, Red Under Gold Edges, and Book-mark. Price $1.50. Thumb Index, 25 Cents Extra.

About June Coupon Subscriptions

All who have already sent in six coupon subscribers, and who therefore are now entitled to one of the Red Letter New Testaments, will please send their own names and addresses, and the names and addresses of the six subscribers sent in by them, and such subscriptions will be credited to them and they will receive a Red Letter New Testament just as though this offer had been made before they commenced work.

All who sent one or more subscribers during June may now increase the number to six and get credit for those already sent.

When you write about subscriptions sent in during the month of June, please do not enclose any new subscriptions with that communication, nor any other business letter, as this mail will be handled in a separate department. Write on the outside left-hand lower corner of the envelope, "Concerning June Subscriptions," and enclose nothing but that particular communication.

Ten Thousand Thanks

We did not think that we could afford to make the adjoining generous offer, but our friends have been so kind and so helpful that we feel impelled to manifest our appreciation of their hearty cooperation in some practical manner. It seems almost incredible that there should be so many kind and unselfish people in the world who, without hope of fee or reward, would work so heartily and so cheerfully, and it does our heart good to embrace this opportunity of publicly acknowledging how deeply we feel indebted to them. May God richly bless and prosper one and all, and multiply in their own experience all the good they had in their hearts to accomplish when, without the slightest expectation of compensation, they undertook to introduce THE CHRISTIAN HERALD into tens of thousands of new homes.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if mailed to the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 31st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 31, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF JUNE, A. D., 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if mailed to the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 31st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 31, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF JUNE, A. D., 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if mailed to the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 31st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 31, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF JUNE, A. D., 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if mailed to the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 31st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 31, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF JUNE, A. D., 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

The Only Paper in the World Edited by Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage

52 TIMES A YEAR

. . . The Christian Herald . . .

Bible House, New York City

$1.50 PER Year

To introduce The Christian Herald into New Homes, we will Accept this Coupon as Good for ONE HALF DOLLAR, if accompanied by Twenty-five (25) Cents in Cash in Payment of a Half-Yearly Subscription (from date to Jan. 1, 1900), if mailed to the Office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before July 31st, 1899, and endorsed with the name and address of the new subscriber on the reverse side of this Coupon.

Half a Dollar

Good Only Until July 31, 1899

GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND SEAL THIS THIRTIETH DAY OF JUNE, A. D., 1899.

Foreign Postage $1.00 Extra per Annum.

Proprietor.

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JULY 31st, 1899

This subscription was sent in through the influence of .....

.....

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JULY 31st, 1899

This subscription was sent in through the influence of .....

.....

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JULY 31st, 1899

This subscription was sent in through the influence of .....

.....

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JULY 31st, 1899

This subscription was sent in through the influence of .....

.....

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JULY 31st, 1899

This subscription was sent in through the influence of .....

.....

THIS SUBSCRIPTION MUST EXPIRE NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1st, 1900 . .

1,000 LARGE PAGES A YEAR
BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED
EXQUISITELY PRINTED . . .

I enclose with this coupon (good for half a dollar, as on the face hereof), the sum of twenty-five (25) cents in cash for a half yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Regular price $1.50 per annum), and I hereby certify that I am not now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that this subscription is not intended to take the place of one now on your books.

Name .....

Street Address .....

Town .....

State .....

THIS COUPON IS NOT GOOD IF MAILED AFTER JULY 31st, 1899

This subscription was sent in through the influence of .....

.....

Spain Sells Her Islands

ALMOST the last remnant of Spain's colonial empire has now been surrendered. Being without a navy, and being in sore need of money, the Spanish government has acted wisely in selling to Germany three distant groups of islands for five million dollars. The sale consists of the Caroline Islands, the Pelews and the Ladrones, with the exception of Guam, which is the largest and most southern of the group. This island was not included because it had already been ceded to the United States under the treaty of peace. The islands thus acquired by Germany, lie north of the equator and about a thousand miles east of the Philippine Islands. There are more than five hundred of them in all, scattered over an extent of hundreds of miles, and having an aggregate area of about six hundred square miles. Some of the islands are uninhabited, but on the others there is a total population of about forty thousand persons. Germany has long desired to acquire these islands, and about fourteen years ago, attempted to take possession of them, but Spain disputed the claim, and the question was finally submitted to the arbitration of the Pope, who decided in favor of Spain, but giving Germany preferred rights in commercial relations. The transfer has an interest for us, from the fact that all the civilization the inhabitants have, is the result of the labors of American missionaries. The American Board sent three missionaries there in 1852, who found the people practically savages. Few of them wore any clothing, and none of them had heard of Christianity. Their contact with the white men had served only further to degrade them, through drunkenness and other vices. The missionaries were much discouraged, but they toiled on in patience and faith. The Sunday School children of the United States subscribed and bought a vessel for them, which was named the Morning Star, in which they could visit other islands of the archipelago. Gradually success attended their labors, and there are now forty-nine churches with an aggregate membership of 5,313. The missionaries cherished the hope that the Carolines, like the Philippines, might have been ceded to the United States; but they are glad that, at least, they will no longer be under the Spanish flag, but will be ruled by a Protestant nation. Their gratification will doubtless be shared by the people, for it is now as it was in the days of Solomon:

When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule the people mourn (Prov. 29. 2).

A Son's Discovery

A curious case, all the facts in which are not disclosed, was tried in Jersey City, N. J., a few days ago. It was the suit of a young man to establish his identity and to prove his sanity. In giving evidence in his own behalf, the young man said that he had lived, ever since he could remember, with a family in the suburbs of Jersey City, and he had supposed that he was a member of the family until recently. There was one room in the house which he was forbidden to enter. But one day it was unlocked and he went in. He looked around to find out why he was excluded from the room, and made a search of it. He found some papers which he was convinced referred to him, showing that the couple whom he had always regarded as his parents, were not related to him at all, but had adopted him in his infancy when his real parents died. He also learned that his father had left him a small fortune. When he sought to establish his identity, questions were raised as to his sanity, but the New Jersey Court has declared him sane and has awarded to him the fortune he claimed. It is much to be wished that when people hear that they may be acknowledged sons of God, and heirs of an eternal inheritance, they would make as much effort as this young man did to establish their title and secure the inheritance.

Let us fear therefore lest haply a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to have come short of it (Heb. 4 1).

Compromise in Samoa

The Commissioners sent to Samoa by the United States, Great Britain and Germany to settle the disputed claims of kingship, appear to have reached a satisfactory settlement. A brief dispatch to Washington outlines its main provisions. After hearing all the facts, they decided to endorse the decision of Chief Justice Chambers, awarding the kingship to Malietoa Tanu. He was, however, induced to abdicate and both he and his rival, Mataafa, have disarmed their followers. Tanu surrendered two thousand rifles to the commissioners, and Mataafa turned in nearly the same number. The Kingship is to be abolished and the island is to be under a governor, assisted by a Legislative Council, composed of the consuls of the three powers, and a native House of Representatives. The dispatch does not state how the governor is to be selected, but from another source it is learned that the commissioners will recommend that Dr. Solf, the representative of Germany, be appointed to occupy the office temporarily. General satisfaction is expressed at Washington over the arrangement, and we may hope, from the fact that the arms have been surrendered on both sides, that the Samoans are content with it. The Commissioners appear to have been more successful than could have been hoped. It must have been no easy matter to induce both the rival claimants to the throne to resign and agree to the abolition of royalty. They would not have been so successful if they had been dealing with a European kingdom; but the time is coming when even there such renunciation will be witnessed and the vision of universal abdication will be fulfilled which John saw in Patmos:

SCENE IN THE CAROLINES, SHOWING PUNCTURED STONES USED AS MONEY

They worship him that liveth for ever and ever and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power (Rev. 4: 10 11).

A Thief Betrayed

An American tourist tells an amusing story of his experience with the French police. He is now visiting Paris and during his stay has been annoyed by thefts of money. Bank notes and coin if left in his rooms at the hotel systematically disappeared. His efforts to trace the money, or to catch the thief, failing, he applied to the police. A detective visited his rooms and hearing what had occurred adopted a stratagem to detect the thief. A few coins were put in a metal case, such as is commonly used in Paris for holding money. In order to withdraw the coins it is necessary to hold the case upside down. At the bottom of the case, which was laid on an incline, he put a few drops of a chemical mixture, containing pieric acid and fuschine, which leaves an indelible yellow stain on anything it touches. Within an hour the coins were missing and he summoned all the servants before him. The valet's fingers betrayed him and, being caught yellow-handed, he saw the futility of denying his guilt and was locked up. It was a clever scheme for making the guilt of the criminal self-evident. Who can tell if God has not arranged in some way that all sin shall similarly leave its stain which nothing but the blood of Christ can remove?

For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me saith the Lord God (Jer. 2: 22).

An Involuntary Journey

There was a chagrined passenger on the steamer which left New York, on June 23, for Boston, Mass. The boat had pulled out of her dock into mid-stream, when a man rushed wildly out of the cabin, and seeking the captain, begged him to let him get off. The captain said it was impossible. The man tried to throw himself over the side, but was held back. He said he was a hack-driver and had brought a lady to the steamer in his vehicle. As time was pressing, he carried her baggage on board for her, and went with her to her cabin, leaving his horse and vehicle on the dock. He wanted his fare, but the lady could not find her pocket-book for some minutes. He waited while she searched for it, and when at last it was found, and he was paid and came up on deck, the steamer was on its way. The captain asked him if he had not heard the warning whistle, and the shouts for all to go ashore who did not want to sail. The hack-driver admitted that he had, but thought he would have time. Now, his horse and vehicle were on the dock, and might get stolen, and he would lose two days and his fare back from Boston. He would soon get back, but there is a journey which people who disregard warnings are liable to make, from which there is no return:

He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy (Prov. 29: 1).

A Vacillating Suitor

The Chicago journals announce a marriage which is said to have been long under consideration. The bridegroom is a business man whose duties take him out of town at frequent intervals, but whenever he was in Chicago he was a regular visitor at a house where a young lady lived to whom he was obviously attached. She had other admirers and this young man was conscious that their position was superior to his own. During a recent journey the determination to end his suspense was gradually formed. He wrote from St. Louis a formal proposal of marriage and fearing that he would again lose heart, he went out and mailed it in the nearest letter-box. Then he felt that he had been precipitate. He wired to the young lady that he had mailed "the wrong letter" and asked her not to open it, but save it to give to him on his return. But that evening a telegram came from the lady, in which she said: "No, you mailed the right letter. It was about time." No reply could have given him greater pleasure and he lost no time in returning and making arrangements for the marriage. If he had only known that the young lady loved him and would accept him his proposal would have been made long before. He is not the first lover whose doubts have kept back the words he longed to speak and which would have been gladly welcomed. Sometimes men are held back from God in the same way, fearing that they were not worthy to approach him. To all such, Christ gives the assurance that should give courage:

I say not unto you that I will pray the Father for you; for the Father himself loveth you (John 16: 26).

Entombed For Three Days

News comes from Wilkesbarre, Pa., of the rescue of a miner who has been over three days and nights in a living tomb. He was in the breast of a mine belonging to the Kingston Coal Company when there occurred what the miners call "a rush of coal." He was shut off from the gallery and at first it was supposed that he had been crushed by the hundreds of tons of coal which had fallen. There was, however, a possibility of his being in a chamber of the workings when the coal fell and so to have escaped injury. Men were set at once to cut a passage through the debris. They worked day and night and at the end of forty-eight hours they were cheered by hearing shouts from the other side. The man was alive and knew that an effort was being made to reach him. They all shouted together to encourage him, and went to work with redoubled energy. It took seventy-six hours to cut a hole through large enough for him to crawl through. When he came out he was weak for want of food, for he had tasted neither food nor water since the coal fell. Seldom has such a scene been witnessed as that when the rescuers stood around the man they had saved and shook hands with him, as he thanked them for their efforts. Food and water were given to him cautiously, and when he was sufficiently restored to walk he went home, where he found his mother on her knees praying for his deliverance. Such a scene helps us to understand the scene Christ described when the angels rejoice over the rescue of a sinner from eternal death.

Likewise I say unto you, There is joy in the presence of the Angels of God over one sinner that repenteth (Luke 15: 10).

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.
T. DeWitt Talmage
EDITOR.

Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald

Subscriptions may commence

Remittances

Register

Foreign Postage

Renewals. before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused

Change of Date. the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration per indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

The Christian Herald the return of unsolicited manuscripts forwarded to it with a view to publication.

Letters

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The Nation Christian

WE desire to acknowledge the receipt of a very large number of letters, from every section of the Union, thanking THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the publication, in a recent issue, of the voluntary testimonies of the leading men of our nation, in evidence of the fact that ours is a Christian land, and that the most distinguished Americans now living are believers and humble followers of Jesus of Nazareth. Many of the letters are effusive in their commendation of the symposium, and all unite in regarding it as the most remarkable exposition of a nation's Christianity that could possibly have been made.

It is at any time a great privilege to confess Christ, and especially so at a time when the air is filled with the loud claims of the infidel, the sceptic, the agnostic and the scoffer. It has been the mission of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to expose the hollowness of those claims, so far as they presume to represent—or misrepresent—the most sacred beliefs of the American people. Never again, in our own day and generation at least, and let us hope never again while the Republic endures, shall it be asserted without contradiction that America is Godless, that its leaders are tainted with infidelity and that the doctrines taught by Jesus Christ have neither recognition nor influence in its national policies.

The Power to Stop

THE sudden death of ex-Governor Flower illustrates an American tendency. The business man in this country treats himself like a machine run by electricity; as though there were no end to his intellectual and physical resources; as though he had only to make attachment after attachment to his electrical centre, and could enlarge himself indefinitely.

The great Scotchman, Carnegie, has a different conception. He has begun to administer on his resources; to distribute his responsibilities, and to get rid of the strain which must be upon every multimillionaire. He has converted himself into a philanthropist. It will make his life easier and longer. Many will rise up and call him blessed, long after he is sleeping with his fathers. The Scotchman is the wiser man. He has begun to unload. It is entirely probable, that had this been the policy of ex-Governor Flower, it would have added many years to his life. The constant running of carwheels disintegrates them, iron as they are. The water wears away the stone. The man's brain, if pressed too hard, bursts a blood-vessel, and the end comes.

A gentleman, whose son has come to an early competence, has sent word to his father, now nearly seventy years old, to give up work, and take the rest of his life easily; recreate, travel abroad, get ready for his great exchange. And he is going to do it. A dutiful son; a sensible father. It was on the topmost wave of a magnificent oration, that that splendid man, William Windom, was arrested by the messenger of death. It is more and more the American way. The American can not stop till there is an explosion or a break-down.

The Up-to-Date Farmer

THE up-to-date farmer takes the agricultural paper; reads the editorial columns, the contributors' columns, the advertisements; especially the advertisements. For the world of machinery is on the move; the agricultural world also. What are the improvements in plows, harrows, planters? What is the best stock of horses for farm work? Horses? I remember well the first time I ever saw a breed of Percheron horses, that were as strong and patient as oxen; whose work was as steady as the movements of the spheres; reminding one of what is said by the Psalmist, "that there be no breaking in, nor going out, that there be no complaining in our streets. Happy is that people that is such a case." These imported horses seemed to answer both for horse and ox. All was perfectly easy and beautiful. Watch them as they were attached to loaded wains. They required no driving or urging, but encountered their conditions with the composure of great strength.

Vermont horses, Kentucky horses, are evidently for speed. These horses were "strong to labor"; to attach to plows when the earth was to be broken up, when there was to be subsoiling. And you could trust them every time. Farm horses! Not roadsters, not racehorses; but to the farm, great four-legged helpers, that glorified their Maker, in doing with their might, what their owners found for them to do. They were civilizers, too. They taught their owners steadiness and patience, and evenness of temper. Great, noble creatures! Well, the up-to-date farmer knows about them, and all other farming improvements.

The Regeneration of China

IF China should really be broken up by the great nations, there is no exaggerating the importance to America and the world's civilization of our presence in the Philippine Islands. Only a few hundred miles from Hong Kong, we must be counted a factor in the situation. Or if England should return to her earlier historic attitude toward the weaker nations; if she should send her ships and her guns no longer to enforce the traffic in opium, but to see that the Orient has an opportunity to develop a new civilization; we may well cooperate with her. That China has new intellectual and moral possibilities before her, we cannot question. That her sleep of the ages is to be broken up; that her millions are to rise to some true apprehension of what belongs to a nation; of what individual manhood means; that she is to have schools of the Occidental type; a religion that brings her people into living connection with the influence of the eternal world, we surely believe. Just how it is to be accomplished, and what part the great Christian nations are to have in this work, no mortal can predict. That the presence of America on the Philippine Islands is of significance in the problem of China's destiny, it becomes us, also, to believe and to be prepared for the event. If an open door is kept, doubtless, He will come in, whom God has made a Leader and Commander of the people.

The Contents of the Pistol Pocket

THE man who goes armed has a special facility to get into trouble. We remember a gentleman who, as he exhibited his pocket-pistol, said: "I take insults from no man." We said in reply: "Do you not think a man armed is more likely to insult other men?" He thought a moment and then said: "That is a question which I never considered." There is no doubt that the man who has a weapon carries it on the contingency that he may want to use it, and that its presence may betray him into ungentlemanly or intemperate speech. The law is a wise one that punishes the man who carries concealed weapons. When the time comes that a man who sells, purchases, or carries a pistol on his person is required to procure a license, there will be fewer cases of accident, manslaughter and murder. Drunken men, children and fools, people looking for trouble and willing to make it should have no access to such weapons, should be arrested and disarmed, should be suitably punished whenever they are found on their person. The Bible says, "Thou shalt not kill!" For what do men carry concealed weapons, but to meet contingencies, when they may be tempted by drink or passion or madness to break this commandment of the Decalogue?

The Well of Christian Comfort

THERE are a good many new ways of comforting. Your father dies. Your neighbor comes in and he says, "It is only a natural law that your father should die. The machinery is nearly worn out;" and before he leaves you, he makes some other excellent remarks about the coagulation of blood, and the difference between respiratory and nitrogenized food. Your child dies, and your philosophic neighbor comes, and for your soothing tells you that it was impossible the child should live with such a state of mucous membrane! Out with your chemistry and physiology when I have trouble, and give me a plain New Testament! I would rather have an illiterate man from the backwoods who knows Christ talk with me when I am in trouble than the profoundest worldling who does not know him.

The Gospel, without telling you anything about mucous membrane or gastric juice or hydrochloric acid, comes and says, "All things work together for good to those who love God," and that if your child is gone, it is only because Jesus has folded it in his arms, and that the judgment day will explain things that are now inexplicable. Oh! let us dig out this gospel well of comfort. Take away the stoicism and fatality with which you have been trying to fill it. Drive up the great herd of your cares and anxieties, and stop their bleating in this cool fountain.

To-Night Build Your Altar

TAKE the family Bible lying on the parlor-table. Call together as many of your family as may be awake. Read a chapter, and then, if you can think of nothing else besides the Lord's prayer, say that. That will do. Heaven will have begun in your house. You can put your head on your pillow feeling that, whether you wake up in this world or the next, all is well. In that ponderous Book of the Judgment, where is recorded all the important events of the earth, you will read at last the statement that this was the day when salvation came into your house.

BRIEF NOTES

temperance. Thirty of them are total abstainers increase of native newspapers. During the past four years the number has grown from nineteen to over seventy.

Boston, it was stated that the total all countries is now upward of missionary in India, declared that in natives this year there are more Bibles of any other book.

run from sixteen churches in London to the city hospitals. Fifty patients in each were thus enabled to hear the services.

in the cause of Methodism were wo cessful, died recently at the age of ninety-two years. He was a native of Stuttgart.

that it has distributed over sixty-four million volumes of Scripture, in a hundred languages, and maintains about four hundred colporteurs in foreign lands alone.

It is with regret that we hear of Dr. W. E. Moore, Permanent Clerk of the Presbyterian General Assembly. He was a sympathies whose influence was of kind and he will be sadly missed.

ty to celebrate the incoming of the twentieth century by the erection of a memorial cross in every church and the lighting of a huge bonfire. The latter idea seems better fitted for Parsees than Christians.

It is proposed to establish a home in Sevres for ex-priests. Six more priests in tion is urgently needed.

Dr. James H. Pettee, the famous American Board missionary in Japan, who is now home on furlough, says that there are now about forty thousand Protestant church members in the island empire. It is an ominous fact that three-fourths of the students in the public colleges are avowed atheists.

aging report of the progress of the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman and other eminent speakers took part in the proceedings.

The prediction that there would be a union between Unitarians and Reformed Jews appears likely to fail. At a recent Unitarian assembly in Boston, Rabbi Fleischer, who spoke, made it clear that not the most liberal of Jews would hold fellowship with any man who regarded Jesus Christ as a great teacher of ethics and religion.

progress of temperance in the Congregational churches of England. The statistics he has collected show that while in 1886 the total abstainers among the ministers were 34 per cent., they are in this year 84. Of the 280 students in colleges preparing for the ministry, 264 are total abstainers.

edges the gifts of our readers for Lincoln Memorial University. He has recently visited the Institution and found it doing excellent work. This year's enrollment is 235 students. During July and of the teaching force in the neighboring counties.

News comes from Honolulu that the Hawaiian Missionary Board proposes to take a hand in the evangelization of the Philippines and has already appropriated $10,000 for the purpose. Our new Territory could not have taken a better way of proving its fitness for annexation. Two Hawaiians accompanied the first American missionaries to the Caroline Islands in 1852.

At Central Congregational Church, Chelsea, Mass., the pastor asked the ladies, as a personal favor to himself, to remove their hats at the services. Now there is scarcely a lady in the church who wears her hat there, and the change is very popular. The only persons, it is said, who do not like it are those who miss the opportunity of studying millinery while the pastor is preaching.

Dr. Sheldon Jackson has had occasion to complain of wicked white men whose evil lusts have done irreparable harm among the natives of Alaska. Some of the men whom he has antagonized have taken advantage of his being absent on Government service to stir up unsuspicious persons to attack him. No notice should be taken of these reports. Dr. Jackson's character and services are above suspicion.

A valuable document has been found in the famous library of the Lawra cloister in Mt. Athos, which is the chief storehouse of old library treasures in the possession of the Orthodox Greek Church. It is a critical work of the tenth century, giving a variety of notes, marks and annotations on the text of the New Testament. The author used an edition of the sixth century, which makes Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of its organization, in 1904. It is proposed, by a vote of the church, during the interval to raise two hundred thousand dollars, to pay off a mortgage, and erect a new church building, which shall be ready for occupancy in October 1904. Dr. A. C. Dixon, the pastor, is anxious that the new edifice shall include a large auditorium for inter-denominational services.

Evangelists McGregor and Gorman have been holding meetings at Eagle Harbor, Washington, which have been attended with remarkable blessing. Previously they had conducted services at Seattle and at Port Angeles, in the same State, at which large numbers of young and old were led to make profession of faith. The evangelists say that there are evidences of an unprecedented desire to hear the Gospel, and ask the prayers of our readers for a great revival in the new State.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

The Children's Fourth

How it is Observed — A Pious and Patriotic Holiday—A Blessed Promise

NOTHING promises better for our country's future than the education which public and private schools, churches and missions, social and religious settlements throughout the land are giving American children in matters of national history and civics. A trained, intelligent patriotism is the pledge not only of protection from foes without, but of good government within; and "God, home and country," should be ever the watchword of a pious patriotism.

July the Fourth, our glorious Independence Day, is one of the occasions upon which children of the republic are taught such lessons in ways too pretty and pleasing to be foregone or forgotten; small people have their fireworks, and:

> All streets and lanes are full
> Of happy girls and boys,
> And evening skies glow red
> With their reflected joys.

In addition to these demonstrations, quiet, deep lessons are taught. Less than seventy years ago, our national hymn, "My Country, 'tis of Thee," was unwritten. The first time it was ever sung was at a children's Fourth of July celebration at Park Street Church, Boston. Now, hundreds of thousands of children's voices, North, South, East and West, peal forth every Independence Day, its noble words and hundreds of thousands of little hands are lifted in unison in the "Salute to the Flag." You will hardly find a child who does not know "the salute."

Let us go on teaching our children to sing on all national holidays, "Protect us by Thy Might, great God, our King;" and their pretty song associating our flag with God's stars and sky; and when they are men and women they will be an army of reform, strong in the belief that that flag should float above an absolutely pure government for temperance, righteousness and truth.

Our picture shows how the children's classes in a gymnasium in New York City gather to their hall on national holidays, that they may one and all unite in patriotic songs and exercises. When they enter, each comes with a little folded flag; when the big flag is run up, they rise, the salute is given, and the pretty flag song sung, while their own flags unfurled wave, a radiant cloud of red, white and blue above golden, black and brown heads.

Julia Ward Howe's programme for a Christian Fourth, as outlined by the author of "Battle Hymn of the Republic," for the benefit of all ages, will be interesting to our readers, old and young:

On the evening of the third: quiet gatherings in halls and churches, in which the true love of country should be explained and illustrated. The morning of the Fourth to be ushered in by martial music, and a military display sufficient to recall the services of the brave men who gave our fathers liberty. At ten o'clock orations in various public buildings, the ablest speakers of the commonwealth doing their best to impart the lesson of the day. At one, a Spartan feast, wholesome and simple, no liquor to be served thereat, and none to be sold during the day.

From twelve to half-past four exercises for the children of the public schools, examinations of classes in American history, prizes given for essays on historical and patriotic subjects. Later, a gathering in public gardens, and a tea with fruits and flowers served for the children of the city. In the evening, the singing of national anthems, tableaux, fireworks, and, in some form, a pastoral benediction. To these exercises, I would add the signing of a pledge of good citizenship.

♣

Physical Culture for Children

Children of the rural districts, who climb trees, slide down straw-stacks, tend cows, work gardens, hop, skip, run and jump with room in plenty, are not so dependent as city children upon such physical culture exercises as are given in gymnasiums. Yet, without doubt, they derive profit from them. Broad chests, strong backs, active limbs, are great aids in a successful battle with life. Well trained "gym" girls are not apt to develop into weak and ailing women; their chances of becoming strong and capable mothers and housewives are as greatly increased by physical culture as are their chances of intellectual proficiency by mental culture. Appreciating this fact, public schools, Young Men's Christian Association buildings, and various institutions created for purposes of educational improvement and social recreation, are provided with well-lighted gymnasiums where, under competent teachers, children, clad in strong, loose garments, are put through a drill that develops chest, heart, lungs, and every muscle of the body. It has been demonstrated here and in Europe that physical culture, wisely directed, improves the morals of a community of children. Good health is a remedy for fretfulness and other ills.

FLAG-DRILL IN THE GYMNASIUM OF AN UP-TOWN PUBLIC SCHOOL, NEW YORK CITY

♣

When duty calls I must obey,
Nor can I have another way—
He owns my life! To him I owe
My highest service to bestow.
For him and his I gladly go.

Harrisburg, Pa. B. B. G.

♣

A Marsh-Hawk's Babies

Speaking of the parental instinct in feathered and four footed creatures, Mr. Heaton tells this story of the marsh-hawk, which is one of the interesting features of the prairie, seldom coming near the farm stead, but flying up and down the swales, catching mice and mischievous ground-squirrels:

In my woods-pastures, where here and there are open spaces carpeted with native grasses, a pair of these hawks had built their rude nest, as is their habit, on the ground and the young were about two weeks old. A neighbor on the watch for hawks shot the mother. I told him that these birds were not those raiding his poultry, explaining by what marks he could distinguish the two species. He therefore spared the male, and a more faithful provider than this hawk I never saw. In the morning he was busy as soon as it was light, and when I went for the cows in the evening he was still on the wing. He became dreadfully thin and weak of wing, but he was successful in raising his brood.

♣

Guiding Childish Activity

Let us so fill our children's lives with wholesome, righteous habits and happy activities that there will be no room for sad and evil ones. "Don't do this, Tom," "Stop that, Mary," is a short way of putting an end to the naughty or disagreeable thing the children may be doing at the time, but unless we divert their thoughts and energies, the next thing may be equally or more disturbing. The better way is to exercise your patience in directing childish interest and energy into more happy channels. The power in a steam engine can work death and destruction, or carry hundreds of people and tons of merchandise safely to their destination, according to the intelligence of the engineer at the throttle. The child is like the engine—his activity the motive power and you the engineer. It is not enough to keep habit off the wrong track; you must keep it on the right one.

An Historic Lamp

THIS quaint little picture brings to mind all the stories we have read of the first inauguration of our first President. Not having inaugurated a President before, we did not know just how we wanted to do it. The Senate was still discussing the question as to whether it should sit or stand to greet the President-elect when the House of Representatives, led by the Speaker, marched in and Washington was announced. As he entered, simply attired in a dark brown suit and white silk hose, all American make, with a plain sword at his side, everybody rose as by common impulse and remained standing. Chancellor Livingstone administered the oath of office, the young President of a new nation saying fervently, "I swear, so help me God!" He, like his people, was not used to inaugurations, and he was awkward in reading his speech.

WASHINGTON'S LAMP

This lamp may have been taken from the family carriage in which Washington set out from Mount Vernon on his journey to New York city, the then Capitol, to assume his position as the nation's Executive. To defray the expenses of that journey, a recent history says his mother lent him $600, and that one of his last acts before his departure was to take her in his arms and kiss her. The account sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with the picture, says:

This is a photograph of one of the lamps taken from the carriage of George Washington when he was President, in 1789. The lamp belongs to Nathaniel Polan of Elenor, Clermont Co., O., who is over 100 years old. His father purchased it of Washington, and at his death it became the property of Nathaniel.

♣

Gentleness

It was Fred's birthday, and, when he woke in the morning, he found many gifts on the table at his bedside. He was as happy as a boy could be—so happy that he forgot how he had grieved his mamma by being cross the day before. She came in, sat down beside him, kissed him and gave him good wishes. Then she said softly, putting a sealed envelope in his hand: "Read it." He opened it and saw these words: "Ask God, my darling, for the best birthday gift of all—Gentleness."

♣

Children's Hymn

East and North and South and West,
Little children sing:
"O'er our country, it is best,
Christ should rule as King.'

"O, make us strong for victory,
O'er every form of sin.
And then, indeed, we shall be free,
The world for Christ to win!"

GEORGE HAGUE

THE : : : UNEXPECTED

Or, Aunt Jane's Fresh Air Experiment, and how it Resulted

... By HELEN HALL FARLEY ...

CHAPTER V

"Oh, the trusting, sweet confiding
Of the child-heart! Would that I
Thus might trust my Heavenly Father,
He who hears my feeblest cry."

DUNCAN, the seven year old, was the brightest of the six children. He was not a handsome child nor quick to make friends. There was an aggressive look about him when he first came that repelled rather than attracted, but it made Miss Temple all the more desirous of winning his affection. Sometimes the look in the intelligent blue grey eyes seemed defiant.

"Poor little laddie, he has been shamefully abused—I'm sure of that, was Miss Temple's mental comment, and she was right. One day he cut his fingers severely and he scowled to keep back the tears that threatened to come. Miss Temple bathed and plastered and bound up the wound.

"Well, dear little man, it is all right now."

She was astonished to see his mouth quiver and tears rush to his eyes.

"What is it my boy? Does it hurt worse than it did?" she asked anxiously.

He shook his head.

"You make me think of my mother—you do," he said, struggling to keep back the tears, "That's the way she stroked my hair. I've been lonesome without my mother—I have."

In a moment Miss Temple's arms were around him and his head was pillowed on her breast, her tears mingling with his.

And thus Duncan was won.

Two beautiful weeks of love and joy, rest and peace amidst blooming flowers and sweetest fragrance and delightful sounds rolled on.

The children were all out of doors.

Miss Temple was sewing on the piazza, for she found plenty of use for thread and needles nowadays. Suddenly Bennie approached, followed closely by Sylvia. The little fellow's face was strangely excited and he trembled as if with a chill.

"Me don't 'ant to go away, me 'ants to stay wid 'ou," he cried out and then hid his face in Miss Temple's lap and sobbed aloud.

"What is he talking about, Sylvia? What is the matter with him?" questioned Miss Temple.

"He's 'fraid" said Sylvia, "an' so am I," her dark eyes showing fear.

"Afraid! What are you and Bennie afraid of?"

"The man has come," she said crying.

"What man?"

"Mr. Chester."

"Who is he?"

"He brought us here, on the cars, you know,"

"Isn't he a good man?"—wonderingly.

"Oh, yes ma'am, he's very good an' kind."

"Then why are you and Bennie afraid of him?"

"We aint 'fraid of him, but I guess he's come for us, an' we don't want to go back yet to the city—not yet—oh, dear Miss Temple—not yet."

Yes, Mr. Chester had come for them—he was coming up the walk now with Bartholomew. Miss Temple, catching a glimpse of him, urged Bennie and Sylvia to go and find Sally, who would give them some fresh seed cakes.

"Aunt Jane," cried Bartholomew, coming up the steps with the stranger, "this is Mr. Chester; he is gathering up the 'Fresh Air' children. I've told him ours aren't ready to go yet."

Miss Temple shook hands with Mr. Chester.

"No," said she, after giving the guest a comfortable chair. "We have taken our guests for three weeks. I suppose you have no objections to our keeping them that length of time."

"On the contrary, I am delighted, and I want to thank you."

"It is but a little thing to do," she replied; "to share one's home for a short time with these homeless little folks."

"I wish the Lord's people everywhere would look upon it in that light." They had a pleasant chat while Mr. Chester partook of some light refreshments brought out by Peggy, after which Miss Temple made some close inquiries in regard to the homes of the six children.

"No one could possibly call them homes," Mr. Chester said. "They are all orphans. Tom and Bennie lived in a dark, damp cellar with only one small window. The little crippled girl's shelter was with an aunt who abused her shamefully, beating her and almost starving her, so Miss Gilbert found out. The two little sisters have had a rude abiding-place with an old woman who is a rag-picker. Their mother was a hair-dresser, quite well-to-do at one time, but it is the old, old story of drink and poverty. When she died, there was nothing for the little ones. Duncan's mother was a good, pure woman and was devotedly attached to her boy, but she is dead. The boy has been living with an uncle, who is a drunkard."

Miss Temple had listened to the painful recital as calmly as she could, her face pale, her heart full of compassion.

"And these little ones, are they to go back to those wretched places? I cannot endure the thought."

"We would be glad to put Bennie in an orphan's home, but he will not be separated from his brother."

"I should think not," put in Bartholomew, who was sitting on the piazza steps. "I don't believe Bennie would live long if Tom wasn't with him. As for Tom, poor fellow! his heart would break."

"They are devotedly attached," observed Miss Temple.

"They're so happy here, poor little chicks"—this from Bartholomew—"I shall dread to see them go away."

"Bartoli!"

"Yes."

"Would you really like these children to stay here all the time?"

The blue of his honest eyes deepened "Yes, I surely would. I like them all, every one, but then I know very well they can't stay here."

"Why can't they stay here?"

"You wouldn't want them to," he said.

"I do want them to!" her eyes were swimming in tears. "Oh, how can I ever think of sending them into misery again?"

"But six children, Aunt Jane! You couldn't stand it to bring up six children!"

"Well, as for that, I do not know what I can do until I try. Other women have brought up six children and more."

"But they were their own."

"Yes, of course, and if I should take these little ones, they would be my own."

Mr. Chester did not speak while this conversation was going on, but he silently prayed, and his prayer was answered.

* * *

The summer had passed, but the early days of September were so fair and balmy, that it was difficult to realize that winter was not far off. Bartholomew had gone to the preparatory school, a well-filled trunk accompanying him. A happier boy than he was now that his dream of an education was about to be fulfilled it would be impossible to find.

Aunt Jane had written lovingly in answer to his letter, "I'm glad you miss me, dear, for it tells me that you love me, and that is a sweet thought to me. I'm already looking forward to Christmas, when God willing, we will meet again." Tom and Duncan, Charlotte and Katie were in the country school. Duncan was in his element with his books and they were all advancing. Sylvia and Bennie remained at home. They had improved wonderfully, but their limbs would never be strong. Miss Temple taught them at home.

One day, as she sat with them in the pretty summer-house, Deacon Stiles appeared under the vine-wreathed arch.

"I hope I'm not intruding," he said courteously. "I had a glimpse of you as I came in the gate, so I thought there was no use in going to the house."

"Come right in," was the cordial greeting. "I am glad to see you. I hope you will excuse me for not getting up."

He took the rustic chair she offered him, looking at her admiringly.

"I would not have you get up," he said, "I like to see you as you are," which meant, of course, with Bennie on her lap and Sylvia's arm about her.

It was still Charlotte's beloved and self-imposed task to arrange Miss Temple's hair every day. Deacon Stiles did not know that the new arrangement made the pleasant, kindly face much younger.

"It is her love for the 'unexpected' that has done it," was his thought, "it's like unto the 'Love Divine all love excelling,' her goodness is."

Deacon Stiles was a fine man, tall, with a kindly, honest face, handsome eyes and a sunny nature, a man so whole-hearted that he was beloved by every one who knew him. The woman before him attracted him. There was character in her firm mouth, touched with a rare tenderness, her brow and her clear eyes.

She wore a white dress with a ribbon tied around her waist

"She used to wear gray gowns—always gray," the deacon said to himself. "How sweet she looks, how motherly with those little ones clinging to her!"

The blue sky looked smilingly down, the birds were singing as joyously as if it were June. The beautiful chrysanthemums nodded their heads gracefully in the soft breezes. The grass was still green and velvety. The scent of new-mown hay was in the air. From the meadow where Job was at work came the song of "Harvest Home."

"Sylvia! Bennie!"

It was Sallie's voice, calling to the children, as she had promised them a special treat in the way of frying funny little doughnut men.

"Good-bye, Auntie," said Sylvia, kissing the face she loved so dearly.

"Dood-bye, Nantie," said Bennie, kissing her on one cheek and then on the other. Presently they were alone—Deacon Stiles and Miss Temple. The latter's face was flushed, her hair tumbled.

"They call you Auntie?" he said questioningly.

"Yes, I've adopted them, you know. It was too formal to continue calling me Miss Temple, and being an old maid, I couldn't teach them to say 'Mother,'"

"My dear Miss Temple."

"She looked at him wonderingly, for his face was radiant.

"I wish," he said, "that you would consent to arrange matters in such a delightful way for me that the children could call me 'Uncle.'"

But as this is not a love story, I will leave you all to decide for yourself what Miss Temple's answer was.

[THE END.]

"In Union There is Strength."

True strength consists in the union, the harmonious working together, of every part of the human organism. This strength can never be obtained if the blood is impure. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the standard prescription for purifying the blood.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

IMITATIONS OF OXYDONOR
ARE DANGEROUS TO USE

The Original is made by the Discoverer and Inventor
DR. H. SANCHE
Which is the only safe instrument.

From Rev. JOHN A. THOMPSON, D.D.,

PRICE NOW $10

DR. H. SANCHE & COMPANY,
261 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
57 State Street, Chicago, Ill.
61 Fifth Street, Detroit, Mich.
Canadian Office 2268 St. Catherine Street, Montreal, P.Q.

"LINENE" COLLARS and CUFFS

Do Not Wilt

No Laundry Work

Ten collars or five pairs of cuffs, 25c. By mail 30c.

Reversible Collar Co., Dept. S., Boston, Mass.

RUBENS DANTE TASSO MURILLO ANGELO RAPHAEL

ROYAL
Baking Powder

Made from pure cream of tartar.

Safeguards the food against alum.

Alum baking powders are the greatest menacers to health of the present day.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

$18.00 a Week and expenses to good parties to travel. No canvassing. Permanent position. Also good Workers and Managers can find profitable employment for part time. Give references. R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

$2,45 buys a MAPLE AND REED BODY Baby Carriage

VICTOR MANUFACTURING CO
Dept. B 21, 161 to 167 Plymouth Pl., Chicago, Ill.

FOR ALL RELIGIOUS SERVICES
CHURCH HYMNS AND GOSPEL SONGS.
$25, $30 and $35 per 100, according to binding. Samples of either post free, 25c.
A 32 page pamphlet of above, loaned to Conventions.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs, Conventions, and every good purpose. Books. Sheet Music. Octavos. Cantatas. Concert Exercises. Instruments. New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free. FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

CRAZY WORK 20 Silk Remnants, assorted for a large quilt, 50c. Immense pack, 25 cents. Fancy Stitches, Free, postpaid. Lemarie's Silk Mill, Little Ferry, N. J.

Our Children's Home Opens

Many Little Guests this Season—A Happy Fourth

WHEN this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches our readers, our new Children's Home will be in happy occupation by 200 little children of the poor. The Fourth is a gala time with our little folks and they look forward to it with bright anticipations, former guests making eager application to go up with early detachments. The directors of the Home have always endeavored to make it a red-letter day for the children. Good, wholesome food and plenty of it, the parades, the salute to the Flag, the singing of our hymns, the orations and other patriotic exercises; and in the evening the display of fireworks, all combine to make the occasion one of pleasure and profit as well. Hundreds of visitors from neighboring towns, villages and farms, as well as from New York City, always come to witness the exercises, and delight of the tenement waifs over the good things provided for them. Care is taken throughout the day to impress upon the children a sense of gratitude to God for the blessings received.

Our readers whose prayerful interest follows every phase of this work, will be pleased to know that this summer kindergarten systems and nature studies will be employed to make our children's play helpful to them. Little ones, whose eager and ever-curious minds prompt questions innumerable about the wonders of nature unfolded to their eyes, are all the more observant because accustomed hitherto only to the sights of grimy courts and alleys, will be led by way of pretty story and woodland ramble to reverently study the leaves and flowers, birds and insects, and to see God's wisdom in his handiwork. Religious workers are coming to see that in such teaching lies a safeguard against infidel arguments that nature disproves God's existence.

The following contributions to the Fresh-Air Fund have been received:

Trotter, Kate	3 00
Trubshaw, J W	6 00
Tucker, Miss S M	5 00
Valentine, Miss E	2 00
Vibbert, Mrs S	2 50
Vollnogel, M	3 00
Voris, Mrs C A	50 00
Wade, Mrs C W	1 00
Waldron, Wm	2 00
Watters, Mrs J M	3 00
White, A T	50
Wickham, Mrs E T	2 00
Wiedeman, Henrietta	2 00
Williams, Mrs C S	6 00
Williams, Mrs O D	1 00
Wood, M M	50
Wright, Mrs L	1 00
Yeakle, Miss A R	3 00
Beulah, Lucile & Lillian, McGee's Mills	3 00
Credo, New Castle	3 00
Cynthia, Rochester	3 00
Essex, Clarks	25
Katherine, Kingston	3 00
Ralph G R, Vineland	1 00
—, Ashtola	5 25
—, Brooklyn	1 00
—, Greenwood	1 00
—, Hannibal	1 00
—, Kingston	6 00
—, Providence	1 00
—, Quakertown	3 00
—, Red Lion	1 00
—, Wisconsin	3 00
—, Yankton	1 00
A F L, Deep River	2 50
A R M, Willow	3 35
B T, Newark	5 00
E B S, Scranton	20 00
ECG, N Belfast	3 00
E M F, Bloomfield	6 00
—, E S	1 50
F G S, Whitings	6 00
H E, Angelica	3 00
H J E, Jersey City	3 00
J A W, Tidioute	31 00
J M C, Elmenton	5 00
J M D, Evart	10 00
J V R, Lafayette	10 00
K C, Harrisburg	3 00
K I H, Holton	3 00
L C, Manchester	2 00
M B F, Rondout	3 00
M E U, Everly	1 00
M H, Stoutsville	1 00
Miss R J J, Centreville	3 00
Mrs C A B, Brooklyn	10 00
Mrs E G S, Phila	15 00
Mrs E L H, Panama	1 00
Mrs E M S, Plainfield	1 00
Mrs O K W, Raynham	3 00
Mrs W S B, Apollo	3 00
P A F, Albion	3 50
P D Q, Troupsburg	3 00
R M H, Montrose	9 00
S C S, Cresco	4 00
T A L, Terryville	3 00
W F L, Bridgewater	1 00
Canada girl	1 00
For Jesus Sake, Eureka	12 00
Friend, Baltimore	6 00
" Belmar	10 00
" Broad Brook	3 00
" Brooklyn	5 00
" E Orange	3 00
" Frederick	10 00
" Jamaica	1 00
" Maxwell	6 00
" Meeker	25
" Milford	6 00
" New Haven	3 00
" N J	5 00
" N Lansing	10.00
" Nunda	3 00
" Otsego	1 00
" Peru	6 00
" Plymouth	1 00
" Sinking Valley	2 00
" Smith Ctr	3 00
" Waynesboro	6 00
" Williamsport	3 00
" Winchendon	3 00
" Woodstock	1 00
Friend & subr, Ennis	1 00
Interested friend, Purcell	10 00
2 friends, Conconully	15 00
Friends, Rye	6 00
Inasmuch, Gardnerv'e	3 00
" Norwich	1 00
I H N, Adrian	1 50
" Alabama	25
" E Greenwich	3 00
" Evanston	3 00
" Los Angeles	2 00
" Madison	6 00
" Mascot	4 75
" New Holstein	3 00
" Newport	3 00
" Woodstown	2 00
In honor of a loving husband, Peekskill	6 00
In memory of Clara S Foss	5 00
In memory of little Cora	3 00
In mem of Jane Hope	30 00
In memory of Lewis P Tibbals	6 00
In memory of Mildred, Somerville	6 00
In Memoriam, Clyde	3 00
In memoriam of Marion E Crosby	5 00
Mother, No Haven	1 00
One who loves the Saviour, N D	3 00
Reader, Odell	6 00
Subr, Montrose	3 00
Southern subr, Summerville	3 00
Box 389, Laingsburg	3 50
Charity, Middletown	4 00
Helper, Honeybrook	5 00
A Tarnished Silver Cross	3 00
A Repentant and Thankful One	15
Willing Givers, N Y C	9 00
Jr C E S St Paul's Luth ch, Allentown	3 00
C E S Ref ch, Selins Grove	3 00
C E S, Metuchen	4 00
Ladies Missy Soc, Center	6 00
S S, Medford Leery	6 00
Jrs I Baptch, Urbana	4 20
Total	$617 45

* * *

Bowery Mission

The following contributions have been received for the Bowery Mission:

Alderman Bernice	1 00
Andrews L H	5 00
Hoover A A	1 00
Howe Mrs H W	5 00
, Quakertown	1 00
—, Springfield	2 00
—, Stratford	6 00
Box 389, Laingsburg	3 00
Friend, Belmar	5 00
" Chesapeake City	1 00
" I Orange	1 00
" Greenville	87
" N J	5 00
Friend of good works Cal	2 50
Friend A Subr, Ennis	1 00
Helper, Honeybrook	5 00
I H N, Adrian	1 50
I H N, New Holstein	2 00
I H N, Youngstown	1 00
In memory of Marion E. Crosby	5 00
In memory of Jane Hope	10 00
One who knows Mt. Vernon	1 00
Subscriber	1 00
The Meathoid Lover of Christ	5 00
A well wisher, Balto.	1 00
Total	$361 03

WAITING FOR THE ARRIVAL OF THE STAGE

The group is shown in front of the Kindergarten at Our Children's Home

We are profoundly thankful to the kind friends who are taking so active and practical an interest in these charities, and we believe that God will bless them one and all. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has never published, and never will publish, the extent of financial assistance which its proprietor has given to these three benevolences, so successfully carried on in the Master's name and so beneficent in results and influence. He has endeavored, as in the sight of God, to do his share, and this hearty support on the part of our friends is to him deeply gratifying and encouraging.

It is indeed a blessed privilege to be permitted to contribute to the happiness of the children of the poor; to raise the fallen; to cheer the disconsolate; to feed the hungry; to clothe the naked and to help save some poor soul, who, but for our timely aid might have been forever lost, and to do it all for His sake. Other investments may prove disappointing, but what we do in the Master's name yields a bountiful return, for he himself has promised "a hundred fold now in this time . . . and in the world to come eternal life" (Mark 10: 30).

All the loving links that bind us,
While the days are going by;
One by one we leave behind us,
While the days are going by;
But the seeds of good we sow,
Both in shade and shine will grow,
And will keep our hearts aglow,
While the days are going by.

Affleck Jas	1 00
Allen J M	33
Anderson Miss E	5 00
Baird J E	50 00
Barrow P M	1 00
Bateman, M C	1 25
Borden Mr & Mrs H	5 00
Boshart Wm	5 00
Brock Mrs J	1 00
Baldwin Mr & Mrs E H	2 00
Banks M Isabell	15 00
Best Jno E	2 00
Blood Cora	3 00
Brown J & M	3 34
Burnham S C	2 60
Campbell Geo S	3 00
Caverly Mrs A A P	50
Caverly Mrs A A P	50
Champe Mrs S A & sis	1 00
Chapman J	4 62
Cole A J	5 00
Corson A G	50
Canard E	1 00
Colebeck H B	1 00
Colyer Mrs L	1 00
Cooper J M	1 00
Culbert John C	5 00
Davies Mrs W	2 00
DeBower Emily	3 00
Deeley B E	1 00
Dunlap Mrs E	1 00
Desh W K	5 00
Driscoll Mrs T M	50
Dunlap Mrs M H	3 00
Edwards A R G	1 00
Fitzpatrick Mrs M E	10 00
Forquer Albert F E	1 00
Gamblin H S	5 00
Gates Mrs M	1 00
Geale Mrs Sarah	2 50
Gladding T S	25 00
Geiger Mrs L A	1 00
Getchell Mrs E W	3 00
Goodenough Sadie	1 00
Hall Mrs A M	1 00
Hammond Mrs M	10 00
Holden Mrs L C	5 00
Holmes Lydia B	5 00
Hughes Wesley	2 00
Hulskamper Mrs J A	2 00
Hunter Elizabeth & W	5 00
Huntley Frances J	25 00
Hazlett Mrs S H	25 00
Hines Dr W A	2 00
Hines Mrs W A	50
Hope Jane	5 00
Irving Miss A K	25 00
Jacobson N	3 50
Joslin E W	1 00
Jones R W	2 00
Kempton Sarah	5 00
Kentgen Grace Hope	15 00
Kinsey Harry C	1 50
Knight Mrs M A	75
Leonard C A	1 00
Lowry M	1 00
Lewis Hannah	1 00
Mackey Sarah L & M	1 00
Mann Mrs G E	1 00
McClun J	1 00
McCamant Mrs E H	5 00
McClennon Thos H	1 00
McCown Mrs M R	1 00
McKendrick Jas	1 00
Mansfield Jr E Glover	5 00
Martz Esther	50
Mather J L	1 00
May J H	25
Mitchell J B	1 00
Morley Mrs H R	25 00
Mulford Frances H & Mrs J E	5 00
Mull Birdie	50
Munson Joel S	2 50
Murray Mrs T A	3 00
Myers C F	1 00
Nettleton F E	10 00
Neuffer G F	25
Nolder Sarah A	3 00
Officer Mrs S	1 00
Olin John F	1 00
Pierce W E	5 00
Preston Miss A	2 00
Quale R J	2 00
Total	$423 29

* * *

Bethesda Home

Friends of the Bethesda Home have sent these sums for the help of that work:

Affleck, Jas	1 00
Allen, J M	33
Anderson, Miss E	5 00
Barr, Mrs R	5 00
Beckley, F W & wife	2 50
Bell, Mrs E A	25
Best, J E	1 00
Boutwell, Mrs C T	1 00
Brown, J & M	3 33
Burnham, S C	1 00
Cary, Miss Alice	1 00
Charles, C W	2 00
Chisholm, Sr, A	12 00
Clarkson, E L	15 00
Cooper, J M	1 00
Corse, Mrs E S	1 00
Craig, W J	50
Culbert, J C	5 00
Cuming, T H	20 00
Desh, W K	5 00
Driscoll, Mrs T M	50
Dunlap, Mrs M H	3 00
Evans, Mrs C P	6 00
Fitzpatrick, Mrs M E	10 00
Gardner, Mrs S	1 00
Getchell, Mrs E W	2 50
Goodenough, Sadie	1 00
Hakes, Mrs E N	1 00
Hazlett, Mrs S H	25 00
Hotchkiss, W M	2 00
Irving, Miss A K	25 00
Johnson, Mrs. J H	50
Johnson, Josephine P	5 00
Jones, R W	2 00
Kinsey, H C	1 50
McClary, Mrs S A	2 00
McClennon, T H	1 00
McKittrick, Mrs C M	3 00
Mather, J L	1 00
Moir, Mrs R T	10 00
Morley, Mrs H R	25 00
Mulford, Frances H & Mrs. J E	3 00
Myers, C F	1 00
Nettleton, F E	6 00
Richter, Mrs G M	1 00
Shannon, Myrta	15
Smith, Lillie T	1 00
Southwick, Mabel	2 00
Stennenberg, Mrs E B	2 00
Taylor, Mrs M	2 00
Walsh, E	1 00
White, A T	50
Williams, Mrs O D	1 00
Woodside, Mrs Wm	2 50
Essex, Clarks	25
Katharine, Kingston	2 00
A R M, Willow	3 35
B T, Newark	10 00
E A F, Fountain City	2 50
IHS, Iowa City	2 00
J A W, Tidioute	30 00
J C, Waupun	1 00
J M D, Evart	5 00
Mrs E M S, Plainfield	1 00
Mrs F W, Springfield	1 00
Mrs O K W, Raynham	1 00
R, Lynn	1 00
W F L, Bridgewater	1 00
—, Kingston	5 00

Hot Weather Dyspepsia

Thousands Suffer From It at This Season of the Year

Hot weather dyspepsia may be recognized by the following symptoms: Depression of spirits, heaviness and pain in the stomach after meals, loss of flesh and appetite, no desire for food, bad taste in the mouth, especially in the morning, wind in stomach and bowels, irritable disposition, nervous weakness, weariness, costiveness, headache, palpitation, heartburn. It is a mistake to treat such troubles with "tonics," "blood purifiers," "cathartics," "pills," because the whole trouble is in the stomach. It is indigestion or dyspepsia and nothing else.

All these symptoms rapidly disappear when the stomach is relieved, strengthened and cleansed by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They should be taken after meals, and a few carried in the pocket to be used whenever any pain or distress is felt in the stomach. They are prepared only for stomach troubles.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are indorsed by such physicians as Dr. Harlandson, Dr. Jennison, and Dr. Mayer, because they contain the natural digestive acids and fruit essences which when taken into the stomach cause the prompt digestion of the food before it has time to ferment and sour, which is the cause of the mischief.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are pleasant to take and unequaled for invalids, children and every person afflicted with imperfect digestion. It is safe to say they will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Nearly all druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, full sized packages at 50 cents. A book on stomach troubles and thousands of testimonials sent free, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

For the home, library, sick room, studio, office, school room.

TRADE THE STANDORETTE MARK

An Invalid's Stand, Easel, Reading Stand, Book Rest, Music Stand, Card Stand, Sewing Stand, Drawing Board, all in one handsome piece of furniture. Compactly folded; shipped in box 24x21x2¾

Thousands in use giving the best of satisfaction. Shipped on approval, freight paid. If not as represented, money refunded. Light, durable, ornamental. Made of steel tubing, enameled in black. Trimmings nickel plated. All adjustments are automatic. Our booklet mailed free.

D. H. ALLEN & CO., Miamisburg, O.

THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE THINK A SALAD IS NOT A SALAD UNTIL DELICIOUSLY SAVORED WITH

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL & GENUINE WORCESTERSHIRE

WHEN BUYING, NOTE THE SIGNATURE— LEA & PERRINS ACROSS THE WRAPPER.

JOHN DUNCAN'S SONS, AG'TS., NEW YORK.

A BLESSING TO ANY HOME

Bound hand and foot to household drudgery, scrubbing and rubbing day in, day out. Women, why do you do it? Break away from the hard old-fashioned way of doing your cleaning with soap.

GOLD DUST

Washing Powder

has proven the emancipation of hundreds of thousands of other women. Why not yours? Let Gold Dust do more of the work, you do more of the play. You will be happier, healthier, save money and many an hour of worry. For greatest economy buy our large package.

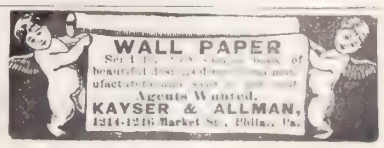
The N. K. Fairbank Company CHICAGO NEW YORK ST. LOUIS BOSTON

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT

And on Lake Champlain

$8.00 to $10.00 per week. Send 4c. postage for Illustrated Book.

A. W. ECCLESTONE, S.P.A., 353 Broadway, N.Y.



A Friend in Need

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for July 16. Luke 10: 30-37

MANY of the questions raised on topics of religion and morality might be answered by the parable of the Good Samaritan. It is evident that the lawyer whose question elicited the parable was a man of the type of character which is still common. He wanted a clear and explicit definition of duty. We still have the question asked, May I do this or that? Is it wrong to take part in this amusement and to go to such and such places? Christ raised the whole subject into a higher plane by showing that character is not so much a matter of specific acts and rules as of the spirit of man. The lawyer wanted to know how far the circle extended which included his neighbor. It would, of course, include his own family; it might include persons living near him, or it might include all men of his own nationality. Who were the people whom he was to love as himself? That, Christ told him, was not the question involved. The question that concerned him was whether he had the neighborly spirit. To make this clear to him, he told the story of a man whose nationality made him an object of dislike, who was under no obligation of kinship or of religious duty; yet who, seeing a man in need of help, gave him precisely the help he needed, taking no account of the nationality or merits of the man he helped. Christ set that man up as an example to be followed. He was one who had the neighborly spirit which was better than rules or laws.

This principle characterized all Christ's teaching. He made no church organization, gave few directions about life, but insisted upon his followers having the right spirit, and leaving them free as to their modes of manifesting it. If the heart and spirit were right the life would be right. To show this the more clearly, he makes the chief character of his story a Samaritan. As we know from other passages of Scripture, the Jews despised the Samaritans, and would have no dealings with them. The victim was evidently a Jew. He was going from Jerusalem to Jericho. By the most liberal interpretation of the word neighbor, the Samaritan could scarcely have been under obligation to regard him in that light. If he had met the Jew under ordinary circumstances, he would probably have received scant courtesy from him. The Jew certainly would have done nothing for him, and would doubtless have treated him with contempt. When the Samaritan saw him lying there, he might naturally have asked himself, "why should I put myself out of the way to serve a man, who, in his heart despises me?" But there is no limit to his kindness. He gives up his beast that the man may ride, he binds up his wounds and taking him to his inn, provides for his care out of his own pocket. There is no law, no sense of obligation which could produce such kindness. It could come only from the spirit of the man, the love and compassion in his heart which was ready to go forth toward any object which might be in need of service. That was Christ's principle. His religion consists not in rites, not in the performance of specific duties, but in character, in being like him, in having the Christ spirit.

This is the secret of the perpetuation of Christianity. Apart from this, we could never understand why the influence of a Teacher who lived in a secluded agricultural district of an insignificant country, nineteen hundred years ago, should be so potent in our day. This principle of having the neighborly spirit, can be applied just as well to the conditions of life in our land, and our own time as to the lives of the people who listened to the story. There are people around us who need help, but have no claim of kinship, or social relations to urge. Sometimes it seems to us that they do not deserve our help. They have brought their misfortunes on themselves, they have been imprudent, or they have done, or left undone, something which we make an excuse for not helping them. Or, if conscience pricks us, we give them a dole of money, and so leave them. But this does not meet the case. It often happens that money is not the best help we can render. If we have the Samaritan's spirit we shall do for them what they most need. By a little effort, a little inconvenience, a little personal service, we may be of more real help to a man in a difficulty, than by the gift of money. Christ himself was the highest example of this spirit that the world has seen. He laid down his life for our race, and prayed even for his murderers. As we think of him pitying the world, and coming here to live and die that men might be saved, we see how he has a right to say to us as he said to the lawyer: "Go thou and do likewise."

Many Independence Days

One-hundred-and-ten years is surely a goodly age! The photograph of Mrs. Waits, which we reproduce, was sent to

MRS. MARY SOUTH WAITS
A Centenarian

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by Mr. Wm. Rouster, Belfast, Ohio, with the accompanying statement:

Mary South Waits is the oldest resident of the State of Ohio. Her age is 110 years. This was taken on her birthday anniversary last fall. She lives at Baywood, in the county of Clermont, Ohio.

How many Fourths of July has not this good lady seen in her long life? There could have been but eleven Independence Days before she was born, and but one presidential inauguration. Indeed, she and Ohio are nearly the same age, for the section now bearing that name was organized into a territory in 1799.

Mrs. Waits was a young lady during the War of 1812, when the world discovered that our young navy could cope with Great Britain's. The Battle of Waterloo, the banishment of Napoleon came to her as news many weeks, perhaps many months after their occurrence,—for there were no ocean-flyers, no railroads, no telegraph wires, no Atlantic cables.

Mrs. Waits has seen a new-born nation grow great, and we expect she could tell our readers many a good Fourth of July story if she were so minded.

"The Children's Paradise"

Out in the [illegible]
Out in the fragrance rare,
Out in the waving grasses,
Out in the blossoms fair;
Out from the home of sorrow,
Out from its blight and care;
Out from the crowded city,
Out in the open air.

Out where the birds are singing
Up on the branches high,
Out 'neath the trees they're singing
Up to the clear blue sky.
Down in the winding valley,
Close to the brooklet's side;
Down where the fishes are swimming,
[illegible]

Health in the buoyant breezes,
Health in the blossoms fair,
Health in the pine and fir-trees,
Health in the open air;
These are all nature's tonics,
Helps that she keeps in store,
Joys that she gladly gives them,
All that they ask for and more.

E. Corinth, Me. MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

For Your Skin's Sake

always have Wool Soap in your soap-tray. It's the skin's chaperon—it takes care of your skin, because it is positively pure, just clean, white, unadulterated soap—safe soap for the whole family, for baby and all the folks.

Swift and Company, Makers, Chicago

O'NEILL'S, Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, New York.

THE MOST POPULAR OF THE BIG STORES OF NEW YORK.

A Noteworthy Offering to Our Out-of-Town Patrons.

Three Great Bargains in

Summer Silks

Reserved for the Women readers of The Christian Herald . . . . .

Japanese Silks.

Twenty-seven inches wide in over fifty [illegible]

Regular Value 69 cts.

Special 49c. yard.

Printed Jap Silks.

[illegible]

Regular Value $1.10.

Special 85c. yard.

Taffeta Silks.

A special assortment of Taffeta Silks comprising all the choice colors. Nineteen inches wide.

Regular Value 85 cts.

Special 69c. yard.

Samples of these, and any other Silks that you may desire, upon application.

Young Girls'

Galatea Sailor Suits.

An opportunity to buy one of these cool summer dresses for the little girl at an unusually cheap price. . .

Galatea Suits like the above cut, in neat checks and stripes, full skirt made on waist with front of material, and finished with a braided anchor. The blouse is made in solid color, with deep sailor collar of striped material, and finished with solid color straps.

Sizes 4 to 14 Years. Special $2.75

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, N. Y.

Trial Package Free!

If any reader suffering from rheumatism will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others among them cases of over 40 years standing. This is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 219 Summerfield Church Building Milwaukee, Wis.

$300 to $10.00 a day can be easily made working for me. People preferred who can furnish their own team. Applicants must furnish satisfactory reference as to character and standing. B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

There are none so deaf as those who wont buy WILSON'S COMMON EAR DRUMS

Information and book of letters from many users, free WILSON EAR DRUM CO., Louisville, Ky.

DO YOU WANT More than Savings Bank Interest? To Sell Land or Mortgages? [illegible] write FIDELITY INVESTMENT CO., TACOMA, WASH.

Beyond Comparison the value of Electric Steel Wheels and Wagons. All about them in free catalogue. Electric Wheel Co., Quincy, Ill.

MERIT WINS

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER

"I can't say I ever thought at the start a year ago that I would be [illegible] Pozzoni's Medicated Complexion Powder, but I will say that I have used it with satisfaction for the [illegible] Yours truly, Della Clark

Grandmother Morris : : : : : : and the Fourth

THE Fourth of July was ushered in as usual, in Manhattan, one summer a score of years ago, by the ringing of bells, the firing of cannon, the sputtering of crackers, and the popping of innumerable torpedoes, while everywhere there was the shimmer of our brave red, white and blue, bunting streaming from steeple and roof, arching the streets where the soldiers were to walk in procession, and meeting the eyes even on the breasts of men, women and children, who wore miniature flags as badges. A general air of bustle and stir, of holiday festivity and cheer pervaded the town, excursion parties laden with picnic baskets made an early start, and from the look of things, New York was ready to keep a good old-fashioned Independence Day. A few fine ladies and gentlemen shrugged their shoulders at the noise which jarred upon their nerves, but people for the most part still rejoiced in their pride over our free country, our great, glorious nation, and were in favor of jubilant demonstrations when the birthday of our liberty came round again.

Grandmother Morris was an invalid twenty years ago. Age had whitened her hair and weakened her limbs. She is young and well and clothed upon with beauty to-day, for since the Fourth of which I am speaking, that gentle angel men call Death, slipped over the threshold softly in the night, and carried her away to the Father's house.

But she had an undaunted spirit, and a fire that pain and illness could not quench looked out of and sparkled in her bright eyes, until they were closed upon earth forever.

I can see her now, in her low chair, with a fleecy white cap on her head, its broad satin strings tied in a bow under her chin, a white kerchief crossed over her neck and bosom, and her rich black silk falling in straight but ample folds to her feet. Her dress was her own, and did not vary with changing fashions. It was always either black or gray, made with a round waist, and the skirt gathered or plaited into this, the sleeves slightly full at the arm hole and finished with a cuff at the wrist, always a picture of dainty neatness and most exquisite simplicity.

A grandson who had spent some years in study at Oxford, was visiting in the house when our Fourth came with its rocking of guns and beating of drums, and wild flurry of children's delight.

"Aw!" said he, with an imported British drawl, "Aw! I sa-ay, isn't it time you had outgrown this silly sentiment over the Fourth of July? I should have taken sides with King George, and been a regular Tory, if I had lived in revolutionary days. This country is so new and self-conscious, one feels ashamed of it, don't you know, when one lives on the other side."

"Better go back and stay there, John Thomas," snapped Grandmother Morris in wrath, "I have no patience with a simpleton who is ashamed of his native land. I never expected to hear such foolish talk from a grandson of mine."

"La! Mother," said Aunt Jennie, "don't mind Jack. He's only a boy. He'll know better when he's older."

I thought of this little scene a few days ago, when I read of a brave action performed by Colonel John Morris in the Philippines. He is over in Manila now with his regiment and is patriotic enough to please even his grandmother; rest her dear soul in peace.

In grandmother's day, we always had cherry-pie for dessert, after spring lamb and green peas for dinner on the Fourth. In the evening, we used to sit on the roof and see the fireworks, and when we came down we finished up the long and happy day with ice cream, a delicacy more prized in those days than now, when it is on everybody's table the summer through.

Grandmother stanchly upheld the old order, and till the very last, refused to acknowledge that the celebration of the Fourth could give her a headache. "I like it," she averred stoutly; "the sky-rockets and pin-wheels and other fizzing, fiery things at night, and the exploding things all day long. When you consider what it means," she would say, "you are not much of a patriot, if you won't spend a little money and a little powder on keeping it up."

"BETTER GO BACK AND STAY THERE," SNAPPED GRANDMOTHER MORRIS IN WRATH

What does it mean, dear Veranda Circle, this summer anniversary and holiday of ours, gathering to itself the association of our country's history, and, to Americans in absence, speaking with a voice of tender appeal surpassing any other they hear? Does it not mean that we, having come into an inheritance of intellectual and religious liberty, are bound to preserve the old landmarks? Does it not mean that we are to guard, as the fathers guarded, the privileges for which they so gallantly fought? Are we not to hold very precious our American Sabbath, not allowing it to be profaned and degraded into a day of mere secular amusement and pleasuring? Are we not to educate the children who come to us, of whatever nation or kindred, not overlooking the fact that education without religion is a curse and not a blessing? Are we not to stand for the Bible in our schools, and the flag on them and over them, so that our next generation shall be God-loving and God-fearing and therefore invincible?

Firm may she ever stand,
God bless our native land, for whatsoever things are pure and lovely and of good report.

Whether or not she will do so, depends largely on the stuff of which the mothers of men are composed. Heroic womanhood means stalwart manhood. When women are vain and trifling, or engrossed with domestic affairs, so that they cease to think of their children's highest welfare, the country will feel its loss. Napoleon's aphorism, "France needs mothers," was a pithy condensation for all time. Mothers make sons. In reading the recently published letters of Carlyle to his youngest sister, I have been impressed with the force of this great man's mother. She was the fit mother of such a son. Washington's mother was no ordinary woman; she was strong and sincere and could command respect. As a rule, great and good men have had mothers who were fine and noble.

Let us think much of these subjects: patriotism, honor, honesty and faith, in the crucial period which is trying our country. We women should love her as never before; pray for her, bring up our sons for her, that at her call, East or West, they may rise up in her defense and carry her ideals to the ends of the earth.

Margaret E. Sangster

"Every well man hath his ill day." Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood. It cures you when "a bit off" or when seriously afflicted. You should take Hood's.

Others Say
Imperial Wheels
Among the many, Mr. [illegible] St., Detroit, says: "I rode my Imperial 15,000 miles in three years and paid not one cent for repairs." It is the best for those who like easy, safe ride. Write for catalogue and inducements to riders.
Ames & Frost Company, Chicago.

What is Your Work?
If you are dissatisfied with your situation, your salary, your chances of complete success, write to The International Correspondence Schools, Scranton, Pa., and learn how others so situated are getting
An Education by Mail
Students in the courses of Mechanical or Electrical Engineering, Architecture, or any of the Civil Engineering Courses are soon qualified for salaried drafting room positions. Write for pamphlets.
The International Correspondence Schools, Box 761 Scranton, Pa.

RHEUMATIC GOUT.....
A physician in Malden, Mass., writes:
"I have been a sufferer from rheumatic gout for many years; have taken preparations of all kinds, but TARTARLITHINE commended itself to my judgment and I am more than satisfied with the results. I am happy to introduce it to others."
Regular package $1.00,
Of all druggists or post-free by mail
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.
McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.
SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

Pearline
Leaves no dirt behind

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED
The Improved Elastic Truss is the only Truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and it retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Comfortable Belts made to reduce corpulency. The use of these belts reduces your size and leaves no room for surplus fat to accumulate. They can be used after any operations. Our goods are not sold by agents or druggists. Send for free pamphlets to the Improved Elastic Truss Co., 768 Broadway, N. Y. (Established 17 years.)

WANTED.—A case of bad health that R·I·P·A·N·S will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word R·I·P·A·N·S on the package and accept no substitute. R·I·P·A·N·S 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents, may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 1 cents. forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 50 Spruce St., New York.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Fails to Restore Gray Hair to its Youthful Color. Cures scalp diseases & hair falling. 50c, and $1.00 at Druggists

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES: no experience needed; position permanent: self seller PEASE MFG. CO., P.O. Box A, Cincinnati, O

RUPTURE
is easily curable by the use of EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS. Causes no inconvenience yields to every motion, can be worn day and night. The spiral spring and graduated pressure does it. Hernia always retained. Brings comfort and cure. Used by U. S. Surgeon General. If unsatisfactory return truss in good condition and money will be refunded. Circulars free. stamp. Ask your druggist or send direct to EGAN IMPERIAL TRUSS CO., 104 N. Fourth St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

It Is a Certainty That Catarrh can be cured. You will believe it after using a sample of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Mailed free. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Blosser Building, Atlanta, Ga.

WORK FOR [illegible] easily made selling our goods. Write [illegible] plats to J. F. Welch, [illegible] E. 42d Avenue, New York.

25,000 SCHOOLBOYS [illegible]

Do You Advocate Temperance

Then you should advocate everything that advances the growth of temperance. HIRES Rootbeer is strictly a temperance drink. It is helpful to the cause of temperance because it takes the place of stimulating beverages.

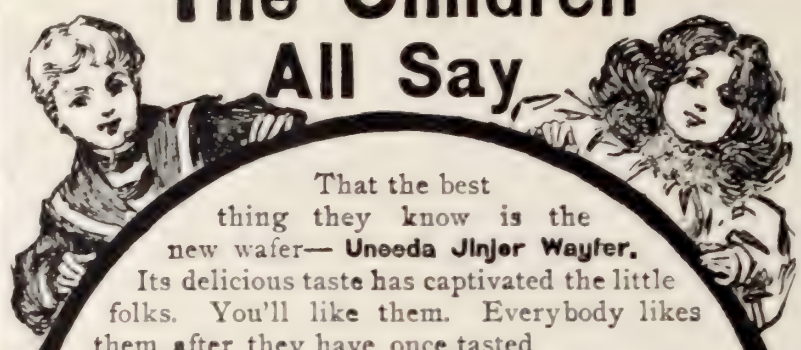
HIRES Rootbeer

is not a stimulant. It is a pure, delicious health giving drink for home making and home drinking, as harmless as pure spring water. A package makes 5 gallons.

HIRES Rootbeer Carbonator ready for charging and Concentrated (for bottling) sold by druggists. Don't accept substitutes. A package makes 5 gallons. Sent by mail for 25 cents. A beautiful picture book of photos free.

THE CHARLES E. HIRES CO., Philadelphia.

The Children All Say



That the best thing they know is the new wafer— Uneeda Jinjer Wayfer. Its delicious taste has captivated the little folks. You'll like them. Everybody likes them after they have once tasted

Uneeda Jinjer Wayfer

You've never tasted anything like it. A new flavor, a new crispness, a new delicacy. Baked by the best bakers in the leading bakeries. Get a box and try them. Packed in a new air tight and moisture proof box which keeps in the goodness—keeps them fresh and crisp until you want them.

Have you tried Uneeda Biscuit?

Made only by NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY. Sole owners of the registered trade mark, Uneeda.

A Wonderful Medicine.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

For Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick Headache, Giddiness, Fulness and Swelling after meals, Dizziness and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, etc. These ailments all arise from a disordered or abused condition of the stomach and liver.

Beecham's Pills will quickly restore Females to complete health. They promptly remove any obstruction or irregularity of the system. For a Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, Sick Headache, Disordered Liver, etc.,

they act like magic—a few doses will work wonders upon the Vital Organs; Strengthening the Muscular System, restoring the long-lost Complexion, bringing back the keen edge of Appetite, and arousing with the Rosebud of Health the whole physical energy of the human frame. For throwing off fevers they are specially renowned. These are "facts" admitted by thousands, in all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that Beecham's Pills have the Largest Sale of any Patent Medicine in the World. This has been achieved Without the publication of testimonials.

Beecham's Pills have for many years been the popular family medicine wherever the English language is spoken, and they now stand without a rival.

10 cents and 25 cents, at all drug stores

8000 BICYCLES

Overstock, Manufacturer closed out. '98 MODELS $9 to $16. Shopworn and second hand wheels, good as new, $3 to $10. NEW '99 MODELS $11 to $30. Great factory clearing sale. We ship to anyone on approval and trial without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE by helping us advertise our superior line of sundries. We give one rider agent in each town FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.

E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO., CHICAGO, ILLS.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy marble or granite till you investigate WHITE BRONZE

Monuments, statuary, vases, settees, posts, iron and wire fencing, etc. Write for designs and information. Costs no more than others.

NO MOSS GROWING CLEANING. NO CRUMBLING CRACKING.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

SELF-SEALING PIE TIN

Household Specialties. AGENTS WANTED. Write for particulars and circulars. SAMPLE FREE. All goods guaranteed to give satisfaction. Address Dept. T.

HOUSEHOLD NOVELTY WORKS, 25 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

The Monday Household Package 25c

CONTAINING
1 Pound Golden Seal Baking Powder .40
1 Package Bonbon Blanc .10
.50
Price, 25 Cents.
Monday Manufacturing Co.
25c

Bicycles, Watches, Clocks, Morris Chairs, Desks, Rifles, and your choice of 50 other valuable premiums . . . Free

Your name, address and a trial order, with 25 cents, will bring you the Monday Household Package, and you can get your neighbors at 25 cents each.

MONDAY MFG. CO., Box 29, Rochester, N.Y.

No Money in Advance!

$15.50

HIGH GRADE BICYCLES Shipped anywhere C. O. D. with privilege to examine. Latest styles for Men, Women, Boys and Girls, well made and durable.

$60 "Oakwood" $24.50
$50 "Arlington" $22.00

No better wheels made. Others at $10, $12.50, $15.50, $17.50 & $19.50; all splendid value. Buy direct from manufacturers, thus saving dealers' large profits. Write today for special offer. Illustrated Catalogue Free. CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 W. Van Buren St., B-18, Chicago, Ills.

The Latest Improved McCREERY FOLDING VAPOR BATH CABINET. Has a Door and is the latest improvements. A home treatment that will cure la grippe, rheumatism and blood, skin & kidney troubles, nervousness, sleeplessness, Fever & Fever, steamer all in one. Folds readily in small space. Free descriptive book and testimonials. Special introductory rates to agents. McCLEEN & CO. & McCREERY CO., St. Louis, Mo.

$14.50 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL

We pay the freight.

Buy direct from factory. Save agents large profits. Machines shipped in advance. WARRANTED 10 YEARS.

$45 Arlington Machine for ... $14.50
$35 Arlington Machine for ... $12.50
Other Machines $8.00, $9.25 and $11.50

A gold mounted free with each machine. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write today for special freight offer.

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 W. Van Buren St., B-18 Chicago, Ill.

$60 Sewing Machines for $18.

We pay the freight.

We sell every machine Sewing Machine made. We shipping on approval, pay no freight, allow 20 days free trial, guarantee 20 years, and sell for less money than others. All machines brand new guaranteed latest improved, with all attachments and warranted for 10 years. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Our illustrated catalogue gives full particulars and will be mailed free. Address: J. N. HOOK & CO., A 1251 Central Ave. CINCINNATI, O.

COMMON SENSE KETTLES.

Self-basting, prevents vessels with the unperforated lipped, necessary cover cannot slip off. Boils never get lost. Handle cooled. Evaporative tendency causes fat to readily separate and rise to top. Send 4c. for sample and booklet. The deposit is deducted on first use, making the sample free. Write at once.

COMMON SENSE H. CO., 60 Wabash Av., Chicago

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with self-adjusting Ball in center adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

C. H. EGGLESTON & CO., 1201 MASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO

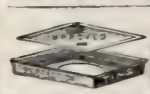
LARKIN SOAPS

AND PREMIUMS.—FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.



AGENTS WANTED!

We furnish them outfit free. Sell like P. N. Peart, Dover, Mo., sold 50 in 7 days. Write for Catalog, New goods, rapid sellers.

Richardson Mfg. Co., 6th St., Bath, N.Y.

BELL STARCH

The best starch you can use in your laundry is Bell Starch.

The best starch you ever bought before cost five cents for six ounces.

Bell Starch is better than that starch, and you get eight full ounces for five cents, and in the ten-cent package there are sixteen ounces.

Bell Starch is so easily prepared that it needs no boiling. Simply pour in boiling water and it is made. It is the only starch that will not stick to the iron.

We also make Wyandotte Washing Soda and Wyandotte Baking Soda, each of which costs five cents.

For the next thirty days we will send coupons good for a full-size package of each of these to the woman who mentions the name of her grocer.

THE J. B. FORD CO.,
DEPARTMENT F. - - WYANDOTTE, MICH.

CHARLES AUSTIN BATES N Y

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES · BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

VOLUME 22—NUMBER 28

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, JULY 12, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, ORIGINATOR OF THE LATEST MOVEMENT FOR PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY

Four Scenes from his World-Famous Book, In His Steps, surround the Photograph (See article on Page 552)

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

WANTED—For Mission work in one of our recently acquired possessions, a consecrated man or married couple; must be thoroughly converted, have an abundance of sanctified common sense, be willing to make sacrifices for the Cause of Christ, and possess a fair knowledge of Spanish. Address, with full particulars and references, Hispano, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

J. A., Oswego, S. C. Where did the bones of 250,000 human beings in the bone yard at Havana, Cuba, come from?

They are the bones of persons whose relatives failed to pay the "grave dues" exacted by the Romish Church. Under the system in vogue before American occupation, the graves in consecrated ground were rented, and the church drew a great part of its revenues from those dues which had to be paid yearly by the relatives of the dead. A failure to pay resulted in the bones being disinterred and cast into the public pit or bone-heap.

P. G. S., Shores, Va. What was the exact amount Judas re-

"Thirty pieces of silver." (Matt. 26: 15). If shekels were meant, the amount was equal to the fine payable, according to the Jewish law, for a man or maid-servant accidentally killed (i. e., blood-money). But in the New Testament, two words are rendered by the phrase "piece of silver"—the first drachm, a Greek silver coin, the equivalent in Christ's time of the Roman denarius. The second, the common silver piece known as the denarius. It is more probable, however, that shekels, or tetradrachms, were understood. These were current at the time, a pure silver tetradrachm being known as a stater. The value of the "price of betrayal" as estimated in our own coin, was $16.96.

Inquirer, Freeland, Mich., Please explain the meaning of I. Cor. [illegible] MAIL-BAG.

Paul here indicates the weakness of the instrumentality which God often employs to effect conversion. The whole story of Christian effort is a series of triumphs by the lowly and humble over the lofty and learned. Human wisdom (or the wisdom of the world) being acquired without the Spirit, the lowly and even the ignorant are often chosen to confound the worldly-wise and bring men to salvation. "Things which are not" simply means "which are regarded as naught" or as nothing—that is, low-born and insignificant. These the Lord uses to "bring to naught," or to make as of no account, things that are.

MANY READERS.—Rev. Charles M. Sheldon's remarkable book, In His Steps, can be ordered of J. E. Jewett, publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, for 25 cents (paper binding), or 75 cents (cloth binding), including [illegible]

J. M——, Pa. Is it wrong for cousins to marry?

We know of no prohibition. There may be physiological reasons against it, but even that is doubtful. Some physicians think that the children of such marriages are predisposed to mental diseases; but it has not been proved. In cases where consumption or some other disease runs in a family, we can imagine that a man would be wise in seeking a wife who was not related to him. It is all a question of health, not of morals or religion.

Inquirer, Richmond, Va. How many churches are there in Dawson City, Alaska?

There are at least four, and a fifth is soon to be established by the Methodists.

G. F., Rochester, N. Y. Why is the place where the Peace Conference is held called The Hague, and not simply Hague?

The Dutch call this city "den Haag," meaning "the hedge." They also call it "Gravenhage," "the Count's hedge." The place has been for centuries the residence of the Counts of Holland, and just as a house would be called "the house" instead of "house" the Hague takes the article before it.

I. C., Wagoner, Ind. Ter., writes:

[illegible]

by which the Indian Territory was ceded to the whites?" Its answer would have been nearly right if the land had been ever ceded to the whites, but

[illegible]

years before it can be accomplished, and it is not likely that there will be any surplus to sell and cede

B., New York. It is to be observed that the con-at all. The chief consideration is expediency, and whether a "power" which has no other claim to distinction than the possession of a vast armament is likely to abide the decision of a civilian court. On the main question the conference may be a failure, yet it is evident that the days of great armaments are numbered, as at present, they do no more than preserve an armed peace, and besides, there are growing elements which will overcome the belligerency of nations and put them on their good behavior. International literature, commerce and finance are soon to be on top.

A FIELD OF CARNATIONS, AT PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Our correspondent takes a reasonable view of the Peace Conference. While it is true that it is not conducted on "moral" lines (and such was not expected), it is undeniable that the holding of such a conference is of itself an important step in the moral progress of the world. If it shall result in an understanding among three great powers—Russia, Great Britain and the United States—to act together for the preservation of peace, those three alone could accomplish much. With Italy and Japan cooperating, the peace combination would be well nigh invincible. But it is too early yet to forecast results from The Hague gathering. Let us hope and pray that the result may be beneficial to the whole world.

T. D. S. I have looked in vain in the concordance in the back of my Bible to find the following verse: "For I, the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, fear not: I will help thee."

You will find the passage in Isa. 41: 13.

E. M. McW., Lebanon, Ky. What are the best known paintings of the face of Christ?

The best known are those by Raphael (sixteenth century); Da Vinci (fifteenth century, two portraits); Guido Reni (seventeenth century); Quentin Matsys (sixteenth century); [illegible] the later artists, probably the best known are those by Ary Scheffer, Holman Hunt, Munckacksy and Tissot.

[illegible]

that there is a very extensive movement on [illegible] thizers in this country), looking to the return [illegible] ment in colonies there. Dr. Herzl is the [illegible] the "Zionist Movement." With respect to the proposition to purchase Palestine from the Sultan, we cannot regard it as a practical one. The Sultan, like Pharaoh, has hardened his heart and will not let Palestine go, even if all looked for, in view of the great diversity of interests bringing these governments into continual antagonism. The future of Palestine is a problem which cannot be determined in such [illegible] ss bring about its re-

S. B. Lehman, [illegible] having seen [illegible] ead the Bible

Testament many times. The shortest record of my reading them is less than one hundred days [illegible] be three and one-third chapters more a day than in the case of the reverend gentleman lately spoken of with respect to the reading of his Greek Testament.

We will be glad to hear from other friends who have read the Scriptures through many times, and who can give some account of their system which may be of practical value to others in Bible reading.

One of the oldest Bibles yet heard from is that mentioned in the following note:

John Herr, Herring, Allen Co., O. I have a Bible printed by Andra Gessner & Rudolphen, Wurzbach, Switzerland, in the old German-Swiss [illegible] and leather, and contains Apocrypha and concordance and some valuable tables. My ancestors have owned it 340 years. It cost at first purchase 500 francs in Berne.

Mrs. A. M., Milford, Mich. The cost of an outing at our Childrens' Home is the same now as it always has been ever since the Home opened, some five summers ago. At the beginning of our Fresh-Air Work, we took pains to ascertain accurately, and on the most economical basis, what it would cost to take a tenement child from New York to the Home for ten days, including medical examination in the Bible House, New York (which all undergo), street car-fare both ways, steamboat fare, New York to Nyack and return, cost of food, laundry, medical attendance and all items incident to a ten days' stay. The total for a child is within a fraction of $3.00. We do not believe that any Fresh-Air [illegible] expenditure. The pressure of [illegible] cannot be denied; hence, a lar[illegible] do the actual work on the prem[illegible] of this paper have given larger[illegible] teeming it a privilege to do so.

Reader, Lansingburgh, N. Y. Is it [illegible]

Yes, it is true of several. Alberta, Queen of Sicily, from whom a number of the now [illegible] ter of a Hebrew banker, Perleoni, who was [illegible] his sons, a Catholic, was chosen as anti-Pope under the title of Anacletus II. An English journal, of recent date, gives these additional facts: "The grandfather of King Ferdinand of Portugal (pregenitor of the present king), was a Hungarian Hebrew named Kohary; in fact, a grandson of Kohary's [illegible] second grandson (Duke Philip [illegible]

Inquirer, Alameda, Calif. Is it injurious to have either [illegible] living room or sleeping [illegible]

It is generally so con[illegible] wholesome for human beings, especially at night.

L. E. A., North Benton, O. 1. What [illegible]

1. The Mammoth Cave, Ken[illegible] Brooklyn Bridge; Niagara Falls; Natural Bridge, Virginia; Yosemite Valley, the telephone and the electric telegraph. 2. Seven is the representative symbolical and cyclical number, and is more frequently used in both sacred and secular literature than any other number. It is believed by the ablest students to have reference to the work of Creation, which was accomplished in seven days. Cicero called seven "the knot and cement of all things," as being that by which the natural and spiritual world are comprehended in one idea.

Inquirer, Plainfield, N. J. 1. Are [illegible] gold? 2. What are they?

1. Seventeen. 2. Iridium, gallium, rhodium, osmium, ruthenium, palladium, barium, didymium, cerium, yttrium, strontium, calcium, glucinium, lithium, zirconium, rubidium, and vanadium.

S. Witter, N. Y. We see nothing to condemn in your action.

Asa C. G. W., Rescue, Neb. They were printed some time ago.

J. H. C., Flemingsburg, Ky. No information on the subject is available.

A. L. F., Meherrin, Va. Write to Cook & Son, Tourist Agents, New York.

Anna S., Schoharie, N. Y. To create is to originate: to make is to manufacture.

Subscriber, Morrisonville, N. Y. Write to the Secretary of War, Washington, D. C., for full information.

S. A. S., Waterloo, Ia. The evil is one to whose real character our people are awakening. The real remedy lies with the State Legislatures.

S. [illegible] books in a poor Sunday School lately established in that place.

George P., Wapello, Ia. 1. We have no information. 2. The Petrel's engines are 1,095 horse power. 3. A ship "out of commission" is simply laid up for the time being.

G. H. G., Springfield, Mo. We know nothing more on the subject than what is revealed, and, as you know, the Scripture gives no word. On this, as [illegible] matters, we must trust [illegible] and wait for us.

R. A. McK., Olathe, Kan. 1. By both, because they are inseparable. One cannot have Christ in the heart without beginning to live Christ (John 15: 5, 6). 2. No, it is a strained interpretation. It simply means the separation of the good and the bad.

A. S., L., Rahway, N. J. 1. "Luther's Cradle Hymn" is almost identical with the verses quoted, with the exception of the last two lines. 2. The quotation merely means that the one is arrayed against the other, i. e., the natural body against the spiritual body.

Wild Tribes who Know Not Christ

Missionary Witte Writes of Carrying the Gospel to the Indians of Brazil and the Amazon Valley

THE Indians of South America are divided into three great branches, so strikingly diverse in their characteristics as to suggest the belief that they must have sprung from a separate and distinct stock of invaders or first settlers. These branches are respectively known as the Andean, the Pampean and the Amazonian Indians. The first race, so termed from the Andes mountains, inhabit the west coast and the Cordillera region. The principal representatives of this race are the remnants of the Chibcha in Columbia and Ecuador and the Quichua and Aimara nations in Peru and northern Bolivia. As is well known, some of these people had reached a high state of civilization before the Spanish conquest. Evidences of this are remaining to our day, in the form of colossal monuments and magnificent public works, which prove the existence of a powerful and wise government, artistic ability of no mean order and an enterprising, industrious people. The present helpless, pitiful and degraded condition of the remnants of the race brings the contrast between then and now all the more painfully into prominence and also furnishes the strongest proof imaginable of the pernicious influence which Roman Catholic rule has exercised over a well-disposed but sadly abused people.

The second race, far less numerous than the Andean, are the inhabitants of the Pampas, or great plains of Argentina and the Gran Chaco. These include some very fine and warlike nations, like the Arancanians, who, in their inaccessible mountain fastnesses, have successfully resisted every attempted encroachment of the Chilian and Spanish governments and have preserved their independence to this day. In this race are also included the degraded Patagonians and the still lower Fuegans, a people of whom Charles Darwin declared that they occupied the lowest possible position in the scale of humanity and that it would be useless to attempt any civilizing movement among them.

The heroic mission, first instituted by Captain Allen Gardiner among these people, and since carried on by the S.A.M.S. of England, has successfully demonstrated that what other civilizing agencies fail to accomplish, the Gospel of Christ does bring about and that it into intelligent and useful members of the human family. The Fuegan converts have on many occasions extended Christian hospitality to shipwrecked crews on the very shores where less than one hundred years ago such would invariably have been slaughtered and eaten.

Can transform even a brutish race

The third and most numerous race are often termed the Tupi or Guarany, though "Amazonian Indians" would be more correct, since the vast basin of the Amazon and its system of tributaries contains scores of tribes, who are neither Tupi nor Guarany in their racial descent. The best authorities claim not less than 230 different tribes for Brazil alone, their number being variously estimated from 1,750,000 to 2,250,000. No Protestant missionary work has ever been done among these Brazilian Indians, with the single exception of a faint beginning made thirty years ago on the Punis river by the S. A. M. S. This society, however, was forced to abandon the work because of its inability to obtain suitable workers for that remote and extremely unhealthy field. Since then not a single one of the hundreds of existing missionary societies have felt called upon to interest themselves in these Indians. Where India and China, Africa and the islands of the sea have called forth the sympathies and self-sacrificing labors of our missionary sons and daughters, no one seems to have thought of these children of the forest and they might indeed reproach us with the Psalmist's complaint:

No one hath cared for my soul.

In the entire Amazon valley, comprising over 22,000 miles of navigable waterways, open to steam navigation, there are just three small independent missions, located in cities, where Indians are rarely seen. There is not a single pure-blood Indian family connected with either mission and no attempt is making or has been made to carry the Gospel to these Brazilian Indians, excepting our beginning on the Tocantius. But where the messengers of the Gospel have failed to go the rum-seller and rubber-trader have freely gone and with results so disastrous to the poor natives that if I should attempt to describe the true conditions, most people would consider it an exaggeration. On my return from Brazil, a few months ago, I had as fellow-passenger a rubber-explorer and trader from Manaos, who is now in Germany, having a number of very light-draught barges constructed. With these he proposes to ascend the river Japura in the winter in order to bring from Colombia from 200 to 300 Indians to work on his rubber plantation on the Purus. As I supposed that the Purus region was swarming with Indians, I naturally expressed my surprise that this gentleman should make so long and expensive a journey to obtain laborers. In reply he told me that rum, small-pox and other diseases had so effectually destroyed the Indians in the rubber country that but few were left and they were unfit for work. In view of such facts can we wonder that some thoughtful Indian chiefs look with hate upon the white man and regard his religion with distrust?

I experienced a striking illustration of this in my journey up the Tocantius river last year. I spent four days at two villages of a tribe called the Caraoh Indians. I asked the captain of one village whether he would like to have a party of missionaries come to settle among them. He said emphatically, "No!" and added that he considered his people superior to the Christaos (meaning the Brazilians, whom they called Christians).

I found the Indians at this village more moral, more orderly and more industrious than the half-breeds (there are very few pure whites in those regions) whom we encountered at any interior Brazilian station during my whole experience.

I have frequently been asked: "Is the Catholic Church doing nothing toward Christianizing the Indians?" To this I want to make a straightforward reply, without ambiguity and weighing well the full import of the words which I use. With one honorable exception, all the priests with whom I came in contact during my journey, were immoral, drunken and ignorant; every mission which they had started had utterly failed to accomplish the Christianizing of the Indians, and the tribes who have come under priestly care are decidedly inferior in morals and more lacking in industry and order than are the tribes who refuse to have any intercourse whatever with the whites. The Cherentes and Apinages, two of the tribes which I visited, have been for years under the care of Catholic friars. This is the way I found them: Both men and women walk about unclothed. They have lost all spirit of self-dependence, of tribal-government, of order and morals. They are improvident, beggarly and unclean, and have suffered the same numerical decimation by vice and resulting sickness as is the case with the Indians in the great rubber belt. The Cherentes, who twenty-five years ago numbered not less that 4,000 warriors, could not to-day muster 400, and if all were gathered together, they would furnish a pitiful spectacle in testimony of the inefficiency of Catholic missionary enterprise. The work is altogether left to Italian monks, who never devote themselves to spiritual effort among the natives. They invariably start settlements to which they seek to attract Brazilian traders. The Indians become to them simply a source of revenue and are commonly reduced to a state of semi-slavery. Indian products are traded for the vilest sort of rum and thus they are not only cheated in trade but are taught the drink curse, which destroys them as effectually as did the rifle and the arquebus in the days of the Peruvian conquest.

If we want to do successful missionary work among the Brazilian Indians, we shall have to go so far inland as to be effectually out of the reach of the trader and rum-seller, and we shall do well if we obtain small reservations for the work from the government, from which all undesirable settlers may be excluded. The government is quite willing to grant such; indeed, I have in my possession a government contract in which the state of Para not only pledges itself to grant land but also offers buildings and pecuniary aid for a Manual Training School under Protestant missionary control. This generous offer my Committee felt constrained to decline, believing that State aid and a mission depending on God for supplies were contradictory in their nature. However, whether State aided, or supported by the free-will offerings of God's people, this seems to be the only solution of the problem—to go far inland and keep away from trading posts. With this aim in view I am planning a trip to the Araguaga river, the western affluent of the great Tocantius, on which latter river my last year's colaborer, Dr. Graham, is still holding the fort. The Araguaga has nearly a thousand miles of navigable waters and along its banks are found the great tribes of the Cayapos, the Carajas, and the Chavantes. They ought to be reached with the Gospel before the Catholic priests get at them, for it is a well-known fact that just as soon as it becomes known that a Protestant mission is planned, the priests at once bestir themselves to get on the ground first and to sow the seeds of error and superstition, which is very difficult to afterward eradicate. The work of evangelizing these Indians is not an easy one. Unhealthy climate, extreme heat everywhere, and the difficulty of sending necessary supplies to stations far removed from centres of trade all combine to make the work both difficult and costly. But the heroic spirit is not extinct among our missionary volunteers and if only united prayer were made by the Church (Acts 12: 5) I cannot but think that God would enable us to find both the men and means for carrying on this glorious work in the "waste places" of this neglected continent.

GEO. R. WITTE.

A NATIVE HUT IN PARA

THE PRESBYTERIAN MISSION HOUSE IN CAXIAS

MISSIONARIES STARTING ON A JOURNEY

Readers of this journal who may be interested in the excellent evangelical work described by Mr. Witte, and who desire to aid the same, may communicate with Rev. D. M. Stearns, 167 Chelten Ave., Germantown, Pa., who will answer all inquiries.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

. . . HAVE A HOME . . .

A Sermon by The Rev. T De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Luke 10: 34, 35:

"And brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him: and whatsoever thou spendest more when I come again, I will repay thee."

THIS is the good Samaritan paying the hotel bill of a man who had been robbed and almost killed by bandits. The good Samaritan had found the unfortunate on a lonely, rocky road, where, to this very day, depredations are sometimes committed upon travelers, and had put the injured man into the saddle, while this merciful and well-to-do man had walked till they got to the hotel, and the wounded man was put to bed and cared for. It must have been a very superior hotel in its accommodations, for, though in the country, the landlord was paid at the rate of what in our country would be four or five dollars a day, a penny being then a day's wages, and the two pennies paid in this case about two days' wages. Moreover, it was one of those kind-hearted landlords who are wrapped up in the happiness of their guests, because the good Samaritan leaves the poor wounded fellow to his entire care, promising that when he came that way again he would pay all the bills until the invalid got well.

Hotels and boarding-houses are necessities. In very ancient times they were unknown, because the world had comparatively few inhabitants, and those were not much given to travel, and private hospitality met all the wants of sojourners, as when Abraham rushed out at Mamre to invite the three men to sit down to a dinner of veal; as when the people were positively commanded to be given to hospitality; as in many of the places in the East these ancient customs are practised to-day. But we have now hotels presided over by good landlords, and boarding-houses presided over by excellent host or hostess, in all neighborhoods, villages, and cities, and it is our congratulation that those of our land surpass all other lands. They rightly become the permanent residences of many people, such as those who are without families, such as those whose business keeps them migratory, such as those who ought not, for various reasons of health or peculiarity of circumstances, to take upon themselves the cares of housekeeping.

Many a man falling sick in one of these boarding-houses or hotels has been kindly watched and nursed: and by the memory of her own sufferings and losses the lady at the head of such a house has done all that a mother could do for a sick child, and the slumberless eye of God sees and appreciates her sacrifices in behalf of the stranger. Among the most marvelous cases of patience and Christian fidelity are many of those who keep boarding-houses, enduring without resentment the unreasonable demands of their guests for expensive food and attentions for which they are not willing to pay an equivalent—a lot of cranky men and women who are not worthy to tie the shoe of their queenly caterer. The outrageous way in which boarders sometimes act to their landlords and landladies shows that these critical guests had bad early rearing, and that in the making-up of their natures all that constitutes the gentleman and lady was left out. Some of the most princely men and some of the most elegant women that I know of to-day keep hotels and boarding-houses.

But one of the great evils of this day is found in the fact that a large population of our towns and cities are giving up and have given up their homes and taken apartments, that they may have more freedom from domestic duties and more time for social life, and because they like the whirl of publicity better than the quiet and privacy of a residence they can call their own. The lawful use of these hotels and boarding-houses is for most people while they are in transitu: but as a terminus they are in many cases demoralization, utter and complete. That is the point at which families innumerable have begun to disintegrate. There never has been a time when so many families, healthy and abundantly able to support and direct homes of their own, have struck tent and taken permanent abode in these public establishments. It is an evil wide as Christendom, and by voice and through the newspaper press I utter warning and burning protest, and ask Almighty God to bless the word, whether in the hearing or reading.

In these public caravansaries the demon of gossip is apt to get full sway. All the boarders run daily the gauntlet of general inspection—how they look when they come down in the morning and when they get in at night, and what they do for a living, and who they receive as guests in their rooms, and what they wear, and what they do not wear, and how they eat, and what they eat, and how much they eat, and how little they eat. If a man proposes in such a place to be isolated and reticent and alone, they will begin to guess about him: Who is he? Where did he come from? How long is he going to stay? Has he paid his board? How much does he pay? Perhaps he has committed some crime and does not want to be known: there must be something wrong about him, or he would speak. The whole house goes into the detective business. They must find out about him. They must find out about him right away. If he leave his door unlocked by accident, he will find that his rooms have been inspected, his trunk explored, his letters folded differently from the way they were folded when he put them away. Who is he? is the question asked with intenser interest, until the subject has become a monomania. The simple fact is, that he is nobody in particular, but minds his own business. The best landlords and landladies cannot sometimes hinder their places from becoming a pandemonium of whisperers, and reputations are torn to tatters, and evil suspicions are aroused, and scandals started, and the parliament of the family is blown to atoms by some Guy Fawkes who was not caught in time, as was his English predecessor of gunpowdery reputation. The reason is, that while in private homes families have so much to keep them busy, in these promiscuous and multitudinous residences there are so many who have nothing to do, and that always makes mischief.

Those of us who were brought up in the country know that the old-fashioned hatching of eggs in the hay mow required four or five weeks of brooding, but there are new modes of hatching by machinery, which take less time and do the work by wholesale. So, while the private home may brood into life an occasional falsity, and take a long time to do it, many of the boarding-houses and family hotels afford a swifter and more multitudinous style of moral incubation, and one old gossip will get off the nest after one hour's brooding, clucking a flock of thirty lies after her, each one picking up its little worm of juicy regalement. It is no advantage to hear too much about your neighbors, for your time will be so much occupied in taking care of their faults that you will have no time to look after your own. And while you are pulling the chickweed out of their garden you will get an overgrown with horse-sorrel and mullen stalks.

One of the worst damages that comes from the herding of so many people into boarding-houses and family hotels is inflicted upon children. It is only another way of bringing them up on the commons. While you have your own private house you can, for the most part, control their companionship and their whereabouts: but by twelve years of age in these public resorts, they will have picked up all the bad things that can be furnished by the prurient minds of dozens of people. They will overhear blasphemies, and see quarrels, and get precocious in sin, and what the bartender does not tell them the porter or hostler or bell-boy will.

Besides that, the children will go out into this world without the restraining, anchoring, steadying, and all-controlling memory of a home. From that none of us who have been blessed of such memory have escaped. It grips a man for eighty years, if he lives so long. It pulls him back from doors into which he otherwise would enter. It smites him with contrition in the very midst of his dissipations. As the fish already surrounded by the long wide net swim out to sea, thinking they can go as far as they please, and with gay toss of silvery scale they defy the sportsman on the beach, and after awhile the fishermen begin to draw in the net, hand over hand, and hand over hand, and it is a long while before the captured fins begin to feel the net, and then they dart this way and that, hoping to get out, but find themselves approaching the shore, and are brought up to the very feet of the captors, so the memory of an early home sometimes seems to relax and let men out further and further from God, and further and further from shore—five years, ten years, twenty years, thirty years: but some day they find an irresistible mesh drawing them back, and they are compelled to retreat from their prodigality and wandering; and though they make desperate effort to escape the impression, and try to dive deeper down in sin, after a while are brought clear back and held upon the Rock of Ages.

If it be possible O father and mother! let your sons and daughters go out into the world under the semi-omnipotent memory of a good, pure home. About your two or three rooms in a boarding-house, or a family hotel, you can cast no such glorious sanctity. They will think of these public caravansaries as an early stopping-place, malodorous with old victuals, coffees perpetually steaming, and meats in everlasting stew or broil, the air surcharged with carbonic acid, and corridors along which drunken boarders come staggering at one o'clock in the morning, rapping at the door till the affrighted wife lets them in. Do not be guilty of the sacrilege or blasphemy of calling such a place a home.

A home is four walls enclosing, one family with identity of interest, and a privacy from outside inspection so complete that it is a world in itself, no one entering except by permission—bolted, and barred, and chained against all outside inquisitiveness. The phrase so often used in law books and legal circles is mightily suggestive—every man's house is his castle. As much so as though it had drawbridge, portcullis, redoubt, bastion, and armed turret. Even the officer of the law may not enter to serve a writ, except the door be voluntarily opened unto him: burglary, or the invasion of it, a crime so offensive that the law clashes its iron jaws on any one who attempts it. Unless it be necessary to stay for longer or shorter time in family hotel or boarding-house—and there are thousands of instances in which it is necessary, as I showed you at the beginning—unless in this exceptional case, let neither wife nor husband consent to such permament residence.

The probability is that the wife will have to divide her husband's time with public smoking or reading-room, or with some coquettish spider in search of unwary flies; and, if you do not entirely lose your husband it will be because he is divinely protected from the disasters that have whelmed thousands of husbands, with as good intentions as yours. Neither should the husband, without imperative reason, consent to such a life unless he is sure his wife can withstand the temptation of social dissipation which sweeps a loss of [illegible] with the force of the Atlantic Ocean, when driven by a September equinox. Many wives give up [illegible] so that they may give their entire time to operas, theatres, balls, receptions, and levees, and they are in a perpetual whirl, like a whip-top spinning round and round and round very prettily, until it loses its equipoise, and shoots off into a tangent. But the difference is, in one case it is a top, and in the other a soul.

Besides this there is an assiduous accumulation of little things around the private home, which in the aggregate make a great attraction, while the denizen of one of these public residences is apt to say: "What is the use? I have no place to keep them if I should take them." Mementos, bric-a-brac, curiosities, quaint chair or cosy lounge, upholsteries, pictures, and a thousand things that accrete in a home, are discarded or neglected because there is no homestead in which to arrange them. And yet they are the case in which the pearl of domestic happiness is set. You can never become as attached to the appointments of a boarding-house, or family hotel, as to those things that you can call your own, and are associated with the different members of your household, or with scenes of thrilling import in your domestic history. Blessed is that home in which for a whole life-time they have been gathering, until every figure in the carpet, and every panel of the door, and every casement of the window has a chirography of its own, speaking out something about father or mother, or son or daughter, or friend that was with us awhile. What a sacred place it becomes when one can say: "In that room such a one was born: in that bed such a one died; in that chair I sat on the night I heard such a one had received a great public honor; by that stool my child knelt for her last evening prayer; here I sat to greet my son as he came back from sea voyage; that was father's cane; that was mother's rocking-chair!" What a joyful and pathetic congress of reminiscences!

The public residence of hotel and boarding-house abolishes the grace of hospitality. Your guest does not want to come to such a table. No one wants to run such a gauntlet of acute and merciless hyper-criticism. Unless you have a home of your own you will not be able to exercise the best rewarded of all the graces. For exercise of this grace what blessing came to the Shunammite in the restoration of her son to life because she entertained Elisha, and to the widow of Zarephath in the perpetual oil well of the miraculous cruse because she fed a hungry prophet, and to Rahab in the preservation of her life at the demolition of Jericho because she entertained the spies, and to Laban in the formation of an interesting family relation because of his entertainment of Jacob, and to Lot in his rescue from the destroyed city because of his entertainment of the angels, and to Mary and Martha and Zaccheus in spiritual blessing because they entertained Christ, and to Publius in the island of Melita in the healing of his father because of the entertainment of Paul, drenched from the shipwreck, and of innumerable houses throughout Christendom upon which have come blessings from generation to generation because their doors swung easily open in the enlarging, ennobling, irradiating and divine grace of hospitality. I do not know what your experience has been, but I have had men and women visiting at my house who left a benediction on every room—in the blessing they asked at the table, in the prayer they offered at the family altar, in the good advice they gave the children, in the gospelization that looked out from every lineament of their countenances: and their departure was the sword of bereavement. The Queen of Norway, Sweden and Denmark had a royal cup of ten curves, or lips, each one having on it the name of the distinguished person who had drunk from it. And that cup which we offer to others in Christian hospitality, though it be of the plainest earthenware, is a royal cup, and God can read on all its sides the names of those who have taken from it refreshment. But all this is impossible unless you have a home of your own.

It is the delusion as to what is necessary for a home that hinders so many from establishing one. Thirty rooms are not necessary, nor twenty, nor fifteen, nor ten, nor five, nor three. In the right way plant a table, and couch, and knife, and fork, and a cup, and a chair, and you can raise a young paradise. Just start a home, on however small a scale, and it will grow. When King Cyrus was invited to dine with an humble friend, the king made the one condition of his coming that the only dish be one loaf of bread, and the most imperial satisfactions have sometimes banquetted on the plainest fare. Do not be caught in the delusion of many thousands in postponing a home until they can have an expensive one. That idea is the devil's trap that catches men and women innumerable who will never have any home at all. Capitalists of America! build plain homes for the people. Let this tenement-house system, in which hundreds of thousands of the people of our cities are wallowing in the mire, be broken up by small homes, where people can have their own firesides and their own altar. In this great continent there is room enough for every man and woman to have a home. Morals and civilization and religion demand it. We want done all over this land what George Peabody and Lady Burdett-Coutts did in England, and some of the large manufacturers of this country have done for the villages and cities, in building small houses at low rents, so that the middle classes can have separate homes.

Young married man, as soon as you can, buy such a place even if you have to put on it a mortgage reaching from base to capstone. The much-abused mortgage, which is ruin to a reckless man, to one prudent and provident is the beginning of a competency and a fortune for the reason he will not be satisfied until he has paid it off, and all the household are put on stringent economies until then. Deny yourself all superfluities and all luxuries until you can say, "everything in this house is mine, thank God!—every timber, every brick, every foot of plumbing, every door-sill." Do not have your children born in a boarding-house, and do not yourself be buried from one. Have a place where your children can shout and sing and romp without being overhauled for the racket.

Have a sitting-room with at least one easy-chair, even though you have to take turns at sitting in it, and books out of the public library or of your own purchase for the making of your family intelligent, and checker-boards and guessing matches, with an occasional blind man's buff—which is of all games my favorite. Rouse up your home with all styles of innocent mirth, and gather up in your children's nature a reservoir of exuberance that will pour down refreshing streams when life gets parched, and the dark days come, and the lights go out, and the laughter is smothered into a sob.

First, last, and all the time, have Christ in your home. Julius Cæsar calmed the fears of an affrighted boatman who was rowing him in a stream by saying: "So long as Cæsar is with you in the same boat, no harm can happen." And whatever storm of adversity or bereavement or poverty may strike your home, all is well as long as you have Christ the King on board. Make your home so far reaching in its influence, that down to the last moment of your children's life you may hold them with a heavenly charm. At seventy-six years of age the Demosthenes of the American Senate lay dying at Washington—I mean Henry Clay, of Kentucky. His pastor sat at his bedside, and "the old man eloquent," after a long and exciting public life, trans-Atlantic and cis-Atlantic, was back again in the scenes of his boyhood, and he kept saying in his dream over and over again: "My mother! mother! mother!" May the parental influence we exert be not only potential, but holy, and so the home on earth be the vestibule of our home in heaven, in which place may we all meet—father, mother, son, daughter, brother, sister, grandfather, grandmother, and grandchild, and the entire group of precious ones, of whom we must say in the words of transporting Charles Wesley:

One family we dwell in him,
One church above, beneath;
Though now divided by the stream
The narrow stream of death;
One army of the living God,
To his command we bow;
Part of the host have crossed the flood,
And part are crossing now.

· · · Baptist Young People in Session · · ·

The Great National Convention to be Held This Week at Richmond, Va., of Members of the Union

THE holding in Richmond on July 13-16 of the Ninth International Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America will bring together in the former capital of the Confederacy the largest body of Christians ever assembled in Virginia. It may also bring together the largest number of young Baptists who have attended one of these great meetings, though there is not at hand just yet sufficient information to show whether or not this will be the case. It is well assured, however, that there will be quite a full attendance, and arrangements are being made accordingly. The houses of the Christian people of Richmond will be thrown open to receive the visitors, and, with numerous hotels and a great number of boarding-houses, there will be ample room for all. And every precaution will be taken to see that all houses, to which delegates will be sent, are in good order for entertaining the number assigned wtih comfort and without crowding.

PRES. JOHN H. CHAPMAN

SEC'Y DR. E. E. CHIVERS

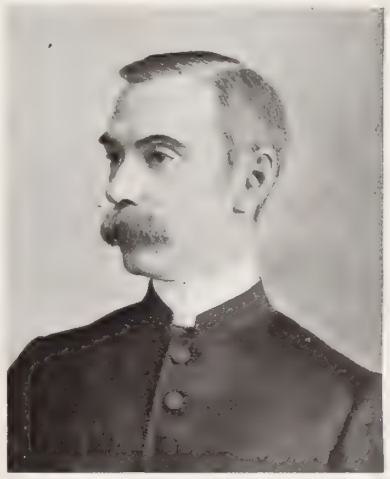
THE AUDITORIUM IN WHICH THE CONVENTION MEETS

The convention will open on Thursday, July 13, and continue through four days, closing with a great and imposing service, on Sunday night, the 16th. There will be three sessions a day. These will be held in the Auditorium building, on the old State Fair Grounds, an immense frame structure, which was erected especially for the re union of the United Confederate Veterans, held there in 1896. The building is a short way west of the city on Broad St., and directly on the line of one of the most modern and complete electric railway lines in the United States. The building has a seating capacity of 2,000, though this will be somewhat reduced by the plan of arrangement, just adopted with a view to improving the acoustics, and placing the choir and speakers in plain view and easy hearing of those in all parts of the hall. Special attention has been paid to the matter of ventilation, and electric exhaust fans are to be put in. Indeed the auditorium promises to be a very comfortable place for July, and every effort will be made to promote the comfort and convenience of those who attend. Northern people who might be deterred from visiting Richmond need have no fear. The records of the United States Weather Bureaus show that in July, Richmond is cooler than Philadelphia or Baltimore.

The arrangements for the convention are well under way, and the final details are now being given shape. They are under the direction of an executive committee of which Hon. J. Taylor Ellyson, one of the most prominent Baptists in Virginia, is chairman.

The music will be furnished by a choir of 700 voices, which are being trained by Prof. H. W. Porter, of Baltimore, who directed the singing at both the Baltimore and Chattanooga conventions. A grand concert will be given the night before the convention, a feature of which will be the singing of a bright cantata written by Prof. Porter. Side trips will be run to Washington, Mount Vernon, Old Point, down James River to Jamestown (the site of the first English settlement in the United States), Norfolk, Virginia Beach, Natural Bridge and Luray Caverns. One of the most beautiful features of the convention will be a choral service on Saturday afternoon, by several hundred children. There will be the usual arrangements, made as complete as possible, for meeting the delegates and having them registered and escorted to their houses. Headquarters are centrally located, and convenient to all the car lines of the city, and in direct line with the Auditorium.

This year's convention will be remarkable for the number of distinguished men who will be heard. The programme is a rich one and will introduce many new men of rare gifts. The key-word will



HON. J. TAYLOR ELLYSON
Chairman Executive Committee

be, Discipleship. The sermon will be preached by Rev. Dr. T. J. Villers, of Indianapolis, Ind., an eloquent and engaging speaker. The following provisional programme shows how interesting and instructive the sessions will be: "Annual Address," John H. Chapman, pesrident. "The Disciple and His Lord," H. C. Mabie, Boston, Mass. "The Disciple and His Fellow-Man," W. W. Landrum, D.D., Atlanta, Ga. "Disciples Indeed," P. S. Henson, D.D., Chicago, Ill. "The Law of Discipleship," A. J. Dickinson, D.D., Selma, Ala. "The Rewards of Discipleship," D. T. Denman, D.D., Milwaukee, Wis. "The Horizon of Discipleship," W. G. Fennell, Meriden, Conn. "The Disciple and His Book," J. H. Randall, Grand Rapids, Mich. "The Disciple and His Devotions," D. M. Ramsey, D.D., Charleston, S. C. "The Disciple at His Task," C. A. Eaton, M.A., Toronto, Ont. "The Disciple and His Books," E. M. Keirstead," Acadia University, N. S. "The Disciple and the Church," W. W. Everts, D.D., St. Paul, Minn. "The Symmetrical Development of the Disciple," Prof. Shepardson, Colgate University, New York. "The Vocation of the Nation," T. J. Morgan, D.D. A. G. Lawson, D.D., Camden, N. J., and J. Q. A. Henry, D.D., New York, will deliver addresses on phases of the great Temperance Reform. G. W. Truett, Dallas, Texas, is expected to speak at the Saturday night session, which will be a gathering of the whole body instead of a series of Divisional Meetings as in former years. Lectures on the "Epistle to the Romans," J. M. Stifler, D. D., Crozer Seminary, Pa. Lectures on "The Bible and the Monuments," Ira M. Price, Ph. D., University of Chicago. Consecration Service Address, C. Woelfkin, D. D., Brooklyn, N. Y. The morning hours of devotion will be under the direction of C. Woelfkin, D.D., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Daniel Shepardson, Ph.D.; James A. Francis, New York; P. K. Dayfoot, M. A., Port Hope, Ont.

The Workers' Councils will be under the direction of Claude Kelly, Sandusky, O.; D. H. Cooper, Peru, Ind.; C. H. Rhoades, New York; Boston W. Smith, Minneapolis, Minn. The Annual Sermon will be preached. The Presentation Addresses will be made by C. B. Allen, Omaha, Neb.; Rev. Ransom Harvey, Germantown, Pa., and others Among the other speakers who will take special parts are Maurice P. Fikes, Trenton, N. J.; F. L. Anderson, D.D., Rochester, N. Y.; G. W. Whitman, D. D., Buffalo, N. Y. With such an array of speakers as this, there can be no lack of good things.

An interesting feature of the Convention will be the presentation of banners to both Senior and Junior Unions for proficiency in the Christian Culture Courses, which are a prominent part of the ordinary work in the Baptist Young People's Union. On Thursday the banner for the missionary course will be presented: on Friday that of the Bible-Readers and Sacred Literature courses and the Banner to the Juniors.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Handwriting on the Wall

S. S. Lesson for July 23. Dan. 5: 17-31
Golden Text, Ps. 75: 7

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

MANY must have been the hearts and consciences awakened when Nebuchadnezzar showed "unto all the peoples, nations and languages that dwell in all the earth," "the signs and wonders that the Most High God had wrought towards" him (Dan. 4: 1, 2). Many an idolater must have thrown away his idols when Nebuchadnezzar's personal experience was proclaimed to them in their own language, and when he himself bore witness: "At the end of the days (of God's judgment upon him), I, Nebuchadnezzar, lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me, and I blessed the Most High, and I praised and honored him that liveth for ever, for his dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation: and all the inhabitants of earth are reputed as nothing; and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay his hand, or say, What doest thou? . . . All his works are truth and his ways judgment: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase" (Daniel 4: 34-37, R. V.).

Commentators and historians disagree as to whether Belshazzar was the son of Nebuchadnezzar, called Evil Merodach (II. Kings 25: 27), or whether he was his grandson. In any case, the history of Nebuchadnezzar, his dreams and their interpretation by Daniel, and, above all, the unprecedented event of the fiery furnace could not have been unknown to him. When Daniel was introduced to him (verse 14), he says: "I have heard of thee." Therefore, we cannot ignore that when Belshazzar made a feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before, i. e., in the presence of the thousand; and in his pride and conceit sought to exalt himself by utilizing the sacred vessels, brought from the temple at Jerusalem, to serve the purpose of idolatrous orgies—he was undoubtedly sinning against light.

A reaction had taken place: the profound impression which must have been made by the repeated and manifest intervention of "the Most High God" had begun to wane. The generation was passing which had heard first of the king's dream and Daniel's recalling and interpretation of it, then the miracle of preservation from the fiery furnace, and later the still greater miracle of the change in Nebuchadnezzar himself, after the humbling judgment upon him which had been foretold and then executed by God himself. Another generation was rising up: the court religion, now that Nebuchadnezzar was dead, returned to the traditional idolatry, and even defiance of the true God, which first had its origin in Babel. The tide was turned, and the current of popular opinion was running in a direction exactly contrary to those days when the faithful Daniel and his little praying band saw God work such wonders in answer to their prayers. But Daniel's God lived still, and his now aged servant, who trusted him, the man greatly beloved (Dan. 8: 11), lived also; and just when the enemy came in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord, by that very Daniel, lifted up a standard against him.

What must it have been to Daniel, God's true witness, to hear of what was going on at court. We are not told it was so, but probably a little company were praying together, or maybe apart, that God would again, in some mighty, supernatural way, assert himself, and vindicate his own cause, that immortal souls might at any rate, have the opportunity to know the only true God, and not be lost, and become a prey to the great enemy of souls. "The Lord's remembrancers" (Isa. 62: 6), must have been at their post, and Daniel was one of them. At the very moment when the conscious, willful blasphemy of the king and his lords was at its height, and while they were drinking wine out of the holy vessels, they insulted him to whom they were dedicated, by praising "the gods of gold and silver, of brass, of iron, of wood and of stone"—the uninvited and inexplicable "fingers of a man's" hand wrote their doom upon the wall of the festive court.

It was one thing to blaspheme an unknown and unseen God, whose wonders he knew only second-hand as recounted by others. But that mysterious hand carried a felt Presence with it, and the guilty conscience of the king told him that God was there. "The king saw the part of the hand that wrote. Then the king's countenance was changed in him and his thoughts troubled him; and the joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against another." Belshazzar knew that he had met with God whom he had defied. It is the most blessed moment in our lives when we first meet with God as he reveals himself to us in Christ: the "God that pardoneth iniquity" (Micah 7: 18): a Shepherd who seeks his lost sheep "until he find it." But to have the holy, mighty God come near, when in the very act of defying and blaspheming him: who can picture anything more unutterably terrible? God, the Holy One; God, the Righteous One; no wonder Belshazzar shook like a withered leaf. In vain he sent for his wise men. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned (I. Cor. 2: 14): only the Spirit of God has the key of what is spiritual, and these men had not the Spirit. Who then could read the writing?

One member of the court was significantly absent from the feast, the queen's heart was not in the heathen orgie: probably she was one of the praying band for her friend Daniel. It is when the worldly ones are in trouble that the children of God are welcomed by them, and when the queen came in she could tell of a man who had the Spirit, and whom Nebuchadnezzar had made the master of those wise men who had just now failed to interpret the writing. "Now let Daniel be called" (the queen knew him by his Hebrew name), "and he will show the interpretation." Thus Daniel was called, and the king,—who had no ideas of real dealings with God, used as he was to the self-assertive heathen priests, who assumed to have supernatural powers, but who always expected large monetary compensation for what they did—offered great reward to Daniel if he should read the writing. Daniel was at the disposal of a higher power than Belshazzar's. "Let thy gifts be to thyself and give thy reward to another," as though to say, these things are not what I seek for.

"IN THE SAME HOUR CAME FINGERS OF A HAND AND WROTE UPON THE WALL"

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

TWO difficulties have arisen in connection with this passage. The one is the identification of Belshazzar and the other the identification of "Darius the Median." Secular history knows no kings of those names. It has, however, been found that Nabonidus, one of the successors of Nebuchadnezzar, had a son named Bel-sar-utsur, who may have been the man referred to as Belshazzar, but he does not appear in the list of kings, as he died before his father. Still, it was not uncommon for an Oriental king to associate his son with him in the government of the empire, and Nabonidus may have done so, especially as he appears to have been a man who preferred to spend his time in building temples, to going to war. There is a prayer on one of the cylinders, recently unearthed, in which Nabonidus prays that: "My son, the offspring of my heart, might not give himself to sin." The difficulty as to Darius is still greater. He could not have been Darius Hystaspis, and besides, history shows that Cyrus became king of Babylon when it was conquered. Both these difficulties, however, may disappear when the explorations of ancient Babylon, now in progress, proceed farther. The story as related in Daniel is full of thrilling interest. We see vividly portrayed the great assemblage of princes and high-born ladies at the tables in the palace. Belshazzar drinking with them, and sending for the sacred vessels of which the temple at Jerusalem had been despoiled, and using them in the drunken revelry. Then the terror of the king, when he saw a hand, writing on the cornice of the banqueting-room. The hurried call for the wise men, whose business it was to interpret portents and omens, appears to have brought no light. Dean Farrar thinks it is probable that they could read the writing, but could not understand the significance of it. The words were Aramaic, which was the common language of trade. They were four words, signifying weight. A mina, a mina, a shekel, and upharsin, which meant a half mina. The consternation [illegible] of Nebuchadnezzar, and had been married by Nabonidus to strengthen his hold on the throne. It is she who suggests the calling of Daniel. Belshazzar summons him, and hears his doom. The mina becomes m'nah, which means [illegible] thou hast been weighed: and upharsin becomes p'risath, divided. Putting all together, Daniel interprets the message as a warning that God had numbered the years of the kingdom, and ended them: had tested the king and found him a light-weight or counterfeit; and had broken his kingdom in pieces. This was the warning, and the fulfilment came close upon its heels, for in that night was Belshazzar slain.

Though thou knewest all this. The king had not learned wisdom by the punishment of his predecessor, whom Daniel speaks of as his father, according to the custom of his people, as they had no word for grandfather. He was not the only king who has similarly failed. James II. of England had seen his father Charles I. brought to the scaffold for trying to defraud the people of their rights. Yet, when he came to the throne, he followed his example, and probably would have ended in the same way, if he had not run away, and remained in exile till he died.

God hath numbered thy kingdom. Sometimes men go on in wickedness, and because they are unreproved, think that God takes no notice and is indifferent to their proceedings. But Daniel intimates that the day of reckoning will come, though it may be delayed. It surprised good people that Napoleon III. should be able to keep possession of the throne of France for twenty years, when he obtained it by treachery and hideous cruelty, and his rule was one of corruption and licentiousness. It seemed as if God did not interfere. But the words were uttered, "God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it," and at Sedan, the empire, rotten to the core, collapsed.

Weighed and found wanting. The expression refers to coins, which are tested by weight. In some of the European mints there are scales so delicate that they show a deficiency of the two hundredth part of a grain. The base metal in a coin does not weigh so much as the genuine and so a counterfeit is detected. A minister tells of a dream he had, in which he saw himself placed on the scales. Against him were placed his advantages of pious bringing up, his education and his opportunities of doing good, and on his side the record of his performances. It was so decidedly against him that he burst into tears, and as he awoke he was moaning, "weighed and found wanting."

Hast thou not glorified. This was a fatal omission. The king ought to have glorified God: that is, have so lived that people would have thought well of God and worshiped him. The same obligation lies on every one and especially on Christians. A young man employed in a kitchen-range manufactory in New York was converted at a revival meeting. His employer, who was not a Christian man, heard of it. He shrugged his shoulders and said he "did not like canting Methodists around" him. But after a time he found that his foreman had promoted this young man for careful and efficient work. By and by the foreman was obliged to leave and he recommended his employer to appoint the young man in his place. He praised him so highly that his advice was taken. The employer asked the new foreman how it was that he had made such progress. "I was converted," he said, "some time ago, and since then I have put my conscience into my work." "Well," said the employer, "I did not think much of religion, but if it has that effect, it must be a better thing than I supposed." If every Christian was a better servant, a better employer and a better citizen after his conversion than he was before the world would be quick to learn the lesson and God would be glorified.

French Nobles on Trial

A SCENE that will be memorable in French history was photographed specially for this journal and is reproduced on this page. It represents the trial of the aristocratic rioters who attacked the President of the French Republic, at Auteuil, on June 4. It will be remembered that President Loubet went to that town as a guest of honor to witness the Grand Steeplechase which, according to the Godless custom of that country, takes place on a Sunday. No sooner did the President appear in the seat of honor prepared for him, than shouts were raised from the crowd of nobles and aristocrats in the select enclosure, derogatory to the President. The uproar increased rapidly and eventually one of the leaders, Baron Christiani forced his way to the seat of the President and struck at him with his cane. Fortunately there was a stout balustrade in his way; for so violent was the blow he aimed at the President's head, that his stout cane was shivered to pieces. The police rushed to M. Loubet's protection and his assailant was severely handled. He was rolled in the dust, struck in the face and his clothes torn to tatters before he was subdued. His friends tried to protect him and continued to shout offensive remarks about the President. The reporters say that the scene was as violent as a Donnybrook Fair, but the police succeeded in arresting the ringleaders and two squadrons of mounted Republican Guards soon reduced the others to decent behavior. On his way back to his official residence, however, M. Loubet was assailed along the route by vituperative epithets; eggs and stones were thrown at him and it required the service of a strong force to get him home in safety. More than one hundred of the rioters were in the custody of the police, some of them the wearers of illustrious titles and all of them belonging to the aristocracy. They were tried in groups according to the gravity of their offences and their prominence in the disgraceful outrage. Seldom have the judges of a French court seen in the prisoners' dock men of such high station, but they had the courage to deal firmly with them. Baron Christiani was sentenced to four years' imprisonment for aiming a blow at the President. Comte de Dion, Comte D'Aubigny and Comte D'Assy, who made themselves conspicuous by their derisive cries and were active in the struggle with the police, were condemned to fourteen days' imprisonment and twenty dollars fine. The other participants received sentences of imprisonment varying from one to three months. It is well that their rank did not save them from punishment. Their conduct is to be deplored chiefly because they ought to set an example to other people. If they had been Christian men they would have known that it is a violation of God's law to act as they did.

It is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people (Acts 23: 5).

Photographed Specially for The Christian Herald

SCENE AT THE TRIAL OF COUNT DE DION AND OTHERS, IN PARIS

Strange Cause for Divorce

A divorce case was recently tried in St. Louis, Mo., in which a novel plea was made by the husband who brought the suit. He claimed that he was entitled to a divorce because his wife had become a believer in witchcraft, and the court granted his application on that ground. The allegation in his petition avers "that the defendant is very superstitious and a believer in witches and witchcraft; that against the wishes of plaintiff she has been in the habit of consulting mediums and witch doctors, and performed ridiculous incantations and ceremonies tending to turn plaintiff into ridicule and contempt among his neighbors and friends, and that she accused the neighbors of bewitching her and threatened to assault them for looking at her with the evil eye." The husband stated in his testimony that his wife on one occasion put what was termed a witch love potion in his coffee. While the potion did not have the desired effect of increasing his love for her, it produced a very nauseating and uncomfortable effect on him physically. Evidently the age of superstition has not altogether passed away. It is singular that a woman, who so ardently desired that her husband should love her, should have resorted in these days to charms and potions, instead of cultivating her own charms of manner and loving service which seldom fail to win love. But the same disposition is found in religion. Men think to win God's favor by the performance of rites and ceremonies, when all that he desires is their love and obedience.

What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? (Micah 6: 8).

Setting Up a Gold Image

The State of Colorado has decided to be represented at the Paris Exposition of 1900, by an exhibit which shall give ocular demonstration of the mineral wealth of the State. It has arranged with a large casting firm to make a casting of solid gold. The design represents a girl in modern costume. The figure, of life size, is to be cast in gold, eighteen karats fine, and the cast, with its base, will be six feet four inches in height. It is estimated that a million dollars' worth of gold will be required. The pedestal is to be of copper and pure silver, standing five feet eight inches in height, three feet square at the top, and six feet four inches at the base. Upon four panels, in bas relief, it is intended to show representative Colorado scenes, all wrought in pure silver. On the base will also be four panels, on which will be representations of scenic attractions of the four railroads of the State. All the metals of which the statue and its base are to be constructed, will be the production of Colorado mines. It is an excellent way of showing the mineral wealth of the State and will doubtless impress every one who sees it. Happily, the time is past when such an image would assuredly have been worshiped. We wish the time was also past when it could be truthfully said that no one covets the metal of which it is composed, for that is really idolatry:

Covetousness which is idolatry (Col. 3: 5)

A Merchant's Mausoleum

A New York merchant who some time ago erected a magnificent monument in the cemetery at Winchester, Va., on the ground in which he requires his executors to bury him when he dies, has now purchased the adjoining lot, on which he will build a beautiful mausoleum. The idea of his body being put in the ground has grown repugnant to him, so he has determined on raising a building for its reception. The new structure is to be twenty-five feet wide, thirty-six feet long and twenty feet high. It will take more than five hundred tons of granite to construct it. Thirty-six columns, each weighing over five tons, will support the roof, which will weigh about sixty tons. The interior will be of colored marbles and onyx, with stained glass windows. There will be a crypt with a secret passage known only to the owner and the builders. The former intends that his body shall lie in this crypt. The cost of this mausoleum will exceed fifty thousand dollars, exclusive of the heavy bronze doors. The monument already erected cost him fifteen thousand dollars. We may hope that in spending so much money and thought on the preparation of a resting place for his body after he has no further use for it, he has not forgotten that his soul will need an abiding place. Money will not help him to secure that, but he can have it on God's own terms.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (II. Cor. 5: 1).

A Fraud Detected

Another claim to the discovery of perpetual motion which has exercised the ingenuity of so many inventors, has been proved fraudulent. A machine was recently sent to the office of the Scientific American, which at the first examination appeared to have come nearer the solution of the ancient problem than any machine previously invented. It consisted of a large fly-wheel attached at its centre to a horizontal bar which was supported by two pillars standing on a block of rough wood. Attached to the circumference of the wheel are levers supporting weights. By an ingenious device the levers open and close by hinges, so that while one-half of them are extended, and the weights are at the farther extremity, the other half are closed, bringing the weight close to the wheel. Thus, though the weights are of equal gravity, their position on the levers gives them unequal power, and might be expected to make the wheel turn. As each transverse arm with its jointed lever and weight rises a little past the horizontal, it slides forward and downward, thus throwing the weight on the opposite end still further from the centre and increasing the turning moment on that side, at the same time decreasing the moment on the upward half of the revolution. But the machine in spite of this ingenious device did not work, though the inventor claimed that it did work, and some of the people who advanced money to him had seen it work. The editor of the journal was convinced that there must be some concealed mechanism, and he determined to test it with the Roentgen rays. No sooner were they applied than the wooden base was seen to be hollow, and in the cavity was a clockwork device with a powerful spring, communicating with the wheel through the upright pillars. It needed to be wound up and then it would operate and any one not in the secret would suppose that the motion was the product solely of the weights and levers. But the discovery of the Roentgen rays has made it more difficult for such men as the inventor to deceive the public. It is surprising that he did not foresee that they might be applied. Still more surprising is it that men should try to deceive God, in spite of his warning:

All things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do (Heb. 4: 13).

Penalty of Passion

A widow, named Heindorff, is being diligently sought through the cities of this country. She is wanted by a family in Germany, who fear that her absense will involve them in heavy loss. It appears that a young man, belonging to a wealthy family in Berlin, came to New York in 1877. He had been in some trouble with his relatives, and came here to avoid further quarrels. He was not accustomed to work, and did not know any trade by which he could earn a livelihood. He obtained some employment, eventually, at a small salary, and married an American woman, whose acquaintance he had made. They had two children, of whom the father was very proud. He worked hard for their support, but there was often times of stress in the household. Two years ago, the young man fell ill, and died. He had never communicated with his relatives in Berlin, but when he was dying he gave his wife their address, and advised her to write them. He was leaving her and the children destitute, and hoped that his relatives would help to support them. But, when his mother received the letter which his wife wrote, after his death, she was angry at her son for marrying beneath his rank, and in her passion she tore the letter to fragments, and threw them away. Since that time a large sum of money has been left to the family, by a man who made an eccentric will. Under its provisions it is necessary for every member of the family to appear to receive his share, and if any one of them is dead, his representatives must appear, otherwise the estate is not to be divided, but held in trust for ninety-nine years, and then devoted to a public use. It is therefore of importance to all that the widow Heindorff and her children may be found: but as her letter has been destroyed, there is no way of notifying her, for no memorandum was made of her address. The mother doubtless, deplores giving way to anger. She is finding out now, as everyone will find out in the end, that God's warning is true:

His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate. (Ps. 7: 16).

THE REVIVAL AT BILLVILLE

ABIJAH SAUNDERS

A LOVELY narrow street there flapped in the midwinter [illegible] flaunting banner, and attached to it dangled a strange object. On the banner was poorly painted the legend which had caused the heart of the visiting evangelist to rejoice: "One Hundred Souls Saved." Below it hung a scarecrow dummy, a thing of rags and sawdust, and tied to it a soiled and battered placard said: "This is the one hundred and onth."

All day long that derisive legend had dangled and flapped under the sullen skies to the grief of the righteous and the delight of the ungodly, yet by some chance no one had disturbed it. No one knew who had put it there, yet any one in Billville would have told you privately — if you had been able to gain his confidence—that Bill Quigley probably knew something about it.

Abijah Saunders came down the street with his usually heavy tread and looked with a disapproving eye at the vanishing figures of Bill Quigley and Jake Burrows, known to be two of the toughest characters in the village. As he looked with a wary eye after the two men, a figure approached him unseen from the other side.

"You folks have got a tough job there," he said, "almost as tough as I am, eh, Abijah!"

Abijah Saunders turned and faced his brother Michael, the town marshal, and as he looked into his eyes the slumbering hate of a feud of thirty years flashed into the faces of both.

"There is more hope for them than for you," he said sternly, "for you have sinned against more light and knowledge than they have."

"Well, I don't know about that," replied the other, in the same slow insulting tone as at first. "I never got any particular light from you on anything, and as for knowledge, I've known all I want to about you for many a year."

As he spoke a pale yellow light flared out of the west into the sullen twilight of the dying winter day, and as its cold, revealing ray, fell upon the countenances of the two men that deadliest human passion—hate—sat like a demon upon each face. Abijah Saunders professed a likeness of the life of Christ, but he never remembered anything but the terrors of the law when he stood face to face with his brother, and Michael had never known to do aught but sneer at religion.

"You," thundered Abijah, "you, and your knowledge of me belong to the devil. Years ago you robbed me almost over our mother's coffin, and ever since then you have dogged me, insulted me and my family, disgraced the family name by your conduct, and not content with that you even refuse to fulfill the duties of your office properly. The conduct of the young hoodlums of this town at the meetings, night after night, is a disgrace to the community, yet you, the town marshal, stand by and see it without a word, and they boast all over the town that you dare not arrest them because you are afraid of Bill Quigley."

"Bill Quigley knows well that I am not afraid of him," replied Michael, coolly, and you know it yourself also. None, but you and a few other old fogies have raised any objections to their conduct, and I certainly don't propose to lock up a lot of young fellows for nothing worse than eating peanuts in church. You pious ones ought to convert them."

On Abijah Saunders' brow a wrinkled vein stood out on his forehead between his temples, gorged with blood, and his eyes looked fiercely from under his bristling eyebrows.

"Jehovah has hardened your heart that he may make an example of you," continued Abijah. "Your feet are on the edge of the bottomless pit, and the smell of fire is on your garments: yet, as your brother, I will not see you perish without warning."

Michael Saunders looked full at his brother with a fixed, concentrated gaze. "It's strange you didn't remember you were my brother thirty years ago, when you stole the North pasture from me," he said, in a slow, even tone.

The last word had scarcely left his lips, when Abijah's right arm went out with terrific force, but swift and powerful as it was, Michael dodged it with a sidewise motion, hardly perceptible, and then, as it was raised again, he lifted his voice with a ring in it which cut the air like [illegible]

"Listen to me, Abijah Saunders, you are a liar and a hypocrite. It is more than a quarter of a century since we quarreled over a petty question of land, before our mother was decently buried, and though what you did then was bad enough, it is your life since which has utterly estranged me. I'll go my way and you go yours. I'll take my chances with you in the end."

"Then, by heaven, I will help you to go your way," cried Abijah, far beyond the limits of self control. "Every decent person in this town is tired of the disturbance in the meeting house, night after night, and I have made up my mind that you, as a sworn officer of the law, shall do your duty. If there is anything unseemly done tonight, and you do not stop it, you shall hear from me then and there in a way you will [illegible]

"I shall be at [illegible] plied Michael, "and you may do what you like, but one thing you know, for you know me, and that is that you cannot compel me to do or not to do anything [illegible]"

Abijah took one step forward and looked at his brother. Almost touching one another they stood in the gray, ghostly winter light, each strong, resolute, defiant, with the hate of thirty years written in each face and such a look in the eyes as the first murderer might have worn.

"I can and will," said Abijah, between set teeth.

"You can not," replied Michael, in a heavy, uninflected tone.

For the space of a few seconds longer the two men remained in the same attitudes, their eyes locked together in a glare that betokened war to the death, then, without another word, Abijah turned and walked with his heavy tread down the street, while Michael wheeled and went in the opposite direction.

Whiter than snow, yes,
whiter than snow.
Now wash me and I shall be whiter than snow.

The words of the hymn floated out on the still night air from the little red church and were wafted far down the street. Inside it was crowded to suffocation. It was now the fourth week of the revival and the religious excitement had reached a tension-breaking point. Husbands were pleading with wives and wives with husbands; adults and even children nightly crowded the altar; backsliders had been reclaimed and the lukewarm were smitten with fervor; it seemed as though an irresistible wave was sweeping over the town which must ultimately bear all on its tide. It was even said that Billville's one infidel, a man of wide popularity, was wavering. The cycle of meetings was almost uninterrupted during the twenty-four hours: an early morning prayer-meeting, a noon prayer-meeting, afternoon experience-meetings from house to house, and the evening services filled up the schedule and every man, woman and child in all Billville attended from one to four of these.

Thus far but few had escaped the general influence, and among these was what was known as "Bill Quigley's gang," a choice assorted collection of congenial spirits common to small, isolated country villages, in reality more boorish and lazy than deliberately vicious, but detrimental

THE QUARREL:—"YOUR FEET ARE ON THE EDGE OF THE BOTTOMLESS PIT!" THUNDERED ABIJAH.

"I intend to compel you to do your duty. The conduct of the young outlaws of this village is disgraceful beyond expression, and I intend that it shall be stopped. To-day, here is this last insult put upon us—" and he pointed upwards at the [illegible] that almost touched his head. "and yet you take no pains to discover the guilty party, and lock him up over night on bread and water for this outrage."

His brother laughed coldly.

"Yes, it is an outrage—or a joke."

BILL QUIGLEY'S GANG

to the ethical standards of life, though Billville had never heard of anything so far-fetched as "ethical standards." None of these had weakened under the preaching of the terrors of the law. Night after night they not only sat unmoved by the most vivid word pictures of the hereafter, but in subtle ways managed to create an undercurrent of levity and irreverence which acted as a foil at times to what might otherwise have been impressive periods in the minister's oratory. Popular sentiment had now settled that Michael Saunders was in some way the stumbling-block, though no one could say just why, for the administration of his office was above reproach, until, instigated by Abijah, public opinion had turned against him.

THE PEACEMAKER

The ancient feud between the brothers was common property of all. Everyone knew of the quarrel, the unseemly funeral, with the brothers sitting in different rooms, the long, bitter, smouldering enmity, while, strangely enough, both brothers were prominent and influential in their way — Abijah as an elder in the PresbyterianChurch for over twenty years, and Michael always filling some political office with credit. The latter was never known to enter a church until the present revival. Then, unmindful of the curious eyes and whispered comments, he had attended with unfailing regularity, sitting well up in the front where he could have a full view of Abijah praying and exhorting, watching him with cold, grey eyes, deep, silent, almost sinister, and although more than one discourse was palpably directed at him, it made no more impression than a summer breeze would on a rock.

To-night there was a heightening of tension that was felt by everyone. The thermometer was close to zero and the two cannon stoves in the rear of the church were heated red hot. The gasolene lamps burned brightly in front of the polished tin reflectors, and up in the corner sat the choir, pretty Mattie Thompson at the organ and her sweetheart leading the singing. Mary Ann Hutchinson, whom it were no injustice to call a professional backslider, sat in the second seat. Mary Ann had successively belonged to the Baptist, the Presbyterian and the Christian, and after having been twice dropped from the probation rolls of the Methodist, had finally been accepted and announced her belief that she had found salvation at last.

In addition to the three ministers who had conducted the services all these weeks there was a visiting clergyman from a near-by town, and the unusual crowd had come expecting to hear a stranger who was preceded by a reputation for eloquence. But the visitor had pleaded fatigue, and the pastor of the Presbyterian Church had preached. He had worked himself up to an uncommon height and was now in an impressive flight.

"I feel," said he, "that there is some soul here to-night which may be lost forever if it does not accept this last offer of salvation. Who among you knows where he may be when to-morrow dawns! Who knows whether, when he lies down to-night he shall wake in this world or the next, in heaven or in hell! You have heard the truth in this house many nights, but you will not always be privileged to hear it. There are those among you who are hardening their hearts and stiffening their necks and treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath. Beware, I say unto you, beware! The judgment of the Lord is at hand; the day of reckoning is near; the harvest is past, the summer is ended and your soul is not saved. Let no one think he may escape. You, oh, young man, proud in your strong manhood; you, oh, young woman, fresh in your beauty, enjoying the lascivious measures of the dance, steeped in worldly folly, sipping the wine cup, there is an awful judgment in store for you. You have time now and then comes eternity. Eternity, eternity! most awful word for one in hell as it is the most glorious for one in heaven. Can you conceive it? Without end! Millions of years will roll away, and yet you will be no nearer the end of it than you were at first. More millions, the earth, sea and sky have ceased to exist, the heavens have rolled together as a scroll, creation is swallowed up in an abyss, the graves have given up their dead, the whole human race has been summoned before the bar of God, the final judgment has come and is past, and you have been hurled down-ward into hell with the devil and his angels. Time has ended and eternity begun, and yet all this is but as a second of time in human life. Infinite millions roll onward, endless cycles of millions of years each, and still you are lost, lost, lost! Eternity, eternity, eternity!"

His voice ended in a shriek.

There was the sound of women sobbing all over the church.

"Amen!" "Glory to God!" "The Lord be praised!" cried the men.

Over to the right of the pulpit not far from the front, Bill Quigley and half a score of his associates had sat, silent and decorous, all the evening. Many suspicious glances had been directed at them, but they had been quiet and not even a peanut had been eaten.

There was a slight shuffling of feet there now, and before anyone realized what had happened Bill Quigley was on his feet and speaking: "You may believe what you say, Mr. Weaver," he said, "but there's some of us as don't, and I'm one of them. I don't lie, or steal, or cheat, and I never abused my mother or harmed a woman, and what's more, I don't think it's a sin to put my arm around a pretty girl in a waltz. Now, there's a lot of us fellows thinks the same way, and we're all tired of bein' told every night in the week that we're goin' to hell just because we don't believe what you do, as near as I can make out. So we've been talking about the matter, and if you don't modify your statements somehow and let us down easy on that there hell fire business, us boys is goin' to take all you parsons down to the river and give you a duckin' — ain't we, boys?" "You bet," was the hoarse, determined assent.

"WIVES PLEADED WITH HUSBANDS"

THE RECONCILIATION:—"THE BROTHERS CLASPED HANDS AND THEIR HEARTS RAN TOGETHER LIKE FLAME"

The four ministers on the platform stood in silent amazement. No one moved before Abijah Saunders bounded out of his seat directly in front of the pulpit, drew his immense, bony frame up to its full height and in stentorian tones called to his brother, "Michael Saunders, do your duty. I command you to arrest that man."

Michael got up from his seat and walked over to his brother, and thus the two stood facing each other before the whole congregation.

"You said this afternoon that you would make me do whatever you wanted me to," he said, as coldly and evenly as ever. "Do it now."

"Do you dare speak so in the house of God?" shouted Abijah.

"Make me do it—" repeated Michael, impassively.

"Your soul is lost forever," said Abijah, his voice scarcely articulate now from rage. "You will be among the damned in ——"

"Nay, my brother, do not speak so. You forget that Christ came to call sinners to repentance." It was the visiting clergyman who spoke, in a singularly and winning voice. "You are both sinners in the sight of God, and both in need of his saving grace," he added, solemnly.

"ALL BILLVILLE WENT TO THE EVENING SERVICE"

"You robbed me," said Abijah to his brother, without noticing the little clergyman, "you deliberately stole the part of the property my mother intended me to [illegible]

"You lie, Abijah Saunders," said Michael, at white heat, "you have lied about me all these years in this community, and I have been silent, but to-night I will unmask you forever. I am tired of having you eternally pointed out as a saint, and me as a villain."

The vain gorged with blood stood out again on Abijah's forehead. Michael's face was livid.

"I took only my rights, only what our mother wished me to have," said Abijah. "You were always jealous of me, even in your boyhood, and only your jealousy could have construed an act of fairness into one of dishonesty and cheating. I never robbed a human being in my life."

"For God so loved the world that he sent his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." It was the little clergyman, his face filled with the glow of a divine compassion. He stood on the platform directly over them and held out his hands with a yearning gesture. "Dearly beloved," he continued. "you and I, and all of us are sinners in the sight of God, and each of us needs forgiveness. Christ has brought salvation to us all, and where he has forgiven much, we may forgive little. Shake hands and forgive and forget as brothers should."

Neither man paid the slightest attention.

"You have used words to me which no man can forgive," said Michael. "and you shall retract them, or pay dearly for them."

"Retract! To you! You are a liar!"

"Brother, brother!" cried the clergyman, "beware what you say. Remember that he that hateth his brother is in danger of hell fire. As a Christian it is your duty to forgive him and hold out the hand of Christian fellowship. Offer him your hand, brother."

Abijah Saunders shook off the restraining hand of the clergyman and looked straight at Michael with fierce eyes.

"That's right, pard," cried Bill Quigley. "If a fellow's a Christian, let him be on decent terms with his own brother. See here, Abijah Saunders, if you'll act square with Mike us boys will let up on that duckin'. What do you say, boys?"

"That's right, Bill" said Jake Burrows, "we'll give up the duckin' if Abijah Saunders 'll come around; but I'll bet he won't."

Abijah Saunders stood as though turned to marble, nor was Michael less immovable. Each eyed the other carefully. In the congregation there was a tense, deathlike silence among the groups huddled together.

"Brother," said the clergyman, again laying his hand on Abijah's shoulder, "there is a fearful responsibility upon you to-night. God has brought this whole matter home to you and made you the one to decide it all. If you dare to refuse this opportunity I tremble to think of your soul's fate, for he who refuses forgiveness cannot expect to be forgiven. Give him your hand, brother."

His voice vibrated with a peculiar sweetness. On Abijah Saunders' face great drops of perspiration stood out and his chest heaved, but he gave no other sign. Michael might have been carved in bronze for all signs of emotion he showed, save that his face was gray.

"I guess the deal's off, boys," said Bill Quigley.

There was an ominous movement on the other side of the church, and somewhere in the house a woman cried out hysterically.

Her choked outcry had scarcely died away ere the young clergyman dropped on his knees and with his hands raised appealingly toward heaven cried in thrilling tones: "Almighty God and Jesus Christ our Lord, look down upon us in mercy and save these thy children. Oh, Christ, who has loved us all and died on Calvary that we might live, turn the hearts of these thy children unto thee and unto each other. Show them thy infinite love, thy divine compassion, thy mercy and forgiveness. Let thy holy spirit enter their hearts and drive out this demon of hate. Oh, God, save them; save them now; save them ere they depart from this altar; and do thou, oh merciful Saviour, move especially upon the heart of thy servant who doth not yet know all the heights and depths of love and forgiveness. Soften his heart and grant that he may not be a stumbling-block in the way of others, and turn the heart of his brother likewise. Oh, Lord, come in thy power and unite again on earth these brothers, that when they stand at last before the great white throne and meet that sainted mother gone before they may be of one mind and worship thee forever and ever. Oh, Jesus, thou son of David, let in thy light upon these darkened souls."

A great sob, the sob of a strong man in agony, sounded in the room. It came from Abijah Saunders, down whose face the tears were rolling; he stood as though transfixed. Michael had bitten his under lip until the blood came. The clergyman rose, pallid and inspired. His face was divine.

He took Abijah's unresisting hand in his and said: "Come, my brother, now is the hour. Your mother is watching you in heaven, and the angels lean over the battlements. Your mother's eyes are on you. She is in heaven. If you wish to meet her there you must be reconciled to your brother on earth."

Abijah swayed unsteadily; for a moment it seemed as though he would fall. Then he groaned, as though the words were wrenched from him by some unseen power: "Mother, oh mother! You are in heaven and I——"

"And you are on the road there, brother," said the clergyman, in clear accents. "We must all become as little children before we can enter there. And you, brother, turning to Michael, "you, too, used to say your prayers at your mother's knee. Do you not remember when you knelt with your brother by her side and with your arms entwined about each other and your mother's hand resting in benison upon your heads you offered up your childish petitions? Your mother is not dead, but gone before; she is in this very room; her spirit hovers near. Oh, brethren, God and your mother call."

The two men looked at each other, no longer with hate; in their faces were pictured an agonizing conflict. Abijah's knees swayed, and from Michael's deep chest came hoarse pantings. The violent emotions that convulsed their strong frames seemed to leap from one to the other. An irresistable impulse swept them both. In the crucible of that moment every human hate was dissolved like wax. The hearts of the two men ran together like flame.

"Mother, oh, mother! Michael! Michael! Forgive me."

"Abijah, my dear brother, there is nothing to forgive now."

They fell into each other's arms and sobbed like children. The foundations of every heart were broken up and many threw themselves on their knees sobbing out thanks to God. Men and women wept and the three pastors had broken down with the rest. Only the young minister dominated the scene. "Thank God," he said.

"Praise the Lord," came from every quarter of the church.

The brothers still stood embracing each other, unashamed before the world. In the flood of tenderness and humility that had swept away the barriers of years, two souls, long spiritually alienated, came face to face through the medium of a sacred memory. It was as though angels' wings fanned the air.

Bill Quigley shifted from one foot to the other and cleared his throat hoarsely.

"I reckon there won't be no duckin' to-night, Mr. Weaver," he said, "and I beg your pardon for disturbin' the meetin'. Mr. Saunders, you've done the square thing, and we all give you credit for bein' a gentleman. We put that there dummy up, me and Jake Burrows, and we'll go and take it down now, and we won't ever do anything in the meetins again."

"No, wait, my son," said the little clergyman, with a winning smile. "Help us sing the long metre doxology first and then brother Saunders will lead us in prayer before the benediction."

As the first notes of the doxology rolled out in a soaring volume the stuffed dummy far down the street flapped weirdly in the frosty air.

MARY C. FRANCIS.

THREE LEADERS IN THE TENT [illegible] ON HEADLEY AV., NEW YORK.

REV. J. L. CAMPBELL, D.D. REV. J. F. CARSON, D.D. MR. WM. PHILLIPS HALL

[illegible] Fifty-sixth Street, marking the most unique midsummer revival movement New York has experienced in many years. Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt, the originator of the work has been cordially supported by leading local and visiting pastors. Among those who have been specially active in the recent work are Rev. J. F. Carson, D.D., of the Central Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn; Rev. Ford C. Ottman, Memorial Presbyterian Church, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, Fourth Presbyterian Church, Rev. J. L. Campbell, D.D., of Lexington Avenue Baptist Church, New York City, and Mr. William Phillips Hall the well-known "business man evangelist". At all of the revival meetings and especially on Sunday afternoons, the number of earnest inquirers is unusually large and there are abundant evidences that the movement is taking deep and permanent root in the hearts of the people. Many notable instances of conversion are reported, among them being that of a rich, middle-aged New England merchant, who had long been an unbeliever and indifferent to religion. It is expected that a band of trained Christian workers from Chicago or Northfield will soon be added to the evangelistic forces who will make it a special duty to follow up new converts, and have them unite with convenient churches. An addition to the tent has been made by which its seating capacity is largely increased.

Richer than Golconda

In an address on the Bible, by an eloquent Southern legislator, Champ Clark, of Bowling Green, Mo., the following remarkable exordium occurs:

Do you yearn to place your name high on the scroll of fame as a poet? Take the Psalms of David and the Book of Ecclesiastes as your model's

Do you aspire to write prose the tersest and most sublime? Begin with the most stupendous sentence ever penned—God said. "Let there be light, and [illegible] of Christendom before King Agrippa, or reveals to an astounded world "the unknown God" on Mars Hill, in the glorious theatre of Grecian eloquence [illegible] the Aleutian Islands, which contains all that is most precious in modern civilization, there is scarcely a human understanding so benighted but it holds, consciously or unconsciously, some scrap of the Book of Books. In poetry, song and oratory; in magazines, newspapers, and books, in [illegible] in history, biography and fiction; in conversations in the most splendid parlors; in the wretched chatterings of cold, hunger and squalor—anywhere, even in the most unexpected places, one hears the language of inspiration. It is safe to say that were every Bible now printed in all the languages spoken by the children of men, suddenly burned, it might be completely reproduced from the literature and memory of the world. Wherever its doctrines are the principle of the people, we find civilization in its highest perfection, and humanity in its most pleasing aspect. I would rather send my children into the world ignorant of the alphabet of the multiplication table, than of the Bible.

BRIEF NOTES

The various Methodist bodies in the United [illegible] ment of delegates, to attend the great Ecumenical Council, to be held in England, in 1901. Three hundred delegates in all will go, of which the Methodist Episcopal Church elects 129.

[illegible] ence will meet again this year at [illegible] York. [illegible] day, July [illegible] July 25. The usual corps of Bible teachers is expected to be present.

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, President of the National W. C. T. U., and Miss Gordon, Vice-President, have held conferences in thirteen States during their tour just completed. It has been arranged that the next National Convention shall be held at Seattle, Wash., Oct. 20-25.

The twenty-fifth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada convened in the city of Hamilton, Ontario on the 14th of June, with about 350 Commissioners present. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring moderator, Dr. Torrance. The newly elected moderator is Dr. Campbell, of [illegible]

At the recent Zionist conference in Baltimore, to elect members of the Executive Committee, of the Basle Congress, which is to meet, on August 15, at Basle, Switzerland, Prof. Richard Gottheil and Dr. Stephen S. Wise were chosen. The object of the Zionist movement is to acquire sites by the Jews, in Palestine, and eventually to lease the land from the Sultan.

The religious classification of the immigrants arriving in this country during May, is as follows: [illegible] Protestants [illegible] Israelites, 925 Greek Catholics, 5 Mohammedans, and 9 who were classified as miscellaneous.

The Presbyterian churches, of Philadelphia, have organized an extensive scheme of aggressive work in connection with the churches and in tents. Dr. John S. Mackintosh has general supervision of the movement. Work was commenced on June 25, in a lot on the corner of Thirty-third and Wharton Streets where a tent holding one thousand persons has been erected. Among the evangelists engaged are Dr. L. W. Munhall and Rev. Geo. C. Needham.

In response to numerous inquiries, we would say that we are now ready to fill all orders for the issue of June 14th, containing the article entitled, What Think Ye of Christ? consisting of the responses of the eminent men of the nation to our interrogatories as to their belief in Christianity. Single copies of this supplementary edition will be mailed to any address for five cents, or twenty copies for $1.00, and 200 copies for $5.00, postage prepaid.

The report presented at the recent meeting of Tuskegee College, of which Booker T. Washington is President, shows that the enrollment last year was 1,164 pupils; over 1,000 worthy applicants were refused for want of room. The students paid towards their expenses $8,736, and 500 students in the night school paid in labor $56,000, including among other things, the making of 1,000,000 bricks, the sawing of 250,000 feet of lumber, the washing of 500,000 pieces in the laundries, and the cultivating of about 700 acres of land.

We are requested to remind our readers of the Bible study work carried on by Dr. James M. Gray, at the Bible Institute in Chicago. Those who took last summer's course know how helpful it was. This year's course will be new and equally helpful. Prof. Towner gives instruction in music. No charge for tuition is made to ministers or Christian workers. The only expense is that of board and lodging. The entire course covers four months, but those who can spare only a few weeks are welcome. Applications should be addressed to Mr. Moody, 80 Institute Place, Chicago.

Bishop John P. Newman, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has for some time past been seriously ill at Saratoga, and before this issue reaches our readers, he may have passed away. He was elected to the episcopate by a two-thirds vote of the General Conference in 1888, and has been an able and progressive leader in M.E. church affairs. Prior to his ordination as bishop, he was known in connection with his work in the South, as organizer of the Metropolitan Church, Washington, D. C., as Chaplain of the Senate, Inspector of Consulates, and pastor of several churches. His books, From [illegible] and [illegible] Babylon and Nineveh, are well known. He was born in New York, September 1, 1826.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

The Empty Cradle

Giving and Finding Comfort—Sorrow-Wise—Well-Meant Blunders

ALMOST every mother knows the full meaning of these three sad little words: "the empty cradle," from which God has taken the gift he seems to have lent only long enough to take away with it a mother's heart.

He sleeps. Who sleeps?
You do not know?
And I must tell you, soft and low,
My little baby sleepeth so.

He sleeps so late,—My baby sleeps,
Nor smiles nor weeps.
The noon upon the morn doth wait,
The sun shines full upon the gate—
The bees and birds are in full tune,
And summer life is at its noon.
My heart doth break,
My baby never will awake!

He sleeps.
The tender eve draws near,
The lights of home are shining clear,
But in the churchyard dark and drear,
My little baby sleeps.

Such a wail as this was that of one poor woman who could never have spoken afterwards so straight to the hearts of bereaved mothers but for the fact that by bitter experience she knew just what the empty nest means in a desolate home, and just what words were best to say or leave unsaid. The writer once heard this said to a bereaved mother of a little one whose loveliness of spirit and angelic patience through suffering had led a worldly man to Christ: "Be thankful; he might have grown up a wicked man." The mother winced. "I don't think he would," she said, defending her silent dead. "You can't know! He might have broken your heart." "O," cried the bruised one, "if he could but have lived to disprove this thing!" The well-meaning, would-be comforter (who had never lost a baby) went away, and another (who had lost one) came and whispered: "It is well with the child." "I don't know why he had to suffer so," moaned the mother; "he had never done any harm, and he was so good and so patient!" "So was Jesus," murmured the other, "Jesus who is keeping him in his arms. Your baby had a mission here; he fulfilled it better than some of us who are grown fulfill our missions. Little as he was, dear, he won a martyr's crown."

"Think," said a well-intentioned friend across an empty cradle, "how much better it is than if one of your older children had gone." The dull anguish in the bereaved woman's eyes took on some bitterness as she said: "'Only a baby!' I have heard that before. He was only a baby to others, but to me he was my son and his manhood died with him." A white-haired minister in the room (he had given some of his little ones back to God and was sorrow-wise) laid his hand on the mother's head and said with a tender smile: "Maybe, my dear, God needed a new angel in heaven."

Never a little one is laid away but we torture ourselves in thinking over the many things that we might have done to save it. If this is true of homes where all that money, skill, good nursing, plenty of room and nourishing food can do is done, how must it be for the toil-worn mother of scant means in the crowded tenement homes, where there are many to keep and many to eat, and not enough air to go around and not enough time to give good care? Such mothers many of our readers have found comfort in helping as memorials to their own "empty cradles."

♣

A Loving Word

"I had rather have a loving word said about me behind my back than any other gift or favor on earth," said a woman whose pathway in life had been made difficult by a cruel slander which had its origin in the thoughtless criticism of a friend. The careless speech, having unusual power as coming from such a source had been repeated and garbled until it assumed a form which the speaker never intended. "If you can say nothing good of another, keep silence," is a golden adage. Another as excellent is, "If you can say a good word for another, say it," generously, freely. A genial influence follows the man or woman of kind and prudent speech; and a very uncertain one follows the malicious or careless talker.

♣

A Mother Stork's Devotion

Among many stories of the affection of dumb creatures for their young, this from a German paper is peculiarly pathetic: "At Neuendorf the lightning struck the gable end of a barn where for years a pair of storks had built their nest. The flames soon caught the nest in which the helpless brood was piteously screaming. The mother stork now protectingly spread out her wing over the young ones, with whom she was burnt alive, although she might have saved herself easily enough by flight."

♣

"Mamma's Sunshine"

She was a wee bit of a girl, but she did more to keep the household sweet-spirited and happy than any one else in the family. From morning till night she pattered about, playing, singing softly to herself, and "just loving" everybody, as her brother put it. Did mamma look tired and care-worn! Lucy was quick to see it, and her little arms were around mamma's neck, and a little voice was whispering softly, "I love you." For papa, and brothers, and sisters, it was the same. One sad week the child was ill, and how they missed her laughter and playing. The doctor had a talk with mamma; and mamma with the others. She said: "Lucy has had too much comforting to do. It has been a strain on her poor little nerves that we didn't understand. It has cost her something to be 'our sunshine.' In her baby way she has been carrying our troubles. We must be 'sunshine' for her, too."

Are any of us shadowing little lives by sorrowful faces? Children rarely show how much they feel the atmosphere of trouble around them. A child needs sunshine as much as a flower.

♣

Children and Signboards

The Civic Committee of the Women's Clubs of Chicago have taken a step which everybody will thank them for. With might and main, they have taken up the signboard question, and are determined to work reform in this direction. They urge that the pictures thus kept continually before the eyes of children are by no means elevating; that English and punctuation are often execrable in those comparatively free from other objections; that so far as art is concerned, they are out of drawing and monstrosities in color; and that for the rest, they are of such size and in such numbers and places that they obstruct lake views and cut off breezes from the children's playgrounds. In short, Chicago's women declare that painted signboards which are an offence against morals, good grammar, good art and free circulation of air, must go. They will not have Chicago's municipal housekeeping done that way. They are at too great expense in having children educated properly and trained morally, and also in providing public playgrounds for them, to suffer longer such nullifying influences to be exerted without any hindrance. If people want to put advertisements on signboards, they must use good art, good grammar, and pictures free from blood-curdling or otherwise demoralizing effects.

PRAYERFUL MEMORIES OF THE LITTLE ONE

The Round-House

YOU start at the door by the office, and circle around to the right—
Past the engines run in from their labors, at home and in bed for the night.
The first is a monster old "Mogul" which backs itself out for a climb
Up the mountains, with ninety full-loaded, to Renovo and Erie on time.
Here "17-20" stands puffing, its steam-grimy smoke hissing through,
It's in from a run up the valley—eighty miles in an hour it flew!
And "5 [illegible]," further round he is, stale, wheezing and shaky and gray,
With flanges and bumpers all battered, fast falling apart from decay.
Old "2-61"? Why, bless you! It's not in the round-house at all!
It belonged here since back in the sixties, but went to the scrap-pile last Fall.

And so through the round-house you circle and pass out the door you came in—Back again into life's greater round-house—the world—with its trouble and sin,
Where yourself are an engine awaiting the call of some duty to do;
To run on the road of the Master and pull his great business on through;
To "do unto others" in meekness, so long as the signals shall burn,
Then on to nature's old scrap—I mean to a grave on the hill in your turn,
While your spirit sails out on the billows of freedom from life and its care—
Sails up to the mansion of glory that Jesus has gone to prepare,
And enters the portals of heaven—the round-
house of God for the blest,
Where his wipers and strikers and helpers fold their arms in his eternal rest.

Sunbury, Pa. G. W. FUREY.

♣

A Model Stepmother

THERE is no position more difficult to fill with satisfaction to oneself and the children in one's care, than that of stepmother. Like that of a real mother, only unfaltering prayer and faith in God's grace can carry one through it to a successful issue. With the best intentions and sweetest effort on both sides, the stepchild and stepmother have hard and delicate problems to solve; all the more delicate and difficult in that they cannot be as in the actual relation of parent and child, always left to themselves in working out solutions. But, after the struggle of understanding each other during the first years are passed, and mutual love, confidence and interest are established, precious rewards come to both. The writer knows of many instances where, while the memory of the first mother is a treasured possession, her portrait occupying the place of honor on the family wall, the second mother receives perfect love and exquisite reverence. Be sure this position has not been attained without patience, love and piety on both sides; nor without the conscientious reserve and prayerful cooperation of the family connections of the stepmother, the children, the father. The writer lately called at the residence of the widow of a Jewish rabbi, who had left his eight children to her guardianship; a young and beautiful woman, she had devoted her life unreservedly to them. A young girl of perhaps eighteen met the visitor, saying: "My mother was very weary and has retired. Will I do?" In the course of the conversation, the writer referred to "your step-mother." The fair face clouded. "My mother!" with emphasis on the beautiful word. "We do not like the prefix 'step'." The writer impulsively commented on the ideal affection implied. "Oh," said the girl, "how could I help loving her? My mother is so beautiful! My mother is so angelic!" Meeting the mother on a later occasion, that lady said: "How could I help loving them? They have always loved me so!"

♣

Farmhouse Flower Gardens

Farmers' wives often lead such busy lives that they have no time for flower culture, the vegetable garden claiming attention that can be spared from household duties. The way out of the difficulty is to get the children interested in raising flowers. This may require patience and toil, but it secures at once occupation and amusement for the children and the keeping of the flower garden.

Took Jesus as their Model

Rev. C. M Sheldon's Wonderful Story of the Experience of a Band of Earnest Men and Women who Pledged Themselves to a Practical Imitation of the Saviour—The Result

FOUR years ago, a thoughtful-looking man of about forty, sat busily at work in his little study in the city of Topeka, Kan. As he glanced up occasionally from his writing, it could be seen that he had a pleasant-looking oval face, a high forehead with a suspicion of growing baldness and a pair of kindly eyes. A heavy, drooping mustache, a sensitive mouth and full, firm chin completed a physiognomy that would have been regarded as notable in any circle. In repose, the expression was thoughtful and tender. The white forehead rested occasionally in the palm of the left hand, as the writer looked over the sheets before him. Several hours of close labor were thus spent every day, and during these hours no one was admitted to the study.

Charles M. Sheldon had been thus employed for several months on what he believed was destined to be the principal work of his life. Five years earlier he had produced his first book and since that time five others had come from his busy pen. He had already won a certain degree of fame in authorship, and his pastorate in the Congregational Church had been in a marked degree successful on spiritual lines. But he felt that an outlet was needed for certain ideas and convictions which, though shadowed forth in his work as a preacher, could nowhere be so clearly and permanently explained as on the living page. In 1896, the task was finished, and the last pages were in the hands of the printer.

Three years have passed since the first edition of In His Steps was issued to the American public. The book, in which the author had put the best work of his life, won its way into the hearts of a great multitude of readers on both sides of the Atlantic. Edition followed edition rapidly, and it is estimated that millions of copies of In His Steps have been sold in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, and wherever the English language is spoken. It is no exaggeration to say that probably no book in a generation has wielded a more extended influence among a very large class of intelligent men and women, for it has been a spiritual tonic and inspiration to countless thousands.

Mr. Sheldon has taken for the principal character, in his story, Henry Maxwell, pastor of the rich and fashionable First Church of Raymond. Earnest and unselfish in his labors among his flock, he yet feels there is something lacking, and that much of the Christianity he is preaching is such in name only. A dramatic incident, in which an unemployed workman figures as the chief actor, precipitates a spiritual revolution in the First Church. Weak and hungry, this stranger stands in the centre aisle of the church, on a Sunday forenoon, and asks pertinently of pastor and people, what is really meant by the hymns, and prayers, and sermons, in which all declare eager readiness to "follow Jesus all the way," and to take up his Cross and walk in his steps. The intruder falls fainting in the aisle, and is carried to Mr. Maxwell's home, where he dies. On the following Sunday, the pastor, now fully awakened to the need of a real, practical Christianity—the message of the stranger having sunk into his heart—startles his people by a remarkable proposition. He says:

> I want volunteers from the First Church who will pledge themselves, earnestly, and honestly for an entire year not to do anything without first asking the question: "What would Jesus do?" And, after asking that question, each one will follow Jesus exactly as he knows how, no matter what the results may be. I will, of course, include myself in this company of volunteers and shall take for granted that my church here will not be surprised at my future conduct, as based upon this standard of action, and will not oppose whatever is done, if they think Christ would do it.

To the pastor's surprise and delight, over fifty persons join this novel organization, and take the solemn pledge, among them being the editor of the leading daily journal in Raymond, the college president, the railway superintendent, a leading physician, a lady of great wealth and her equally rich brother, a gifted singer, a popular society author and many others. On their varied experiences in the effort to faithfully keep the pledge, the development of this most interesting story turns. The editor at the outset has probably the hardest task of all in his endeavors to conduct a daily newspaper on a model such as the Saviour might have approved, and he loses readers and advertising patrons with alarming rapidity by his fearless Christianity; but he ultimately gains universal respect, and is surrounded by better and stronger friends than before. Rather than consent to fraud, the railroad man sacrifices his lucrative position. A number of the band organize for Gospel work in the Rectangle, the slums of Raymond—a notorious section where vice and drunkeness flourish—and there have their first experience in winning souls. The preacher there comes in direct contact with the "unchurched classes," and begins to realize, as never before, the duties and privileges of a true shepherd and a cross-bearer.

CENTRAL CONGL. CHURCH, TOPEKA, KAN., REV. C. M. SHELDON, PASTOR.

Some of the characters in the book are drawn with such striking realism as to instantly impress the reader with their truthfulness. Virginia Page, the rich, young girl who consecrates her wealth to Christ; Rachel Winslow, the singer, who for Jesus' sake refuses tempting offers of fame and riches on the lyric stage, and wins many precious souls with her divine gift of music instead; Mrs. Winslow and Mrs. Pope, women of the world, Christless and thoughtless; gracious Felicia Sterling and her worldly, pleasure-loving sister, Rose, and Edward Norman, the editor, whose life struggle really began on the day he took that fateful pledge.

While it is impossible, in the space at command, to give more than the briefest outline of this powerful story, a few characteristic extracts will be read with interest. Virginia Pope thus describes her discontent with the selfish, frivolous life of the upper circles to which she belongs:

> It maddens me to think that the society in which I have been brought up, the same to which we are both said to belong, is satisfied year after year to go on dressing and eating [illegible] entertainments, spending its money on houses and luxuries and, occasionally, to ease its conscience, donating, without any personal sacrifice, a little money to charity. I have been educated, as you have, in one of the most expensive schools in America. Launched into society as an heiress. Supposed to be in an enviable position. I'm perfectly well; I can travel or stay at home. I can do as I please. I can gratify almost any want or desire and yet, when I honestly try to imagine Jesus living the life I have lived and am expected to [illegible] thousands of other rich people do, I am under [illegible]

Milton Wright, the leading merchant of Raymond, tells how he kept his pledge among his employees:

> [illegible] myself." What would Jesus do in his relation to these clerks, book-keepers, office-boys, draymen, salesmen? Would he try to establish [illegible] from that which I have sustained all these [illegible] saying, Yes. I tried to talk with the men as I imagined Jesus might. It was hard work, for I have not been in the habit of it, and I must have made mistakes. But I can hardly make you believe the effect of that meeting on some of the men. Before it closed, I saw more than a [illegible] kept asking, "What would Jesus do?" and the more I asked it, the farther along it pushed me into the most intimate and loving relations with the men who have worked for me all these years. Every day something new is coming up, and I am right now in the midst of a reconstructing of the entire business, so far as its motive for being conducted is concerned.

Consecration of wealth is thus clearly stated by one of the women of the story:

> I have come to know lately that the money which I have called my own is not my own, but God's. If I, as a steward of His, see some wise way to invest His money, it is not an occasion of vain-glory or thanks from any one simply because I have proved honest in my administration of the funds He has asked me [illegible]

> My money (I mean God's, which He wants me to use) can build wholesome lodging houses, refuges for poor women, asylums for shop girls, safety for many and many a lost girl like Loreen. And I do not want to be simply a dispenser of this money. God help me! I do want to put myself into the problem. But do you know, I have a feeling all the time that all that limitless money and limitless personal sacrifice can possibly do, will not really lessen very much the awful conditions at the Rectangle as long as the saloon is legally established there. I think that is true of any Christian work now being carried on in any great city. The saloon furnishes material to be saved faster than the settlement or Rescue Mission work can save it.

The close of a Christless, misspent life of ill-gotten gain is thus pictured:

> With the cunning and desperation of a man who battles for his very life, when he saw his money, which was all the life he ever valued, slipping away from him, he had put off the evil day to the last moment. Sunday afternoon he had received news that proved to him beyond a doubt the fact of his utter ruin. The very house that he called his, the chairs in which he sat, his carriages, the dishes from which he ate, had all been bought by money for which he himself had never really done an honest stroke of pure labor. It had all rested on a tissue of deceit and speculation that had no foundation in real values. He knew the fact better than any one else, but he had hoped, with the hope that such men always have, that the same methods that brought him the money would also prevent its loss. He had been deceived in this as many others have been. As soon as the truth that he was practically a beggar had dawned upon him, he saw no escape from suicide. It was the irresistible result of such a life as he had lived. He had made money his god.

Gradually, and not without much self-denial and suffering, the new movement makes itself felt in Raymond as a purifying power in politics, a cleanser of the slums and the uncompromising enemy of [illegible] is conquered and its orgies give place to better things. The story of the conquest of the Rectangle for Jesus is extremely dramatic and effective, and there are [illegible] those that describe the conversion and death of Loreen, the outcast girl, who gave her life as a sacrifice to save the woman who had led her to Christ. The book closes with a series of tableaux in which the mutual self-sacrifice of Rev. Dr. Bruce of Nazareth Church, Chicago, and his friend the Bishop, who give up their fashionable churches to become cross-bearers under the pledge and to carry the Gospel of Christ to the tenement poor, is admirably drawn.

Rev. C. M. Sheldon, the author of this book which we have briefly described, and whose work has stirred up a large section of the Christian world to the appreciation of a more practical, Christ-like religion in everyday life, is a native of New York State, and was born in Wellsville in 1857. He has, however, passed almost his whole life in the West. He was brought up on a Dakota farm, and his father, Rev. Stewart Sheldon, was both farmer and preacher. The son studied at Andover, traveled a good deal both at home and abroad and after a short experience at Waterbury, Vt., finally settled down to spiritual work in Topeka, Kan., as pastor of the Central Congregational Church. He has written a number of books, all descriptive of religious experiences and some of them more or less in the same line of thought and treatment as that which has made him famous—In His Steps. The full list is as follows:

"Richard Bruce," 1891.
[illegible] Days," 1892.
"The Twentieth Door," 1893.
"The Crucifixion of Philip Strong," 1893.
[illegible]
"His Brother's Keeper," 1895.
[illegible]
[illegible] Kin," 1897.
"The Redemption of Freetown," 1898.
"One of the Two," 1898.
"The Miracle at Markham," 1898.
"For Christ and the Church," 1899.

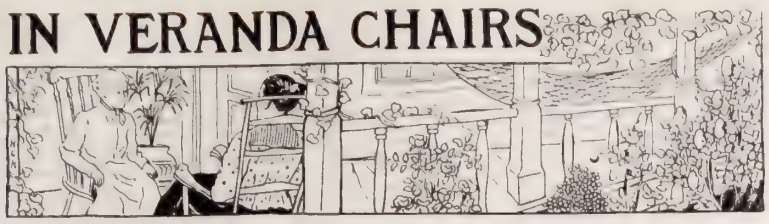
Concerning the greater part of these books it may be stated that they are largely founded upon fact, the incidents being drawn from the writers personal observation and reliable sources of information. "Philip Strong" is wholly ideal, and In His Steps is a strongly idealized picture of his own church. He himself writes of the latter:

> The story, when written, was purely imaginary. I knew of no such places or characters in existence. It was not founded upon fact, but it was written with a great desire that the imaginary might become real. Since the story was written I have heard of several characters who are very nearly like those in the book.

As a result, no doubt, of the influence of his book, a large number of his parishoners have taken a pledge to "try to do as Jesus would do in all things." The pledged band meet at stated periods and exchange experiences. The pledge is purely voluntary. At every meeting additions are made to the number of the pledges and other churches are beginning to take up the idea and live out the principle in their daily lives. It is impossible to estimate the extent of the spiritual influence his writings have exerted upon the Christian thought and life of the country.

Personally, Mr. Sheldon is an exceedingly modest man. He regards himself as a man with a mission, and it is one of the noblest. He deprecates notoriety and does not yield to the blandishments of the interviewer. It was only after considerable trouble that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD secured the photograph of Mr. Sheldon which appears on the front page of this issue and which we publish, together with this brief account of his life and work, as a splendid object-lesson of practical Christianity in and out of the pulpit, and as an inspiration to other pastors and church workers in the field of earnest personal effort. His labors have been blessed to thousands of seekers after the truth, who, influenced by his noble portrayal of the Christian life, with all its sorrows and tribulations, its triumphs and rewards, have resolved, with divine help, like the little band at Raymond, to walk hereafter "In His Steps."

IN VERANDA CHAIRS



A Maid-of-Honor to Queen Anne—A Courtly Wooer—Adoring Husbands—Sensible Wives Look to the Underpinning

LADY LOUISA STUART, whose father was Prime Minister in the beginning of the reign of George III., lived to be ninety-four years of age, and retained her memory and her faculties of mind and body in general up to the end of her long life. Her father was the Earl of Bute, and she, his youngest daughter, born in 1757, died in 1851, a period sufficiently near ours to make her a link binding the present era with the past, which lives in history. Lady Louisa never married, but kept her own house and gathered about her a circle of notable friends, among them many of the nobility and gentry who formed the upper stratum of society in her day and who found great pleasure in her piquant speech and ready wit. All her friends were aware that Lady Louisa wrote for her own amusement, but she shared the opinion which used to prevail, that it rather lowered a woman to appear in print, so that she could seldom be induced to publish anything. Since her death, nearly fifty years ago, everybody who could be hurt in any way by the publication of her manuscripts has passed away, and her memoirs have therefore been lately collated by a kinsman, and I have found them very entertaining reading. I am sure you will enjoy, as I tell it over to you, my dear Veranda Circle, the old love story of Mistress Jenny Warburton, maid of honor, first to Queen Anne and later to Queen Caroline, and of John, Duke of Argyle, a soldier in the army of the great Marlborough, bred to arms from his youth and one of the foremost figures of his time. As I read of these two, they seemed to me again alive, and I could see them play out their drama on the mimic stage of life.

When little Jenny Warburton traveled from her country home in Cheshire up to London town, such a journey was beset with perils. Footpads and highwaymen lurked in the dark, unlighted roads, and a cavalcade was always accompanied by a guard fully weaponed, while a journey now made in a few hours was then an affair of days. There were no stage coaches, no post horses, no turnpike roads, and the wildest dreamer had not imagined the miracles of steam and electricity, the swift railway progress, the cablegram under the sea, the talk over the telephone. What would they have thought of such wonders as are now commonplaces to us?

Jenny Warburton was of good family and of long descent, but she was not pretty, was in fact considered very plain, with a rustic homeliness of air, and the rude health of a dairymaid. Languishing, willowy beauties were then in fashion, and her mates looked superciliously on plain Jenny, who was not graceful in speech or manner. In the group of gay maids who surrounded Queen Anne she was thought the least attractive in person, and her education, as that of girls in her day was apt to be, was extremely limited. Her one distinction was a blunt, straightforward honesty, which stooped to no concealments, a brusque candor, refreshing in its simplicity, and in complete contrast to the evasions and equivocations which were too common among women in courts. And it was precisely this characteristic which seems to have won for her the love of the Duke of Argyle. The feather in Jenny's cap was her bluntness. It impressed the gallant duke as no other grace could have done.

. . .

I DO not know of a greater puzzle than that which meets us when we look around among our friends and wonder why this one married the other, what Mr. C. saw in Miss G. to bring him to her feet, what Mrs. W. could possibly have found in Mr. W. to induce her to say yes to his proposal. We affirm, and with some truth, that people are attracted by their opposites, the tall man by the short woman, the grenadier among her sex by the man whom she overtops, the lively by the sober, the slow-witted and phlegmatic by the merry and mercurial. Yet, when we acknowledge this, there still remain many matches for which we can account only by assuming that they were made in heaven. Nothing on earth explains them, nothing shows satisfactorily to our comprehension how they ever came about. The comments of the outside world fortunately make no difference to a congenial pair, happily united, and even when they are not altogether congenial, the great majority of married persons jog along quite comfortably, the frictions of daily life smoothing down their angularities until this strange thing comes to pass, that an old and ordinary husband and wife who began living together without the least resemblance actually grow like one another in countenance and expression before they die.

. . .

TO RETURN to the Argyles. John Campbell was very handsome, carrying himself with a princely dignity, and in conversation and manner he was affable and pleasing. He might never have noticed little brown Jennie at all, but for a circumstance which flattered his vanity. When he came home from foreign parts, with his laurels thick upon him, he made his first social appearance in Queen Anne's Court, at a drawing-room reception, given in honor of her majesty's birthday. He was the hero of the hour, as Hobson was with us a year ago. The same evening, the Duke of Shrewsbury gave a dinner, also in honor of the Queen's fete day, and all her maids were invited. In due time the ladies were called upon for toasts, and everybody gave some venerable bishop, or fatherly general, until Jenny Warburton's turn came, when she astonished the table by pledging the man uppermost in her thoughts, and naming unaffectedly "The Duke of Argyle." At this, there was a shout of laughter, and she was so unmercifully teased that she began to cry. The story of the little incident was carried to the duke, who at once sought her out, paid her a great deal of attention, and presently fell deeply in love with her. There was no apparent reason for the sway she exercised, but the duke was for a long time her loyal suitor, and after their marriage, continued through a long life, her "faithful, doting, adoring lover." Lady Louisa tells as that in his eyes she was actually beautiful, and gives an instance in proof. A lady once affronted him very much, by exclaiming that a picot of the duchess, just brought home, was just like her. "Like!" he repeated hastily, "No, not like at all: How can anybody think so? It does not do her justice in any respect." "Just step this way," he added, "and I will show you another sort of likeness," taking out of his pocket a very beautiful miniature. The lady did not perceive the resemblance, and began to praise the painting.. "Yes," said the duke, "this is my Jane."

This love stood a test which has sometimes proved rather trying to men similarly placed, the owner of great estates, and a great name, in a country where title and property go to the oldest male heir. The duke passionately longed for a son, but no son was given to him, and five daughters were born in succession. It is recorded to his credit, that his regard for the duchess was not in the least degree lessened by these disappointing arrivals of the undesired sex, who, of course, once here, won their way into the citadel of his heart.

. . .

LADY LOUISE observes that in this union, the man was always the adorer, and the woman the adored. Her nature was calm, placid, and receptive; her manner to him equable and almost indifferent. She accepted homage as her right. He accorded it joyfully, and continued to bestow it, till both their heads were gray. She survived him many years. When the duke lay cold in his coffin, the wife standing beside the silent form, said to one of her friends, "I have been the beloved of a great man."

. . .

WHEN I see young wives chary of allowing their husbands to wait on them, a trifle too eager themselves in needless services, I am tempted to wish that they would borrow a leaf from Jenny Warburton's book. Possibly the Veranda does not agree with me; if it doesn't, will it please say so? but I do not believe that wives gain anything by being too subservient, while I am sure that they cannot be too loving. In the home the wife must be neither plaything nor drudge; her true state and position are those of the household queen, serene and gracious, whether her house be a log cabin or a mansion.

"Which of you gets up first and lights the fire in the morning, my dear?" said an old wise woman to a fair young wife.

"Why, I do," said the latter. "Poor Richard works so hard, and is so tired and sleepy in the morning that I hate to disturb him, so I never call him till breakfast is nearly ready."

All right this, if Richard's work keeps him up all night, and he must sleep by day. Otherwise I think just as the wise old lady did.

"You work as hard as Richard does my dear," said the old lady, "and your day is quite as long. When the babies come, it will be much longer. Let him stir himself in the morning, and wait upon you, bring in wood and water, and kindle the breakfast fire before you come down."

I'm afraid Richard's wife had not begun right. It is very important in married life to look well to the beginning. The safety of the structure depends upon the underpinning.

Common-sense is invaluable as an ingredient in the cup of the happily married. A wife may not treat her husband with contempt and expect to retain his affection. Men need petting, and above all things they need to be taken care of. Many a sharp quarrel has its origin in a loose shirt button, or a hole in the husband's stocking. Perhaps a man prizes more than multiplied demonstrations, a wardrobe always in order, and comfortable, hot, well-cooked meals. I fancy that Jenny Warburton was a good housekeeper, and her biographer tells us, that she was as economical as she was honest. A gifted woman if she wastes a man's substance, and neglects her mending-basket, is likely to provoke irritation in a refined nature and abuse from a coarse one. Nothing exceeds a quiet, faithful performance of daily duty as a sweetener of daily life. Sir Walter Scott in his famous apostrophe:

> O woman in our hours of ease,
> Uncertain, coy and hard to please,
> When pain and anguish wring the brow,
> A ministering angel thou!

Sums up what a man looks for in the woman he loves. She is to be a ministering angel. Let her keep her angel-robes white, her angel-looks gentle, her angel-tones tender. But, all the same, when pain wrings her brow, let her husband take on himself the part of the angel minstrant. When he does this his compassion is divine, his very blunders are bewitching. And there is something in the tender strength of a man in his loving-kindness and gentleness that surpasses the love of woman. Babies know this. Have you not seen one of them hush its wailing when held close in fatherly arms, the little head nestling peacefully on the broad breast? Strength allied to gentleness is invincible.

. . .

THERE is another thought which came to me, as I read Jenny's love-story. And that is that honesty, absolute, white-souled candor and truthfulness are good wearing qualities for the journey of life. Truth is not made of poor flimsy stuff which yields at the first strain. Any one of us, who discerns in herself a temptation to be insincere, to flatter, to deceive, to hold back the truth, to prevaricate, should on bended kness pray to be forgiven, and should earnestly cultivate the grace of simple sincerity. No circumstances, no combination of them, can ever justify a lie. Do not mistake me as urging you to go about the world, ruthlessly thrusting impalatable opinions in everybody's face; this is not what I mean. But walk by a straight line, shun indirectness, and let the consequences take care of themselves, when you are challenged and must answer. Trust in the Lord, and speak the truth.

Margaret E. Sangster

Sunday School Teachers Defended

BEVERLY, PA.

To the Editor of "The Christian Herald":

Allow me to say that I consider the article by Mr. Carter, in a late issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, unfair toward Sunday School teachers. In our school, many of the teachers are graduates of the high school; some are teachers in the public schools, two are commercial travelers, two are successful business men, and one young man has studied for the ministry. His eyesight having failed, he consented to work in another part of the Lord's vineyard, and is now a popular teacher of a large class of young women.

I have no doubt that, under our present method of securing teachers, some are inefficient, but I am sure this is the exception and not the rule, as your correspondent would have us believe. I trust I may be pardoned if I add a word of personal testimony. During eleven of the most impressible years of my life I had a most faithful Sunday School teacher—a young lady, beautiful and intelligent; a teacher in one of the public schools of this city. Her death occurred some years since. The funeral was held in the church, and among the mourners were not only the members of her Sunday School class, but also a large number of pupils from the public schools. To me, not the least among the antic'pated joys of heaven is that of re-union with the beloved teacher who so faithfully pointed me to the Saviour.

E. F. S.

"He That Stays Does the Business."

All the world admires "staying power." On this quality success depends. The blood is the best friend the heart has. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best friend the blood ever had; cleanses it of everything, gives perfect health and strength.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

WANTED—A case of bad health that RIPANS will not benefit. They banish pain and prolong life. One gives relief. Note the word RIPANS on the package and accept no substitute. RIPANS 10 for 5 cents or twelve packets for 48 cents may be had at any drug store. Ten samples and one thousand testimonials will be mailed to any address for 1 cents, forwarded to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 50 Spruce St., New York.

It Is a Certainty That Catarrh

can be cured. You will believe it after using a sample of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Mailed free. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Blosser Building, Atlanta, Ga.

$13.25 BUYS A $25.00 BICYCLE

Don't buy a bicycle before you write for our $13.25 catalogue and learn wholesale prices and our liberal offer. VICTOR MANF'G CO. Dept. G 42 161 to 167 Plymouth Pl., Chicago, Ill.

$18.00 a Week and expenses [illegible] Permanent position. Also want workers [illegible] can find profitable employment for part time. [illegible] references. R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP for children teething, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic. The best remedy for diarrhœa.

ROYAL
Baking Powder
Makes wholesome food. No alum.

... A Message from India ...

Rev. R. Winsor Describes the Purposes to which the Gifts of Our Readers for Famine Relief were Applied

WITH pleasure we accede to the request of Rev. R. Winsor, of Sirur, India, a missionary of the American Board, now at home on furlough, for permission to personally thank the readers of this journal for the help they so generously gave to the people of India in the famine. Mr. Winsor, who has just arrived from his scene of labor, remained at his post all through that period of suffering, helped to distribute the relief, and has witnessed the results of the noble Christian charity in the changed attitude of the people. Following is his letter:

"Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Permit me to use your columns on my arrival at home, to thank your readers for the help that you sent to us in the period of our dire distress during the India famine. For twenty years we had lived among this people preaching in their villages and visiting them in their homes, as far as the way was open for us to do so. They had learned our principles, knew what we were there for and understood our purpose. Consequently, when the grip of famine was laid upon them, producing such misery and suffering, as I pray it may never be my lot to witness again, they flocked to us entreating our help. We had encouraged them to regard us as their friends and when they needed friends as never before, they came begging us to be a father and mother to them in their calamity. They came by hundreds and by thousands until the sight was growing beyond the possibility of endurance. Our hearts ached, for where could we get food to feed such a multitude?

"In this harrowing juncture a small gift of one hundred rupees [about $35] came from Lord Radstock, in England. We rejoiced to receive it though it would do so little toward relieving distress so colossal as that with which we were confronted. But soon came a gift of fifteen hundred rupees from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of New York, and then five hundred rupees, and then two thousand rupees, making in all four thousand rupees [about $1,400] received from the same source, besides other amounts received later through the Interdenominational Missionary Committee, organized in India, by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The help which this generous beneficence on the part of your readers enabled us to render, will never be forgotten by the famished people whom it kept alive. To the end of their lives it will be cherished in grateful remembrance.

"Heartily approving your suggestion, accompanying your remittance, that it should, as far as in my discretion was advisable, be spent in wages for service on some work which would be of benefit to the people, themselves, I set all, who were able, to work at digging out a large reservoir at Karegar, from which both men and cattle could obtain water. Every able-bodied person in the village, men and women, and even the boys and girls came joyously to the task, which, as they all knew, would be a permanent benefit to the village. They worked with a will, receiving payment from the fund your readers had contributed. The work was well done under my superintendence, and since the rains have come, it has filled, and connections made by which the surrounding grain fields have been irrigated from the water stored there. You have no idea what such a work means to a Hindoo village. The people, however, understand it. In all my experience in India, I never witnessed such gratitude as they showed for their reservoir, which their own hands had constructed.

"Another good work, which furnished occupation for the people of five villages, was the making of a good firm road between Kondapuri and Telegar. Then, we set them to sinking wells, from which they can obtain water, and in many other ways, all of utility to themselves, kept them employed. The people fully realized the advantage of what they were doing, and knew that the wages they were receiving were only a part of the benefit that accrued. But the wages were the great thing in that time of stress. They constantly say that without that money they must have died before harvest.

"Then came the corn-ship. Five hundred sacks were allotted to us at Sirur, and were brought all across the country to us. We had two distributing places, One at the school building and one at Kondapuri, fourteen miles distant. We had three thousand persons in all at the two places. Oh, the joy there was! The joy of the people at getting the food, and of ourselves in distributing it. I was careful to explain to the people why it was that men and women thousands of miles away had sent them this food—that it was because they loved Christ and delighted to do his will which was to feed the hungry and succor all who were in distress. It seemed to us all as if the corn came from heaven, a gift from God himself.

REV. R. WINSOR, OF SIRUR, INDIA

"The result of all these beneficences which through the gifts of your readers we were enabled to render are truly wonderful. Never was there seen in India, since missionary work began there, such a turning of the hearts of the people toward Christian truth. Our reception in a village now is very different from what it was before the famine. Cordiality and friendliness and respectful attention have taken the place of sullen hostility, and we are everywhere recognized as the benefactors of the people.

"I must also say a word of gratitude for the help you are still giving us in the heavy burden we undertook in caring for the orphans. Those little creatures were the most touching sight of that sad time. We could not turn them from our doors. They are in all the mission schools of India to-day, and I rejoice that you are so thoughtfully helping the missionaries to bear the burden. Your quarterly remittances are a great help to us. In our own school, at Sirur, we are trying to give them an industrial training, so that they may do better with the land than their fathers have done and be helped to a more independent position. I want to take back with me some modern appliances: a small engine, one or two machines for farm work etc., to let our boys see what may be done by intelligent application of modern methods. If some of your readers would help me to do this they would do a real act of kindness. A few dollars towards the purchase of these implements sent to me at Oberlin, Ohio, would do much toward completing the education of these boys, and would be most gratefully received.

"I have long wanted to tell the readers [illegible] ly came to our relief in our time of dire need, how much good was accomplished by their beneficence, how thankful the people are for their gifts and to personally thank them for enabling us to show practically to the non-Christian population how blessed and compassionate a faith Christianity is. Yours faithfully,

"R. WINSOR."

An Ainu Mother's Charm

The Leaf of a New Testament as a Heavenly Passport for Her Dead Baby

REV. JOHN BATCHELOR, missionary among the Ainu, writes from Sapporo, Japan, giving an interesting account of the progress of the spiritual work among that strange people. Miss Andrews, another missionary, has been devoting herself exclusively to this work for over a year, being supported partly by the Ainu and partly by voluntary contributions from friends abroad. Mr. Batchelor writes:

"I have already been called upon to baptise more than forty Ainu and Japanese this year. I have, during my last two journeys to the Ainu, taken with me, as factotum, Arimakna, a young Christian man. Two weeks ago I sent him on a journey with an Ainu chief, who has lately become a Christian, to assist him in destroying his heathen symbols and fetiches, called Inao. Through the winter we have had whole gardens and fields of crops and soil washed clean away, whilst several villages floated out to sea. We have been helping the poor, starving people. While in Piratori, last Monday, no less than fifty-four families sent representatives for food, but many had to be sent away hungry, because all the rice had been given out. They say they have now eaten up all the acorns.

"We commenced a winter school in our house at Sapporo for Ainu girls last November, and have had from eight to eleven children with us as pupils ever since. The girls have been taught to read their New Testaments, and Mrs. Batchelor has been teaching them to knit. Miss Hughes to sing, and a Japanese has been engaged to teach them to read and write the Japanese language, which is now fast becoming a necessity among them. The Ainu women are very fond of charms, and generally have some of them hidden away in their homes or storehouses. Of course they do not keep these things after they become Christians. I hear of some poor women who keep pieces of snake skin as charms, some who hide away birds' nests, and others the skins and bones of birds.

Miss Bryant casually came across a poor woman the other day close to Piratori, whose little baby had just died, and, curious and sad as it may appear, she had got hold of a leaf of an Ainu New Testament and had tied it to the neck of the dead baby as a sort of charm, passport or ticket to heaven."

Korean Students

There are six native Koreans at Howard University, Washington, D. C., where they are receiving a general education free. The Korean Legation at Washington grants these students no help at all. There were some fine young Korean students in this country last year, supported by the help of friends. All of them became Christians and two were baptized. Two have returned to Korea, and one is in Washington. Philip S. Yih is now an evangelist, and is with Dr. Underwood, Presbyterian Mission in Korea, where he has already seen fruit in his work. H. B. Pak is tutor to Prince Eui Wha, a Korean Prince, and is traveling in Japan with him. M. T. Kang is still at the Howard University, continuing his education, and his beautiful Christian example is having a good influence there among the other Koreans.

WINNERS
Imperial Wheels
Ames & Frost Company, Chicago.

Swift's
Highest-grade
Products
Premium Hams, the [illegible] cured.
Premium Breakfast Bacon, no other quite so good.
Silver Leaf Lard, all lard and nothing but lard.
Beef Extract, [illegible] purest, the best.
Jersey Butterine, delicious and [illegible]
Cotosuet, the perfect vegetable shortening.
Sold everywhere
Swift and Company, Chicago

The IDEAL Steam Cooker
Reduces Fuel Bills One-Half.
Makes tough meats tender. [illegible] Whistle [illegible] Dinner Sets, Bicycles, Watches, [illegible] Valuable Premiums given with order for Cookers. [illegible] Agents Wanted.
TOLEDO COOKER CO., Box 19, Toledo, O.

... OBERLIN COLLEGE ...
JOHN HENRY BARROWS, Pres., Oberlin, O.
[illegible]
JAMES R. SEVERANCE, Oberlin, O.

EXPANSION....
[illegible] $600 to $900 per year all expenses. [illegible]
C. W. STANTON CO., 980 Monon Block, Chicago, Ill.

FOR ALL RELIGIOUS SERVICES
CHURCH HYMNS AND GOSPEL SONGS.
$25, $30 per 100; $35 per 100. [illegible] Sample [illegible] post free, 25c.
A 32 page pamphlet of above, loaned to Conventions.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York and Chicago.

SUMMER HOMES IN VERMONT
And on Lake Champlain
[illegible]
A. W. ECCLESTONE, G.P.A., [illegible], N. Y.

Book-keeping Stenography, Penmanship by mail at Eastman, [illegible], N. Y.
C. C. GAINES, Box 286, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

FILLMORES' MUSIC for Churches, Choirs, S. S. and every good purpose. Books, Sheet Music [illegible], Cantatas, Concert Exercises, Instruments, New Issues at all times. Prompt service. Catalogue free.
FILLMORE BROS., Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS
[illegible] for 250 tickets; 1,000, $3.00; Imprinting & Pad Supplies. Samples. Don't send stamps. Mention this paper. Address S.S.A. A. E. VINING, 18 Green Street, PORTLAND, ME.

$300 to $10.00 a day can be made with Stencil and Key Check Outfits. Catalogue free. Manufacturers' agent wanted, and salesmen to sell staple specialties to retail trade. Address B. F. Johnson, 901 E. Main St., Richmond, Virginia.

WANTED—A woman to board. Excellent home. Small family. $5 per month, board and washing. "Miss C." Dale Mountain, Mass.

Helping the Children's Home

THE happy children playing on the lawn and hillsides at our Children's Home; gathering daisies, singing songs of praise and gladness; resting in healthful slumber in the big, cool dormitories, are blessed indeed. Blessed not alone in that they have been taken from crowded homes of want and sickness to a lovely place in the country where they have good air to breathe and food to eat and clothes to wear, but that the friends who help THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in this work for children are praying for them. The gifts that come, come consecrated with loving thoughts and faithful petition, as the following letters show. They are selected from many which preach the beautiful lesson of Christian love and sacrifice so well that we wish we could print them all:

W. R. R., $7. May God's richest blessings rest upon this work. ——Mrs. C. L. W., $3. God blesses this work, I'm sure.——T. H., $3. May it be the means of saving some innocent child is the giver's prayer.——E.C., "A teacher," $6. It is a privilege to help ——Subscriber, $1. Wish I could make it more. My prayers for all who are helping this good work along.——I. S., $3. To give some little one a good time at the Children's Home. ——Subscriber, $1. Wish I had more to give.——L. H. N., $6. May the blessings of God be on this noble work.——G. S., $3. To give some poor little one a ten day's outing.——"In His Name, $1. It is not much but all I can give. God bless the children is my prayer.——C. D. S., $3. God bless this to the good of some poor little waif.

A friend in Louisiana, sends $35, "to make twelve children happy for ten days."——S. D. D and H. A. S., in Texas, send $18, saying God's blessing go with it."——Another "Friend to children," sends $30, "makes ten little ones happy."——Inasmuch, $12. "The first gift out of a small sum of money left me. Pray for the sender."

Abrams, J H	5 00	Knowles, Mrs J R	2 00
Adams, Mary H	3 00	Knowles, Louie	2 00
Albright, B	1 00	Koch, Violet E	3 00
Allen, J M	34	Koerber, H	10 00
Allen, Mrs L C	2 00	Kramer, Miss Clara	1 00
Anderson, Miss E	5 00	Krebs, F P	75
Andrews, Mrs E E	1 00	Lee, Miss E J	9 00
Atherton, Mrs W E	3 00	Lentz, Mrs F M	50
Baldwin Mr & Mrs EH	6 00	Lewis, Hannah	1 00
Banks, M Isabell	15 00	Linnell, Mrs B F G	3 00
Barr, Mrs R	3 00	Loesch, Mrs F and daughter	6 00
Barrow, P M	1 00	Lorentz, Mrs J C	1 00
Bell, Mrs E A	50	Lutz, Miss S A	5 00
Bell, Mrs L	1 00	McAllister, Mrs J E	3 00
Bennett, Thos E	3 50	McCartney, F	1 00
Benton, Tilman M	2 00	McClennon, T H	1 00
Best, Jno E	2 00	McCown, Mrs M R	1 00
Bickley, F W & wife	2 50	Mackie, Mrs. Geo	2 00
Bollman, Geo	1 00	Manley, Mrs Wm	5 00
Boutwell, Mrs C F	2 00	Martz, Esther	1 50
Bowles, Annie V	1 00	Mather, J L	1 00
Brown, J & M	3 33	Mather, Mrs J L	1 00
Bryan, B G	25 00	Miller, Fred & Bert	3 00
Buck, W R	1 00	Miller, Mrs. H P	2 50
Burnham, S C	1 00	Miller, Maggie	3 00
Byram, Geo M	10 00	Milligan, Anna B	5 00
Campbell, Mrs A E	3 00	Moir, Mrs R T	10 00
Cary Miss A	1 00	Molloy, Mrs A E	6 00
Charles, C W	3 00	Morley, Mrs H R	8 00
Clapp's Mrs K child'n	1 00	Morrison, Mrs H K & sons	6 00
Clarkson, Edward	15 00	Morton, Mary	3 00
Colvin Willie & Ray	50	Mulford, Frances H & Mrs J E	6 00
Colyer Mrs L	1 00	Munson, J S	2 50
Conant, C M	9 00	Myers, C F	1 00
Conard, S E	7 00	Nettleton, F F	10 00
Cooper, J M	1 00	Newman, Julia S	2 00
Culbert, John C	10 00	Nodine, Willie	3 00
Cuming T H	20 00	Ort, Eliza	1 00
Cummings, W M	1 00	Osborne, Martha C	3 00
Curtis, Lela M	3 00	Ostrander, Mrs G W	1 00
Dailey, Thos	3 00	Palmer, Mrs M D	3 00
Dasch, Mrs A	25	Pierce, C	3 50
Dest, W K	5 00	Potts, Mrs M	6 00
Devereaux, E M	3 00	Preston, Miss A	3 00
Dickinson, Frank	2 00	Quigley, Maria L	1 00
Dillan, A Lincoln	3 00	Randall, Mrs R W	6 00
Driscoll Mrs T M	50	Rice, Mrs J M	1 00
Dudleston, Maggie	3 00	Richardson, Mrs P C	3 50
Dunlap Mrs M H	6 00	Rogers, Mrs A N	1 00
East, Susie	4 00	Rushmore, Mrs R	3 00
Eastman, Mrs W F	6 00	Sargent, Blanche	1 00
Edwards, L	1 00	Shaffer, Mrs L L	3 00
Evans, Mrs A E	3 00	Shank, Mrs M A	2 00
Fitzpatrick, Mrs M E	10 00	Smith, Albert	5 00
Freeman, Audry Clara and Stella	1 00	Smith, Mrs C A	10 00
Garner, Mrs H R	5 00	Smith, Mrs C E	12 00
Gay Mrs W	3 00	Smith, Mrs E M	3 00
George, Daisy L	6 00	Smith, H P	6 00
Getchell, Mrs E W	3 00	Smith, Lillie T	1 00
Grabs, Joanna	2 00	Southwick, Mabel	2 00
Guy, W	3 00	Steele, Little Jesse	3 00
Hall, G L	2 00	Stennenberg, Eva B	2 00
Hallock, Mrs D Y	3 00	Stockwell, Geo W	3 00
Harvell, Mrs J P	1 00	Swan, Mrs H	50
Hawes, C J	1 00	Swift, Mrs L M	75
Hazlett, Mrs S H	25 00	Tanner, Ernest	2 00
Heap's, Mrs H S S class	3 00	Taylor, Anna	2 00
Heiskell, Mrs F	4 00	Taylor, Mr & Mrs G E	9 00
Hines, Dr W A	3 00	Taylor, Mrs M	2 00
Hines, Mrs W A	50	Tenney, Mary I	3 00
Hodgkins, J E & wife	6 00	Thompson, H S	15 00
Horton, Mrs N A	1 00	Titus, M A	5 00
Hulskamper Mrs J A	5 00	Ep League, Waterport	3 00
Hunn, Alice	3 00	Do what you can circle of K D, Decorra	3 00
Hunn Emma	2 00	Dorcas Circle of K D, Suffern	9 00
Hunn Fred	5 00	K D, Washingtonville	10 00
Irwin, Margaret	50	Ladies Aid Soc Pres ch, Palestine	3 00
Isabel, Helen	6 00	Childrens Day Coll, Hinsdale Un S S	4 00
Jones, R W	5 00	Child'ns Day Coll Ref ch, So Fallsburg	2 00
Jones Mrs W A	1 00	Total	$672 42
Kellogg, Mrs R M	5 00
Kentgen, Grace Hope	35 00
Keys, Mrs F	3 00
Kile, J P	5 00
Kinney, S P	1 00
Kinsey, H C	2 00

Little Garments for Our Children

A visitor, who watched the opening of a box of clothing at our Children's Home, exclaimed: "People who doubt the existence of practical Christianity ought to come here! They ought to see these things and read the letters that come with them!" Strong, good little garments that a mother's children have outgrown, and new ones made by willing hands; all fresh and clean and neatly folded, reveal the loving and careful thought of generous givers. Notes tucked away in the pockets of aprons, dresses, jackets and trousers assure little wearers that kind friends are praying for them to be good, happy and useful. Hats and shoes are sent, showing that no need is forgotten. Letters of inquiry have been received at this office, asking what sizes are required and how boxes should be directed. Our children are from five to twelve; some of the five-year-olds are small and undeveloped. Boxes should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y. They will be promptly acknowledged. The following have been received:

D., Mosiertown; G. H. Bullock, Cora E. Huckins, Ethleen and Theron Bartholomew, Mrs. Lucina Schultz, Emma A. Ross, Mrs. J. A. Hulskamper, Mrs. J. C. P., R. N. Y.; Mrs. E. W. Eldridge, Mrs. F. C. Morgan, Annie E. Ferald, F. J. Winch.

Honoring The Lord's Day

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for July 23.

Ex. 20: 8-11; Rev. 1: 10.

HOW the Lord's Day should be observed, is a question on which there is the widest difference of opinion even among Christians. There are some who call it the Sabbath and approach in their observance of it to the Jewish idea, which made it a burden. There are others, again, who have no scruple in making the day one of amusement and idleness. As there is in the New Testament no legislation on the subject, we are obliged to look for general principles which we may apply to it. That it was not intended to be observed as the Jews observed their Sabbath, seems clear from our Lord's example. Again and again he was rebuked for violations of laws of the Sabbath, and his replies show that he had no sympathy with the prevailing custom. The rabbins had carried the law into such detail as to make it absurd. No man might walk beyond a certain distance on that day. No man might kindle a fire in his house. No man might carry a handkerchief or a staff, because that would be to bear a burden on the Sabbath, and there were a host of petty by-laws such as these which combined to make the day a burden and a misery, because there were a hundred ways in which the Sabbath might be inadvertently broken.

Christ with his accustomed method of going to the root of questions, showed that Sabbath observance must be one of spirit and intelligence. The disciples rubbing corn in their hands on the Sabbath shocked the strict Jews because they made their hands a species of mill by this rubbing, but Christ defended them and charged their assailants with hypocrisy. Mere outward forms and observances weighed little in his eyes; the heart and spirit were the all important matters. It was inevitable, therefore, that when the Gentiles were admitted into the church, the subject of Sabbath observance would become a bone of contention between them and the Jewish Christians. As we learn from Romans 14: 5 there was trouble not only as to how to observe the day, but as to the day to be observed. Paul speaks of some who treated every day alike and he utters no word of condemnation against them. Again, when the first council of the Christian church was held and the apostles were asked what laws Gentile Christians ought to obey, certain matters of which the Sabbath was not one were cited (Acts 15: 5-29) and the explicit statement was made: "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things." The observance of the Sabbath was not enjoined, not even mentioned. Men were left free, as Christ wished they should be, that the Spirit of Christ which was in them should bring them under grace and not under law.

They were, however, much mistaken, if they thought that the "law of liberty" gave them license to do evil. As Christ repeatedly showed, the law of the Spirit was more stringent than any legislation. Just as a dutiful son, grown to maturity, does not need his father's directions and prohibitions, but of his own love and principle does the things his father wishes him to do, so the Christian renders, without law, a more perfect obedience than was ever given under the law. So the divine law of appropriating a seventh part of time to God survived, but as a voluntary offering, and not as of compulsion. The Gentiles who had never observed the Jewish Sabbath, adopted a day which would do honor to Christ, and consecrated as a joyous festival, the day of the new creation when he rose from the dead. It became a custom, not a law, and it was so blessed in its observance that it has endured until now. But in no respect, save in abstention from secular pursuits, did it resemble the Jewish Sabbath. So the more intelligent Christians regard it to this day. It is a blessed interlude, a day snatched from sordid cares and worldly pursuits that we may give our thoughts to God, and worship him. We honor it most when we are doing something for his sake, when we are doing his work, the work that he would do if he were here. We refresh our souls by going to his house and meeting with our brethren, and joining in celebrating his love. In the Sunday School we honor it by teaching the children to love him, and we may honor it still further, if we can do some service in His name to some child of his who being in sickness or in poverty is in need of Christian help.

"Keep to your place and your place will keep you." Without good health we cannot keep situations nor enjoy life. Hood's Sarsaparilla promotes good health, and will help you "keep your place."

Books Received

Jerusalem the Holy. A Brief History of Ancient Jerusalem; with an account of the modern city, and its conditions, religious, political, and social. By Edwin Sherman Wallace, late U. S. Consul for Palestine; with photographic illustrations and maps. Unquestionably one of the ablest and most entertaining books on this subject which has appeared in recent years. Pp. 359. Cloth covers. Price $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

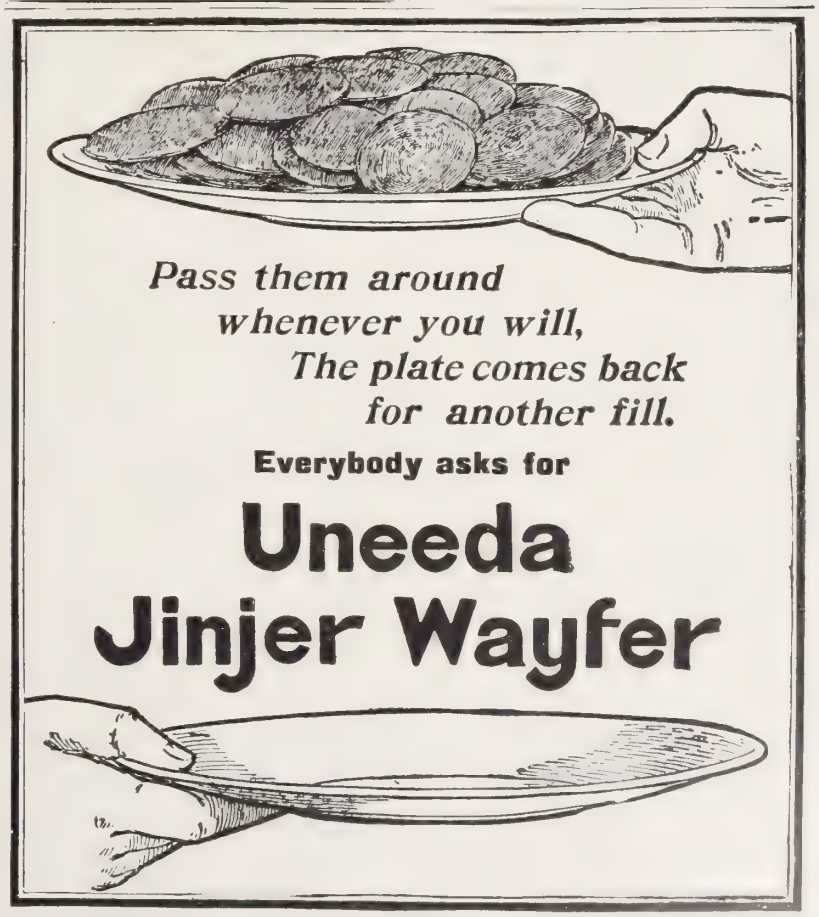
Trial Package Free!

[illegible] JOHN A. SMITH, 219 S. [illegible] Church Building Milwaukee, Wis.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
Cure Sour Stomach, Constipation, etc.
10 cents and 25 cents, at drug stores.

MUST HAVE AGENTS AT ONCE to sell Sash Locks and Door Holders. Sample Sash Lock free for two cent stamp. Immense; better than weights, burglar proof. $10 a day. Write quick. Address BROHARD & CO., Dept. 11, Philadelphia, Pa.

RUBIFOAM
The most efficient and agreeable dentifrice for cleansing and preserving the teeth.
25 CENTS. ALL DRUGGISTS.
Sample vial of Rubifoam mailed free on receipt of postage, 2 cents. Address
E. W. HOYT & CO., Lowell, Mass.



"Brevity is the Soul of Wit." Good Wife, You Need SAPOLIO

HIRES Rootbeer

IS a

Temperance Drink

It is prepared for temperance people, a multitude of whom believe it helpful to the great cause of temperance. Any one who states that HIRES Rootbeer is not a temperance drink, either willfully misrepresents the facts or has not investigated the subject in an impartial manner. HIRES Rootbeer is a temperance drink. The leading chemists say so without qualification, and stand ready to prove their assertion. If there are any fair-minded persons anywhere who have a scrupulous doubt as to the honesty of this claim, and will address THE CHARLES E. HIRES COMPANY, Philadelphia, they will be given every opportunity to satisfy themselves as to the ingredients, the nature, the character of HIRES Rootbeer.

HAT BLEACH

Don't throw aside your old straw hat. Hat Bleach [illegible] removes all dirt and stains, and makes it look as fresh as new. Any child can apply it. Can be done in 5 minutes. The cost is a trifle. Does not injure the straw, nor rot the thread. Every man, woman and child [illegible] needs it.

Address { HAT BLEACH CO., Box 555, Xenia, O.

O'NEILL'S,

Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, New York.

THE MOST POPULAR OF THE BIG STORES OF NEW YORK.

A Noteworthy Offering to Our Out-of-Town Patrons.

Three Great Bargains in

Summer Silks

Reserved for the Women readers of The Christian Herald . . . . .

Japanese Silks.

[illegible] plain shades, including white and cream.

Regular Value 69 cts.

Special 49c. yard.

Printed Jap Silks.

One yard wide, all the choice colors and designs.

Regular Value $1.10.

Special 85c. yard.

Taffeta Silks.

A special assortment of Taffeta Silks comprising all the choice colors. Nineteen inches wide.

Regular Value 85 cts.

Special 69c. yard.

Samples of these, and any other Silks that you may desire, upon application.

Young Girls'

Galatea Sailor Suits.

An opportunity to buy one of these cool summer dresses for the little girl at an unusually cheap price. . .

Galatea Suits like the above cut, in neat checks and stripes, full skirt made on waist with front of material, and finished with a braided anchor. The blouse is made in solid color, with deep sailor collar of striped material, and finished with solid color straps.

Sizes 4 to 14 Years. Special $2.75

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th Avenue, 20th to 21st Street, N. Y.

$5.95 Buys a Man's All-Wool Suit

Made from Remnants of our finest cloth that cost from $3.00 to $6.00 a yard. Equal every way to regular $18.00 and $25.00 made to measure suits.

OUR RECENT INVENTORY [illegible] Expert cutters and skilled tailors have made these cloths up into suck suits [illegible] superbly lined [illegible] elegantly piped [illegible] fit to perfection.

Other Suits for $6.95 to $13.95

WRITE FOR Free Samples

Our price $5.95 don't cover the cost of the cloth alone, to say nothing of the tailoring, cutting and trimmings.

OUR GUARANTEE We can't send samples because we need all the cloth that each [illegible] permanent customer to make a suit. However you have a [illegible] guaranteed at least to be worth three times $5.95.

SEND NO MONEY

We'll send the suit by express C.O.D. and allow you to examine and try it on before you pay one cent. If you're as pleased as the [illegible] you have ever seen suits for the [illegible] Don't pay the express agent a cent. Pay nothing if unsatisfactory and he will return it at our expense. THE G. LOUIS VEHON CO., 155-157 W. Jackson St., Chicago, Ill.

"What you want when you want it"

Libby's Luncheons

Delicious, delightful, delectable meat delicacies—always all ready—no fire, no bother—all you have to do is to serve—for home, for picnics, for everywhere.

Veal Loaf | Ox Tongue (whole)

Potted Ham, Beef and Tongue

Wafer Sliced Smoked Beef | Deviled Ham | Brisket Beef

Put up in convenient and key-opening cans.

Drop Postal for Pork and Beans

We will send you free a sample can of Libby's Home-Baked Pork and Beans, the kind that [illegible] can better than those mother used to make. Send for our book "How to Make Good Things to Eat."

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago

Catarrh...

and the allied diseases gout, rheumatism and kidney troubles, are all largely due to retention of uric acid in the system. Hence the value of a uric acid solvent and diuretic remedy which regulates and stimulates the action of the kidneys.

Tartarlithine...

is largely prescribed by physicians for these complaints.

MR. F. J. MORRIS, New York City, writes: "I am now 55 years old, and have had catarrh since I was a child. I was also affected with rheumatic trouble. I knew enough of my case to believe that my catarrh was connected with the rheumatic condition, and as your Tartarlithine was stated to be a specific for rheumatism I concluded to try it. After using one bottle my bronchial cough left me entirely, and the catarrh I secretion was considerably less. After the second bottle I find that I am entirely free from catarrh.

Regular package $1.00,
Of all druggists or post-free by mail.
Pamphlets with Testimonials FREE.

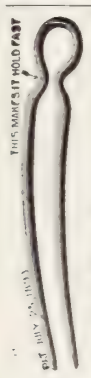
McKESSON & ROBBINS,
91 Fulton Street, . . New York.

SOLE AGENTS FOR
THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

DON'T SHED HAIRPINS

... But buy ...

"Holdfast" Hairpins



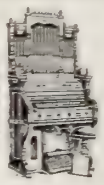
The only hairpins that stay where you put them and neither fall out, warp, split, break nor rust. Curved to the shape of the head.

Size 2¾ inches; white, black, brown or auburn. Also 3½, 3¾, and 4½ inches with heavy prongs for braid or coiled hair. If your dealer will not supply you, send 10 cents in stamps for sample of six small or one large, stating whether wanted light or heavy or light.

BEAUTIFUL BOOKLET FREE.

CONSOLIDATED SAFETY PIN CO.,
Box 120, Bloomfield, N. J.

FREE ONE YEAR'S TRIAL.



All freight paid by us if not satisfactory. Our new catalogue [illegible] Its free. Send us a postal for it today. A better Organ or Piano for less money than any company in the world. Over [illegible] use it. It will do no harm to get our catalogue before you purchase elsewhere, and may save you money. It shows you how to get a handsome premium free. We sell on easy reasonable terms desired. Special bargains for summer and fall.

BEETHOVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO.
P. O. Box 741 Washington, N. J.

TRUSSES RUPTURE CURED

[illegible] The use of these trusses [illegible] a radical cure in a few months. [illegible] Send for free pamphlet to the Improved Elastic Truss Co., 768 Broadway, N. Y.

LARKIN SOAPS

AND PREMIUMS.—FACTORY TO FAMILY

Send for a beautiful booklet free. It tells how to obtain, free, the famous Larkin premiums worth $10.00 each.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Larkin St., Buffalo, N.Y.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN The Christian Herald, March 29th.

YOUR WAGON WHEELS

may need new rings, new spokes or new tires. These repairs have to be made every little while with wood wheels. Set Paltens expense for all time by buying a set of our

ELECTRIC Steel Wheels

They are made with direct or staggered oval spokes, broad tires, any height, and to fit any wagon. [illegible] to rot, go to spokes and need no tire setting—last [illegible] Strikey. There is [illegible] Chapter, and that is an

ELECTRIC HANDY WAGON.

Our free illustrated catalogue tells all about both and gives prices. Send for it.

ELECTRIC WHEEL CO. Box 136, Quincy, Ill.

MONUMENTS

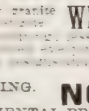
DON'T [illegible] marble or granite WHITE BRONZE

[illegible]

NO MOSS GROWING. NO CRUMBLING CLEANING CRACKING.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.



UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

$75 MONTH AND EXPENSES no experience needed; position permanent, self seller. PEASE MFG. CO., P.O. Box A, Cincinnati, O.

OPIUM MORPHINE and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Book of particulars free. Address Dr. J. L. Stephens, Dept. B, Lebanon, Ohio.

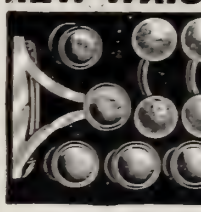
THIS AUTOGRAPH IS NEVER ON A POOR SHADE-ROLLER AND NEVER ABSENT FROM A GOOD ONE.

Stewart Hartshorn GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

...CANCER...

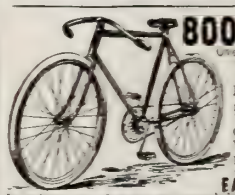
The following and many other reliable persons testify that I thoroughly cure Cancer without the knife: Rev. W. H. Sayres, Send port, Indiana, whose father was cured eight years ago of using Smoking Fluid Cancer. Prof. H. McDaniel, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, cured seven years ago. Had undergone several operations before with knife. Address Dr. C. Weber, 121 W. 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, for further particulars and free book.

NEW WAIST SET, 10c.



Our new '99 set of handsome design includes 1 pair link-cuff, 1 pair link-end cuff buttons, 8 studs, 1 collar button, and the latest belt-trimmer. Extra heavy 14k. Roman gold or sterling silver plate, worth 4.00 at any store. We send complete set, with new catalogue of bargains, postpaid, for ONLY 10c., 3 for 25c. Ingersoll & Bro. Dept. 61 67 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

8000 BICYCLES



Overstock. Must be closed out. '99 MODELS $9 to $16. Shopworn and second hand wheels, good as new, $3 to $10. NEW '99 MODELS $11 to $30. Great factory clearing sale. We ship to anyone on approval, and trust without a cent in advance.

EARN A BICYCLE by helping us advertise our superb [illegible] models. We give one Rider Agent in each town FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our special offer.

E. B. MEAD CYCLE CO., CHICAGO., ILLS.

EARN A BICYCLE!

By selling Baker's Teas among your neighbors, a total of 100 lbs. for Bicycle; 50 lbs., Waltham Gold Watch; 25 lbs., Silver Watch; 10 lbs., Crescent Camera or Gold Ring. Express prepaid. Write for Catalogue, Order Sheet, &c.

W. G. BAKER, Dept 76 Springfield, Mass.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,

[illegible] Fulton st., New York, sell all makes under half price. [illegible] Typewriting [illegible] Rubber Type and Stencils. Exchanges. Typewriters sold for cash or installments. Catalogue free. Remedy shipped. 32-page [illegible] catalogue free.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

VOLUME 22 NUMBER 29

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., Editor

NEW YORK, JULY 19, 1899

PRICE FIVE CENTS

OUR FRESH AIR FUND WAIFS READY FOR A HAPPY TIME (See Page 559)

The photograph shows a section of our merry company of two hundred children eager for their afternoon ramble in the woods around our Children's Home, at Nyack-on-the-Hudson

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Reader, N. Y. What is the meaning and origin of Ember Days?

They are days set apart in the Roman and Anglican churches for imploring God's blessing upon the ordinations appointed to be held in the church on the Sunday following. The Ember Days are the Wednesday, Friday and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent; after Whitsunday; after the 14th of September, and after the 13th of December. These days were settled by the Council of Placentia, A. D., 1095.

Flora M. Holly, Farm, Pa. I have been trying to lead a Christian life, but [illegible] wrong. I have prayed earnestly for forgiveness and I think God has heard me. But my friends know of my wrong-doing and they shun me. No one seems to love me now. I feel that I am of no use in the world. Will it always be so? Is there no hope of forgiveness from Christ or my friends?

[illegible] but you may be quite sure that if you sincerely repent, whatsoever your offence may have been, and if you ask God for Christ's sake to forgive you, he will do so. As to your friends, there is no such certainty. Men are less forgiving than God; but even with them, humility and right conduct nearly always win their way in time. Perhaps good may come out of evil, if the severity of your friends drives you closer to God, whose love and tenderness in forgiving you, must increase your love for him. You remember Christ's remark (Luke 7 : 40) that to whom much is forgiven the same loveth much. Have no doubt in your heart as to God's forgiveness on full repentance. That is sure, but be very circumspect in future. God expects that of you.

D. S., Dayton, O. What proportion of the world is Christian at the present time?

The latest computation is that of the Quarterly of the American Statistical Association, in which M. Fournier de Flaix, an acknowledged authority, gives the total number of Christians in all lands as 477,080,158, which is less than one-third of the world's inhabitants. [illegible] 250,000,000; the Hindoos, about 190,000,000; the Mohammedans, 176,834,372; and the [illegible] Christians the Roman Catholics number 230,860,533, and the Protestants 143,237,025. The remainder belong to the Greek Church, the Coptic Church, etc.

F. J. S., Boonton, N. J. Where did Christ get the garments which he wore when he appeared to Mary on the morning of the resurrection, since he left the grave-clothes in the sepulcure?

The question has often been asked, but never satisfactorily answered. We must conclude, in the absence of any Scriptural statement about the garments, that they belonged [illegible] entered when he rose from the dead. That they were not of the ordinary materials seems [illegible] sent Christ as "vanishing out of their sight" (Luke 24 : 31), appearing among his disciples in a room the doors of which were shut (John 20 : 19), and being seen now at Jerusalem, now at Emmaus, and in Galilee, at least forty miles distant. Whatever the garments were, and wheresoever they came from, they were clearly not of the substantial kind which would have prevented these disappearances.

Mrs. A. W., Fulton, N. Y. 1. Where is the Island of Patmos, and is it inhabited? 2. Where is the place where the Garden of Eden was? 3. What was the doctrine of Balaam?

1. It is a barren, rocky island in the Ægean Sea, twenty miles south of Samos. It is about twenty-five miles in circumference. There are about 600 inhabitants, chiefly fishermen, and their families. 2. No one knows, though the subject has been one for study and investigation by the ablest scholars and savants. Some claim that the site is in Armenia, others in the uplands of Ceylon, still others in Arabia, and one recent explorer, at least, claims to have found a certain section of interior Africa, conforming to all the Edenic geographical requirements. 3. The mention of the doctrine of Balaam in Rev. 2 : 14 has, by some, been supposed to refer symbolically to the founder of the sect of Nicolaitans, mentioned in V. 15, of the same chapter. Some Bible commentators hold that the doctrine referred to was the unrighteous employment of religious principles to justify sinful lives, and the attempt to give to wickedness the sanction of a respectable name. The more reasonable interpretation of the passage, however, would seem to be that it was intended as a rebuke to those who, though professing religion, stooped to idolatry, and were the means of introducing many impurities and serious scandals into the early Christian Church, and thus bringing discredit upon it. These were characteristics of the followers of Balaam, and also, it would seem, of the Nicolaitans, [illegible] the other, in expressing ignominy.

I. A. W., Chicago, Ill. What is the outlook for [illegible]

THE MILITARY PRISON AT RENNES, WHERE DREYFUS IS CONFINED

The cell he now occupies is marked with an X. The smaller picture on the left, shows the residence of Mme. Godard, the noble Protestant Frenchwoman, who recently offered the place to Mme. Dreyfus as a home. Mme. Godard is seen seated in the garden. The case of Dreyfus is again attracting universal attention throughout France, and there is a [illegible] will be made to convict him anew for the sake of saving certain army officials.

admit that the prospect is not so bright as they thought it ten or fifteen years ago. A tendency to infidelity has developed which it is hard to counteract. Some of the most influential people in Japan were so easily convinced that their old faith was false, that the missionaries hoped that there would soon be a general turning to the true God; but it has proved more difficult to build up than to tear down. Even some who made a profession of faith in Christ, have been influenced by the rationalistic arguments uttered among us and in Europe, and have abandoned the straight evangelical faith.

[illegible] My little ones want to [illegible] clothes to your fresh-air children. How shall I send them? 2. My boys have a lot of jean overalls which they have outgrown, and my [illegible] Would these be acceptable?

1. Send to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y. 2. They would be very useful. Our children are from five to twelve years old. Those of five are often small for their years.

We are still receiving many letters from the possessors of very old Bibles. One of the latest is from H. F. Koenig, of Cincinnati, O., who writes:

I have a German Bible, printed and published by Wolfgang Endter, Nurnberg, in 1649, in two vol[illegible] Dr. Martin Luther and others. Both volumes are in good condition. I received them from my [illegible]

M. W. Davis, Winterset, Ia., writes:

I have an old Bible of Martin Luther's first translation in German, with the original wooden back. The print is perfect. It is dated 1545.

Subscriber, Atchison, Kans. 1. Had Jesus real brothers and sisters? 2. Are their names given in the Gospel? 3. What was the rock to which Christ referred, Matt. 16 : 18?

1. It is a disputed point. Persons who wish to prove the immaculate conception, contend that the brothers and sisters mentioned were Joseph's children by a former wife. Apart from the wish to hold that doctrine there appears to be no valid reason for denying that [illegible] of the brothers, but not of the sisters, are given in Mark 6 : 3. 3. Apparently the rock [illegible] judge so because of the result. We see that the church was not built on Peter, but does rest on the cardinal belief to which Peter gave [illegible] the living God."

Inquirer, Knappa, Ore. Does God repent, as stat[illegible]

In the common sense of the word, God never repents, as he can do no wrong, and therefore has nothing to be sorry for. The passage in Jonah simply means that he refrained from executing the threat he had uttered by the mouth of the prophet. The [illegible] showed contrition and God, with his accustomed patience and long suffering, withheld the punishment for that time.

Mrs. J. A. M., Dolph, Ore. Will you kindly give [illegible]

The passage referred to is one that has been variously interpreted. An ancient interpretation mentioned by Josephus, and adopted by Justin, Tertullian and other early writers, was that the "Sons of God," referred to the angels who had been appointed to guard Eden. It is, however, opposed by all orthodox divines. Another [illegible] the sons of Elohim [illegible] or the other races), saw the daughters of the Adamites, etc. The most widely accepted, and probably the [illegible] of God" means the Jude refers (verse 6). It should be noted that the word elohim in Hebrew sometimes signifies "the great," "the mighty," and the word adam, "poor and humble," hence the further interpretation might be that the upper classes, including the nobility, began to intermarry freely, and to practice polygamy with the women of humble birth.

Inquirer, Reading, Pa. Where does the phrase, "The fall of man," come from? I can find it nowhere in the Bible.

The phrase does not occur in the Scriptures but is simply a convenient form used to express the fact that our first parents revolted from God and the consequent sin and misery that followed. It is probably taken from the Book of Wisdom 10 : 1.

In a recent issue of THE MAIL-BAG, R. S. Bosworth, Brownsville, N. Y., a reader of this journal, requested that some other reader should send her a copy of the verses entitled: "The Philosopher's Scales." Many letters have come to us enclosing copies of the poem, among the senders being the following: E. M. B., Pittsfield, Vt.; Paik Brewster, Manchester, [illegible] J. G. Webb, Seattle, Wash.; Mary [illegible] Red Oak, Ill.; A. W. Baird, Wilbra[illegible] Anthony, Kan.; Laura Jones, Chatham, Ind.; Mrs. M. E. Seamans, Norwalk, O.; Mi[illegible] others, all of whom we desire to [illegible] their generous attention.

Mrs. D. K. S., Los Angeles, Cal[illegible]

[illegible] ance Light-Bearers."

Reader, Rome, N. Y. [illegible] n Children's Day was first

1. The history of C[illegible]s Day, so far as it can be determined, w[illegible] our issue of [illegible] origin to the Methodis[illegible] day. [illegible] dren. [illegible] New York [illegible] Deaf [illegible], West [illegible] yard, New York.

[illegible] be kept [illegible] to do [illegible] would [illegible] our sur[illegible] watch [illegible] and will give you all things necessary to your spiritual life. What is it you expect? How will you know when you have received the Holy Spirit? Do you think you will be able to speak in strange tongues or work miracles? Not at all. You will be kind and helpful to your friends and to any one who needs your help and will have rest and peace [illegible]

Mrs. T. N. B., Huntington, W. Va. Moses and E[illegible]

Mrs. L. H. W., E. Jaffray, N. H. We know of no such institution.

Albert B., Rosedale, O. You will find it in all [illegible] States [illegible]

Mrs. M. B. W., E. Corinth, Me. Yes: its claim [illegible]

Kate C. H., Reesville, O. You will find it in any good encyclopedia of biography.

Subscriber, Winnebago, Minn. We believe t[illegible] matter has been [illegible]

Henry Z., Bridgeport, Conn. You are certainly [illegible]

Mrs. S. E. D., Garvanza, Calif. 1. Capt. Philips' name is John W. 2. We have no information on [illegible]

Mrs. Mina N[illegible] the pictures [illegible] tirely proper.

T. A. S., Florence, Ala. It is quite true. The [illegible]

Andrew M., New Castle, Washington. Put the facts on record in the form of an affidavit and send them to the Postmaster-General, Washington, D.C.

Mrs. L. M. W., Dunlap, Ia. We find no fault [illegible] are not. We [illegible] think otherwise

· Epworth · Leaguers · in · Conference ·

The Great International Convention at Indianapolis, Ind., of the Young People of the Methodist Church

THIS week will witness the assembling of the fourth great International Convention of the Epworth League, at Indianapolis, Ind. Preparations have been made for the reception of many thousands of loyal Epworthians, who will come from all sections to enjoy the feast of good things which has been provided for them. The association of the young people of the Methodist Episcopal Church has now become so mighty an organization that it has been difficult to arrange for all who are likely to attend to participate in the proceedings. No tent, nor the largest building in the city would accommodate them, and it has finally been decided to hold three, and in some cases five, simultaneous meetings in as many places, with attractive speakers distributed among them.

The Convention opens on Thursday, July 20, with afternoon meetings in the tent, and in Tomlinson Hall, at each of which addresses of welcome will be delivered by speakers representing the State of Indiana, the city of Indianapolis, and the Methodist Churches of the State. Responses will be made by representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South and the Methodist Churches throughout Canada. The three branches of the great Methodist family all have a strong interest in the Epworth League, and will unite in speaking in its name.

In the evening three meetings are to be held, one in the tent, another in Tomlinson Hall and a third in the Opera House. The subjects to be discussed are the same in all. They are: The High School and the College; Self-Culture: Its Values and Possibilities; Books and Reading; and The Bible and the Intellectual Life. Four eminent clergymen are assigned to each meeting who will deal respectively with these topics.

The second day's proceedings will open with a sunrise love-feast at 6:30 A. M. The morning meetings will be devoted to the Department work of the League. The Department of Spiritual Work will be considered in Tomlinson Hall and the Opera House. These meetings are to occupy an hour and a half, and, at the close, there will be held in the same buildings Conferences on the Department of Mercy, Charity and Help. At the same hours, two Conferences each will be held in the Roberts Park M. E. Church and the Second Presbyterian Church, the earlier ones on Literary Work and the later ones on Social Work. At the same time, a Conference on the Department of Correspondence will be held in Plymouth Congregational Church, and a Conference on the Department of Finance in the Meriden Street M. E. Church. The evening will be given over to patriotic celebrations. There will be a lecture in the tent by Bishop Fowler, on "Abraham Lincoln;" another, in Tomlinson Hall, by Gen. Gordon, on "The Last Days of the Confederacy;" and a third in the Opera House, by Rev. John Potts, on "Anglo-American Relations."

The subject for the morning of Saturday, the third day, will be "Methodism: its Spirit and Life." This will be divided into: Its Evangelistic Genuis and Fervor; Its Breadth and Catholicity; Its Philanthropy; Its Educational Leaders; Its Work by Women; Its Sunday School Achievements; The Twentieth Century Movement. Simultaneous meetings, dealing with these subjects, will be held in the tent, Tomlinson Hall and the Opera House. At the same time Conferences on the Junior League, will be held at Roberts Park M. E. Church, and Meriden Street M. E. Church, at both of which there will be a question-box and a discussion of methods. In the afternoon the subject will be Social Righteousness and Good Citzenship. Three meetings will be held to deal with this topic, at which clergymen from different sections will deliver addresses. The evening meetings will be devoted to various phases of the Temperance Question, including The Pledge; the Saloon in Politics; and Prohibition.

On Sunday morning Communion services will be held in all the Methodist Churches of the city, and eminent preachers attending the Convention will occupy the pulpits and preach appropriate sermons. In the afternoon, the tent, Tomlinson Hall, and the Opera House will again be occupied. The subject in all will be Foreign Missions. Three meetings in the same buildings in the evening, each closing with a Farewell Consecration Service will bring the proceedings of the Convention to a close.

Among the speakers who will take prominent part in the Convention are Bishops W. X. Ninde, John F. Hurst, Chas. B. Galloway and J. N. Fitzgerald, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Bishops W. A. Candler, O. P. Fitzgerald, and H. C. Morrison, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Rev. Geo. J. Bond, B. A., of Halifax, Nova Scotia; Rev. A. C. Crews, D.D., of Toronto, Gen. Secretary of the Canadian Epworth League; J. M. Buckley, of New York; Dr. J. W. Bashford, of Delaware; Dr. Thomas Carter, of New Orleans; Dr. W. A. Spencer, of Philadelphia; Rev. J. H. Reed, of Galveston, Tex.; Rev. R. A. Carter, of Atlanta, Ga; Dr. J. P. Ashley, of Albion, Mich.; Prof. Guy D. Benton, of Fayette, Ia.; Rev. W. T. McClure, of Marshall, Mo.; Rev. J. W. Bennett, of Bozeman, Mont.; Col. W. P. Wallace, of Americus, Ga.; A. Royel Cathcart, Esq., of Baltimore, Md., and John Farson, Esq., of Chicago.

Dr. Edwin A. Schell, the General Secretary of the League, makes the sensible suggestion to delegates that they come to the convention resolved not to be irritated out of the spiritual joy and uplift of the assembly by having their feelings ruffled in a crowd, and by anxiety to attend three meetings at the same time. He advises them to go through the programme carefully and select the meetings and speakers who they think will help them most. The tent and Tomlinson Hall are so close together that they can hear successive addresses at each meeting without much loss of time.

The Convention flag bears the Union Jack and Old Glory intertwined, has in the upper left-hand corner a yellow Maltese cross, to represent the sunshine color of the South, and in the lower right-hand corner another cross for the Northern States and Canada.

REV. W. F. CARPENTER REV. A. C. CREWS BISHOP O. P. FITZGERALD BISHOP BURST REV. GEO. J. BOND, B. A. A. R. CATHCART, ESQ.

LEADERS OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION AT INDIANAPOLIS

TOMLINSON HALL, MEETING-PLACE OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION

Our Children Like . . . Their New Home

Big Playrooms and Grassy Lawns—Scups and Bird Songs—Letter from a 4th of July Visitor

WE thought no place could be so lovely as Mont-Lawn, but our children like their new home better. The expanse of velvet lawn is greater; the big rainy-day play-room is spacious enough for all sorts of romps; all the reasons for their preference cannot be imagined or stated, but the fortunate truth is, that, while we were fearing that they might be homesick for Mont-Lawn, they surprised us by overwhelming statements (supported by the proofs of extraordinary gambols), "that our new home is a heap the best." Never were there such enormous ring-a-rosies as spread themselves out over the grass; never more wild enthusiasm over scups. "We've got more and better scups this year!" they declared—although, to our observation, manila rope is what it was of yore. "We can mos' put our hands out in the trees!" they said, as they were being tucked away in the dormitories. "Teacher," some little fellows confided in soft whispers after "Our Father" was said, and they were told to "Hush-a-bye" in the friendly dusk, "We'll be up in time for breakfus'. De birds 'll wake us singin'. Oh, they sings an' sings, mos' right in de room!"

A prominent philanthropist, one of the large company visiting our Home on the Fourth of July, writes:

I must congratulate THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers on their good work. I never saw two hundred perfectly happy children "in a bunch" before. I shall never forget how they fell upon the bread and butter and meat and potatoes in the dining-room, nor with what rapture they consumed their treat of ice cream that afternoon! By the way, that great ring-a-rosy that settled itself on the lawn like a wreath of flowers when your teachers brought out the saucers of cream was about the loveliest picture I ever saw, although it was fairly rivalled by the pretty parades when your two hundred marched and countermarched over the green, and up the hill sides and in front of the cottages, Faith, Hope and Charity, waving little flags and singing "America," and "We are the Children of the Prince of Peace." In my ears still echoes the shout with which the welkin rang when representatives of the editorial and business staff of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD appeared to take their usual part in entertaining the children and assisting in the fireworks display. Your little folks seem to have an idea that the paper and its whole working force, and its big corps of readers were instituted for the express purpose of making happiness for little children of the poor, who need food, clothes, fresh air and a little play sometimes, such as more fortunate children have. I am more hopeful for the future of our country since that visit to your Home, where I saw what wonders could be wrought in children of the slums (who are to be law makers some day) by even a few days' kindly training. In spite of their perfect abandon to joy, I never saw better-behaved children than your Fourth of July two hundred. Your Housemother and teachers are surely Christian women, and I firmly believe that every poor little waif of the tenements spending ten days at your Home, will be a better man or woman for it. The memory and influence of such kindness and such teaching will not be easily effaced from lives to which pleasant surroundings are a startling novelty. Prevention is better than cure, and saving children is preventive work. Bringing the children to Jesus is truly obedience to the divine command.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

. . . DIVINE SATIRE . . .

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Matthew 23: 24, . . . Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel

A PROVERB is compact wisdom, knowledge in chunks, a library in a sentence, the electricity of many clouds discharged in one bolt, a river put through a mill race. When Christ quotes the proverb of the text, he means to set forth the ludicrous behavior of those who make a great bluster about small sins and have no appreciation of great ones. In my text, a small insect and a large quadruped are brought into comparison—a gnat and a camel. You have in museum or on the desert seen the latter, a great awkward, sprawling creature, with back two stories high, and stomach having a collection of reservoirs for desert travel, an animal forbidden to the Jews as food, and in many literatures entitled "the ship of the desert." The gnat spoken of in the text, is in the grub form. It is born in pool or pond, after a few weeks becomes a chrysalis, and then after a few days becomes the gnat as we recognize it. But the insect spoken of in the text is in its very smallest shape, and it yet inhabits the water—for my text is a misprint and ought to read "strain out a gnat."

My text shows you the prince of inconsistencies. A man after long observation has formed the suspicion that in a cup of water he is about to drink, there is a grub or the grandparent of a gnat. He goes and gets a sieve or strainer. The water rushes through the sieve, and leaves against the side of the sieve the grub or gnat. Then the man carefully removes the insect and drinks the water in placidity. But going out one day, and hungry, he devours a "ship of the desert," the camel, which the Jews were forbidden to eat. The gastronomer has no compunctions of conscience. He suffers from no indigestion. He strained out a gnat, he swallowed a camel.

While Christ's audience was yet smiling at the appositeness and wit of his illustration—for smile they did, unless they were too stupid to understand the hyperbole—Christ practically said to them, "That is you." Punctilious about small things; reckless about affairs of great magnitude. There are in our day a great many gnats strained out and a great many camels swallowed, and it is the object of this sermon to sketch a few persons who are extensively engaged in that business.

First, I remark, that all those ministers of the Gospel who are very scrupulous about the conventionalities of religion, but put no particular stress upon matters of vast importance, are photographed in the text. Church services ought to be grave and solemn. There is no room for frivolity in religious convocation. But there are illustrations, and there are hyperboles like that of Christ in the text, that will irradiate with smiles any intelligent audience. There are men like those blind guides of the text, who advocate only those things in religious service which draw the corners of the mouth down, and denounce all those things which have a tendency to draw the corners of the mouth up, and these men will go to installations and to presbyteries and to conferences and to associations, their pockets full of fine sieves to strain out the gnats, while in their own churches at home every Sunday there are fifty people sound asleep. They make their churches a great dormitory, and their somniferous sermons are a cradle, and the drawled-out hymns a lullaby, while some wakeful soul in a pew with her fan keeps the flies off unconscious persons approximate. Now, I say it is worse to sleep in church than to smile in church, for the latter implies at least attention, while the former implies the indifference of the hearers and the stupidity of the speaker.

In old age, or from physical infirmity, or from long watching with the sick, drowsiness will sometimes overpower one; but when a minister of the Gospel looks off upon an audience, and finds healthy and intelligent people struggling with drowsiness, it is time for him to give out the doxology, or pronounce the benediction. The great fault of church services to-day, is not too much vivacity, but too much somnolence. The one is an irritating gnat that may be easily strained out; the other is a great, sprawling and sleepy-eyed camel of the dry desert. In all our Sabbath schools, our Bible classes, and our pulpits we need to brighten up our religious message with such Christ-like vivacity as we find in the text.

I take down from my library the biographies of ministers, and writers of the past ages, inspired and uninspired, who have done the most to bring souls to Jesus Christ, and I find, that without a single exception, they consecrated their wit and their humor to Christ. Chrysostom, George Herbert, Robert South, George Whitefield, Jeremy Taylor, Rowland Hill, Ashael Nettleton, Charles G. Finney, and all the men of the past who greatly advanced the kingdom of God consecrated their wit and their humor to the cause of Christ. So it has been in all the ages, and I say to all our young theological students, sharpen your wits until they are as keen as scimetars, and then take them into this holy war. It is a very short bridge between a smile and a tear, a suspension bridge from eye to lip, and it is soon crossed over, and a smile is sometimes just as sacred as a tear. There is as much religion, and I think a little more, in a spring morning than in a starless midnight. Religious work without any humor or wit in it, is a banquet with a side of beef, and that raw, and no condiments, and no dessert succeeding. People will not sit down to such a banquet. By all means remove all frivolity, and all bathos, and all lightness and vulgarity—strain them out through the sieve of holy discrimination; but on the other hand, beware of that monster which over-shadows the Christian church to-day, conventionality, coming up from the Great Sahara Desert of Ecciesiasticism, having on its back a hump of sanctimonious gloom, and vehemently refuse to swallow that camel.

Oh, how particular a great many people are about the infinitesimals, while they are quite reckless about the magnitudes. What did Christ say? Did he not excoriate the people in his time who were so careful to wash their hands before a meal, but did not wash their hearts? It is a bad thing to have unclean hands; it is a worse thing to have an unclean heart. How many people there are in our time who are very anxious that after their death they shall be buried with their face toward the east, and not at all anxious that during their whole life they should face in the right direction, so that they shall come up in the resurrection of the just, whichever way they are buried. How many there are chiefly anxious that a minister of the Gospel shall come in the line of apostolic succession, not caring so much whether he comes from Apostle Paul or Apostle Judas. They have a way of measuring a gnat until it is larger than a camel.

Again: My subject photographs all those who are abhorrent of small sins, while they are reckless in regard to magnificent thefts. You will find many a merchant who, while he is so careful that he would not take a yard of cloth, or a spool of cotton from the counter without paying for it, and who, if a bank cashier should make a mistake, and send in a roll of bills, five dollars too much, would dispatch a messenger in hot haste to return the surplus, yet who will go into a stock company, in which, after a while he gets control of the stock, and then waters the stock, and makes $100,000 appear like $[illegible]. He only stole $[illegible],000 by the operation. Many of the men of fortune made their wealth in that way.

One of those men, engaged in such unrighteous acts, that evening, the evening of the very day when he watered the stock, will find a wharf-rat stealing a daily paper from the basement doorway, and will go out and catch the urchin by the collar, and twist the collar. And then the old stock gambler, with a voice they can hear three blocks, will cry out: "Police, Police!" That same man, the evening of the day in which he watered the stock, will kneel with his family in prayers and thank God for the prosperity of the day, then kiss his children goodnight with an air which seems to say, "I hope you all will grow up to be as good as your father!" Prisons for sins insectile in size, but palaces for crimes dromedarian. No mercy for sins animacule in proportion, but great leniency for mastodon iniquity.

There is a good deal of uneasiness and nervousness now among some people in our time who have gotten unrighteous fortunes. A great deal of uneasiness about dynamite. I tell them that God will put under their unrighteous fortunes something more explosive than dynamite, the earthquake of his omnipotent indignation. It is time that we learn in America that sin is not excusable in proportion as it declares large dividends and has outriders in equipage.

Go down into the public library, in the reading rooms, and see the newspaper reports of the crops from all parts of the country, and their phraseology is very much the same, and the same men wrote them, methodically and infamously carrying out the huge lying about the grain crop from year to year and for a score of years. After a while there will be a "corner" in the wheat market, and men who had a contempt for petty theft will burglarize the wheat bin of a nation and commit larceny upon the American corncrib. And some of the men will sit in churches and in reformatory institutions trying to strain out the small gnats of scoundrelism while in their grain elevators and in their storehouses they are fattening huge camels which they expect after a while to swallow. Society has to be entirely reconstructed on this subject. We are to find that a sin is inexcusable in proportion as it is great. I know in our time the tendency is to charge religious frauds upon good men. They say, "Oh, what a host of frauds you have in the Church of God in this day," and when an elder of a church, or a deacon, or a minister of the Gospel, or a superintendent of a Sabbath School turns out a defaulter, what display heads there are in many of the newspapers. Great primer type. Five line pica. "Another Saint Absconded." "Clerical Scoundrelism," "Religion at a Discount," "Shame on the Churches," while there are a thousand scoundrels outside the church to one inside the church, and the misbehavior of those who never see the inside of a church is so great that it is enough to tempt a man to become a Christian to get out of their company. But in all circles, religious and irreligious, the tendency is to excuse sin in proportion as it is mammoth.

This subject does not give the picture of one or two persons, but is a gallery in which thousands of people may see their likenesses. For instance, all those people who, while they would not rob their neighbors of a farthing, appropriate the money and the treasure of the public. A man has a house to sell, and he tells his customer it is worth $20,000. Next day the assessor comes around and the owner says it is worth $15,000. The government of the United States took off the tax from personal income, among other reasons because so few people would tell the truth, and many a man with an income of hundreds of dollars a day made statements which seemed to imply he was about to be handed over to the overseer of the poor. Careful to pay their passage from Liverpool to New York, yet smuggling in their Saratoga trunk ten silk dresses from Paris and a half-dozen watches from Geneva, Switzerland, telling the Custom House officer on the wharf, "There is nothing to declare but wearing apparel," and putting a five dollar gold piece in his hand to punctuate the statement.

Described in the text are all those who are particular never to break the law of grammar, and who want all their language and their general spelling to be strained out all the inaccuracies of speech with a fine sieve of literary criticism, while through their conversation go slander and unrestrained profanity and lasciviousness larger than a whole caravan of camels, when they might better fracture every law of the language and shock their intellectual taste, and better let every verb seek in vain for its nominative, and every noun for its government, and let every preposition lose its way in the sentence, and adjectives and participles and pronouns get into a grand riot worthy of the Fourth Ward of New York on election day, than to commit a moral inaccuracy. Better swallow a thousand gnats than one camel.

Such persons are also described in the text who are very much alarmed about the small faults of others, and have no alarm about their own great transgressions. There are in every community and in every church watch-dogs who feel called upon to keep their eyes on others and growl. They are full of suspicions. They wonder if this man is not dishonest, if that man is not unclean, if there is not something wrong about the other man. They are always the first to hear of anything wrong. Vultures are always the first to smell carrion. They are self-appointed detectives. I lay this down as a rule without any exception, that those people who have the most faults themselves are most merciless in their watching of others. From scalp of head to sole of foot they are full of jealousies and hypercriticisms. They spend their life in hunting for musk rats and mud turtles, instead of hunting for Rocky Mountain eagles, always for something mean instead of something grand. They look at their neighbors' imperfections through a microscope, and look at their own imperfections through a telescope upside down. Twenty faults of their own do not hurt them so much as one fault of somebody else. Their neighbors' imperfections are like gnats and they strain them out: their own imperfections are like camels and they swallow them.

But lest too many might think they escape the scrutiny of the text, I have to tell you that we all come under the divine satire when we make the questions of time more prominent than the questions of eternity. Come now, let us all go into the confessional. Are not all tempted to make the question, Were shall I live now, greater than the question, Where shall I live forever? How shall I get more dollars here? greater than the question, How shall I lay up treasures in heaven? the question, How shall I pay my debts to man? greater than the question, How shall I meet my obligations to God? the question, How shall I gain the world? greater than the question, What if I lose my soul? the question, Why did God let sin come into the world? greater than the question, How shall I get it extirpated from my nature? the question, What shall I do with the twenty or forty or seventy years of my sublunar existence? greater than the question, What shall I do with the millions of cycles of my post terrestrial existence? Time, how small it is! Eternity, how vast it is! The former more insignificant in comparison with the latter than a gnat is insignificant when compared with a camel. We dodged the text. We said, "That does not mean me, and that does not mean me," and with a ruinous benevolence we are giving the whole sermon away.

But let us all surrender to the charge. What an ado about things here. What poor preparation for a great eternity. As though a minnow were larger than a behemoth, as though a swallow took wider circuit than an albatross, as though a nettle were taller than a Lebanon cedar, as though a gnat were greater than a camel, as though a minute were longer than a century, as though time were higher, deeper, broader than eternity. So the text which flashed with lightning of wit as Christ uttered it, is followed by the crashing thunders of awful catastrophe to those who make the questions of time greater than the questions of the future, the oncoming, overshadowing future. Oh, Eternity! Eternity! Eternity!

....Kidnapping in China....

Miss Talmage Tells of a Little Lad Stolen and Held for Ransom, but Brought Back Through Prayer.....

THE DINNER HOUR IN A CHINESE ORPHANAGE

MISS M. E. Talmage, an American missionary at Amoy, China, in the following letter, tells the story of a Chinese kidnapping. Like little Marion Clark, whose kidnapping in New York recently stirred up the entire community, the Chinese child was ultimately restored to its parents:

AMOY, CHINA, May 20.

Not long ago, I wrote an account of a stolen boy and how he was found in answer to prayer. I have another similar story to tell of a boy six years of age (Chinese reckoning, which, according to ours, is only four or five), who was stolen on May 5th last.

After the child disappeared, the Chinese pastor of the church of which his parents are members, advertised as follows:

"This letter is addressed to all the pastors, brethren and sisters of Chiang-chiu and Choan-chiu prefects.

"Mr. Nai Iu has a son, six years old, named Chong-tek. On the morning of the 26th day of the third moon, at eleven o'clock, he went out to play in 'the-end-of-new-road' and was kidnapped. He was dressed in an old, dark-flowered jacket and trousers. He wore a purplish-blue worsted cap, in front of which was worked in light red the character for 'longevity.' If asked his name, age and sur-name, he can answer very nicely. If asked his father's and mother's names he will say 'Nai-a' and 'Nui-a.' If asked where he comes from he will answer, 'From Peh-chioh. I live in Chiu-pho and have been to Chioh-be.' Perhaps he can also tell how he was stolen.

"I earnestly plead with the whole body of preachers, brethren and sisters, if any of you see or hear of anyone selling or adopting children, that you will make an effort to examine into the matter, and if you find the proofs, that you will send information to the Chiu-pho hospital. All expenses will be paid and if the child is found we shall, of course, be most grateful."

The deep sympathy shown by all the native Christians, not only in the one church, but wherever the news spread, was very touching. Many were the prayers offered in very many places in behalf of the child. Several Christians left their business and searched day and night.

To the joy and thanksgiving of everybody, the stolen child was brought back, on Wednesday, May 10, midnight, as far as the hospital door, and left there. The child made his way to his own home, and knocked. His mother heard, and was not she glad? A lady writes:

"The whole household, which consisted of five families, got up to greet him. Our cook came about five a.m., to tell me. I went at once, to rejoice with them, and found ever so many people there already.

"The thief, evidently, could get no 'middleman,' and so found it difficult to sell the child. He had been traced to a temple near Au-po, where he had spent two nights. No one ever before heard of a stolen child having been restored without a reward. There was a thanksgiving meeting the next night, and Nai Sian-si, the father, spoke."

The child's mother wrote:

"All the brethren and sisters exerted themselves to the uttermost, and searched everywhere for the child, and I thank God that He heard our prayers, and returned Chong-tek to us. At one o'clock at night, on the first day of the moon, he was led back as far as the hospital door, and from thence made his way to our door, where he called. I heard him, and was so surprised. It was far beyond my expectations. I truly thank all the preachers, lady-missionaries, brethren and sisters, that they, with one heart, prayed to God, and that He heard."

Surely, this is another proof of God's care of His little ones. How true it is that He hears His people, when they call upon Him.

M. E. TALMAGE.

Amoy, China

KOREAN CROWDS WATCHING TRIAL OF THE TROLLEY

Riotous Korean Fanatics

To Appease their Heathen Gods they Smash the New American-Built Trolley Cars

(From Our Special Correspondent)

ALTHOUGH the Independence Club made a brave stand for the progress of Korea, and no doubt sowed much seed that will be reproduced in the future, it was practically "laid upon the table" very early in the year in rather an underhanded way. Good promises were made to it that were unfulfilled. Many of its prominent members were arrested on fictitious pretenses. Later, its president, Mr. T. H. Yun, after several times barely escaping arrest, was made Mayor of Wonsan, the port on the east coast; and another prominent leader was given a magistracy in the north. These positions really mean only a polite way of banishing these brave men. But little of the reform element has been heard of this year. The present government is strongly conservative.

The long drought this spring caused concern among all classes, and there has been a deal of talk to the effect that the wires of the electric railway just completed in Seoul, have shut off connection with the clouds; also that the power-house, being built upon the back of the dragon, "no rain can be expected until these evil obstructions are removed." May 4th, cars were run on this street railway for the first time, but they were not run regularly until the 20th. The illustration of the Tong Tai Moon or Great East Gate, shows the crowds of people drawn out to witness the trial trip. There are five ordinary cars, each seating eight first-class and twenty-five second-class passengers. Then there is a special car for "trolley parties." Just think of such innovations in the "hermit nation!" The seventh car is richly upholstered and emblazoned with the Korean ensign, and is reserved exclusively for His Majesty. The road is owned by a Korean company who awarded the contract to Messrs. Bostwick & Colbran, Americans the original contractors of the Seoul-Chemulpo railroad. These gentlemen put the work right through and it was ready before May 1st; but the Japanese motormen did not arrive till later. The greatest care was taken to prevent accidents. For several days, great crowds of Koreans availed themselves of the opportunity of riding on the first railway ever in operation in Korea. It is said one Korean rode and rode until he used up $2.00, in spite of the drought.

May 25, a number of us, W. F. M. S. ladies, rode from our work, at the west gate, to our work near the east gate. It only cost one-fourth as much as chair-coolies, and it really seemed to revive one's Western energy that is so apt to ooze from one's finger-tips, in the East.

